TO THE TWELFTH EDITION

The present edition was long overdue. The interval between the present and the immediately preceding edition is more than 15 years. Many important cases on the Transfer of Property Act have in the meantime been decided by the Supreme Court as well as by the High Courts of the different States. I have spared no pains to incorporate all the Important cases decided since the publication of the previous edition in 1955.

In order that the length of the book may not increase, some of the old cases that have lost their importance with the passage of time have been omitted. With the same object in view lengthy extracts from the report of the Select Committee relating to the amendments made by the Act of 1929 have been deleted and extensive quotations from judgments have been abridged. Unnecessary details in expounding the principles laid down in the cases mentioned in the book have been omitted wherever possible. In short, all-out efforts have been made to curtail the volume without sacrificing the substance.

In incorporating new cases attempt has been made to state the principles with reference to the facts of those cases. Salient facts have been stated in the briefest possible manner so that one may know in what context a particular principle has been laid down. A bare statement of the principle without reference to the facts is very often misleading. If the salient facts are stated before stating the principle, a practising lawyer can at once know to what extent the principle is applicable to the case he is arguing before the Court.

All the recent decisions of the Supreme Court on the various provisions of the Transfer of Property Act have been carefully noted. As to the recent cases decided by the High Courts of the different States of India only those cases have been incorporated as have laid down important principles not covered by the decisions of the Supreme Court.

I have resisted the temptation of indicating what the law should be, because I think that the primary duty of a court of law as well as of a practising lawyer is to apply the law as it is without speculating what the law should be.

Late B. B. Mitra, the author of the book, is a well-known figure in the field of legal literature. It is with a great deal of hesitation that I undertook the difficult task of revising the book in order to make it up to date. I have tried my best to keep intact the original text of the learned author as far as possible ; but in incorporating new matter in order to make the book up to date I have used my own discretion.

I am greatly indebted to Mr. A. N. Saha M.A.L.L.B., for preparing the index which will serve as an invaluable guide to the points of law discussed in the book.

I hope that the present edition of the book will prove as useful to the legal profession as its earlier editions.

The Transfer of Property Act

Act No. IV of 1882

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Transfer of Property by Act of Parties.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend certain parts of the law relating to the transfer of property by act of parties ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Preamble

1. History of the Act :—The kernel of the Bill which became the Transfer of Property Act was a draft prepared in England by the Indian Law Commission, which was sent out to India in 1870, with instructions to take the necessary steps for passing it into law. It was heterogeneous, ill-defined and ill-drawn. The sections on powers, for instance, were unnecessary. No mortgagee was to take possession of the mortgaged land, no mortgagee was to foreclose. Not only the English but all the Indian forms of mortgages were ignored. The then Law-Member of the Governor-General's Council felt that the amount of simplicity gained would not justify the amount of disturbance created.

However, in obedience to the orders of the Secretary of State, the Bill with some slight amendments made by the Law-Member was introduced into the Council in 1877, referred to a Select Committee and circulated to the Local Governments for publication and translation. A mass of criticisms and suggestions came in and the Bill was revised and republished in 1878 and for a second time sent to the Local Governments. Another mass of criticisms came in. The Bill was therefore recast, circulated for a third time to the Local Governments and referred to a Commission. The Commission made several amendments, both in the wording and substance of the Bill.

o The recommendations of this Commission were duly communicated to the Select Committee. Most of the changes proposed were adopted and the Bill became law in 1882.

(See Whitley Stokes' Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. I, pp. 738-739).

Preamble :—"The Preamble usually mentions the general object and intention of the Legislature in passing the enactment ; further it is well established that the Preamble cannot restrict the enacting part of the Act, though it may be referred to for the purpose of solving an ambiguity"—per Fletcher, J. in Mani Lal v. Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta, 45 Cal. 343 (F.B.). See also Kesab v. Bhobani, 18 C.L.J. 187 ; Powell v. Kempton Park Race Course Co., (1899) A.C. 143 ; Secretary of State v. Maharaja of Bobbili, 43 Mad. 529, 46 I.A. 302 ; Inder Singh v.

State of Punjab, A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 965 : 1956 S.C.R. 995. Preamble must be disregarded when the language of the Act is clear and when an enactment is not clear the preamble may be resorted to to explain it—per Modholkar, J in Burrakur Coal Company v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 954.

It is not a consolidating Act, nor does it profess to be a complete Code dealing with transfer of property. It purports to do nothing more than define and amend certain parts of the law relating to transfer of property—Lachhminarayan v. Janmejay, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 193 : 1953 B.L.J.R. 135.

Headings:—Headings prefixed to the sections are regarded as preambles to those sections and therefore a safe guide in interpreting them ; but the headings or sub-headings cannot either restrict or extend the scope of the sections when the language used is free from ambiguity—Mt. Savitri Devi v. Dwarka Prasad, I.L.R. 1939 All. 275 ; Md. Shafi v. District Magistrate, A.I.R. 1964 J.K. 23.

T. P. Amendment Act, 1929 :—The Transfer of Property Act has been amended by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, XX of 1929.

The amendments made by this Act have come into force from the 1st April 1930.

[For Bill No. 33 of 1927, and the Report of the Special Committee, see Gazette of India, August 20, 1927, Part V, pp. 89—131 ; reprinted (as Bill No. 6 of 1929) in the Gazette of India, March 9, 1929, Part V, pp. 30—70 ; for the Report of the Select Committee, see Gazette of India, September 7, 1929, Part V, pp. 111-125 ; for Act XX of 1929, see Gazette of India, October 12, 1929, Part IV, pp. 33—44.]

1A. Amendments—whether retrospective :—The general principle as laid down by the Privy Council as to whether an amendment is retrospective is as follows : while provisions dealing with matters of procedure have, in general, retrospective effect, provisions which touch a right in existence are not to be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment—Delhi Cloth, etc., Mills Co. v. Income Tax Commissioners, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 242 (244), following Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving, (1905) A.C. 369 (P.C.).

On the question whether the amendments made in the Act by Act XX of 1929 are retrospective or not, there is a great divergence of opinion in the different High Courts and Chief Courts.

Selection 63 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929) lays down that the amendments made thereby in the following sections of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, namely, sections 2, 3, 15, 16, 17, 18, 53, 56, 58, 63A, 65A, 67 (cl. a), 67A, 68, 69, 69A, 91, 102, 107, 111, 114A, 119, 129 and 130 “shall not be deemed to affect:

- (a) the terms or incidents of any transfer of property made or effected before the first day of April, 1930,
- (b) the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done or suffered before the aforesaid date,
- (c) any right, title, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred before such date, or

(d) any remedy or proceeding in respect of such right, title, obligation or liability ; and nothing in any other provision of this (Amendment) Act shall render invalid or in any way affect anything done before the first day of April, 1930, in any proceeding pending in a Court on that date ; and any such remedy and any such proceeding as is herein referred to may be enforced, instituted or continued, as the case may be, as if this (Amendment) Act had not been passed."

As regards the amendments made in the sections of the main Act enumerated above, it has been expressly laid down in sec. 63 of the Amending Act that they are not retrospective. But as regards the other amendments made by the said Amending Act (in this class fall the new sections 53-A and 92 of the main Act), according to one set of decisions they are not retrospective—Kanji v. Shunmugam, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 734, Jagadamba v. Anadi, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 337, Lakshmi v. Shankara, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 171, Bank of Chettinad v. Maung Aye, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 306 (F.B.) ; Srinivasulu v. Damodaraswami, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 779, (1938) M.W.N. 708 ; Kotireddi v. Kaonam, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 916, 71 M.L.J. 639, 166 I.C. 535 ; Janki v. Kanhaiya, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 102, 159 I.C. 316 ; Jagdeo v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1934 Pat 127, Chettyar Firm v. Kaliamma, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 423.

But according to the other set of decisions these other provisions mentioned in the latter part of sec. 63 of the Amending Act have retrospective operation—Suleman v. Patell, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 381 ; Gajadhar v. Bachan, A.I.R. 1934 All. 768 ; Banarsi v. Ali Mahammad, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 5 ; Shyam Sundar v. Din Shah, A.I.R. 1937 All. 10 ; Ashutosh v. Nalinakhya, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 467 ; Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, A.I.R. 1937 All. 588 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1937 All. 880, (1937) A.L.J. 840, 171 I.C. 153 ; Isap v. Umraji, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 115, 39 Bom. L. R. 1309, 174 I.C. 188 ; Ram Dayal v. Chakrapani, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 60, 160 I.C. 933 ; Padma Lochan v. Ajimaddin, 42 C.W.N. 1106 ; Md. Hushen v. Jamini, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 97, 42 C.W.N. 38, I.L.R. 1938 Cal. 607, 176 I.C. 41 ; Kundan v. Faquir A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 127 (F.B.), 174 I.C. 714 ; Ko Po v. Maung Lu, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 402. See also Wakefield v. Sayeedo Khatun, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 36, 15 Pat. 786, 166 I.C. 797 ; Girdhar Lal v. Alay Hasan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 221 (F.B.), (1938) A.L.J. 313, 174 I.C. 702 ; Totaram v. Ram Lal, 54 All. 897 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1932 All. 489, 1932 A.L.J. 629.

The principal ground, upon which it has been held that the amendments mentioned above are not retrospective, is that where the language employed by the Legislature is ambiguous and not clear and explicit, the Court must not give a construction to the new Act which would take away vested rights—see Jagadamba v. Anadi, supra and Srinivasulu v. Damodaraswami, supra.

On the other hand, the chief reason which has influenced the contrary view is that sec. 63 of the Amending Act having declared certain sections to be not restrospective says that the other sections are not retrospective in a limited sense only, that is, the amendments will not affect anything already done before 1st April 1930 in any pending proceeding. Therefore, by implication the Legislature has said that where there is no pending proceeding the sections will have retrospective operation.

More recent decisions :—The following recent cases support the view that the provisions mentioned in the latter part of sec. 63 of the Amending Act will have retrospective operation where there is no pending proceeding: Tukaram v. Atmaram, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 31, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 71, 40 Bom. L.R. 1192 (Broomfield & Macklin, JJ.); Subraya v. Timmana, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 508, 40 Bom. L.R. 1001; Daw Yi v. Maung Po Sang, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 175, 182 I.C. 651; Jagad Bhusan v. Panna Lal, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 287 (Henderson J.); Rustomji v. Bai Moti, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 90, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 50, 41 Bom. L.R. 1310 (Beaumont, C.J. and Sen, J.); Kishen Gopal v. Abdul Latif, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 97, 15 Luck. 175, (1939) O.W.N. 1045 (Thomas, C.J. & Radha Krishna, J.); Mangal Sen v. Kewal Ram, A.I.R. 1940 All. 75, 187 I.C. 274 (Bennet & Varma, JJ.) Chuni Lal v. Laksmi Chand, A.I.R. 1940 All. 237, 1940 A.L.J. 234, I.L.R. 1940 All. 212 (Iqbal Ahmad & Bajpai, JJ.); Tika Sao v. Hari Lal, 19 Pat. 752 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 385, 21 P.L.R. 453.

For the contrary view see further Munna Lal v. Chatan Prakash, I.L.R. 1940 All. 79, 1939 A.L.J. 1099, A.I.R. 1940 All. 65 where Bennet and Varma, JJ. have held that there is nothing in the amendment of sec. 84, T. P. Act (a section not specifically mentioned in sec. 63 of Act 20 of 1929) to show that the amendment is in any way to be retrospective. It does not, however, appear that the Full Bench decision in Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, I.L.R. 1937 All. 880, 1937 A.L.J. 659, A.I.R. 1937 All. 588 was brought to the notice of their Lordships. In Mangal Sen v. Kewal Ram, A.I.R. 1940 All. 75, 187 I.C. 274 the same learned Judges have held that the amended sec. 92, T. P. Act, has retrospective operation. In Serajul Haque v. Dwijendra Mohan, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 33, Mr. Justice Biswas seems to have been inclined to the view taken by Wort, J. in Jagadamba Prasad v. Anadi Nath, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 337, 19 P.L.T. 594, 176 I.C. 273; but this latter decision is deemed to have been overruled by the Full Bench case of Tika Sao v. Harilal, supra, though supported by the dissentient judgment of Manohar Lal, J. In a recent case the Calcutta High Court has, however, held that the mere fact that certain sections of the Act are expressly made non-retrospective does not necessarily show that the intention of the legislature was to make the other sections retrospective—Shamsuddin v. Haidar Ali, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 194, 49 C.W.N. 104.

In Janaki Nath v. Pramatha Nath, 67 I.A. 82, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 291 (at p. 306), A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 38, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have noticed that there are conflicting decisions in India on the above question, but their Lordships did not find it necessary to express any opinion thereon.

2. Object of the T. P. Act :—"The chief objects of the Transfer of Property Act are two: first to bring the rules which regulate the transmission of property between living persons into harmony with the rules affecting its devolution upon death and thus to furnish the complement of the work commenced in framing the law of intestate and testamentary succession; and secondly, to complete the code of contract law, so far as relates to immoveable property....Like the Contract Act, it is not and does not purport to be, an exhaustive measure"—Whitley Stokes' Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. I, p. 726.

3. Scope of Act :—The scope of this Act is limited to transfer of property by act of parties as contradistinguished from a transfer by operation of law, e.g., in case of insolvency, forfeiture or sale in execution of a decree. It relates to transfer of property inter vivos and has no application to disposal of property by will—Raja Parthasarathi v. Rajah Venkata-dari, 46 Mad. 190 (222), A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 457, 43 M.L.J. 486. Nor does it deal with cases of succession—Kishori v. Krishna Kamini, 37 Cal. 377 (382), 11 C.L.J. 401. Principles of justice, equity and good conscience embodied in statutes like T.P. Act, Indian Succession Act should not be applied to all communities alike so far as their personal laws are concerned—Kamalakshy v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 123; I.L.R. (1967) 2 Ker. 268; 1967 Ker. L.J. 671.

4. The Act not a complete Code :—The Transfer of Property Act is not exhaustive; it does not profess to be a complete code—Satyabadi v. Harabati, 34 Cal. 223 (228); Bunsee Das v. Gena Lal, 12 I.C. 155, 14 C.L.J. 530; Mahomed Shafikul Huq v. Krishna Govinda, 23 C.W.N. 284, 47 I.C. 428 (per Richardson, J.); Kishori Lal v. Krishna Kamini, 37 Cal. 377 (382); Bhupendra v. Wajihunnissa, 2 P.L.J. 293 (300); Jatindra v. Rangpur Tobacco Co., A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 990 (991), 80 I.C. 20; Chotesha v. Maktum, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 223. Thus, for instance, it is not exhaustive on the law of mortgages—Bhupendra v. Wajihunnissa, 2 P.L.J. 293 (300), 39 I.C. 564; Hotchand v. Kishinchand, 17 S.L.R. 178, 83 I.C. 548, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 23 (24). Sec. 60 does not contain all the instances of severance of mortgages that may be conceived or allowed—Low & Co. v. Pulin Bihari, 59 Cal. 1372, 143 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 154 (161). It does not apply to a transfer of property by an award—Amir Bibi v. Arokiam, 34 M.L.J. 184 (187), 45 I.C. 813. It does not also apply to creation of easements—Sital Chandra v. Delanney, 20 C.W.N. 1158, 34 I.C. 450. It simply defines and amends 'certain' parts of the law of transfer of property and it should be noted that the word 'consolidate' has not been used in the preamble.

The Transfer of Property Act is not exhaustive; and where a case is not contemplated by any of the provisions of this Act, the High Court as a Court of Equity is entitled to administer the principles of equity as laid down in English or Indian cases which are not distinctly prohibited by statute—Mayashankar v. Burjori, 27 Bom. L.R. 1449, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 31, 91 I.C. 978; Kalyan Das v. Jan Bibi, 51 All. 454, 112 I.C. 765, A.I.R. 1929 All. 12 (14); Maharaja of Jeypore v. Rukmini, 42 Mad. 589 (598) (P.C.); Raja of Kalahasti v. Parthasarathy, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 558 (561). Thus, the holder of a statutory charge is entitled to a decree for sale—Corporation of Calcutta v. Arun Chandra, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 862, 61 Cal. 1047, 38 C.W.N. 917. But where the matter entirely falls within the terms of the Transfer of Property Act, the Courts are not at liberty to follow the English Common Law rules—Venkatacharyulu v. Venkatasubba, 48 Mad. 821 (823), A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 55, 90 I.C. 725; Raja of Kalahasti v. Parthasarathy, supra. In India there being a codified law of mortgage, it is improper for the Courts in India to ignore the law obtaining in India and look for English cases as their guide. It is only where the statutory law in India is of no help, that the Court may look to English cases for rules of justice, equity and good conscience—Mt. Subratan v. Dhanpat, A.I.R. 1933 All. 70, 54 All. 1041, 143 I.C. 409.

It is always dangerous to apply English decisions to the construction of an Indian Act where the clauses under consideration are not the same—Lasa Din v. Mt. Gulab, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 207, 7 Luck. 442, 36 C.W.N. 1017,

A.O. 1937 and A.L.O. 1956. The third paragraph was adapted by A.L.O. 1950 and A.L.O. 1956. The Act has been declared in force in Panth Piploda by the Panth Piploda Laws Regulation, 1929. The words territories to which immediately before the 1st November, 1956 were comprised in Part B States or in the States of Bombay, Punjab and Delhi were substituted by A.L.O., 1956 for the words "Part B States".

The Act came into force in Cochin on 1-1-1112 (Coch.). The rights and liabilities of the parties to transactions which came into existence before the Act have to be determined in accordance with the principles of the common law which governed the transactions in the State prior to date of commencement of the Act—Varahadevaswom v. Umer Sait, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 17.

8. Extent—British India :—"'British India' shall mean, as respects the period before the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act the territories and places within His Majesty's dominions which were for the time being governed by His Majesty through the Governor-General of India or through any Governor or officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India, and as respects any period after that date and before the date of the establishment of the Dominion of India means all territories for the time being comprised within the Governors' Provinces and the Chief Commissioners' Provinces, except that a reference to British India in an Indian law passed or made before the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935, shall not include a reference to Berar"—Section 3 (5) of the General Clauses Act X of 1897 as amended by A.L.O. 1950. Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935 came into force on 1st April, 1937.

The civil stations of Wadhwan and Rajkot and the Cantonment of Secunderabad are outside British India—see Emperor v. Chimanlal, 14 Bom. L.R. 876; Queen-Empress v. Abdul Latib, 10 Bom. 186 and Hossain Ali v. Abid Ali, 21 Cal. 177 respectively.

Act IV of 1882 has ceased to be in force in the Naga Hills District (including the Mokokchang Sub-division), the Dibrugarh Frontier Tract, and North Cachar Hills, the Garo Hills, the Khasia and Jaintia Hills, and the Mikir Hills Tract—See Assam Rules Manual, Ed. 1893, pp. 408, 409; Ed. 1884, Pt. II, pp. 212 and 795 respectively.

The Act has been declared in force in the Pargana of Manpur by the Manpur Laws Regulation 2 of 1926 and in Panth Piploda by the Panth Piploda Laws Regulation 1 of 1929.

The Act has been repealed or modified to the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of Madras Act 3 of 1922 in the City of Madras—See s. 13 of Madras Act 3 of 1922.

The Act has been repealed as to Crown grants by the Crown Grants Act, 15 of 1895.

Sind :—The whole Act was extended with effect from 1st January, 1915 to the Province of Sind—See Bombay Rules and Orders, Vol. II, p. 194.

Bombay :—This Act has been extended from 1st January 1893 to the whole of the territories (other than the scheduled districts) under the administration of the Government of Bombay. See Bombay Gazette, 1892, Part I, p. 1071.

Punjab and N.-W. F. Province :—Although the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab and the N.-W. F. Province, the Courts, when deciding cases in which the principles of law dealt with by the provisions of this Act are involved, may adopt those provisions as embodying the law applicable to the case, especially where the law enunciated therein coincides with the principles of equity, good conscience and justice, and for which there is no statutory law applicable in the Punjab—Bhagwan Devi v. Bunyadi Khanum, 85 P.R. 1902; Safdar Ali v. Ghulam, 103 P.R. 1915, 30 I.C. 526; Basso v. Mir Muhammad, 278 P.L.R. 1913, 20 I.C. 291; Hakim Singh v. Charandas, 19 P.L.R. 1904; Jangi Mal v. Pioneer Flour Mills, 27 I.C. 115, 106 P.R. 1914; Dula Singh v. Bela Singh, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 92, 78 I.C. 374; Tarachand v. Sher Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 944 (945), 38 P.L.R. 702; Jhuman v. Dulia, 4 Lah. 439 (441); Moolchand v. Gangajal, 11 Lah. 258 (F.B.), 31 P.L.R. 342, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 356; Mohammad Abdullah v. Mohammad Yasin, 34 P.L.R. 245, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 151 (152); Nizam Din v. Ram Sukh, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 286 (287); Gian Singh v. Atma Ram, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 374, 141 I.C. 596; Ratan v. Smail, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 821; Gurudas v. Punjab-Sind Bank, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 972; Punjab-Sind Bank v. Kishan Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 350, 16 Lah. 881, 156 I.C. 795; Saifulla v. Chaman Lal, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 43, 160 I.C. 986; Mila v. Mangal, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 156; Ganda Singh v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 101, 152 I.C. 231; Was Dev v. Dheru Mal, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 291, 42 P.L.R. 321, 190 I.C. 525; Bank of Upper India v. Skinner, A.I.R. 1942 P.C. 67 (68); Chela Ram v. Gopi Chand, A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 88; Somnath v. Desai, A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 404; I.L.R. 1950 Punj. 271; Ram Gopal Dulat Singh v. Sardar Gurbux Singh, A.I.R. 1955 Punj. 215.

In a province to which this Act has not been extended the rule embodied in this Act should be allowed in preference to the English procedure—Kadir Moidin v. Nepean, 26 Cal. 1 (6, 7) (P.C.).

But although the equitable principles underlying the T. P. Act are followed in the Punjab, the Act itself with its technicalities does not apply to that province, and the Court commits an irregularity in relying upon that Act to dismiss on a purely technical point (e.g., on the ground of absence of a written instrument of assignment of an actionable claim) a claim which is otherwise just and equitable—Teja Singh v. Firm Kalyan Das, 6 Lah. 487, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 575, 26 P.L.R. 679, 91 I.C. 778. Similarly, deeds in that province need not be executed or attested according to the formalities required by this Act—Kanwar Ram v. Ghugi, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 148, 108 I.C. 57. See also Punjab National Bank v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 390, 163 I.C. 114; Gurdit v. Kalunal, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 5, 167 I.C. 698; Kamal v. Gurcharan, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 158, 164 I.C. 153; Md. Hussain v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 330, 41 P.L.R. 895, 186 I.C. 45.

Berar :—This Act has been extended to Berar from 1907. Therefore, a suit for foreclosure instituted after 1907 is governed by the T. P. Act, although the mortgage was executed prior to 1907—Sheoram v. Jamnabai, 19 N.L.R. 18, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 273, 65 I.C. 503. See also Chandrabhaga v. Anandrao, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 142, 173 I.C. 85.

Burma :—This Act has been extended from 1st January 1893 to the area included within the limits of Rangoon town and within the Municipalities of Moulmein, Bassein and Akyab. See Burma Gazette, 1904, Part I, pp. 628 and 684. From 1st January 1922, this Act has been extended to the whole of Burma, excepting certain areas. Since 1st April, 1937, Burma has been excluded from the operation of this Act.

"Or any part thereof" :—As to the meaning of these words occurring in the 4th para of this section, see 5 Rang. 7 (P.C.), infra.

This Act has also been extended to—

- (i) the States of Tripura and Vindhya Pradesh by Act XXX of 1950 ;
- (ii) Manipur by Acts XXX of 1950 and LXVIII of 1956 ;
- (iii) the States merged in the State of Bombay by Bombay Act IV of 1950 ;
- (iv) the former Madhya Pradesh by M.P. Act XII of 1950 ;
- (v) Shillong by Assam Act VIII of 1947 ;
- (vi) the whole of the then State of Saurashtra by notification in Saurashtra Govt. Gaz. 1951, Extra ;
- (vii) the whole of the State of Rajasthan by Notification in Raj. Gaz. 1952 ;
- (ix) to the Union Territory of Delhi (Except Sec. 129) by Notification in the Gazette of India dated 17-11-62.

Para 5—Power of State Government :—The power to extend any part of the Act to a province to which it did not apply, did not authorize the Local Government to extend particular sections of the Act so as to give those sections a different operation from that which they had in the Act itself read as a whole, e.g., to abrogate in the area to which the extension applied, a rule of Mahomedan Law till then in force there as to which the Legislature had expressly provided that it was to remain unaffected by the Act—Ma Mi v. Kallander, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 22 (23), 5 Rang. 7, 54 I.A. 23.

Exemption :—No such exemption has yet been made.

Para 6 :—Section 54, paras, 2 and 3, and secs. 59, 107 and 123 extend to every cantonment in British India—See sec. 287 of the Cantonments Act, 2 of 1924 and Punjab & Sind Bank v. Ishar Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1001.

Scheduled Districts :—Since the passing of the Scheduled Districts Act, 1874, an Act passed by the Indian Legislature applies to the Scheduled Districts also if the latter are not expressly excluded—Collector of Vizagapatam v. Krishna Chandra, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1181 (F.B.), 52 Mad. 1, 55 M.L.J. 584.

8A. Application of Act in excluded matters :—The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act should be carefully applied and the assistance of the Act as a guide on matters which have been excluded from the purview thereof by express words should not be invoked, unless the provisions embody principles of general application—Namdeo v. Narmadabai, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 228.

2. In the territories to which this Act extends for the time being the enactments specified in the schedule hereto annexed shall be repealed to the extent therein mentioned. But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect—

Saving of certain enactments, incidents, rights, liabilities, etc.

(a) the provisions of any enactment not hereby expressly repealed ;

(b) any terms or incidents of any contract or constitution of property which are consistent with the provisions of this Act, and are allowed by the law for the time being in force ;

(c) any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any right or liability ; or

(d) save as provided by section 57 and Chapter IV of this Act, any transfer by operation of law or by, or in execution of, a decree or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction ;

And nothing in the second chapter of this Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of * * Muhammadan * * law.

Amendment :—In the last para, the words “Hindu” and “or Buddhist” have been omitted by sec. 3 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). For reasons, see Note 14 below.

N.B.—This amendment shall not affect any transfer made before 1st April, 1930. See Note 1A, ante.

9. Clause (a) :—*Saving of certain enactments :—*The effect of this clause is to maintain intact the statutory force which the Indian Legislature had given to local usage in the Punjab (Act IV of 1872, sec. 7) and Oudh (Act XVIII of 1876, secs. 4, 8). Local usages are also saved by secs. 36, 98 and 108. (Whitley Stokes' Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. I, p. 746 footnote).

By virtue of this clause, a relinquishment made as provided by sec. 74 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code will stand unaffected by the provisions of this Act and can be effected without any registered instrument required under sec. 123 of this Act—Motibai v. Desai, 41 Bom. 170 (177, 180), 18 Bom. L.R. 976, 38 I.C. 838.

“It is a fundamental rule in the construction of statutes that subsequent statute in general terms is not to be construed to repeal a previous particular statute, unless there are express words to indicate that such was the intention, or unless such an intention appears by necessary implication”—per Bovill, J. in Queen v. Champneys, L.R. 6 C.P. 394 (cited in 20 Mad. 481).

10. Clause (c) :—*Saving of rights or liabilities arising before the Act :—*This clause embodies the general principle that Acts are prospective and not retrospective in their operation. See also sec. 6 of the General Clauses Act.

A lease executed in the former Nawanagar State before the Act came into force there would not be governed by the present Act in view of cl. (c) of this section, but will be governed by the common law principles which were usually held applicable by all Courts in India—Karsandajji, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 113.

This clause does not apply where the legal relation was constituted after the Transfer of Property Act came into force. Such a case will be governed by the provisions of this Act—Ulfat Hossain v. Gyani, 36 Cal. 802 (806).

Although the Transfer of Property Act may not, of its own force, apply directly to a case of kanom granted prior to this Act, the rules in this Act, being founded on reason and equity, may properly be applied to the case—Vasudevan v. Valia Chathu, 24 Mad. 47 (56) (F.B.). The principle of sec. 111 (g), being a statutory provision in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience, was applied to a lease executed before this Act, although the section itself was not applicable to the case and it was held that the refusal to render specified services did not operate to create a forfeiture—Maharaja of Jeypore v. Rukmini, 42 Mad. 589 (598) (P.C.). The rules of the T. P. Act may be applied to a mortgage executed prior to the passing of this Act, in the absence of any rule preventing them and in conflict with this Act—Gopi Lal v. Abdul, 26 A.L.J. 887, A.I.R. 1928 All. 381 (383), 116 L.C. 91.

There is nothing in this clause to disentitle the parties from seeking the relief given by this Act. The right to a relief arising from a certain relation existing between the parties is a matter of adjective law, and consequently, the parties are entitled, when a new remedy has been provided by a new Act at the time when the relation subsists, to take advantage of that remedy in a Court of law—Bikkina Ramayya v. Adabala Seshayya, 30 M.L.J. 338, 34 L.C. 475 (477).

The provisions of this Act apply to the assignment of a mortgage made after this Act came into force, although the mortgage may have been made before the commencement of the Act—Lala Jugdeo v. Brij Behari, 12 Cal. 505 (508); Rathnasami v. Subramanya, 11 Mad. 56 (60).

Where a tenancy was created before the commencement of this Act, but that tenancy came to an end and a new tenancy was thereafter constituted subsequent to the passing of this Act, the tenant cannot avail himself of the benefit of this clause and evade the operation of this Act—Durga Nikarini v. Gobordhan, 19 C.W.N. 525 (527, 528), 20 C.L.J. 448, 24 L.C. 183.

Instances of rights saved by this clause:—

The provisions of Regulation XXXIV of 1803 relating to the maximum rate of interest allowed to the mortgagee are incidents of the mortgagor's rights, and if the mortgage was created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, such rights cannot be disturbed by this Act, and the mortgagee cannot claim interest exceeding the rate allowed by the Regulation—Samar Ali v. Karimullah, 8 All. 402 (405). But the Bengal Regulation I of 1798 related only to procedure and was not a substantive law. So, even if a mortgage was executed when the Regulation was in force, it would not be governed by the Regulation after its repeal by the present Act—Khun Khun v. Mahaber, A.I.R. 1948 All. 261 F.B., 1948 A.L.J. 90.

This Act has no retrospective effect so as to invalidate an order for sale, the right to which arose out of a legal relation between the parties prior to this Act coming into force—Naranappa v. Samarcharl, 19 Mad. 382 (384).

The provisions of sec. 59 of this Act relating to attestation do not apply to a mortgage created before the passing of this Act—Jati Kar v. Mukunda, 39 Cal. 227 (230).

Where valid and effectual proceedings taken under Regulation XVII of 1806 had come to an end, when the Regulation was still in force, and the mortgagee acquired an immediate right to have a decree declaring the property to be his absolutely, such right would be saved by this clause and therefore would be enforceable even after the T. P. Act came into operation—Baij Nath Pershad v. Moheswari, 14 Cal. 451 (456).

Where a mortgagee obtained a decree in 1880 (i.e., before the passing of this Act) declaring his title to certain mortgaged properties of his mortgagor judgment-debtor and authorising a sale thereof, he was entitled to execute the decree without the necessity of bringing a suit under sec. 67 (as provided by sec. 99)—Dinendra v. Chandra Kishore, 12 Cal. 436 (437).

In a suit by a landlord to eject the tenant, filed before the coming into operation of the Transfer of Property Act, the provisions as to notice in this Act in the case of leases did not apply, and no notice to quit was necessary—Ambabai v. Bhau, 20 Bom. 759 (761, 762).

The provisions of this Act do not apply to Patni taluqs governed by Reg. VIII of 1819—Surendra Narayan v. Bijoy Singh Dudhoria, 52 Cal. 655, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 962, 30 C.W.N. 233, 89 I.C. 785.

The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to a tenancy created before the passing of the Act. A non-permanent tenure, created before the Act was in force, is not transferable—Hiramoti v. Annoda Prosad, 7 C.L.J. 553; Kailash v. Hari Mohan, 13 C.W.N. 541 (544), 1 I.C. 362, 10 C.L.J. 110; Chota Nagpur Banking Association v. Kamakhya Narayan, 7 Pat. 341, 109 I.C. 306, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 431 (433). A tenancy of homestead land from year to year which was in existence before the passing of this Act (and which was not transferable except by custom) is not governed by this Act, and sec. 108 (j) does not make it transferable absolutely or by way of sub-lease—Ananda Mohan v. Gobinda, 20 C.W.N. 322, 33 I.C. 565 (567), Sarada Kanta v. Nalini Chandra, 54 Cal. 333, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 39, 97 I.C. 817, 31 C.W.N. 231 (234); Sulin Mohan v. Raj Krishna, 25 C.W.N. 420 (423), 33 C.L.J. 193, A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 582, 60 I.C. 826; Hari Nath v. Raj Chandra, 2 C.W.N. 122; Hanuman Prasad v. Deo Charan, 7 C.L.J. 309. Section 108 (j) of this Act has no application to tenancies (e.g., of homestead land) created before the passing of the Act. The incident of non-transferability was common to tenancies from year to year created before this Act, and the right of transferability cannot be acquired by anything in this Act—Umakanta v. Kashiram, 23 I.C. 246 (247) (Cal.); Madhu Sudan v. Kamini, 32 Cal. 1023. Even a permanent tenancy created before the passing of this Act for the purpose of habitation cannot be transferred when pucca buildings have not been erected on the land, when the document creating the tenancy does not confer upon the lessee the right to transfer and when there is no evidence of a local custom in favour of such transfer—Safar Ali v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1012 (1013), 39 C.L.J. 585, 84 I.C. 28.

When tenures were created before the passing of this Act, the acquisitions of such tenures by the holder of the superior right could not merge them in that right under the common law of this country before the passing of this Act. Section 111 (d), therefore, cannot be applied to such tenures—Kumar v. Sarat, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 128.

Where a mortgage deed was executed before this Act came into force, the rights or liabilities of the parties to the mortgage or the relief in respect thereof are saved by sec. 2 (c)—Nanu v. Raman, 16 Mad. 335. "The subsequent creation of suits for foreclosure could not," observed their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, "except by clear enactment, revive the extinct right, and in effect the clear enactment is the other way, for sec. 2, cl. (c) of the Transfer of Property Act says that nothing therein shall affect any right or liability arising out of legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force or any relief in respect of such liability"—Srinath v. Khettur Mohan, 16 Cal. 693 (P.C.) at p. 701.

A lease executed before the passing of this Act would be excluded from the application of Chapter V—Narayana v. Narayana, 6 Mad. 327 (330); Ambabai v. Bhau, 20 Bom. 759. Thus, sec. 108, clause (o) does not apply to a lease created before the passing of this Act—Meghlal v. Raj Kumar, 34 Cal. 358 (370). Where a grant of mokarari lease was made to a person prior to the Transfer of Property Act, and he subsequently obtained a patni lease but kept the two leases distinct and separate, held that as the mokarari was granted prior to the T.P. Act, sec. 111 (d) did not apply, and there was no merger of the two interests—Hirendra v. Hari Mohan, 18 C.W.N. 860 (864), 22 I.C. 966.

11. Procedure not saved by clause (c) :—The procedure by which a right or liability may be determined or enforced or a relief may be obtained is not a 'right' or 'liability' or 'relief' within the meaning of this clause. Therefore, a suit brought after the Transfer of Property Act came into force for foreclosure of a conditional mortgage executed prior to this Act, will be governed by the procedure prescribed by this Act and not by the procedure prescribed under Regulation XVII of 1806, the procedure under the earlier Regulation not being saved by this clause—Ganga Sahai v. Kishen Sahai, 6 All. 262 (267) (F.B.). No one has a vested right in any particular form of procedure—Warner v. Murdoch, L.R. 4 Ch. D. 750, at p. 752 (per James, J.); Republic of Costa Rica v. Erlanger, L.R. 3 Ch. 62, 69 (per Mellish, L.J.). Clause (c) of sec. 2 preserves the rights of the parties in respect of mortgages executed before the commencement of this Act, but after the introduction of this Act the procedure for enforcing those rights is governed by its provisions—Murlidhar v. Parsharam, 25 Bom. 101 (103). "It does not follow that because a suitor has a cause of action, he has also a vested right to enforce it by a course of procedure and practice which was in force when he began his suit. He has only the right of prosecuting it in the manner prescribed for the time being by or for the Court in which he sues, and if an Act of Parliament alters that mode of procedure, he has no other right than to proceed according to the altered mode"—Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes.

Although a mortgage may be anterior to the passing of the Act, yet when a person comes into Court and claims a remedy under the mortgage, after the commencement of this Act, the procedure of this enactment will apply—Umda v. Umrao Begum, 11 All. 367; Shiva Deri v. Jaru, 15 Mad. 290; Mata Din v. Kazim, 13 All. 432 (F.B.); Kaveri v. Ananthappa, 10 Mad. 129; Bhōbo Sundari v. Rakhal Chunder, 12 Cal. 583 (589) (F.B.):

Rameshwar v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossain, 26 Cal. 39 (P.C.); Bikkina v. Adabala, 30 M.L.J. 338, 34 I.C. 475 (477). See also Ganga v. Kishen, 6 All. 262 (F.B.).

If, however, all the steps that were necessary to be taken to foreclose the mortgage had been taken under the earlier Regulation and all that remained was to bring a suit for foreclosure, held that the suit for foreclosure would be governed by the earlier Regulation. Umesh Chunder v. Chunchun, 15 Cal. 357 (360, 361); Mohabir Pershad v. Gangadhar, 14 Cal. 599 (604); Baij Nath v. Moheswari, 14 Cal. 451 (456).

12. Pending proceedings :—It is not the intention of the Transfer of Property Act to render ineffectual any suit commenced and decree made under the procedure in force before this Act was passed. Thus, where a plaintiff obtained a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property after the T. P. Act had come into force in a suit instituted before its commencement and the judgment-debtor objected that the decree-holder was not entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under sec. 67 of the Act that : Held that the objection was not valid, as the decree-holder had acquired rights under the decree which were, under this section, not affected by the provisions of sec. 99 of this Act—Makund Ram v. Ram Sarup, 1884 A.W.N. 274. But if the proceedings in respect of a mortgage executed before 1882 are commenced after the passing of this Act, the entire procedure of this Act must be followed, and the decree-holder cannot, by reason of the operation of sec. 99, gain a right to bring the property to sale otherwise than by following the procedure under sec. 67—Kaveri v. Ananthayya, 10 Mad. 129; Ram Prashad v. Ram Prasad, 4 O.C. 231.

*Rights already extinguished cannot be revived by this Act :—*Where in the year 1878, when no suit for foreclosure could be brought, the right of the mortgagee to possess was wholly extinguished by lapse of time, and the title of the purchasers under the mortgagor became freed from the mortgage, the subsequent creation of suits for foreclosure could not, except by clear enactment, revive the extinct right, and in effect the clear enactment, namely s. 2 cl. (c) of the T. P. Act is in the other way—Srinath v. Kheller Mohun, 16 Cal. 693 (701) (P.C.).

13. Clause (d) :—The meaning of this clause is that a transfer by operation of law or in execution of a decree or order of a Court shall not be affected by the various provisions in the Act regulating and codifying the law as to the actual transfers by act of parties—Promatho v. Kali Prasanna, 28 Cal. 744 (747).

As to the distinction between a private sale in satisfaction of a decree and a sale in execution of a decree see Dinendranath v. Tarak Chandra, 7 Cal. 107 (P.C.) at p. 118.

A transfer by sale in execution of a decree is exempted by this clause from the operation of the Transfer of Property Act; consequently, a registered conveyance under Chap. III of this Act is not necessary to give validity to this transfer—Balaji v. Dajiba, 2 C.P.L.R. 137. Similarly, a person purchasing a debt at an execution sale is not affected by sec. 135 of this Act. He can recover the same without regard to the terms of Chap. VIII of this Act—Krishnan v. Parachan, 15 Mad. 382. But a charge created by the liquidator of a company in winding up, though under the orders of the District Court, cannot be treated as a transfer in execution of an order of a Court within the scope of this clause, inasmuch as the District Court's sanction is not an order capable of execution—Motilal v. Poona C. & S. Manufacturing Co., 19 Bom. L.R. 602, 41 I.C. 246.

Sec. 36 has been held inapplicable to a case of transfer by operation of customary law—Mathewson v. Shyam Sundar, 33 Cal. 786. See this case cited in Note 158 under sec. 36. But the provisions of sec. 53, being founded on principles of justice, equity and good conscience, have been applied to a case of transfer by operation of law (e.g., a transfer effected by order of Court based upon an award)—Akram-unnissa v. Muta-af-unmissa, 51 All. 595, A.I.R. 1929 All. 238 (239), 116 I.C. 445.

Neither s. 51 in terms nor its principle applies to a transfer in execution of a decree. Consideration of equity does not arise in case of such a sale; principle of caveat emptor applies—Lalta Prasad v. Brahmanand, A.I.R. 1953 All. 449.

Where an order is passed by the Court that assignment of a bond should be made, it is a valid assignment though not in writing signed by the Court, as according to cl. (d) of this section the provisions of the Act do not apply to any transfer made by an order of the Court—Mani v. Anpurna, A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 218, 22 Pat. 114.

S. 100 is not excluded from the operation of the saving cl. (d)—Nawal Kishore v. Municipal Board, A.I.R. 1943 All. 115 (F.B.). This clause prevents s. 53 operating in the case of transfer under an order or decree of Court—Ramanathan v. Unnamalai, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 632, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 213.

Sec. 136 is controlled by sec. 2 (d) and therefore a purchase by a pleader of claim under a life insurance policy in execution of a decree is not invalid under sec. 136—National Insurance Co. v. Haridas, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 691, 46 C.L.J. 225, 104 I.C. 729. Similarly sec. 5 is controlled by sec. 2 (d)—Laxmi Devi v. Mukand Kanwar, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 834.

A sale by an Official Receiver acting under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act is not a transfer by operation of law or in execution of a decree or order of Court and such a transfer is not exempted from registration under sec. 54—Narasappa v. Hussain, 152 I.C. 988, 67 M.L.J. 746. The order of the Court under the Provincial Insolvency Act simply vests the property in the Official Receiver, and on such vesting he is entitled to sell the property, without any leave or order of the Court. Though the property vests in the Receiver by operation of law, the transfer by him is a transfer by one party to another and cannot be said to be a 'transfer by operation of law' in favour of the vendee—Basava Sankaran v. Anjaneyalu, 50 Mad. 135 (F.B.), 51 M.L.J. 529, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1, 99 I.C. 8. But see Wazirey v. Mathura Prasad, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 55, 15 Luck. 404, 1939 O.W.N. 32, where it has been held that the Official Receiver's sale falls under cl. (d). It is in the nature of a Court sale and its validity really depends on the order of the Insolvency Court vesting the property in the Official Receiver and thus authorising him to sell; therefore such a sale, if held with the sanction of the Court, does not necessitate a sale deed. Where a security bond is executed under O. 32, r. 16, C. P. Code, in favour of the Court, hypothecating certain immoveable property to secure a proper disposal of the money due to certain minors, an assignment of the security-bond by the Court in favour of the minors on their attaining majority in order to enable them to realise the money from the surety does not require to be effected by a registered instrument. As the transfer takes place by an order of the Court, it is unaffected by the provisions of the T. P. Act requiring registration, by virtue of sec. 2 (d)—Rer Saran v. Yudhistar, 53 All 786 (F.B.), 29 A.L.J. 503, A.I.R. 1931 All. 389 (390), 133 I.C. 904. Where the court appointing a guardian actually orders the sale of the property of the minor by auction and sends the auctioneer a robakari directing him to sell the property the fact that the court passed the order on the application of the guardian does not detract from the sale being one in execution of an order of the court and such a sale need not be registered—Prém Nath v. Sundra Wati, A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 630.

Application in the Punjab :—Section 2 (d) contains a highly technical provision which is not binding on the Courts in the Punjab and cannot be invoked to defeat a suit by a creditor brought in the Punjab for declaration that his debtor has transferred property with a view to defeat or delay his rights—Chattru v. Mt. Majdan, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 460 (462), Lah. 849, 150 I.C. 888.

14. “And nothing.....Muhammadan Law” :—The reference to Hindu law has been omitted from this clause, as being unnecessary. The word “Buddhist” has been omitted as the Government of Burma had no objection to such omission. The word “Muhammadan” has been retained as the rules in chapter 2 are not in all cases in conformity with the personal law of Muhammadans.

The Mahomedan Law of gift is not affected by anything enacted in the Transfer of Property Act—Sadik Hussain v. Hashim Ali, 38 All. 627 (646) (P.C.); Babu Lal v. Ghanesham Das, 44 All. 633 (634), 20 A.L.J. 466, A.I.R. 1922 All. 205, 70 I.C. 84.

Under the Mahomedan law, the transfer or renunciation of an expectant right of inheritance is invalid; and since the rules of Mahomedan law are not affected by the Transfer of Property Act, it is unnecessary to consider whether such transfer or renunciation would be valid or invalid under this Act—Asa Beevi v. Karuppan, 41 Mad. 365 (370). The provisions of sec. 53 are not inconsistent with Mahomedan law; consequently that section has been applied to a waqf created by a Mahomedan for the purpose of defeating his creditors—Ahmad Husain v. Kalu Mian, 27 A.L.J. 460, A.I.R. 1929 All. 277 (278), 117 I.C. 97; Bismillah v. Tahsin Ali, 1930 A.L.J. 616, A.I.R. 1930 All. 462 (465), 124 I.C. 722. But the general rules in Chapter II apply to Mahomedan transfers unless there is an inconsistent rule of Mahomedan Law—Muhammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi (1932) 59 I.A. 237, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 158.

The right of a Hindu mortgagor to the protection afforded by the rule of damdupat was not affected by anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act as it stood before its amendment by the Amending Act 20 of 1929—Jeewanbai v. Manordas, 35 Bom. 199 (203), 8 I.C. 694, 12 Bom. L.R. 992.

15. Crown Grants :—An exemption from the operation of this Act has been made by the Crown Grants Act (Act XV of 1895), sec. 2 of which lays down that nothing in the Transfer of Property Act shall apply to any grant or transfer of land or of any interest therein heretofore made or hereafter to be made by the Crown in favour of any person whomsoever and that every such grant and transfer shall be construed and take effect as if the Transfer of Property Act had not been passed. Leases granted by the Crown are outside the operation of the T. P. Act. There is no distinction between grants by virtue of the prerogative rights of the Crown and grants made as a mercantile transaction—Secretary of State v. Nistarini, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 319, 6 Pat. 446, 104 I.C. 209.

16. Maintenance Grants :—A grant of immoveable property to a Hindu widow for maintenance need not be made by a written instrument. The Transfer of Property Act does not apply to such transactions—Jivan Lal v. Chudaman, 10 N.L.R. 111, 26 I.C. 835.

Interpretation-clause.

3. In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,— “immoveable property” does not include standing timber, growing crops, or grass :

 “instrument” means a non-testamentary instrument :

“attested”, in relation to an instrument, means and shall be deemed always to have meant attested by two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument, or has seen some other person sign the instrument in the presence and by the direction of the executant, or has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person, and each of whom has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant ; but it shall not be necessary that more than one of such witnesses shall have been present at the same time, and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary :

“registered” means registered in any part of the territories to which this Act extends under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents :

“attached to the earth :” “attached to the earth” means—

(a) rooted in the earth, as in the case of trees and shrubs ;
 (b) imbedded in the earth, as in the case of walls or buildings ; or

(c) attached to what is so imbedded for the permanent beneficial enjoyment of that to which it is attached :

“actionable claim” means a claim to any debt, other than a debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property or by hypothecation or pledge of moveable property, or to any beneficial interest in moveable property not in the possession, either actual or constructive, a person is said to have "notice." 'notice' of a fact when he actually knows that fact or when, but for wilful abstention from an inquiry or search which he ought to have made, or gross negligence, he would have known it, or when information of the fact is given to or obtained by his agent under the circumstances mentioned in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, section 229.

Explanation 1.—Where any transaction relating to immovable property is required by law to be and has been effected by a registered instrument, any person acquiring such property or any part of, or share or interest in, such property shall be deemed to have notice of such instrument as from the date of registration or, where the property is not all situated in one sub-district, or where the registered instrument has been registered under sub-section (2) of section 30 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908 (XVI of 1908) from the earliest date on which any memorandum of such registered instrument has been filed by any Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district any part of the property which is being acquired, or of the property wherein a share or interest is being acquired, is situated :

Provided that—

- (1) the instrument has been registered and its registration completed in the manner prescribed by the Indian Registration Act, 1908 (XVI of 1908) and the rules made thereunder.
- (2) the instrument or memorandum has been duly entered or filed, as the case may be in books kept under section 51 of that Act, and
- (3) the particulars regarding the transaction to which the instrument relates have been correctly entered in the indexes kept under section 55 of that Act.

Explanation II.—Any person acquiring any immoveable property or any share or interest in any such property shall be deemed to have notice of the title, if any, of any person who is for the time being in actual possession thereof.

Explanation III.—A person shall be deemed to have had notice of any fact if his agent acquires notice thereof whilst acting on his behalf in the course of business to which that fact is material :

Provided that, if the agent fraudulently conceals the fact, the principal shall not be charged with notice thereof as against any person who was a party to or otherwise cognizant of the fraud.

Amendments :—The definition of “attested” has been added by the T. P. Amendment Act, 1926 as amended by Act 10 of 1927. See Note 18A.

The definition of “notice” has been amended and the three Explanations added by sec. 3 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act, 1929. Explanation I has been further amended by the Transfer of Property Amendment Act V of 1930. See Note 26 below. This amendment has no retrospective effect. See Note 1A, ante.

In the definition of “registered” the words British India were replaced by a Province by A.L.O. 1948. This was again replaced by a Part A State or Part C State by A.L.O. 1950. Then for this expression the words any State to which this Act extends were substituted by the Part B States (Laws) Act III of 1951. The words any State thereafter were substituted by A.L.O. (No. 2 of 1956) by the words any part of territories.

17. Immoveable Property :—This expression is not defined in this Act. One has to look for its definition to the General Clauses Act which again is not exhaustive—Mati Lal v. Iswar, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 727, 41 C.W.N. 263, 64 C.L.J. 308 ; see also Daw Yan v. U Min Sin, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 102, 1940 R.L.R. 7, 187 I.C. 762.

“Immoveable property” shall include land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth.—Section 3 (25), General Clauses Act (X of 1897). Therefore an assignment of rents and profits of land can only be made by a registered instrument—Daw Yan v. U Min Sin, supra. The right to collect rent from the tenants is a right to the benefits arising out of the lands. Therefore a lease of such a right to collect rents (such as a Mustajir lease in Orissa) is a lease of immoveable property within the meaning of sec. 107—Udayanarayan v. Badia Dasu, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 116. See also Ramchandra v. Subraya, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 127, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 692.

“Immoveable property” includes land, buildings, hereditary allowances, rights to ways, lights, ferries, fisheries or any other benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything which is attached to the earth, but not standing timber, growing crops, or grass.—Section 2 (6), Registration Act (XVI of 1908).

A house which is sold for the purpose of enjoyment as a house with an option to pull it down if the vendee likes, is immoveable property for this Act. Punnayya v. Chilakapudi, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 343, 91 I.C. 754.

The following are immoveable property :—

(a) The ‘equity of redemption’ in mortgaged property is considered as immoveable property—Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 603; Parashram v. Govind, 21 Bom. 226 (228); Kanti Ram v. Kutubuddin, 22 Cal. 33 (41); Umesh v. Zahur, 18 Cal. 164.

(a) Reversion in property leased, even if it be for a long term, say 999 years—Mati Lal v. Iswar, supra; so it is a vested remainder in land. It is therefore capable of being alienated by the holder of that interest or by any body authorized to sell his immoveable property—Budhiraju v. Vullipalem, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 802, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 600, 1939 M.W.N. 810.

(b) A Hindu widow's life-interest in the income of her husband's immoveable property—Natha v. Dhunbajji, 23 Bom. 1 (11).

(c) Office of hereditary priest of a temple—Krishnabhat v. Kapabhat, 6 B.H.C.R. A.C. 137.

(d) Right of way—Bejoy Chandra v. Bunku Behari, 13 C.W.N. 451, 4 I.C. 116.

(e) Right to collect rents from occupancy raiyats in actual possession—Innasi v. Sivagram, 5 M.L.J. 95.

(f) Right to collect dues from a fair on a piece of land—Sikandar v. Bahadur, 27 All. 462.

(f1) Right to collect fees of slaughter-houses and fish bazars—Md. Rowther v. Tinnevely Municipal Council, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 746, 48 M.L.W. 74.

(g) A right of ferry—Krishna v. Akilanda, 13 Mad. 54.

(h) A right to officiate as priest at funeral ceremonies of Hindus ranks amongst immoveable property according to Hindu Law, but it is not recognised as property in any other system of law.—Raghoo v. Kassy, 10 Cal. 73.

(i) A right of Malikana, which is an annual recurring charge on immoveable property—Churaman v. Balli, 9 All. 591 (597).

(i1) Right under a deed of settlement to receive rents and profits of immoveable property even though such income may have to be received from the hands of trustees. But rents and profits which at the time of the assignment have already been received by the trustees of the settlement (or even have accrued), are not immoveable property—M. E. Moolta Sons Ltd. v. Official Assignee, 40 C.W.N. 1253 (P.C.).

(j) A hat (market)—Surendra Narain v. Bhai Lal, 22 Cal. 752; Golam v. Parbati, 36 Cal. 665.

(k) A toda giras hak, i.e., a right to receive an annual payment from a village—Futtehsangji v. Dessai, 22 W.R. 178 (P.C.).

(n) The right granted by the Peshwa in permanence to levy toll on paddy exported from a particular territory, whether secured on land or not, being according to Hindu law, nibandha, is immoveable property.—Krishnaji v. Gajanan, 33 Bom. 373, 2 I.C. 489.

(o) Right to the assessment payable on a sub-tenure—Madhavrao v. Kashibai, 34 Bom. 287, 5 I.C. 599.

(ol) Where the grant made by a sanad is a nibandha—Collector v. Hari, 6 Bom. 546.

(p) Hereditary offices are regarded by Hindu law as immoveable property—Balwant v. Parsotam, 9 B.H.C.R. 99; Sinde v. Sinde, 4 B.H.C.R. 51; Collector of Thana v. Kashinath, 5 Bom. 322; Raghoo v. Kassy, 10 Cal. 73.

(q) Right of fishery—Parbutty v. Madho Pande, 3 Cal. 276; Ram Gopal v. Nurumuddin, 20 Cal. 446; Shibu Halder v. Gupisundari, 24 Cal. 449; Fadu v. Gour, 19 Cal. 544; Bhundal v. Pandol, 12 Bom. 221; Ganesh Chandra v. State of West Bengal, A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 114.

(r) The interest of a mortgagee in immoveable property—Paresnath v. Nabagopal, 29 Cal. 1; Benarsi v. Ram Chandar, 34 P.L.R. 233, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 210 (211). A lease is immoveable property—Indraloke Ltd. v. Santi Debi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 609.

(s) The right to collect lac from trees—Parmanandy v. Birkhu, 5 N.L.R. 21, 1 I.C. 903; Kamal Singh v. Kali Mathon, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 402.

(t) Factory—Amratlal v. Keshavlal, 28 Bom.L.R. 939, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 495 (496), 98 I.C. 696.

(u) Varshasans or annual allowances charged on immoveable property—Keshav v. Vinayak, 23 Bom. 22.

(v) The grant of a right to collect Tendu leaves (for making biri)—Mulji Sicca & Co. v. Nur Mohammad, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 377.

(x) An agreement to grow trees on land owned by one of the parties, to sell them when grown up and divide the sale proceeds—Appalaraju v. Tyla Yedukondalu, A.I.R. 1958 Andhra Pra. 713. When a proprietor grants the right to take forest produce the grantee acquires thereby an interest in the proprietary rights of the grantor, and such interest amounts to immoveable property—Mahadeo v. State of Bombay, A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 735.

17A. Mortgage-debt is immoveable property:—Before the amendment of the definition of actionable claim in section 3 of this Act, a debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property was held to be an actionable claim; but after the amendment (made by Act II of 1900), the definition of an actionable claim expressly excludes a debt secured by a mortgage of immoveable property; and such a debt will now be treated as immoveable property, and can be transferred only in the same way as an immoveable property is transferred (viz., by a registered instrument)—Perumal v. Perumal, 44 Mad. 196 (200, 201); Sakhiuddin v. Sonaula, 22 C.W.N. 641 (644), 45 I.C. 986; Elumalai v. Balakrishna, 44 Mad. 965 (968), A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 344, 66 I.C. 168; Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank, 34 C.W.N. 605 (610); Benarsi v. Ram Chandar, supra. A mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property and the mortgagee's interest therein can, even in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, only be immoveable property and not movable property—Prahlad v. Maganlal, A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 454. Thus a mortgage can only be assigned by a registered deed of assignment and not by a document which merely purports to recite a previous partition—Mirza Md. Osman v. Jambulingam, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 122; see also Bank of Chetnad v. Ma Ba Lo, 14 Rang. 494, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 152, 163 I.C. 645; Vijiaghavalu v. Arunachalam, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 165, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 582, 48 M.L.W. 766.

The defendant executed a mortgage to a bank. The bank went into liquidation and an arrangement was come to between the bank and its creditors by which the whole assets of the bank were transferred to a purchasing company, but the agreement was not registered. Subsequently the bank filed a suit on the mortgage: Held by the Privy Council that a suit by the bank in its own name was maintainable—Skinner v. Bank of Upper India, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 108 (113), 57 All. 314, 62 I.A. 115, 39 C.W.N. 834, 155 I.C. 743.

It is the modern practice in ordinary sales of an equity of redemption to insert an express covenant of indemnity by the purchaser and the absence of such a covenant affords a reason for the conclusion that the deed of transfer contains a complete record of the bargain between the parties—Montreal Trust Co. v. British Columbia, & Agency, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 65 (70), 160 I.C. 783.

Even though the debt is secured by an equitable mortgage (i.e., where the debt is embodied in a promissory note accompanied by deposit of title deeds), the mortgage-debt is to be deemed an immoveable property and can be transferred only by a registered instrument—Elumalai v. Balakrishna, 44 Mad. 965 (968), dissenting from Perumal v. Perumal, 44 Mad. 196 (201), where Wallis, C.J., expressed an opinion that a debt secured by an equitable mortgage could be transferred by endorsement of the promissory note alone, and no registered instrument was necessary.

18. The following are not immoveable property :—

(a) A decree for sale of immoveable property on a mortgage—Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Faizulla, 13 All. 89 (91); Ahmad Khan v. Abdul Rahman, 26 All. 603 (605); Baij Nath v. Binoyendra, 6 C.W.N. 5 (6); Gous Mahomed v. Khawas Ali Khan, 23 Cal. 450 (453).

(b) Right of purchaser to have the lands registered in his name—Bhikaji Baji v. Pandu, 19 Bom. 43.

(c) G. P. Notes—Doorga v. Pooran, 5 W.R. 141.

(d) A right of worship (whether a right of exclusive worship, or a pala, or turn of worship)—Eshun Chandra v. Monmohini, 4 Cal. 683 (685); Jatkar v. Mukundu, 39 Cal. 227 (230); Mohamaya v. Haridas, 42 Cal. 455, 27 I.C. 400; Narasingh v. Prolhadman, 46 Cal. 455, 47 I.C. 25; Jagdeo v. Ramsaran, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 7, 6 Pat. 245, 97 I.C. 332.

(e) A "Yajman Vritti" which primarily denotes an obligation imposed upon the Purohit or family priest to perform certain religious rights—Kadulal v. Beharilal, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 60. Brit jajmani books are movable property, they may be valuable property, but can in no sense be considered to be immoveable property. The amount payable by a jajman as brit jajmani to the Panda when he visits Mathura is not a fixed allowance which even under the Hindu law would be deemed to be a nibandha and is not immoveable property—Ram Kishan v. Salig Ram, A.I.R. 1946 All. 472, 224 I.C. 391.

(f) Royalty—Krishna Kishore v. Kusunda Collieries, 65 I.C. 673 (Pat.).

(g) A machinery which is not permanently attached to the earth and which can be removed from one place to another—Meghraj v. Krishna Chandra, A.I.R. 1924 All. 365, Perumal Naicker v. Ramaswami Kone, A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 346.

(h) A right to recover maintenance allowance (even though it is charged on immoveable property) is not in itself immoveable property—Altaf Begam v. Brij Narain, 51 All. 612, 27 A.L.J. 367, A.I.R. 1929 All. 281 (285), 116 I.C. 855.

Standing timber:—Standing timber is not immovable property under the Act—Thangal v. Kutti, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 59. "In excepting standing timber, growing crops and grass from the category of immoveable property, regard has probably been had to the fact that they are all things usually contemplated as severable or intended to be severed from the soil"—Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., p. 14. A standing timber is a tree which is fit to be used in building and repairing houses, and which has not been severed from the ground—Badan Kumari v. Suraj Kumari, 3 A.L.J. 20; Krishna Rao v. Babaji, 24 Bom. 31. Trees which bear fruit or other forest produce are not standing timber but are considered as immoveable property—Katwaru v. Ram Adhin, 10 A.L.J. 516, 17 I.C. 910; Sakharam v. Vishram, 19 Bom. 207 (208); Ali Sahib v. Mohideen, 13 Bom.L.R. 874, 12 I.C. 375. Thus where mango trees were mortgaged with the condition that the mortgagee must not cut down the trees so as to convert them into timber but must use them for the purpose of enjoying fruits, the trees must be regarded as immoveable property, and not moveable—Shiv Dayal v. Puttu Lal, 54 All. 437, 140 I.C. 491, A.I.R. 1933 All. 50 (52, 53); see also Bodha v. Ashloke, 5 Pat. 765 A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 1, 98 I.C. 779. But if according to the custom of a particular locality, a fruit-bearing tree is used in building or repairing houses, it can be taken to be a timber tree—Badan v. Suraj, A.L.J. 20; Krishna Rao v. Babaji, 24 Bom. 31; Nahanchand v. Modi, 31 Bom. 185 (197).

Having regard to the uses to which it is put in this country, babul trees would come within the scope of "timber"—Ram Kumar v. Krishna Gopal, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 106, 21 Luck. 48.

A contract for the cutting of all kinds of trees to be converted into charcoal excepting such trees as produce fruit or other forest produce is not a contract for sale of an interest on land—Ali Saheb v. Mohideen, supra; see also Mathura v. Jadubir, 28 All. 277. A grove consisting of shisham and neem trees does not constitute immoveable property—Nanhe Lal v. Ram Bharose, A.I.R. 1938 All. 115, 174 I.C. 315. But palm and date trees are trees the produce of which can be got and hence cannot be considered as timber and are therefore immoveable property—Moti v. Deoki, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 66, 160 I.C. 1054.

An agreement assigning for consideration a right to enjoy the produce of, and to cut and remove the trees, grass, etc., growing on land for a period of four years is an instrument conveying an interest in immoveable property—Seeni Chetiar v. Sanatnathan, 20 Mad. 58 (60) (F.B.). But a document which entitles certain persons merely to cut and remove all kinds of trees in a certain forest for two years, but not to enjoy the produce of the trees, is a mere sale of standing timber, and not one which conveys an interest in immoveable property—Mathura Das v. Judubir, 28 All. 277 (278). The principle of these decisions is that wherever at the time of the contract it is contemplated that the purchaser should derive a benefit from the further growth of the thing sold, and from further vegetation, the contract is to be considered as one creating an interest in land; but where the process of vegetation is over, and the parties agree that the thing shall be immediately withdrawn from the land, the land should be considered as a mere warehouse of the thing sold, and the contract is one for sale of moveable property. See also Mammikutti v. Puzhakkal, 29 Mad. 353 (357); Natesa v. Thangavelu, 38 Mad. 883 (885); Rajindra v. Madhu, A.I.R. 1919 Oudh 93, 112 I.C. 156.

Growing crops.—This term must be held to include all vegetable growths, whether in the form of fruit, bark or roots—Atmaram v. Doma, 11 C.P.L.R. 87. A lease of the crop of a mango grove for a certain period and entitling the lessee to the grass on the land, is a lease creating an interest in the trees and the land itself, and is therefore in respect of immoveable property. The deed creating such lease, therefore, require registration—Mahabir v. Enayat, A.I.R. 1951 All. 608. A crop of sugarcane is not immoveable property, and an endorsement of a bond hypothecating such crops does not require registration—Kalka Prasad v. Chandan, 10 All. 20. A “growing crop” necessarily means a crop which is in existence and which is in the process of coming to fruition—Imamali v. Priyawati, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 289, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 31, 171 I.C. 553. A deed of mortgage of immoveable property and also of the produce realized therefrom every year operates, in respect of the produce on the land as mortgage of movable property. The moment the crop comes into existence, the mortgagee gets title to the crop—Venkatachallam v. Venkatrami, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 456, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 929, 1940 M.W.N. 978; see also Misri Lal v. Morzhar Hossien, 13 Cal. 262 and Colyer v. Isaacs, 19 Ch. D. 342.

Grass.—Though grass is movable property right to cut grass being an interest in land is immoveable property—Crosby v. Wadsworth, (1805) 6 East. 602. An agreement for the sale of growing grass, growing timber, or growing fruit is a contract for the sale of an interest in land unless made with a view to their immediate severance and delivery as chattel to the purchaser—Seeni Chettiar v. Santhanathan, (1897) 20 Mad. 58 F.B.

18A. Attestation.—The definition of ‘attested’ has been added by the Transfer of Property Amendment Act XXVII of 1926 as amended by Act X of 1927 sec. 2 and sch. I.

The object of attestation is to ensure that there is no fraud or other such circumstance in the execution of the deed. A party to a document cannot attest the same—Gomathi v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 126; but a person interested in the transaction may be an attesting witness—Durga Din v. Suraj Baksh, (1931) 7 Luck. 41, A.I.R. 1931 O. 285 F.B.

The party who sees the document executed is in fact a witness to it; if he subscribes as a witness, he becomes an attesting witness—Alagappa v. Ko Kala, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 134, 1940 R.L.R. 199, 188 I.C. 759; see also Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir, 35 Mad. 607 and Burdett v. Spilsbury, 10 Cl. & Fin. 340. The affixing of signature of the attesting witnesses in the presence of the executant is the ordinary mode of attestation as defined in this section—Rajeshwar v. Sukhdeo, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 449. The statement of an attesting witness that the document was read out and explained by the writer and then the executants and the attesting witnesses signed it, implies that the attesting witnesses signed in the presence of the executants and therefore the attestation must be deemed to have been duly proved within the meaning of this section—Surajpal v. Udit Panch, 1939 A.L.J. 604, A.I.R. 1939 All. 604, 183 I.C. 270. Under this section it is not necessary that the executant must have seen the attesting witnesses sign the document. It is sufficient if they sign in the presence of the executant—Vinayak v. Md. Hanif, A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 11. Where the executant of a mortgage deed, a lady who did not observe strict pardah, was inside the room while the attesting witnesses and others were outside in the adjoining veranda and there was no curtain in the door of the room and the witnesses signed the instrument in the veranda: Held that that attesting witnesses must be held to have signed the instrument in the presence of the executant, ibid.

The words "signed the instrument" in the definition of "attested" are governed by the definition of "sign" in sec. 3 (52), General Clauses Act, and therefore the word "sign" in the T. P. Act includes also a mark by the attester—Nagamma v. Venkataramayya, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 178, 58 Mad. 220, 153 I.C. 777. Contra—Venkataramayya v. Nagamma, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 272 (274), 136 I.C. 343. An illiterate person may attest the signature of the executant by putting his mark—Hira Lal v. Gokul, A.I.R. 1944 All. 61, I.L.R. 1944 All. 186. A document may be attested by an illiterate person, signature being affixed by the scribe—Biswanath v. Babu Ram, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 485. It is also not necessary that somebody else should attest the mark of the attesting witness. It is enough if some one proves that the witness has made his mark on the document in his presence—M. R. M. Firin v. Ma E Nyo, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 293, 172 I.C. 613.

Where the executant signed in the presence of the two witnesses and they signed in the presence of each other, and there was nothing to show that the execution and attestation was not done in the same sitting, it was held that there was valid attestation, as the attesting witnesses must be deemed to have signed the document in the presence of the executant—Bhimasingh v. Fakirchand, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 155, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 649; Ghansilal v. Smt. Bhuridevi, A.I.R. 1964 Raj 39. Where one of the two attesting witnesses to a mortgage deed signs for himself and also on behalf of the other at his instance and in his presence the signature would be a good signature, though no mark is affixed by the other witness—Dabu v. Jamadar, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 368, 28 Pat. 158. When attestation is not specifically challenged and when a witness is not cross-examined regarding the details, it is sufficient for him to say that the document was attested by the other witness and himself. That is enough to prove attestation—Kuwarlal v. Rekhlal, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 83, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 321. But where the document was written and attested on the same day but before it was executed, that is, signed by the party, the attestation was not valid—Sant Lal v. Kamla Prasad, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 477, 1951 S.C.J. 768.

The words "and must be deemed always to have meant" have been added by the Repealing and Amending Act, X of 1927 (see Gazette of India, 1927, Part IV, p. 24). The meaning of this Amendment is that the definition of the word "attested" in sec. 3, as introduced by the Amendment Act of 1926 shall have retrospective effect; in other words, all documents executed prior to the passing of the T. P. Amendment Act XXVII of 1926, in which the attesting witnesses did not actually see the executant sign the deed but received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature on the deed, and then attested the deed, must be deemed to have been validly attested—Veerappa v. Subramania, 52 Mad. 123 (F.B.), 55 M.L.J. 794, 116 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 1; Radha Mohan v. Nripendra, 47 C.L.J. 118, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 154, 31 C.W.N. clx; Motilal v. Kasambhai, 29 Bom.L.R. 1334, 105 I.C. 864; Abinash v. Dasarath, 56 Cal. 598, 32 C.W.N. 1228; Yacub Khan v. Gujar Khan, 52 Bom. 219, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 267; Gangaram v. Umaji, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 70.

The effect of the addition of the above words by the Repealing and Amending Act X of 1927 is to overrule the decision in Girija Nandan v. Hanumandas, 49 All. 25 (F.B.), 24 A.L.J. 921, A.I.R. 1927 All. 1 99 I.C. 161. See also Nepra v. Sajer, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 763, 55 Cal. 67, 103 I.C. 662 in which it was held that the definition of the word 'attested' had no retrospective effect and did not apply to documents executed prior to 25th March, 1926 (on which the T. P. Amendment Act XXVII of 1926 came into force). The decision in Balaji v. Gangamma, 51 M.L.J. 641, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 85, 99 I.C. 143, and Mohamedi v. Kashi, A.I.R. 1926 All. 725, 96 I.C. 775 will stand as correct. It has been held in a recent Allahabad case that the new definition of "attested" as added by the T. P. Amendment Act XXVII of 1926 has no retrospective effect, even by virtue of the Repealing and Amending Act X of 1927—Balbhadar v. Lakshmi Bai, 1930 A.L.J. 623, A.I.R. 1930 All. 669 (672), 125 I.C. 507. This proposition, it is submitted, is not correct. It is curious that no reference has been made to 52 Mad. 23 (F.B.) and other recent cases. But the actual decision in the case was right. The facts of the case are that a deed of gift purported to be attested by three witnesses, of which one only was produced at the date of suit. Another witness had died, and the third was not called in as he was hostile. The witness who came to Court deposed that the executant signed the document in his presence, and that the two other witnesses were not then present. Held that the document was not properly attested. [As the other witnesses, could not be called in, it was impossible to prove whether the other witnesses signed the deed after receiving from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature.] But where the witness who was called in Court stated that he did not see the executants sign their names but that they admitted execution before him and the other witness, and thereupon he and the other witness signed as witnesses, held that the deed was duly attested—Provakar v. Indra Narayan, 53 C.L.J. 326, 134 I.C. 531. In this case it was held that the definition of "attested" had retrospective effect because of Act X of 1927.

The Amendment Act XXVII of 1926 is retrospective in its operation. Consequently, though at the time of the trial of the suit the law in force was the old Act, still if at the time of the hearing of the appeal, the Amendment Act (1926) came into force, the new Act applied to the case ; consequently the attestation made by a witness who signed upon the mortgagor admitting his signature, was valid—S. M. A. R. L. Firm v. R. M. M. A. Firm, 5 Rang. 772, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 101, 109 I.C. 469 ; Radha Mohan v. Nripendra, 47 C.L.J. 118, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 154 (156).

But although the amendment was intended by the Legislature to have retrospective effect and to validate mortgages which were executed before the amending Act was passed, still the Legislature did not intend to validate mortgages which were pronounced by a competent Court to be invalid for want of proper attestation according to the law then in force—Harbhagwandas v. Ghulam Shah, 25 S.L.R. 59, A.I.R. 1931 Sind 64 (65), 131 I.C. 719.

Attestation by Registering Officer:—The acknowledgment of execution before the Registering Officer and the signature of that officer affixed to the registration endorsement amount to sufficient attestation within the meaning of the definition given in this section—Radha Mohan v. Nripendra Nath, 47 C.L.J. 118, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 154 (156), 105 I.C. 422 ; Veerappa v. Subramanya, 52 Mad. 123 (F.B.), 55 M.L.J. 794, 116 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 1 ; Ram Charan v. Bhairon, 53 All. 1, A.I.R. 1931 All. 101 (102) ; Budhar v. Rahimtulla, A.I.R. 1928 Sind 93 (94), 107 I.C. 216 ; Kanchedi v. Zabbarshah, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 171. But it must be shown that the Sub-Registrar affixed his seal or signature to the document in the presence of the executant—Neelima v. Jaharlal, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 772, 61 Cal. 525, 38 C.W.N. 753, 151 I.C. 1033 ; Haripada v. Ananda, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 750, 129 I.C. 97 ; Atul v. Krishna, 67, C.L.J. 31 ; Dhanapala v. Goverchand, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 959 (962), (1938) M.W.N. 938 ; Venkataramayya v. Nagamma, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 272 (274), 136 I.C. 343 ; Abinash v. Dasarath, 56 Cal. 598, 52 C.W.N. 1228 (1232), 14 I.C. 84, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 123 ; Mitha Lal v. Gehari Lal, I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj 1211 ; Shanmughavelu Mudaliar v. Seth Hiranand Narasingdas, (1967) 2 M.L.J. 388. The effect of the decisions is that a document is validly executed if it is attested by one witness only the registering officer being treated as the second witness, and this was what actually happened in these cases. See also Sarada Prasad v. Triguna, 1 Pat. 300 (305). This proposition was however first doubted in S. M. etc., Firm v. R. M. etc., Firm, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 101, 5 Rang. 772, 109 I.C. 469 and was subsequently negated in the following cases—Lachman v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1932 All. 527 (F.B.), 139 I.C. 1 ; Harkisan v. Dwarka, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 94, 37 Bom. L.R. 913, 161 I.C. 374 ; Amir Hussain v. Abdul Samad, A.I.R. 1937 All. 646, I.L.R. 1937 All. 723, 171 I.C. 743 ; Benarsi Das v. Collector of Saharanpur, A.I.R. 1936 All. 712, 165 I.C. 498, 1936 A.L.J. 1262 ; Ma Thein Shin v. Ma Ngwe Nu, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 211, 1939 R.L.R. 388, 182 I.C. 924. The grounds of these decisions are that what takes place before the registering officer had nothing to do with attestation. The duty imposed by sec. 34 of the Registration Act is quite different. The registering officer is not bound by sec. 59 of that Act to affix the date and his signature in the presence of the executant of the instrument. Section 47 of the Act assumes that the document which is sought to be registered is a document complete in all essentials before it is presented for registration. Further, neither the registering officer nor the witnesses identifying the executant sign as attesting witnesses. See Harkisan v. Dwarka, supra ; Amir Hussain v.

Abdul Samad, supra. This latter view seems to be the correct one—Budepal v. Kanasgeri, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 322, 50 Bom. L.R. 260 ; Sakharam v. Sushilabai, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 339 and Sundrabai v. Ramabai, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 396, 49 Bom. L.R. 298 ; Mayurbhanj State Bank v. Bhobatosh Das, A.I.R. 1961 Orissa 178. The words “attested by two or more witnesses” show that the attestors must be witnesses i.e., they must sign their names as witnesses to the document. The registering officers or identifiers before him hardly fulfil this condition. Where the identifying witness had not been proved to have seen the executants put their thumbs to the deed, it was held that the signature of the identifying witness did not amount to a valid attestation—Sundrabai v. Ramabai supra. Where a deed of gift, unsigned by the executant, is presented for registration and the executant admits the execution, and on the endorsement of the Sub-Registrar that the executant has admitted execution, the executant puts his thumb impression in the presence of two witnesses attesting the signature, the deed is validly executed and attested—Donapati Rami Reddi v. Kanchan Reddi, (1968) 1 An. W. R. 359. Signature affixed by Sub-Registrar in course of duty is not attestation—Shammughvelu Mudaliar v. Niranand Naraindas, (1967) 2 Mad. L. J. 338 : 80 Mad. L.W. 728. Under sec. 3 it is essential that the witness should have put his signature animo attestendi, that is for the purpose of attesting that he has seen the executant sign or has received from him a personal acknowledgment of signature. If a person puts his signature on the document for some other purpose e.g., to certify that he is a scribe or an identifier or a registering officer, he is not an attesting witness—Abdul Jabbar Sahib v. Venkata Shastri, (1969) 1 S.C.C. 573 ; A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1147 ; 2 (1969) S.C.A. 129.

No doubt the attesting witnesses must sign in that capacity and must attest the execution of the document. But if their signatures appear on the document, and there is clear and conclusive evidence that they actually saw the executant sign the document and they themselves signed in his presence, notwithstanding the fact that they signed the document not against the signature of the mortgagor but against his signature where he has signed the receipt clause, there is sufficient and adequate attestation of the document—Kaderbhai v. Falmabai, A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 25, I.L.R. 1944 Bom. 388.

Attestation of documents executed by Pardanashin ladies:—See Note under section 59.

Attestation by scribe:—See Note 352 under sec. 59. When an identifier sign his name before the registering officer as identifier he cannot be regarded as an attesting witness.—Dharmdas v. Kashi Nath (1958) 1 C.L.J. 123. The mortgagee can validly attest the mortgage deed—Harishchandra v. Bansidhar, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1738.

No form of attestation is necessary:—This definition lays down that no particular form of attestation is necessary. A person may be a witness to the execution of a document and yet may not have written his name at the time by way of saying that he was a witness. Ordinarily a string of signatures towards the end of an instrument or somewhere on the instrument without any explanation will be quite sufficient to show that the persons put their signatures as witnesses—Abinash v. Dasarath, 56 Cal. 598, 32 C.W.N. 1228 (1231), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 123, 114 I.C. 84.

Estoppel:—Attestation of a deed itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever except that he witnessed the execution of the deed. Of course, there may be cases in which coupled with other evidence of consent and acquiescence in the execution of the document, it would be otherwise—Raj Lukhee v. Gokool, 13 M.I.A. 209; Bhagwan v. Ujagar, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 20, 32 C.W.N. 538, 47 C.L.J. 189, 107 I.C. 20; Mt. Jasodar v. Mt. Sukurmani, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 353, 170 I.C. 1005; Pandurang v. Markandaya, 49 Cal. 334 (P.C.), 49 I.A. 16; Sunder Kuer v. Udey Ram, A.I.R. 1944 All. 42, 1944 A.L.J. 19; Abbasali v. Mohammad, A.I.R. 1951 M.B. 92; Alla Diya v. Sona Devi, A.I.R. 1942 All. 331, 1942 A.L.J. 443; Nainsukhdas v. Gowardhandas A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 110, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 510. The mere attestation of a document is no proof that the attesting witness is aware of the contents of the document—M. R. M. Firm v. Ma E Nyo, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 293, 172 I.C. 613; Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 Cal. 186 (P.C.); Fazal v. Jiwan, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 551, 14 Lah. 369, 141 I.C. 454. Mere attestation is not enough to involve the witnesses with knowledge of the contents of the deed. This is equally true of the witnesses who identify the executant before the Registrar—Rajammal v. Sabapathi, A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 82, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 397. See also Gurmukh v. Sadhu, A.I.R. 1951 Pepsu. 71. In the absence of evidence that the person attesting knew what the document contained and he was asked to affix his signature to it in token of his acceptance of the transaction, attestation does not amount to consent—Jasmer Singh v. Ajaib Singh, A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu. 86. The burden of proving that he had such knowledge and was a consenting party to the transaction lies upon the party who relies upon the document—Sirajuddin v. Mt. Rahiman, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 978, 165 I.C. 997. See also Corea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A.C. 230. But where an attesting witness was present at the transaction and attested the deed after having heard the contents, it was held that he was estopped from challenging the right of the transferee—Bhagwat v. Gorakh, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 93.

19. Registered :—A document cannot be said to have been duly registered if the registration has been made in contravention of the provisions of the Registration Act, e.g., if the description of the property given in the document is erroneous or insufficient or misleading for the purposes of identification or if the document has been registered by an officer of another district in which the property is not situate or if the document was presented by a person who had no authority to do so—Beni Madhab v. Khatir Mondul, 14 Cal. 449 (450); Baij Nath v. Sheo Sahay, 18 Cal. 556 (569) (F.B.); Joginee Mohan v. Bhootnath, 29 Cal. 654 (663).

Where a document not duly stamped is admitted for registration, the mistake is an error of procedure and is cured by sec. 87—Ma Pwa May v. Chettier Firm, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 279, 7 Rang. 624, 56 I.A. 379, 34 C.W.N. 6.

20. Attached to the earth :—This expression occurs only in two places in the Act, viz, in sec. 8, para. 2, and in sec. 108, cl. (h).

These words are apparently used to denote what are termed 'fixtures' in the English law but the principles applied in English law for determining whether a thing is a 'fixture' or not ought not to be applied for the determination of the question whether it is "attached to the earth" under the Indian law.

In England, the law as to fixtures is based on the maxim "quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit" (whatever is planted on the soil belongs to the soil). A gas engine was let out on hire purchase system under an agreement in writing. The engine was affixed to freehold land of the hirer by bolts and screws to prevent it from rocking and was used by him for the purposes of his trade. Default having been made in the payment of the instalment, the engine was claimed by the owner and also by the mortgagee in possession, who took his mortgage after the hiring agreement without notice: Held that the engine passed to the mortgagee as part of the freehold—Hobson v. Gorringe, (1897) 1 Ch. 182 (C.A.). See Reynolds v. Ashby & Son, (1904) A.C. 466. See also Vandeville Electric Cinema v. Muriset, (1923) 2 Ch. 74. Where the plaintiff erected advertisement hoardings which were affixed in a very substantial manner to the land, it was held that the hoardings, although removable by the plaintiffs at the end of the tenancy, were fixtures and not mere chattels—Provincial Bill Posting Co. v. Low Moore Iron Co., (1909) 2 K.B. 344 (C.A.). Looms put up by the lessee of a cotton mill for his convenience during the existence of his term, and fastened to the floor by nails driven through the loom feet into wooden plugs fitted into the floor are, though easily removable without injury to the freehold, fixtures which would pass under an assignment of "the mill, fixed machinery and hereditaments, with all looms and other machinery, fixed or moveable". The primary intention in this case was that these looms should be considered as fixtures during the terms of the lease—Body v. Shorrock, L. R. 5 Eq. 72 (79). A fire engine set up for the benefit of a colliery by a tenant for life was, however, considered as part of his personal estate, the reasons for public benefit and convenience having weighed with the Lord Chancellor—Lawton v. Lawton, 3 Atk. 13.

The principle upon which the rule of law in England that fixtures pass with the soil was relaxed in favour of trade had no application where the parties who affixed the machinery were themselves owners in fee of the soil—Mather v. Fraser, 2 K. & J. 536. See Fisher v. Dixon, 12 Cl. & Fin. 312. Climie v. Wood, (1869) 4 Exch. 328 is the leading authority on the applicability of the principle to trade fixtures where it was held that trade fixtures which had been annexed to the freehold for the more convenient using of them, and not to improve the inheritance, and which were capable of being removed without any appreciable damage to the freehold, passed under a mortgage of the freehold to the mortgagee. See also Holland v. Hodgson, L.R. 7 C.P. 328 in which Climie v. Wood, supra, was followed.

With regard to other fixtures also the later decisions show a relaxation. Lord Blackburn laid down the rule in the following words: "Whenever the chattels have been annexed to the land for the purpose of the better enjoying the land itself, the intention must clearly be presumed to be to annex the property in the chattels to the property in the land, but the nature of the annexation may be such as to show that the intention was to annex them only temporarily The degree and nature of the annexation is an important element for consideration ; for where a chattel is so annexed that it cannot be removed without great damage to the land, it affords a strong ground for thinking that it was intended to be annexed in perpetuity to the land ; and as Lord Hardwick said in Lawton v. Lawton (3 Atk. 15), 'You shall not destroy the principal thing by taking away the accessory to it'. Where valuable tapestries were affixed by a tenant for life to the walls of a house for the purpose of ornament and the better enjoyment of them as chattels and they could be removed without doing any structural injury, it was held by the House of Lords that the tapestries put up with that purpose and attached in that manner, did not pass with the freehold to the remainder man, but formed part of the personal estate of the tenant for life and were removable by her executor—Leigh v. Taylor, (1902) A.C. 157. In a recent case the Court of Appeal in England held that in determining whether a particular chattel was a tenant's or a landlord's fixture, the Court had to consider what were the object and purpose of the annexation, and what would happen if the annexed chattel were removed. So long as the chattel could be removed without doing irreparable damage to the demised premises, neither the method of attachment nor the degree of annexation, nor the quantum of damage that would be done either to the chattel itself or the demised premises by the removal, had any bearing on the right of the tenant to remove it, except in so far as it threw a light upon the question of the intention with which the tenant affixed the chattel to the demised premises—Spyer v. Phillipson, (1931) 2 Ch. 183 (C.A.).

The maxim which is found in English law, viz., quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit has at the most only a limited application in India. There is nothing in the laws or customs of India to show any traces of the existence of any absolute rule of law that whatever is affixed or built on the soil becomes a part of it and is subjected to the same rights of property as the soil itself—Narayan v. Jatindra, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 135 (137), 54 Cal. 669, 54 I.A. 218, 31 C.W.N. 965, 102 I.C. 198. See also Mofiz v. Rasik. 37 Cal. 815 ; Chaturbhuj v. Bennet, 29 Bom. 323 ; and Ghazanfar v. Muzaffar, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 511, 164 I.C. 262 ; Venkatasubbiah v. Thirupurasundari, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 185 ; Jnan Chand v. Jugul Kishore, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 331. If a thing is imbedded in the earth or attached to what is so imbedded for the permanent beneficial enjoyment of that to which it is attached, then it is a part of the immovable property. But if the attachment is merely for the beneficial enjoyment of the chattel itself, then it remains a chattel, even though fixed for the time being so that it may be enjoyed. In deciding whether or not a transaction relating to an engine is a transaction relating to immoveable property regard must be had not merely to the nature of the attachment by which the engine is fixed on the ground, but also to the circumstances in which it came to be fixed, the title of the person fixing it and the object of the transaction by which the engine is transferred or bound—Subramanian Firm v. Chidambaram, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 527, 1940 M.W.N. 38, 190 I.C. 825. Thus where the tenants installed an oil engine as part of a cinema in the premises leased, not with the intention of making a permanent improvement to the premises, but with the object of utilizing the machinery for their own profit so long as they had the use of the premises and selling it if and when their lease terminated, a security bond pledging the oil engine cannot be deemed to be a transaction relating to immovable property so as to attract the provisions of Explanation to this section—ibid. Where the property mortgaged included a rice mill and various parts of machinery pertaining to the engine or to the huller which was intended to be set up with the help of the engine, a sheller system subsequently attached to the huller by a belt and thus worked (the two could be separated by taking away the belt), it was held that the machinery pertaining to the sheller system was not comprised in the mortgage security—Satyanarayanamurthi v. Gangayya, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 692, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 684, 1939 M.W.N. 383. Unless machinery is attached to the building for its permanent beneficial enjoyment, it is not immoveable property, specially where the building is really put up for the purpose of sheltering the machinery and protecting it from the weather—Meghraj v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1924 All. 365, 46 All. 286, 78 I.C. 243. Sludge from sedimentation tank is movable property—Bengal Agricultural and Industrial Corporation Ltd. v. Corporation of Calcutta, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 123.

The question whether a particular machinery is imbedded in the earth is a question which depends upon the circumstances of each case—Comr. of Income-tax v. Bhurangiya Coal Co., A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 298. In order to determine what is or what is not immoveable property as a result of attachment or annexation to land, two tests have been laid down, viz., (1) the degree or mode of annexation, and (2) the object of annexation. Of these the latter is the more important—Subhiah v. Govindrao, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 224, 1953 N.L.J. 104. Where a tenant running the factory in the premises of another instal machinery, it will always be presumed that he installs the same with the intention of removing it whenever he chooses to vacate the premises—Addu Achiar v. Custodian Evacuee Property, A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 14; L. J. U. Mandir v. Kalooram, A.I.R. 1965 Raj 15. A petter engine mounted and fastened to cement base cannot be viewed as a permanent fixture, that it to say, immoveable property—Perumal Naicker v. T. Ramaswami Kone, (1968) 2 M.L.J. 493. In all these cases intention is a very important factor to be taken into consideration, ibid.

Where one of two brothers owning certain land in equal shares, builds a house and plants a garden on a portion of it entirely at his own expense, the other brother is not entitled to claim a share in the house and the garden—Ghazanfar v. Muzaffar, supra. A house built on the soil of another does not become attached to the soil in such a way as to go with the soil. The person who builds the house is entitled to remove the materials of the house, but only so far as he is able to do so without appreciably damaging the soil or making the land less fit than it was before for use as a house site. He is also not entitled to remain indefinitely on the land which is not his—Maung Ba v. Bailiff, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 68, 161 I.C. 659.

A verandah, the lower part of which is supported on posts fixed to the ground, is a thing attached to the earth—Penry v. Brown, 2 Stark. 403. A structure so long as it stands on the land is immoveable property—Ajit Kumar Saha v. Nagendra N. Saha, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 484. The definition of immoveable property in the T.P. Act is co-extensive with its definition in the Registration Act—Inan Chandra v. Jugul Kishore, A.I.R. 1960 Cal.

331. An exclusive right of fishery, without any interest in land or water is immovable property—Sarada Charan Parija v. State, I.L.R. (1957) Cut. 621.

21. Actionable claim :—The following are actionable claims :

(a) Claim for arrears of rent—Hiralal v. Tripura Charan, 40 Cal. 650 (651); Rameshwar v. Riknath, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 165, 67 I.C. 451; Sheo Gobind v. Gouri, 4 Pat. 43, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 310; Madhabilata v. Butto Kristo, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 129, 10 B.R. 652; Daya Debi v. Chapala Debi, 63 C.W.N. 976; Kane N.K. v. Biharilal, 1968 Jab. L.J. 337. Even though the arrears of rent may be said to be a charge on the holding or tenure, still they cannot be said to be a debt secured by a mortgage of immovable property—Sheo Govind v. Gouri, (supra). But the Nagpur High Court has held that the right to recover arrears of profits assigned in a conveyance of a village share to a co-sharer is not an actionable claim, but a benefit arising out of land and therefore immovable property—Kamal v. Shyam Lal, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 217 (218), 165 I.C. 414.

(b) A claim for rent to fall due in future is an actionable claim, for it is an 'accruing' debt within the meaning of the definition—Poothakka v. Annamalai, 1926 M.W.N. 774, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1173, 98 I.C. 263; Chidambaram v. Doraisami, 31 I.C. 473 (Mad.).

(c) The benefit of an executory contract for the purchase of goods is a 'beneficial interest in moveable property' and is therefore an actionable claim within the meaning of this section—Jaffer Meher Ali v. Budge-Budge Jute Mills, 34 Cal. 289 (on appeal from 33 Cal. 702); Chiman Mal v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 187.

(d) A right to get by division a piece of land reserved by a donor for his own use in his deed of gift (but possession of which was with the donee) is an actionable claim—Rudra Perkash v. Krishna Mohun, 14 Cal. 241 (245).

(e) A share in a partnership—In re Bainbridge, 8 Ch. D. 218.

(f) The right to recover the arrears of an annuity though it be charged upon immovable property, is not secured by a mortgage; so the claim amounts to an actionable claim—Satindra v. Jatindra, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 165, 39 C.W.N. 1191, 61 I.A. 265, 157 I.C. 419.

Where a deed of wakf provided certain sums to be given annually as stipends to certain relatives of the wakif and after them to their aulad (descendants), it was held that the annuities were actionable claims—Mt. Alimunnessa v. Abdul Aziz, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 527, 165 I.C. 298.

(g) A right to receive money for license given to another to remove bark from the licensor's trees is transferable—Ramaswami v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 978, 97 I.C. 548.

(h) Where there is a completed contract its benefit can be assigned—Sakalaguna v. Chinna, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 174, 32 C.W.N. 850, 55 I.A. 243, 51 Mad. 533. The benefit of a contract for sale and purchase of immovable property can also be assigned—Bhabhootmal v. Moolchand, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 266, I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 643.

(i) A claim for a definite sum of money which the lessee is bound

23. Constructive notice :—Constructive or implied notice may be defined to be "knowledge which the Court imputes to a person, from the circumstances of the case, upon a legal presumption, so strong that it cannot be allowed to be rebutted, that the knowledge must exist though it may not have been formally communicated"—Hewitt v. Loosemore, 9 Hare 449. "It may be considered to consist in those circumstances under which the Court concludes that notice must be imputed on grounds of public policy to an innocent person, or that the party has been guilty of such negligence in not availing himself of the means of acquiring it, as, if permitted, might be a cloak to fraud and which, therefore, the common interests of society require, should in its consequences, be equivalent to actual notice."—Dart's Vendors and Purchasers (6th Edn.), p. 971.

"We think" observed Westropp, C.J., "that the doctrine of constructive notice is only to be resorted to where the parties are on a level in equity, and that it is a doctrine not to be extended, and we decline to presume notice in favour of a person who contributed to make the transaction secret—Hormasji v. Mankuvarbai, 12 Bom. H.C.R. 262 (266).

If there is no actual notice and no wilful or fraudulent turning away from an inquiry into and consequent knowledge of facts which the circumstances would suggest to a prudent mind, then the doctrine of constructive notice ought not to be applied—Doorga v. Baney Madhub, 7 Cal. 199 (201).

The cases of Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. 249, and Barnhart v. Green-shields, (1855) 9 Moo. P.C. 18, as well as other cases are freely quoted and applied by Indian Courts, and the result is that the doctrine of constructive notice is carried to great lengths. When the Indian Courts apply the principle that a man has notice because if he had made reasonable inquiries he would have ascertained the facts and if he has not ascertained the facts he has been guilty of gross negligence—the Courts must carefully regard all the circumstances of the case and of the people to whom the Courts are going to apply the principle—Kalyani v. Krishnan, 55 Mad. 519, 138 I.C. 78, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 305 (309).

Intending purchasers of property in municipal areas, where the property is subject to a municipal charge which has been made a first charge on the property by statute, have a constructive knowledge of the tax and the possibility of some arrear being due. If they fail to make inquiries as to the amount of tax which is due, this failure amounts to a wilful abstention or gross negligence within the meaning of this section and notice must be imputed to them—Lala Nawal Kishore v. Municipal Board, Agra, A.I.R. 1943 All. 115 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1943 All. 453 overruling Municipal Board v. Roop Chand, A.I.R. 1940 All. 456, I.L.R. 1940 All. 669; See also Chanduram v. Municipal Comrs., A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 398.

Where A purchases property from C on the latter's representation that the property has not been transferred to anybody in any manner, though in fact it had been transferred in favour of D under a prior registered sale deed, this section imputes constructive notice of the prior registered sale deed and its contents to A—Ganeshdas v. Kamalabai, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 29. But an agreement for a mortgage does not give rise to a charge over the property and is not compulsorily registrable; therefore though in fact registered, it cannot be used as constructive notice of the transaction—Hirachand v. Kashinath, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 339, 44 Bom. L.R. 727.

Where a bank pass-book showed that a certain rate of interest was being charged by the bank for the customer's overdraft it was held by M. N. Mukherjee, J., that means of knowledge was equivalent to knowledge or reasonable grounds of belief so as to fix the customer with adoption or ratification of the rate of interest—Batakrisna v. Bhowanipur Banking Corpn., 59 Cal. 662 at p. 666.

A transfer by an executor as such is valid unless it is established that the transferee had notice that the executor was acting in breach of trust. Mere failure to scrutinize the will does not amount to constructive notice that the money was not required for the purposes of administration—Geetarani v. Narendra Krishna, 60 Cal. 394.

The principle of constructive notice should be applied to arrears of taxes, which form a charge under the Municipalities Act, on the property sold at an auction sale. The purchaser is not entitled to presume that the taxes have been paid—Municipal Board, Lucknow v. Ramji Lal, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 305, 1941 O.W.N. 122, 1941 O.L.R. 263, 163 I.C. 290; see also Akshoy Kumar v. Corporation of Calcutta, 42 Cal. 625, 19 C.W.N. 37.

Where the register of the Registrar did contain a reference to a particular agreement which created a charge on a certain land, but the agent of the mortgagee omitted to look at the entries, the mortgagee would be deemed to have constructive notice of the charge—Renukabai v. Bhedsan Hapsaji, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132, 1939 N.L.J. 129, 185 I.C. 33 relying on Mohori Bibi v. Dharmadas Ghose, 30 Cal. 539 (545) (P.C.), 30 I.A. 114. But see Kausalai v. Sankaramuthu, (1941) 1 M.L.J. 815, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 707, 1941 M.W.N. 621 where it has been held that an omission to make inquiries is not sufficient to constitute constructive notice within the meaning of sec. 3 (relying on Joshua v. Alliance Bank of Simla, 22 Cal. 185). Where a decree for pre-emption refers to an agreement to resell executed by the vendee, a transferee from the pre-emptor has constructive notice of the agreement to resell—Ganga Singh v. Santosh Kumar, A.I.R. 1963 All. 194.

24. Wilful abstention :—The words "wilful abstention from inquiry and search" must be taken to mean such abstention from inquiry or search as would show want of bona fides—Joshua v. Alliance Bank of Simla, 22 Cal. 185. The word "wilful" in this section makes it clear that the abstention from inquiry should be designed and due to a desire to avoid an inquiry which would lead to ultimate knowledge—Kausali v. Sankaramuthu, (1941) 1 M.L.J. 815, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 707, 1941 M.W.N. 621. Cases in which constructive notice has been established resolve themselves into two classes : first, cases in which the party charged has had actual notice that the property in dispute was in fact charged, encumbered or in some way affected, and the Court has thereupon bound him with constructive notice of facts and instruments to a knowledge of which he would have been led by an inquiry after the charge, incumbrance or other circumstances affecting the property, of which he had actual notice; and secondly, cases in which the Court has been satisfied from the evidence before it that the party charged had designedly

An amount found due on adjustment of accounts of transactions for sale of yarns is a debt and as such is an actionable claim—Nagappa v. Badridas, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 409, 32 Bom. L.R. 894, 127 I.C. 410.

Unascertained amounts neither due nor payable but accruing, the payment of which is dependent on work being executed, can be assigned—Jat Mal v. Hakam Mal, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 820, 128 I.C. 494. But a liability to arise in the future on the part of an unknown person, out of a relationship, contractual or otherwise, which does not yet exist, cannot be described as a debt, still less can it be described as an "existing" debt. Neither can it be "accruing" or "conditional," and it cannot be "contingent." A contingency is something that may happen in future which affects a present relationship. For instance, a contingent interest, such as a contingent life interest presupposes an existing interest which may or may not develop into interest in possession. The interest is there all the time. It is even saleable as such. When the definition of an "actionable claim" refers to an "existing" debt, it intends thereby to exclude a debt which does not yet exist at all—In re Stephens, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 1, 175 I.C. 786.

The amount due under a policy is a debt within the meaning of the definition—Varjivandas v. Magunlal, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 382, 39 Bom. L.R. 493, 170 I.C. 850. It is within the competence of a policy-holder to make a conditional assignment of each of the policies taken out by him whether such policy is an ordinary life policy or an endowment policy providing therein that in the event of the death of the assignee the benefits to the policy would revert to him and the assignee alone is entitled to receive the sum assured in case of the death of the insured before the day named—Shamdas v. Sabitribai, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 181, 170 I.C. 225.

An assignment of a debt must be of the whole debt and not of a part of the debt—Ghisulal v. Gumbhirmall, 62 Cal. 510, 39 C.W.N. 606, 141 I.C. 11.

A debt which otherwise amounts to an actionable claim does not cease to be so merely because a cause of action in respect thereof has not arisen or because the time of its payment has not arrived. A claim to unpaid dower debt is an actionable claim—Amir Hasan v. Muhammad Nazir, 54 All. 499, 136 I.C. 833, A.I.R. 1932 All. 345 (347).

An uncertain sum cannot be included in the word 'debt'. Thus an uncertain right in an unascertained property cannot be the subject of assignment—Bebie Tokai v. Davod Mullick, 6 M.I.A. 510.

Where under a sale-deed the vendee is directed to pay part of the consideration to the vendor's creditor, it is a debt and is an actionable claim which can be transferred under sec. 130—Agrenath v. Ram Ratan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 544, (1938) A.L.J. 851.

The assets of a partner, as yet unascertained, in a partnership business, which are in the hands of a receiver, cannot be assigned, since until the dissolution of partnership and the ascertainment of the share in the assets of the partners, such share cannot be treated as a debt—Abott v. Abott, 5 B.L.R. 382.

22. Notice :—Application in the Punjab:—This Act is not in force in the Punjab ; consequently the technical rule as to notice is not strictly applicable in that Province. The question whether registration is or is not notice would depend upon the facts of each case—D. A. V. College v. Umrao Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 410, 157 I.C. 92; Mt. Ghulam Fatima v. Mt. Gopal Devi, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 269, 190 I.C. 599.

The Transfer of Property Act contemplates three kinds of notice, namely: (1) actual notice; (2) constructive or implied notice (i.e., when but for wilful abstention from inquiry or search or for gross negligence he would have known); and (3) notice to agent.

Essentials of notice:—An actual notice, to constitute a binding notice, must be definite information given by a person interested in the thing in respect of which the notice is issued; for it is a settled rule that a person is not bound to attend to vague rumours or statements by mere strangers, and that a notice to be binding must proceed from some person interested in the thing—Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo. P.C. 18; Ashiq v. Chaturbhuj, A.I.R. 1928 All. 159, 50 All. 328, 26 A.L.J. 41, 108 I.C. 152. A mere casual conversation in which knowledge of a certain thing is imparted, is not notice of it. In other words, the party imputing notice must show that the other party had knowledge which would operate upon the mind of any rational man, or man of business, and make him act with reference to the knowledge he has so acquired—per Lord Cairns, L.C., in Lloyd v. Banks, L.R. 3 Ch. 488. A vague or general report or the mere existence of suspicious circumstances is not in itself notice of the matter to which it relates—Weymouth v. Bayer, 1 Ves. J. 425.

A general claim is not sufficient to affect a purchaser with notice of a deed of which he does not appear to have had knowledge—Jolland v. Stainbridge, 3 Ves. 478. Where a creditor obtained two decrees against his debtor, one being a charge decree to enforce his lien on certain property, and the other a simple money decree, and in execution of the second decree the property subject to lien was purchased by a third party at a court sale, and thereafter the creditor brought another suit to enforce his lien on the property in the hands of the auction-purchaser the suit was dismissed as the plaintiff (creditor) failed to show that the auction-purchaser purchased with notice of the lien. It was held that the fact that for some purpose at sometime or other the judgment-creditor informed the Court of the lien was not evidence of notice on the auction-purchaser—Nursing v. Roghoobur, 10 Cal. 609. But if a person knows that another has or claims an interest in property with which he is dealing, he is bound to enquire what that interest is, and if he omits to do so, he will be bound, although the notice was inaccurate as to the particulars of the extent of such interest—Gobinda Chunder v. Doorga, 22 W.R. 248.

The notice must be given in the same transaction. A person is not bound by notice given in a previous transaction which he may have forgotten—Warrick v. Warrick, 3 Atk. 294. Notice to a purchaser by his title papers in one transaction will not be notice to him in an independent subsequent transaction in which the instruments containing the recitals are not necessary to his title; but he is charged constructively with notice merely of that which affects the purchase of the property in the chain of title of which the paper forms the necessary link—Bepin v. Priyabrata, 26 C.W.N. 36 (46), 34 C.L.J. 256, A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 730, 66 I.C. 345.

by his contract with the lessor to repay him—Manmatha v. Hedait Ali, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 32, 36 C.W.N. 280, 11 Pat. 266, 59 I.A. 41, 135 I.C. 635.

(j) Usufructuary mortgagee's liability to pay to the mortgagor the balance left after paying the mortgagor's creditors—Tikam Singh v. Bhola Nath, A.I.R. 1937 All. 470 (471, 472), I.L.R. (1937) All. 666, 170 I.C. 975.

(k) A document of pahunch evidencing acknowledgment of a debt—Jhangaldas v. Chetumal, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 24 (26, 27), 173 I.C. 591.

(l) Both ordinary and endowment life policies—Shamdas v. Sabitribai, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 81, 170 I.C. 225.

(m) The claim for a money decree on account of unrealised bills is an actionable claim—Purna Chandra v. Barna Kumari, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 341, 43 C.W.N. 953, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 715; Ambica v. Ram Chariter, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 415.

(n) The right to the proceeds of a business—Alkash Ali v. Nath Bank, Ltd., A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 56, I.L.R. (1951) 3 Ass. 1.

(o) Provident fund amount payable after retirement and not presently—Official Trustee v. Chippendale, A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 335, I.L.R. (1943) 2 Cal. 325, 47 C.W.N. 441.

(p) The benefit arising out of a contract, not involving any personal element, is an actionable claim during its subsistence—Jaffer Meher Ali v. Budge Budge Jute Mills, (1906) 33 Cal. 702. The rights under a contract of carriage are an actionable claim—Shah Mulji Deoji v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 31. A benefit under a letter of credit is an actionable claim—Joseph Pyke & Son Ltd. v. Kedarnath, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 328. A railway receipt is an actionable claim—Alliance Assurance Co. v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 563.

What are not actionable claims :—

(a) A decree is not an actionable claim. A debt is an actionable claim, but a debt which has already passed into a decree is not so—Afjal v. Ram Kumar, 12 Cal. 610; Dagadu v. Vanji, 24 Bom. 502. Govindarajulu v. Ranga Rao, 40 M.L.J. 124, 62 I.C. 255; see also Jugal Kishore Saraf v. Raw Cotton Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 376. In Annamalai v. Muthukaruppan, 8 Rang. 645, 35 C.W.N. 145, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 9, certain sums of money were advanced by S.K.T. firm to Vijayan Servai and after his death in 1904 to his administrator upto 1906. One-fourth of the advances was provided by R.M.A.T. firm. In 1906 in heirs of Vijayan filed suit for administration impleading S.K.T. as one of the defendants. In May 1907 a decree was passed in favour of S.K.T. The decree was set aside on appeal in August, 1909. In March 1908, R.M.A.T. transferred $\frac{1}{4}$ share in the decree then under appeal to A.M.K. firm. Held: the instrument transferred to A.M.K. not the decree under appeal, but an actionable claim, namely all the interest of R.M.A.T. in any monies to be recovered by S.K.T. in the administration suit.

(b) The right to sue for accounts and to recover money which might be found due on taking accounts from an agent is not an actionable claim because it is not a right to recover a specific sum of money but an indefinite amount which may or may not be found due on the taking of accounts; such a right is a mere right to sue (sec. 6) and is incapable of transfer—Kshetra Mohan v. Biswa Nath, 51 Cal. 972 (977), A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1047, 82 I.C. 411.

(c) The right of a person to recover damages by way of interest or otherwise for the breach of a contract is merely a right to sue and is not an actionable claim which is capable of transfer—Indar v. Raghubir, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 88, 5 Luck. 547, 125 I.C. 174; Abu Mohomed v. S. C. Chunder, 36 Cal. 345; Hirachand v. Nemchand, 47 Bom. 719 (720); Nakhola v. Kokaya, 69 I.C. 238 (Nag.); Moti Lal v. Radhey Lal, 1933 A.L.J. 1009, A.I.R. 1933 All. 642 (646).

(d) A claim to mesne profits is not an actionable claim but a mere right to sue (sec. 6), and therefore cannot be transferred—Jai Narain v. Kishun Dutta, 3 Pat. 575 (580), A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 551, 78 I.C. 705.

(e) A right to recover profits from a co-sharer is not an actionable claim—Lallu Singh v. Chunder Sen, A.I.R. 1934 All. 155 (F.B.), 147 I.C. 937.

(ee) Transfer of immovable property to which an ex-minor has lost his title by not challenging an alienation by his guardian during his minority, within 3 years after attaining majority, is not the transfer of an actionable claim—Natha v. Thakur, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 122, 1939 O.W.N. 241, 180 I.C. 329.

(f) Relinquishment of the interest of a retiring member of a joint Hindu family business in favour of the continuing coparcener—Brij Mohan v. Mahabir, 40 C.W.N. 808.

(ff) A copy right.—Savitri v. Dwarka, I.L.R. 1939 All. 275, 1939 A.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1939 All. 305.

(g) Debts secured by mortgage of immoveable property or hypothecation of moveable property. See the words of the section. Before the T. P. Amendment Act II of 1900, these debts were included in actionable claim. See Note 17A, ante, and Rani v. Ajudhia, 16 All. 315 (317). The Amendment Act of 1900 has changed the law.

But although under this definition, a secured debt does not fall within the meaning of actionable claim, it does not follow that a debt without the security cannot be made the subject of transfer at all. A debt is distinct from the security, and the debt can be transferred apart from the security—Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank, 59 Cal. 377 (P.C.), 35 C.W.N. 1034 (1039), A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 245, 134 I.C. 651.

Where the mortgagor completes his part of the contract by executing the mortgage and by putting the mortgagee in possession, but the mortgagee fails to discharge the consideration, the mortgagor has a transferable claim and his assignee is entitled to sue the mortgagee for the amount—Sardar Khan v. Ram Mal, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 196, 162 I.C. 698.

Debt:—The term 'debt' includes a sum of money due by one person to another, and which is actually payable at the time, as well as a sum of money which is due though not actually payable then. It must be a perfected and absolute debt, and not merely a sum of money which may or may not become payable at some future time, or the payment of which depends upon contingencies which may or may not happen—Haridas v. Baroda Kishore, 27 Cal. 38; Palikandy v. Krishnan Nair, 40 Mad. 302 (303); Varjivandas v. Maganlal, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 382, 170 I.C. 850.

abstained from inquiry for the very purpose of avoiding notice—Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare 43 (per Wigram V.C.); Manji Karimbhai v. Hoorbai, 35 Bom. 342 (348); Puthenpurayil v. Kandiyal, 34 I.C. 906 (908); Macneil & Co. v. Saroda Sundari, 33 C.W.N. 526, 48 C.L.J. 374, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 83, 114 I.C. 142.

A purchaser who wilfully departs from the above principle in order to avoid acquiring knowledge of his vendor's title is not allowed to derive any advantage from his wilful ignorance of defects which would have come to his knowledge if he had transacted his business in the ordinary way. That is what is meant by "reasonable care"—Manj v. Hoorbai, supra, at p. 41; see also Agra Bank v. Barry, L.R. 7 H.L. 135 (157); Rajo Kuer v. Brij Bihari Prasad, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 236. But it would be stretching the doctrine of constructive notice too far to say that in every case in which a person wants to bid for property liable to municipal taxes he ought to make inquiries before making the bid, whether any municipal tax is outstanding against the property or to hold that he was grossly negligence if he did not make such enquiry—Ramji v. Municipal Board, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 31, 12 Luck. 353, 164 I.C. 1034.

Where one partner has permitted another partner to deal with partnership property as an ostensible owner and such property is mortgaged by the latter to a bank, knowledge on the part of a member of the investigating committee of the bank in his personal capacity that the property belongs to the partnership is not itself sufficient to justify an inference as to knowledge on the part of the bank—Punjab & Sind Bank v. Rustomji, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 821.

A person refusing a registered letter sent by post must be deemed to have constructive notice of it, and he cannot afterwards plead ignorance of its contents, because he had wilfully abstained from receiving it and acquainting himself with its contents—Lootf Ali v. Peary Mohun, 16 W.R. 223; Jogendra v. Dwarka, 15 Cal. 681; Ismail v. Kali Krishna, 6 C.W.N. 134; Edulji v. Collector, 1 M.I.A. 295; Nirmala Bala v. Provat 52 C.W.N. 659; Sushil v. Ganesh, 62 C.W.N. 193.

If a mortgagee causing a search to be made refrains from making himself sure that the property mortgaged is free from incumbrance, his conduct amounts to wilful abstention—Ranukabai v. Bheosan Hapsaji, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132.

Wilful abstention from inquiry should, however, be distinguished from mere want of caution in not making the inquiry, especially where the party who would have made the inquiry is misinformed as to the true state of facts, and the circumstances are not sufficient of themselves to arouse suspicion—Damodara v. Somasundara, 12 Mad. 429 (435); Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co., 15 Mad. 268 (279). If mere want of caution, as distinguished from wilful blindness, is all that can be imputed to the purchaser, then the doctrine of constructive notice will not apply—Chettyar Firm v. Kalliamma, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 423 (425-26), 161 I.C. 221.

A prudent purchaser should not rest content with merely seeing a mutation entry. He ought to ascertain what are the entries in the Record-of-Rights, and whether the vendor has got full proprietary right or mortgage-right. If he fails to do so, constructive notice will be imputed to him—Harilal v. Mulchand, 52 Bom. 883, 30 Bom.L.R. 1149, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 427 (429), 113 I.C. 27. If A before purchasing the property of B which is tenanted comes to know that the tenants pay rent to X but does not care to enquire about the title of X, he is guilty of wilful abstention—Hunt v. Luck, [1901] 1 Ch. 429. Similarly, if the mortgagee does not search the register, he must be deemed to have wilfully abstained from making the search, or he has been guilty of gross negligence in not making it—Churaman v. Balli, 9 All. 591 (599). If the lease provides for interest at a high rate the purchaser of the lessee's interest shall be taken to have had full knowledge of the terms of the lease—Hamiduddin v. Ramani Kanta, 56 C.L.J. 590, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 321 (322). A lessee has constructive notice of the lessor's title and his conduct in not enquiring into the matter amounts to wilful abstention—Patman v. Harland, L.R. 17 Ch. D. 253.

Where a certain property was at first mortgaged by deposit of title-deeds, and then a subsequent transferee (mortgagee or purchaser) took a transfer of the same property without inquiring whether the title-deeds were already pledged, held that the subsequent transferee was fixed with notice—Imperial Bank of India v. U. Rai Gyaw Thu & Co., Ltd., 51 Cal. 86 (130) (P.C.), 1 Rang. 637, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 211, 28 C.W.N. 470, 76 I.C. 910; Kshetra Nath v. Harsukhdas, 31 C.W.N. 703, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 538 (543), 102 I.C. 871.

But the fact that a person is in occupation of a small part of a house does not put the purchaser on constructive notice of that person's rights as to the whole house, and the failure of the purchaser to inquire from everybody in the house as to what his title may be in the house, does not amount to wilful abstention or gross negligence. Parthasarathy v. Subbaraya, 45 M.L.J. 175, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 67 (69), 72 I.C. 559. If further inquiry into title in respect of a small part of the estate would have revealed a defect in title as to the whole estate, the purchaser is not held to have constructive notice of that defect—Hunter v. Walters, (1871) 7 Ch. 75, 25 L.T. 765.

A person cannot be fixed with constructive notice where the circumstances are such that he is not bound to make any inquiry. Thus, where there is an endorsement at the foot of a sale deed that the price has been received in full in addition to a statement to that effect in the body, a person taking a mortgage of that property is not bound to enquire whether the price has been paid in full and hence the vendor's lien cannot be enforced against him—Tehitram v. Kashibai, 33 Bom. 53 (68, 69), 10 Bom.L.R. 403, 1 I.C. 614.

25. Negligence :—Negligence may be stated to be the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do—Blyth v. Birmingham Water Works Co., 11 Ex. 784. It means the absence of such care, skill and diligence, as it is the duty of the person to bring to the performance of the work which he is said not to have performed—per Willes, J., in Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., 35 L.J.C.P. 330.

of that possession to all who may have to deal with any interest in the property, and persons so dealing cannot be heard to deny notice of the title under which the possession is held—Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo. P.C. 18; Holmes v. Powell, 8 DeG.M. & G. 572. Constructive notice of all the rights of the person in possession of a property sold or mortgaged is to be imputed to the purchaser or mortgagee of that property who made no enquiry of the person in occupation. But the unknown occupation of a portion of the premises by a tenant or other person does not put the purchaser or mortgagee on inquiry as to the possible right of the occupier over the remainder of the premises—Parthasarathy v. Subbarayya, 45 M.L.J. 175, 72 I.C. 559, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 67 (69). The possession by a person, who entered into an agreement for the purchase of the land, of a portion of the land, does not amount to constructive notice of the agreement to subsequent purchasers in respect of the entire property—Hari Charan v. Kaula, 2 P.L.J. 513, 40 I.C. 142.

Where a prior usufructuary mortgagee was in possession under an unregistered instrument, which was not compulsorily registrable, a subsequent mortgagee under a registered instrument must be presumed to have had notice of such possession, and could not claim priority over the holder of the unregistered instrument—Bhiki Rai v. Udit Narain, 25 All. 366 (370); Krishnamma v. Suranna, 16 Mad. 148 (170).

“There is no authority for the proposition that notice of a tenancy is notice of the title of the lessor, or that a purchaser neglecting to inquire into the title of the occupier is affected by any other equities than those which such occupier may insist on”—Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo. P.C. 18; Gunamoni v. Bussunt Kumari, 16 Cal. 414. If the mortgagor under a usufructuary mortgage remain in possession as the tenant of the mortgagee and agrees to sell the mortgaged land to the mortgagee but in breach of the agreement sells to a third party it cannot be said that the purchaser had constructive notice of the agreement to sell to the mortgagee—Radha Rai v. Ram Rekha Rai, A.I.R. 1964 Pat 144. Where a monthly tenant is in possession a subsequent purchaser cannot be charged with the notice of contract of sale in favour of the monthly tenant—Muralidhar Marwari v. Lalit Mahan Sahu, A.I.R. 1962 Orissa 86; Shiv Dayal v. Smt. Sumitra Devi, 1960 Raj. L.R.W. 103.

In benami purchases, possession or receipt of rent is an important criterion in determining the question whether the purchase was benami or not. When the real owner has all along remained in possession and enjoyment of the property, that circumstance is constructive notice of the benami nature of the transaction—Ram Sarup v. Maya Shankar, 46 P.R. 1918, 43 I.C. 556.

In a case arising in a State where the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929 does not apply, a subsequent purchaser for consideration of immovable property deriving his title under a registered sale-deed has priority over a purchaser who is in possession of the same property under an unregistered sale-deed which is compulsorily registrable. The possession of the prior purchaser being that of a trespasser, the question of notice by possession does not arise—Chanan Singh v. Sham Lal, A.I.R. 1950 Pepsu. 34.

Constructive possession is not notice:—Possession, in order to be equivalent to notice, must be actual and not merely constructive. In two cases governed by the Registration Act of 1877 it was held by the Bombay High Court that constructive possession by a person purchasing by an unregistered instrument through the seller continuing in possession as his tenant did not operate as notice of his prior title to a subsequent purchaser by a registered deed—Chunilal v. Ramchandra 22 Bom. 213 (216); Moreswar v. Dattu, 12 Bom. 569. Where a purchaser pays only a part of the consideration money after purchasing a property in the possession of tenants and the property is put up to sale in execution of a decree against the purchaser without any mention of the charge in the sale proclamation, the notice of the charge cannot be imputed to the auction-purchaser—Manna Singh v. Wasli Ram, A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 296.

Occupation of property which has not come to the knowledge of the party charged is not constructive notice of any interest in the property—Manji v. Hoorbai, 35 Bom. 342.

30. Notice of a deed is notice of the contents:—Actual notice of a deed is also a constructive notice of all the material facts affecting the property, which appear on the face of the deed or could be reasonably inferred from its contents—Talner v. Flouner, 1 Ch. C. 269; Moore v. Bennett, 2 Ch. C. 246. Every person who acquires a lease-hold interest is bound to investigate the title of his lessor and is affected with constructive notice of any covenant contained in any document forming part of the chain of title of his lessor—Lodna Colliery Co. v. Bipin, 1 P.L.T. 84, 55 I.C. 113.

Moreover, actual notice of an instrument affecting one's title is constructive notice of all documents which are recited in the instrument and which an examination of the instrument would have brought to his knowledge, provided the documents relate to the title and form part of the chain of title—Patnam v. Harland, 17 Ch. D. 353. Thus where a vendee, in spite of his attention being drawn by the recitals in the sale deed to a deed of partition as the foundation of the vendor's title, omits to ascertain the contents of the partition deed he shall be deemed to have constructive notice of the covenant for pre-emption contained in the deed of partition—Raja Ram v. Krishnasami, 16 Mad. 301.

Where a property subject to a maintenance charge was sold and the purchaser, even though knowing that there were several maintenance allowances, did not make enquiries whether any other allowance was made a charge on the property, and omitted to inspect title deeds: held that the purchaser must be deemed to have constructive notice of the charge—Md Yunus v. Special Manager, Court of Wards, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 301, 167 I.C. 962.

30A. Attestation does not amount to notice:—The above rule applies only to the parties to an instrument, and not to the attesting witnesses. A witness subscribing to a deed does not know the contents of the deed, for a witness in practice is not privy to the contents of the deed—Hipkins v. Amery, 2 Gif. 212; Beckett v. Cordley, 1 Ves. J. 55. Therefore, attestation of a document does not by itself import consent to or knowledge of the contents of the document, nor fix him with notice of in consonance with the view expressed by some of the other High Courts :

Vide, Note 1A, ante.

Cases after amendment:—Registration of a mortgage deed is notice of the deed in view of Expl. II to the definition of "a person is said to have notice" in this section—Sadiq Hussein v. Co-operative Central Bank, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 106. The inspection of the Registration Index for 12 years prior to the date of inquiry is not sufficient, as a rule, to discharge the burden in case of mortgages, though it may be so in case of sale transactions in some cases, ibid. Where the previous mortgage was a registered one, the fact that at the time of the subsequent mortgage the mortgagor conceals the existence of such previous mortgage does not help the subsequent mortgagee to avoid the former mortgage—Jawahir Singh v. Municipal Committee, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 74, 170 I.C. 63.

An omission of the particulars pertaining to a registered document from the index kept in the registration office does not invalidate the registration, but is only a matter for the purpose of notice—Sita Ram v. Raj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 283, 150 I.C. 145.

Explanation 1. Object:—The object of Explanation I is to protect the interests of persons who have acquired good title under a previous registered document. The Explanation however does not alter or modify the criminal liability of a party who deliberately suppressed material facts—Kuldip v. State, A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 31.

27. Registration, how far notice:—If a conveyance is registered, it would amount to implied notice to the person subsequently acquiring any interest in the property comprised in the sale deed—Ramchandra v. Kondoo Jonga, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 7, 1939 N.L.J. 496, 184 I.C. 797 ; Sk. Moula Buksh v. Dharamchand Raniwala, 65 C.W.N. 881, but it would be pushing the doctrine of constructive notice too far to hold that it would be notice also of the unregistered documents under which the holders of the registered document derived their title—Chunilal v. Ramchandra, 22 Bom. 213 (216) ; Sharfuddin v. Govind, 27 Bom. 452 (467).

Registration is notice for some purposes, but it cannot be treated as notice for the purpose of vitiating payments made by a mortgagor to his mortgagee without actual notice of the sub-mortgage—Sahadev v. Shekh Papa Miya, 29 Bom. 199 (202), following William v. Sorrell, (1799) 4 Ves. 389 ; Prabhu v. Chatter, A.I.R. 1925 All. 557, 88 I.C. 398. The creation and registration of a simple mortgage deed by a tenant in common over joint property cannot by itself be deemed to be a notice to the other tenants-in-common—Ameer Bibi v. Chinnammal, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 83.

Though a will is registered, except the executant or his agent no one else is competent to take inspection or copies and it will be scarcely justifiable to take registration as sufficient notice—Gopal v. Thakur, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 313.

Unless there are circumstances from which a presumption could be raised, the mere fact that the deed was registered did not fix the plaintiff with the knowledge of its execution on a certain date—Teja Singh v. Hamir Singh, A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu, 31. The Patna High Court has held in Bhimraj Banshidhar v. C.I.T., A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 172, 26 I.T.R. 185 that the registration of a firm is notice to all parties concerned including creditors. This view however is not supported by the language of Explanation I to the definition of notice in sec. 3.

Where by a registered agreement between two persons one agreed not to alienate property without the other's consent but no specific property was mentioned in the agreement, mere registration could not be treated as notice to a vendee.—Mt. Pran Dei v. Sat Deo, A.I.R. 1929 All. 85, 111 I.C. 761. If a charge is registered but the particulars are not entered in the index under sec. 55 Registration Act, there is no constructive notice of the charge—Raichand Gulabchand v. Dattatraya Shankar Mote, A.I.R. 1964 Bom. 1.

Where by mistake a prior mortgage was recorded in Book IV and not in Book I and the subsequent mortgagee wilfully abstained from making inquiries in the registration office, he would be deemed to have constructive notice of the prior mortgage—Varadaraja v. Kailasam, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 175, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 355.

28. Possession amounts to notice :—See Explanation II.

Possession amounts to notice of such title as the person in possession may have; and any other person who takes a mortgage or other charge upon or purchases or takes a lease of the immoveable property without ascertaining the nature and extent of the claim or interest of the person in possession, does so at his own risk—Lakshman Das v. Basrat, 6 Bom. 168 (188); Sharfuddin v. Govind, 27 Bom. 452 (470); Jugal Kishore v. Kartic, 21 Cal. 116 (120); Kondiba v. Nana, 27 Bom. 408; Bisheshar v. Muirhead, 14 All. 362 (364); Shobhagchand v. Bhaichand, 6 Bom. 193. Title includes the right arising out of part performance under sec. 53A—Ramkrishna Singh v. Mahadei Halwai, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 467. If the property to be sold is not in the possession of the vendor but of another person, it is the duty of the purchaser to make enquiries from that person, and he is bound by all the equities which the party in possession may have in the property—Balchand v. Bulaki, 8 Pat. 316, 117 I.C. 170, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 284; Prvathathammal v. Sivasankara, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 265. Consequently, where a mortgagor agreed to sell the property to the plaintiff, a mortgagee in possession, but subsequently sold it to a third person and the mortgagee brought a suit for specific performance of the agreement to sell, the purchaser could not contend that the possession of the plaintiff would put him on notice only of his rights as a mortgagee and of no more, ibid; Faki Ibrahim v. Faki Gulam, 45 Bom. 910, A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 459, 60 I.C. 986. "If a purchaser or a mortgagee had notice that the vendor or mortgagor is not in possession of the property, he must make inquiries of the person in possession—of the tenant who is in possession—and find out from him what his rights are. And if he does not choose to do that, then whatever title he acquires as purchaser or mortgagee will be subject to the right of the tenant in possession"—per Vaughan-Williams, L.J., in Hunt v. Luck, [1902] 1 Ch. 428; see also Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare 43 (60); Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo P.C. 18; Tiloke Chand v. Beattie & Co. A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 204; Baburam v. Madhab 40 Cal. 565; Daniels v. Davison, (1809) 16 Ves. 247. Possession being prima facie evidence of title and also the only visible badge of ownership, a man in possession is entitled to impute knowledge

No general definition of "gross negligence" has been or can be laid down. Each case must depend upon the facts proved in it and reasonable inferences from such facts—Damodara v. Samasundara, 12 Mad. 429 (431). The term "gross negligence" is nowhere defined in this Act, but in sec. 78, gross neglect, fraud and misrepresentation have been used as equivalent in their legal consequences. See Shan Moun Mull v. Madras Building Company, 15 Mad. 268 (276). "Gross negligence" is a degree of negligence so gross that a Court of Equity may treat it as evidence of fraud—impute a fraudulent motive to it—and visit it with the consequences of fraud, although morally speaking the party charged may be perfectly innocent—West v. Reid, 2 Hare 257, (per Wigram V.C.). The conduct in question need not be such as would entail a jury to find that there has been actual fraud, but must be characterised by negligence so gross as would justify the Court in concluding that there has been fraud in an artificial sense of the word—Oliver v. Hinton, [1899] 2 Ch. 264 (275). The real distinction between gross negligence and ordinary negligence lies in the difference between the extent of duty to take care imposed in each case—In re. City Equitable Fire Insurance Co. (1925) Ch. 407, 428. At one time the tendency of the Equity Court in England was to equate gross negligence with fraud, but in later decisions the distinction between the two has been emphasised. Negligence is not fraud, for negligence implies carelessness and inadvertence while fraud is active dishonesty. Fraud leads men to do or omit doing a thing not carelessly but for a purpose—Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp, (1884) 26 Ch. D. 482, 489. See also Note 479 under sec. 78.

Where the circumstances are such that the slightest pains could have enabled the mortgagee to discover an earlier charge, he will be fixed with constructive notice of the charge if he refrained from making any inquiry—Bank of Bombay v. Suleiman, 33 Bom. 1 (P.C.).

An equitable mortgagee must be fixed with the notice of the vendor's lien if, in spite of a statement in the sale deed that the vendee undertakes to pay the balance of the price remaining unpaid, he refrains from enquiring whether the balance of the price has been paid—Alwar Chetty v. Jagannath, 54 M.L.J. 109, 108 I.C. 291.

The wilful or negligent abstention on the part of the vendee to call for the title deeds will deprive him of the protection which a Court of Equity would extend to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice—Ram Charan v. Joy Ram, 17 C.W.N. 10, 16 I.C. 825; Doorga Narain v. Baney Madhub, 7 Cal. 199. The omission on the part of an intending mortgagee to search the register to ascertain the title to the property or the charges (if any) upon it, amounts to gross negligence on his part—Churaman v. Balli, 9 All. 591 (599).

A purchaser cannot be said to be guilty of negligence in not asking for the title-deeds of an adjoining property. As between the vendor and the purchaser, it is the vendor who is to disclose to the purchaser any covenant restricting the enjoyment of the property sold—Chaturbhuj v. Mansukhram, 27 Bom.L.R. 73, 86 I.C. 19, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 183.

This section speaks of gross negligence. Any slight negligence on the part of a person does not fix him with constructive notice—Damodara v. Somasundara, 12 Mad. 429 (435).

26. Registration, whether amounts to notice—Old law :—According to the Calcutta High Court, registration was not of itself a sufficient notice—Joshua v. Alliance Bank of Simla, 22 Cal. 185 ; Inderdawan v. Gobind Lal, 23 Cal. 790 ; Preo Nath v. Asutosh, 27 Cal. 358 ; Magniram v. Mehdi Hossein, 31 Cal. 95 (102) ; Atul Kristo v. Mutty Lal, 3 C.W.N. 30 ; Nanda Lal v. Abdul Aziz, 43 Cal. 1052 (1084). The same view was taken by the Madras High Court in Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co., 15 Mad. 268 (279) ; Madras Building Co. v. Rowlandon, 13 Mad. 383 (388) ; Damodara v. Somasundara, 12 Mad. 429 (435) ; Rangasami v. Annamali, 31 Mad. 7 (10).

In Manindra v. Troylukho, 2 C.W.N. 750 (755) and Bunwari v. Ramjee, 7 C.W.N. 11, the Calcutta High Court held that the question whether registration amounts to notice was one of fact and must be decided according to the particular circumstances of each individual case. And this view was approved of by the Privy Council in Tilakdhari v. Khedan Lal, 48 Cal. 1 (at pp. 15-16).

The Allahabad High Court laid down that registration was of itself no notice to all the world, but where it was the duty of a person to search or where a reasonably prudent man would in his own interests make a search, then the fact that the search if made would have disclosed a document affecting the property, would affect that man with notice of that document and put on him the necessity of further inquiry—Janaki Prasad v. Kishen Dat, 16 All. 478 (482). This case was followed in Ashiq Husain v. Chaturbhuj, 50 All. 328, 26 A.L.J. 41, 108 I.C. 152, A.I.R. 1928 All. 159. But see Matadin v. Kazim, 13 All. 432 (F.B.).

The Bombay High Court held that registration of sale or mortgage gave notice to the subsequent purchasers or mortgagees—Lakshman v. Basrat, 6 Bom. 168 ; Dundaya v. Chenbasapa, 9 Bom. 427 ; Chintaman v. Dareppa, 14 Bom. 506 (510) ; Narayan v. Bapu, 17 Bom. 741 ; Balmukundas v. Moti, 18 Bom. 444 ; Dhondo v. Raoji, 20 Bom. 290 ; Chunilal v. Ramchandra, 22 Bom. 712 ; Dina v. Nathu, 26 Bom. 538. But see Gordhandas v. Mohanlal, 45 Bom. 170 (173), 59 I.C. 506.

The Rangoon High Court held that in Burma a search of the registration records was particularly easy and a failure by a subsequent purchaser from a mortgator in possession to make a search is a circumstance which warranted the imputation of a notice to him of the previous mortgage—Vaz v. Muni Singh, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 34, 117 I.C. 565.

The Privy Council ruling in Tilakdhari v. Khedan Lal, 48 Cal. 1 was followed in Parbhu Lal v. Chatter, 88 I.C. 398, A.I.R. 1925 All. 557 ; Kali Din v. Madho, 77 I.C. 862, A.I.R. 1923 All. 169 ; Ghulam Mahummad v. Mirza, 5 Lah. 368, 84 I.C. 174 ; Gunabai v. Motilal, 89 I.C. 625, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 398 ; Chettiar Firm v. Chettiar Firm, 4 Rang. 238, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 195, 98 I.C. 19.

Explanation—whether retrospective :—Sec. 63 of the Amending Act 20 of 1929 shows that sec. 3 of the main Act which contains the definition of "notice" has not been given retrospective effect ; so the Explanation to definition of notice does not affect the terms or incidents of transfers made before 1st April, 1930—Azizuddin v. Mt. Arifa Begam, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 1, 12 Luck. 563, 165 I.C. 718. This view, however, is not its provisions—Mollaya v. Krishnaswami, 47 M.L.J. 622, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 95, 85 I.C. 855; Rama Aiyar v. Narayanasami, 51 M.L.J. 313, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 609, 96 I.C. 483; Bepin Behari v. Trailakya, 31 C.W.N. 448 (449), A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 933, 102 I.C. 398; Tarabaz v. Nanak Chand, 33 P.L.R. 685, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 566, 138 I.C. 263; Hamidmiya v. Nagindas, 35 Bom.L.R. 252, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 217 (220); Fazal Hussain v. Jiwan Shah, 14 Lah. 369, 141 I.C. 454, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 551 (553); Banga Chandra v. Jagat, 44 Cal. 186 (199) (P.C.). For it constantly happens that persons subscribe deeds as witnesses without having the least notion of what they contain, and if people were to be held bound by an instrument which they so subscribe, it might be a dangerous thing to witness any other man's signature—per Garth, C.J., in Ram Chunder v. Hari Das, 9 Cal. 463 (468); Abhoy Charn v. Attarmani, 13 C.W.N. 931, 3 I.C. 415. But there may be circumstances under which the witness may be deemed to have notice of the contents of the document he is attesting—Tarabaz v. Nanak Chand, supra; Abdul v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 715, 65 M.L.J. 390. Thus, where the attester was present throughout the transaction and attested the deed after hearing its contents, he must be fixed with notice of its contents, and cannot afterwards challenge the right of the transferee—Bhagwat Rai v. Gorakh, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 93 (95).

31. Government :—The doctrine of constructive notice is equally applicable to Government, but the Court should be more strict in applying it to Government than to private individuals, and it must be more cautiously applied as it is based on a fiction—Secretary of State v. Dattatraya, 3 Bom. L.R. 923. One is not bound by an order until it is communicated to him—Bachhittar Singh v. State of Punjab, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 395; M. Sen v. Director of Panchayats, W.B., 68 C.W.N. 1109.

32. Notice to agent :—The law as to when notice to an agent amounts to notice to the principal, has been amended by Explanation III.

To affect the principal with notice, five things are necessary :—(a) The agent must have received the notice during the agency; (b) The knowledge must come to him as agent; (c) It must be in the same transaction; (d) It must be material to the transaction; (e) It must not have been fraudulently withheld from the principal—Kettlewal v. Watson, 21 Ch. D. 685 (706).

The information must be communicated to the agent as such; for information not so derived was not obtained in the course of the business transacted by him for his principal, and which he was not bound to disclose to him. The knowledge of an agent, not acquired in the matter for which he was agent, cannot be imputed to a principal and such knowledge cannot be used for upsetting a transaction of a date before the agency commenced—Chabildas v. Dayal Mowji, 31 Bom. 566 (P.C.), 34 I.C. 179. See also Illus. (b) to sec. 229, contract Act.

A notice to an agent is notice to the principal, since otherwise notice might be avoided in every case by employing an agent—Akshoylingam v. Ramayya, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 426, 120 I.C. 876. "It would be a pretty harsh thing", observed Lord Hardwick, "to affect the lender of the money with all kind of knowledge the agent may have of the title of the borrower; but still I will not lay it down, as a general rule, that where the same person is concerned for the mortgagor and mortgtgee, that notice to such person will not be good constructive notice to the mortgagee"—Warrick v. Warrick, 3 Atk. 291 (294). But this principle is subject to the following exception, namely: Where the act done by the agent is such as cannot be said to be done by him in his character of agent, but is done by him in the character of a party to an independent fraud on his principal, that is not to be imputed to the principal as an act done by his agent—Cave v. Cave, 15 Ch. D. 639 (644); see also Texas & Co. v. Bombay Banking Co., 44 Bom. 139 (P.C.).

The information to a pleader engaged only for a previous suit and obtained by him during the pendency of that litigation cannot be said to be information to his employer or to his authorized agent—Prakash v. Birendra, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 333 (340), 132 I.C. 51.

Enactments relating to contracts to be taken as part of Contract Act.

4. The chapters and sections of this Act which relate to contracts shall be taken as part of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

And sections 54, paragraphs 2 and 3, 59, 107 and 123 shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1908.

33. The second para. of this section was added by the Transfer of Property Amendment Act III of 1885.

Before this para. was added, a difficulty arose in the case of the sale of immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100. Thus, while an unregistered sale-deed of property of less than Rs. 100 would convey a good title under the Registration Act, it would be wholly ineffectual under the T. P. Act, unless it was accompanied by delivery of possession (Narain v. Dataram, 8 Cal. 597, 612).

This difficulty has now been removed and sec. 54 has been made supplemental to the Registration Act. A sale of immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100 can be made only by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property, and that if made otherwise, e.g., by an unregistered instrument unaccompanied by delivery of possession, the sale is inoperative and confers no title on the vendee—Makhan Lal v. Banku, 19 Cal. 623 (626) (F.B.) (overruling Khatu Bibi v. Madhuram, 16 Cal. 622). The effect of secs. 4 and 54 of the T. P. Act is that if a sale of immoveable property is made by a written instrument, the instrument is compulsorily registrable, irrespective of the value of the property comprised therein—Muthu Karuppan v. Muthu Samban, 38 Mad. 1158 (1161), 25 I.C. 772, 27 M.L.J. 497; Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 All. 986 (F.B.), 26 A.L.J. 1084, A.I.R. 1928 All. 726 (729).

This section properly read means, so far as it is applicable to the case of mortgages, that if and when a document of mortgage is executed, it must be registered as provided in the Registration Act, but this section does not in any way do away with the effect of sec. 59 which expressly provides that in certain areas a mortgage can be effected merely by deposit of title deeds—Gurudas v. Punjab & Sind Bank, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 972.

Behind every transfer of immoveable property there is a contract which, when carried out, terminates in a completed transfer. So long as it is inchoate, it is contract enforceable by specific performance—Udayanarayan v. Badia Dasu, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 116.

An instrument which was intended to create a lease but has failed to do so on account of a technical defect, namely, non-registration of the document, is to be treated as a contract to lease, ibid. Where the lessor delivers possession to the lessee in part performance of the contract, he is entitled to a decree for the sum agreed to be paid under the lease by way of specific performance of the contract to lease, ibid.

Charge :—This section has nothing to do with charges, because a charge is outside the domain of the Registration Act and is valid even though unregistered—Manekchand v. Ganeshlal, 35 Bom.L.R. 588, 145 I.C. 582, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 298 (299).

34. Lease :—A lease for a period of less than a year, if made in writing, must be registered under sec. 107 of the T. P. Act, though it is not compulsorily registrable under sec. 17 of the Registration Act—Ram Sahu v. Gowro, 44 Mad. 55 (64) (F.B.), 59 I.C. 350. Where oral lease accompanied by possession has been established, the deed of rent can be used as a corroborative piece of evidence to support the terms of the lease—Taj Din v. Abdul Rahim, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 423 (425), 41 P.L.R. 498.

35. Contract Act :—Notwithstanding the terms of this section, the provisions of section 39 of the Contract Act does not apply to the case of a mortgage so as to enable the mortgagor to rescind the mortgage, on the ground of non-payment of a part of the consideration, when an interest in the mortgaged property has actually vested in the mortgagee upon execution and registration of the mortgage-deed—Makhan Lal v. Hanuman, 2 P.L.J. 168 (171), 38 I.C. 877.

It is significant that the whole of the Contract Act has not been made applicable to a transfer of immoveable property. This section merely makes certain provisions of the T. P. Act relating to contracts as part of the Contract Act, and not vice versa. There is a clear distinction between a contract which still remains to be performed and specific performance of which may be sought, and a conveyance by which title to property has actually passed. Cases of mere contract are governed by the provisions of the Contract Act. Cases of transfer of immoveable property are governed by the Transfer of Property Act. A mere contract to mortgage or sale would not amount to an actual transfer of any interest in the immoveable property (see sec. 54), but a deed of sale or mortgage, if duly registered, would operate as a conveyance of such interest. Once a document transferring immoveable property has been registered, the transaction passes out of the domain of a mere contract into one of conveyance. Such a completed transaction would be governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and of only so much of the Contract Act as are applicable thereto—Dip Narayan v. Nageshar, 52 All. 338, 1930 A.L.J. 45, A.I.R. 1930 All. 1 (2), 122 I.C. 872.

Registration Act :—The expression "supplemental to the Registration Act" in this section is not intended to mean that the sections mentioned in it are to be taken as part of the Registration Act. It would follow that they cannot be governed by the definitions in the Registration Act, but must be governed by those in the T. P. Act. Hence sec. 107 is not governed by the definition of the term "lease" in the Registration Act, but by the definition in sec. 105, T. P. Act—Taj Din v. Abdul Rahim, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 423 (425), 41 P.L.R. 498 relying on Ram Krishna v. Jai Nandan, 14 Pat. 672 (F.B.), 16 P.L.T. 451, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 291.

CHAPTER II

OF TRANSFERS OF PROPERTY BY ACT OF PARTIES

(A)—Transfer of Property, whether Moveable or Immoveable

5. In the following sections "transfer of property" means "Transfer of property" an act by which a living person conveys defined. property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons, or to himself, or to himself and one or more other living persons and "to transfer property" is to perform such act.

In this section 'living person' includes a company or association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not, but nothing herein contained shall affect any law for the time being in force relating to transfer of property to or by companies, associations or bodies of individuals.

Amendment:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 6 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). For reasons, see Note 40 below.

35A. Construction:—The Act is to be construed irrespective of the fact whether the property is inside or outside India or in a State to which the Act applies or not—Central Bank v. Nusserwanji, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 642, 34 Bom. L. R. 1384.

It should be noted that nothing in this Chapter is to be deemed to affect any rule of Mahomedan law—See sec. 2, ante.

36. "Act of parties":—The word "transfer" is not concerned with transfers which take place by judicial process, but with such transfers only as take place between living persons by virtue of their own voluntary acts—Gopal Pandey v. Parsotam Das, 5 All. 121 (187). But a sale executed by Court in pursuance of a decree for specific performance has all the characteristics of a transfer inter vivos—Christine Pais v. K. Ugappa Shetty, A. I. R. 1966 Mys. 299.

A purchase by an auction purchaser in an execution sale is not a transfer to which this Act applies. While in private sales there is an implied warranty of title there is none in the auction sale. An auction purchaser, therefore, cannot assume the position of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. He gets the property subject to the same restrictions which the judgment-debtor himself was subject to—Har Narain v. Bank of Upper India, A. I. R. 1938 Oudh 84, 172 I.C. 855.

Not confined to contracts:—There is nothing in this Act to suggest that it was intended to confine the operation of the Act to transfers by contract. Thus, the term is wide enough to include a deed of appointment executed by virtue of a power given under a settlement—Joshua v. Alliance Bank, 22 Cal. 185.

37. Transfer:—The term 'transfer' is used in law in the most generic signification comprehending all the species of contract which pass real rights in property from one person to another—Gopal Pandey v. Purnotam, 5 All. 121 (137); Mata Din v. Kazim, 13 All. 432 (473) (per Mahmood, J.). The word has long been recognised to be a technical term of law in all countries where English is the language of the Legislature and of the Courts of Justice. It is often used as a convertible term with alienation, conveyance and assignment—per Mahmood, J., in 5 All. 121 (137).

The definition of “transfer of property” in this section is to be taken as the definition for the purposes of determining what is transfer within the meaning of s. 2, Proviso of Bombay Act XVII of 1942—Soniram Dwarkabai, A. I. R. 1951 Bom. 94, I. L. R. 1951 Bom. 679.

Where a testator grants a life estate to A with a right to alienate the property or any portion thereof permanently, the disposition is valid—Beni Madho v. Harihar, A. I. R. 1947 Oudh 71, 22 Luck. 19.

The term ‘transfer’ does not necessarily import conveyance of all the transferor’s interest in the property. Thus, a mortgage or a lease is treated as a transfer under the Act, although it does not exhaust the whole interest which the transferor is capable of passing—Narandas v. Parsoram, 4 B.L.R. 550; Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, (1939) 43 C.W.N. 281 (P.C.).

It is within the contemplation of this section that there may be a “transfer” by a person exercising powers over the property of another. Hence it is a case of transfer when the donee of a power of appointment, having a power to appoint a beneficial interest in property, exercises that power—U Thita v. U. Areseinna, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 76 (78), 1938 R.L.R. 678, 179 I.C. 903.

The definition of transfer of property is sufficiently wide to cover cases in which on dissolution of a partnership certain partners are paid off and in return they give up or assign their interests in the assets of the partnership—Virbhandas v. Dasumal, I. L. R. 1939 Kar. 344, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 288, 185 I.C. 28.

A partition is not a transfer, because it merely effects a change in the mode of enjoyment of property, and is not an act of conveying property from one living person to another—Indoji Jithaji v. Kothapalli, 10 L.W. 498; 54 I.C. 146 (151); Pohkar v. Dulari, 52 All. 716, 1930 A.L.J. 688, 125 I.C. 1, A.I.R. 1930 All. 687 (691). But see contra—Rasa Goundan v. Arunachela, 44 M. L. J. 513, A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 577, 72 I.C. 978 (dissenting from 10 L.W. 498); Ramaswami v. Kathamuthu, 24 L.W. 180, 97 I.C. 70, A.I.R. 1926 Journal 167; and Waman v. Gampat, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 10, 60 Bom. 34, 160 I.C. 242; Jatru Pahan v. Mahatma Ambikajit Prasad, A.I.R. 1957 Pat 570; Sharin v. Ajit Kumar A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 432. But see Raman Pillai v. Madhavan Pillai, A.I.R. 1959 Ker 235.

Where, in a dispute regarding her husband’s property, a Hindu widow arrived at a compromise with the reversioner whereby she agreed to keep the property for her life and undertook not to sell or mortgage the same and that any such sale or mortgage, if made would be invalid, and she also consented that after her death the reversioner would be the owner of the property, held that the compromise was a family arrangement and did not amount to a transfer of property—Basangowda v. Irgowdatti, 47 Bom. 597 (603), A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 276, 73 I.C. 196. But where a Hindu woman inheriting property from her father with the limited interest of a Hindu widow surrendered her entire estate in such property in favour of her sons so as to accelerate their succession to it, the transaction amounted to a "transfer" within the meaning of s. 7 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, 1934—Joti Prasad v. Basdeo, A.I.R. 1946 All. 267, I.L.R. 1946 All. 341.

A family arrangement or compromise by which the antecedent right of the parties is acknowledged and defined, is not a transfer of property, as it does not convey any new distinct title to either of the parties—Khumni Lal v. Gobind, 33 All. 356 (P.C.), 15 C.W.N. 545 (552), 10 I.C. 477; followed in Hanuman v. Abbas, 4 Luck. 452, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 193 (201), 120 I.C. 387; Ram Gopal v. Tulsi Ram, 51 All. 79 (F.B.), 116 I.C. 861, A.I.R. 1928 All. 641, 643; Jatru Pahan v. Mahatma Ambikajit Prasad, A.I.R. 1957 Pat 570; Yendapalli v. Yendapalli, A.I.R. 1958 Andhra Pr. 147; Bulkan Sah v. Guneya Devi Nathani, A.I.R. 1964 Pat 214. A deed of release cannot pass title, but the admission in a release deed can be used for rebutting the presumption of the settlement record of rights—Pankajini Devi v. Sudhir Dutta, A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 669. When an under-tenure is purchased by a Patnidar in a certificate sale, the release of the under-tenure amounts to a transfer requiring registration—Baidyanath Rai v. Sm. Jay Kumari, A.I.R. 1957 Pat 706. Even a registered release deed may operate as a sale if the intention to transfer is clear and if it is for valuable consideration—Lakshman Naik v. Smt. Sushila Swain, A.I.R. 1968 Pat, 274. A deed of release cannot operate as transfer without adequate words of conveyance—Kunju v. Chandrika, 1959 Ker. L.J. 395. A release deed can only feed title but cannot transfer title—K. Hutchi Gowder v. H. Bheema Gowder, A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 33.

A bona fide settlement of doubtful claims is not a transfer of property at all, but really a recognition of the title of the opposite party and an abandonment of all further claims to it. Such an arrangement is not a "transfer" within the meaning of the Act—Inder Pal v. Sarnam Singh, A.I.R. 1951 All. 823. Though it would be open to the members of a family who had not joined in a family settlement to challenge it, it would bind such members as had joined in it—Ram Pratap v. Indrajit, A.I.R. 1950 All. 320. Members of a family who have no proprietary interest in the property in their possession, can enter into a family arrangement with respect to such right as they may possess in the property, Ibid. For essentials of family settlement see Kisto Chandra Mondal v. Mt. Anila Bala Dasi, A.I.R. 1968 Pat 487. If a Hindu governed by Dayabhaga distributes his estate in separate shares among his grandsons the transaction is a gift and not a family settlement—Ibid. A family settlement is not invalidated by the mere inclusion of strangers to the family or their properties—Narayani Amma v. Bhaskaran Pillai, A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 214.

Where a dispute as to the joint family property was referred to arbitration and a decree was passed in terms of the award, it was held that the agreement was neither a transfer nor an agreement to transfer but was in the nature of a family settlement—Bachchu v. Harbans, A.I.R. 1953 All. 213.

Where both sides claim an equal title to the property and each agree to recognise a part of the title claimed by the other, the transaction is not a sale, gift or exchange, as there is no transfer of title from one to the other—Balkrishna v. Rangnath, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 171, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 618. Where a mortgagor delivers possession of the property mortgaged to the simple mortgagee in satisfaction of the debt, the transaction does not amount to a compromise of disputed claims as no title vests in the mortgagee, Ibid. An invalid gift-deed cannot be construed as a family settlement—Sulaiman v. Kader, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 161, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 104. For a family settlement the parties thereto must have competing titles in respect of the properties in dispute, Ibid.

A relinquishment connotes the extinction of a right and in that case there is nothing left to transfer. A sale or transfer on the other hand presupposes the existence of the property. It presupposes the transfer from one person to another of the right in property—Provident Investment Co. v. Comr. of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1954 Bom. 95. A relinquishment by a reversioner of his reversionary interest does not amount to a transfer—Barati Lal v. Salik Ram, 38 All. 107; Sundar Lal v. Gur Saran, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 65, 172 I.C. 637. Similarly, relinquishment of interest in the joint family property by a member of a Mitakshara joint Hindu family in favour of sons to be born in future does not constitute transfer of property and the after born sons derive no benefit from such relinquishment—Katragadda China Anjaneyulu v. Katragadda China Ramayya, A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 177 (F.B.). But see Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti, 30 Mad. 201 (203), where relinquishment has been held to effect a transfer. A registered instrument styled release deed releasing right, title and interest of the releasor without consideration may operate as gift—Kuppuswami Chettiar v. Arumugam, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1395.

The creation of an easement is not a transfer of property, and is outside the scope of this Act—Sital Chandra v. Delanney, 20 C.W.N. 1159 (1163), 34 I.C. 450; Traders Miners, Ltd. v. Dharendra, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 261, 23 Pat. 115.

A dedication of property to a temple is not a transfer within the meaning of this Act—Biopatrio v. Ram Chandra, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 469, 96 I.C. 1004. But such dedication is a transfer within the meaning of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act (1 of 1954), sec. 5A (7) (iii)—Champa Bibi v. Panchiram Mahata Siva Bigraha, A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 551.

38. Property :—The word "property" may be used in the objective sense of a concrete thing which is the subject of ownership or other rights; or it may be used in the sense of the rights and interests of the owner or other person in the property. It is in the latter sense that the term is used in this Act—Umrao Singh v. Kacheru Singh, I.L.R. 1939 All. 607, 1939 A.L.J. 308, A.I.R. 1939 All. 415 (F.B.) (per Allsop, J., at p. 425). The following are included in the term “Property” :—

(a) Actionable claim or chose-in-action—Rudra Perkash v. Krishna, 14 Cal. 241 (244); Muchiram v. Ishan Chunder, 21 Cal. 568. Provident Fund money due to a subscriber is an actionable claim and therefore “property” within the meaning of this section—Bhupati v. Phanindra 63 Cal. 578, 62 C.L.J. 359, 40 C.W.N. 102.

(b) Equity of redemption—Muchiram v. Ishan, 21 Cal. 568; Kanti Ram v. Kutubuddin, 22 Cal. 33; Mata Din v. Kazim Husain, 13 All. 432 (474).

(c) Vested remainder—Umesh v. Zahur, 18 Cal. 164.

(d) A share in an estate—Mahomed v. Kashi Nath, 3 C.W.N. 180.

(e) The office of a shebait—Monohar Mukherjee v. Bhupendra Nath Mukherjee, 37 C.W.N. 29.

(f) A Hindu Idol is property and may be recovered in a suit, though it cannot be made the subject of unrestricted alienation—Subbaraya v. Chellappa, 4 Mad. 315. A Gagawali gaddi is property—Murarilal Kuti v. Narayan Lal, A.I.R. 1956 Pat 345.

(g) A hat is property, so that the rents and profits derivable therefrom may be validly transferred—Golam Mohiuddin v. Parbati, 36 Cal. 665.

(h) The right to perform religious services of an idol—Nagiah Bathudu v. Muthachary, 11 M.L.J. 215. A Shebaitship of a religious endowment is a species of property with peculiar characteristics and limitations, but it is not such property as can be partitioned in the ordinary way. It cannot be disposed of by will—Angurbala v. Debarata, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 278, 53 C.W.N. 348.

(i) The interest of a mortgagee in the property mortgaged to him—Ram Shankar v. Ganesh, 29 All. 385 (F.B.), dissenting from Mata Din v. Kazim Hussain, 13 All 432, in which it was held that the term ‘property’ meant the actual physical property and not any interest in such property.

(j) A right to conveyance of land—Narasingerji v. Panaganti, 1921 M.W.N. 519, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 498.

(k) A contingent interest—Ma Yait v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 17, 8 Rang. 8; 57 I.A. 10, 34 C.W.N. 173, 121 I.C. 225.

Under this Act “debt” belongs to a particular species of property, namely, actionable claim which has been defined as “a claim to any debt which the Civil Courts recognize as affording grounds for relief” (vide sec. 3 ante). It follows that a claim to a debt which cannot be enforced by action, e.g., when the debt is barred by limitation, is not “property”. The same limitation must apply to a part of a debt and in order to determine whether or not it is “property”, it must be found out whether an action can be sustained to recover it—Durg Singh v. Kesho Lal, 18 Pat. 839, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 170, (per Harries, C.J., and Fazl Ali, J.).

A mortgage deed cannot be challenged on the ground that a part of the property embraced by it was outside India—Prithi Singh v. Ganesb Singh, A.I.R. 1951 All. 462

38A. Legal and equitable estates:—In India there is no such conception as legal estates and equitable estates. All interests in property, whether the full ownership or an interest carved out of full ownership, are rights in rem, the essence of which is that where the right is infringed, the Court has no option but to give relief, provided the remedy is invoked within the period of limitation. The Court cannot refuse relief in the exercise of its discretion—Ali Hossain v. Rajkumar, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 417 (F.B.).

39. "In future":—A transfer means a conveyance of property not only in present but also in future—Sumsuddin v. Abdul Husein, 31 Bom. 165 (172). The conveyance may be in present or in future, but the property itself must be in existence, at least potentially, as the property of the grantor—Petch v. Turin, 15 M. & W. 110; Sumsuddin v. Abdul, 31 Bom. 165. The words "in present or in future" govern the word 'conveys' and not the word "property". This is indicated by a comma occurring after the word "property". Therefore, it is clear that there is nothing in this section to indicate that future property can be transferred—Venkatapathiraja v. Subhadrayamma, 47 I.C. 563; Chief Controlling Revenue Authority v. Sudarshanam Picture, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 319 (F.B.). But see Solomon v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 8 (10), where it has been indicated by Roberts C.J. and Spargo J., that there may be a transfer of future property, e.g., future book-debts, which creates an interest in it and gives the transferee a security which he can enforce even after the assignor's insolvency. But it must be future property in which the assignor has an interest to transfer. See also Purna Chandra v. Barua Kumari, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 715, where it has been held that an assignment of future or non-existent property is quite valid and the transfer becomes operative as soon as the property comes into existence (in this case assignment by way of security of a decree that might be passed in suit already instituted was held to be valid. See also Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H.L.C. 191; Collier v. Isaacs, 19 Ch.D. 342, 45 L.T. 567 and Palaniappa v. Lakshmanan, 16 Mad. 429. A purported transfer of property, not in existence at the time of the contract, can only operate as a contract to be performed in future—Chief Controlling Revenue Authority v. Sudarshanam Picture, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 319 (F.B.), Judraloke Studio Ltd. v. Santi Devi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 609.

It has been decided by the Privy Council that where the estate or interest which a deed of assignment purports to assign has at the date no existence, it is well settled that neither at law nor in equity can the assignment of such an interest operate according to its tenor—Ditcham v. Miller, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 203; Jugal Kishore Saraf v. Raw Cotton Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 376.

Mortgage of future crops, etc.:—A mortgage of property which is to come into existence in future (e.g., indigo crops, indigo cakes, etc.), is recognized and enforced in this country as an executory agreement, binding on the parties to the transaction which is not governed by the T. P. Act, or the Contract Act, in so far as it is neither a mortgage of immoveable property nor a pledge of existing moveable property. It is in the nature of an agreement to mortgage moveable property that may come into existence in future and as such it creates an equitable charge which is valid and enforceable—Ram Sarup v. Mohan Lal, A.I.R. 1924 All. 883. A man cannot in equity, any more than at law, assign what is not in existence. But a man can contract to assign property which is to come into existence in future, and when it has come into existence, equity treating as done that which ought to be done, fastens upon that property, and the contract to assign thus becomes a complete assignment. The equitable title arising in a transaction of this kind would, no doubt, not avail against a subsequent transferee for value without notice of that title—Co-operative Hindustan Bank v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 524. See also Misri Lal v. Mozhar, 13 Cal. 261; Collyer v. Issacs, 19 Ch. D. 342; Baldeo v. Miller, 31 Cal. 667. As to the assignment of future book-debts, see Talby v. Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523. A permanent lease of all the trees in the village includes not only the existing trees but also the trees that may come into existence in future—Kamal Singh v. Kali Mahton, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 402.

Under secs. 5, 21 and 100 a present charge as security for discharging a contingent liability can be validly created. A charge to secure a liability which will arise only, if at all, in future is a present charge under sec. 100. Thus a direction in a decree that the amount shall be realisable from certain property if the mortgaged property was found insufficient to satisfy the debt, creates a valid contingent charge—Shrinivas v. Jamanadas, A.I.R. 1952 M.B. 16.

It has been held by the Lahore High Court that there can be no mortgage of profits that would accrue from year to year, because such profits are not an interest in immoveable property. Such profits cannot be pledged also as pledge can be of moveable property or goods, and such profits are neither moveable property or goods—Punjab National Bank v. Punjab Co-operative Bank, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 15.

It is, however, obvious from sec. 5 that the T. P. Act is not intended to cover transfers in future.—Harnam Singh v. Md. Akbar, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 76, 170 I.C. 136; Muttu Kumara v. Veerappa, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 160, 131 I.C. 509.

Offerings which may, in future, be made to a Hindu idol is not a saleable property—Shoilajanand v. Peary, 29 Cal. 470.

40. "Or to himself" :—Under the old law, a person could not convey property to himself though he could create a trust in his own favour—Bai Mahakorc v. Bai Mangala, 35 Bom. 403 (407); he could only transfer property to himself conjunctly with another. But the law has now been changed by the addition of the words "or to himself." "We have amended sec. 5 to make it clear that a transfer can be made by a person to himself, as for instance by a person making a settlement or trust in which he constitutes himself a trustee."—Report of the Select Committee (1929).

"Living persons":—The term "living persons" no doubt includes also juridical persons, such as corporation and the like, since such persons being the creatures of law are regarded as standing on the same footing as other living beings—Biopatrao v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 469. Gour's Law of Transfer, 4th Edition, Vol. 1, p. 117. This is now expressly provided by the new second para. of this section. Section 3 (39) of the General Clauses Act (1897) also defines a "person" as including any company or association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not. But "the Court is not", as observed by the Judicial Committee, "a judicial person. It cannot be sued. It cannot take property, and as it cannot take property, it cannot assign it"—Raj Raghbir v. Jai Indra, 42 All. 158 (P.C.); Akshoy Zemindary Co. v. Ramanath, 40 C.W.N. 1281.

A dedication of property to an idol or a temple is not a transfer (gift) to a "living person" within the meaning of this Act but is a gift to God; consequently, the requirements of writing and registration do not apply to such a gift—Ramalinga v. Sivachidambara, 42 Mad. 440 (443); Narasimhaswami v. Venkatalingam, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 636; Harihar v. Guru Granth Saheb, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 610 (612). An idol may be regarded by a fiction of law as a juristic person, clothed for some purposes with the rights of persons; but though a juristic person [Pramatha v. Pradumna, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 139] it is not always a "living person"—Harihar v. Guru Granth, supra. See note 630 under sec. 123. The transfer of property to an idol is not bad if it is not covered by the present section. Such a transfer is not subject to the provisions of the T. P. Act—Kalika Singh v. Sri Radha Krishnaji, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 256, (1946) O.W.N. 234.

Unborn persons:—Although this Act deals with alienations made as between living persons, still an interest may be created in favour of persons yet unborn. subject to certain restrictions. See sections 13, 14 and 20.

Section 3 of the Hindu Disposition of Property Act (XV of 1916), validates all dispositions made by a Hindu in favour of unborn persons, subject to the limitations contained in Chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act.

6. Property of any kind may be transferred, except as ^{What may be trans-} otherwise provided by this Act or by any ^{ferred.} other law for the time being in force.

(a) The chance of an heir apparent succeeding to an estate, the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman or any other mere possibility of a like nature, cannot be transferred.

(b) A mere right of re-entry for breach of a condition subsequent cannot be transferred to any one except the owner of the property affected thereby.

(c) An easement cannot be transferred apart from the dominant heritage.

(d) An interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally cannot be transferred by him.

(dd) A right to future maintenance, in whatsoever manner arising, secured or determined, cannot be transferred.

(e) A mere right to sue cannot be transferred.

(f) A public office cannot be transferred, nor can the salary of a public officer, whether before or after it has become payable.

(g) Stipends allowed to military, naval, air force and civil pensioners of the Government and political pensions cannot be transferred.

(h) No transfer can be made (1) in so far as it is opposed to the nature of the interest affected thereby, or (2) for an unlawful object or consideration within the meaning of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, or (3) to a person legally disqualified to be transferee.

(i) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise a tenant having an untransferable right of occupancy, the farmer of an estate in respect of which default has been made in paying revenue, or the lessee of an estate under the management of a Court of Wards, to assign his interest as such tenant, farmer or lessee.

Amendment :—Clause (dd) was added by sec 7 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). For reasons, see Note 53. The words "air force" were added in clause (g) by the Repealing and Amending Act, X of 1927, and the word "naval" was inserted by Act XXXV of 1934.

By A.L.O. 1937, in paragraph (g) above "the Crown" was substituted for "Government". Then by A.L.O. 1950, the word "Government" was substituted for "the Crown".

40A. Decisions under C. P. Code not to be applied :—Much which under the law cannot be sold in execution is capable of being dealt with by voluntary transfers, and it would be wholly unsafe to apply to this Act the decisions which have been given with regard to the Civil Procedure Code—Brahmadeo v. Harjan, 25 Cal. 778; Bal-krishna v. Paj Singh, 52 All. 705, A.I.R. 1930 All. 593 (594). While the prohibitions against attachment found in sec. 60 C. P. Code and the prohibitions against transfer found in sec. 6, T. P. Act, have been both enacted on grounds of public policy, the prohibition against attachment so far as it relates to some of the properties mentioned in sec. 60, C. P. Code (such as tools of artisans, necessary cooking vessels, etc.) is not intended to interfere with the right of the owner to effect private alienation of those properties—Palikandy v. Krishnan Nair, 40 Mad. 302 (307).

41. Property of any kind is transferable :—The general rule is that property of any kind may be transferred as laid down in this section, and the person urging non-transferability must prove the existence of some law or custom which restricts the right of transfer—Mohammad Ali v. Madarisah, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 297, 102 I.C. 626; Hari Kishan v. Ratan Singh, A.I.R. 1934 All. 973, 150 I.C. 562; Bhoopal v. Shiam A.I.R. 1929 All. 781, (1929) A.L.J. 724.

Under this section the owner of property may transfer it unless there is some legal restriction to the contrary—Hari Kishan v. Ratan Singh, supra; Katar Singh v. Bishamber, A.I.R. 1929 All. 578, (1929) A.L.J. 1151. In this last-mentioned case it was held that buildings belonging to a co-sharer could be sold by him in spite of the fact that after partition under sec. 118, U. P. Land Revenue Act, the site on which the buildings stood was assigned to the Kura of another co-sharer who, under the said section was entitled to a reasonable ground rent, but not to the buildings.

When a grant is made to a riya, it is usually made subject to certain conditions of escheat; but once the house has escheated to the landlord, these limitations disappear. The landlord then gets in the house a transferable right which entitles him to transfer the house even after he has lost the ownership of the land—Vidya Sagar v. Bankey Lal, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 209, (1943) O.W.N. 15.

A permanent tenancy created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, to which if created after the passing of that Act its provisions would be applicable, is transferable—Madhumati v. Harendra, 33 I.C. 502 (Cal.).

A non-permanent tenure created after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act and before the Bengal Tenancy came into operation is transferable—Mahanta Bhagaban Das v. Bisweswar, 44 C.L.J. 434, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 220, 100 I.C. 302 (distinguishing 7 C.L.J. 553).

A lease from year to year is transferable under this section unless there is anything to the contrary in the contract of lease—Bandhulal v. Lagin, 36 I.C. 1005 (Cal.).

In the absence of any custom or agreement to the contrary, a tenant who has planted a grove with the permission of the zemindar has the right to transfer the trees of which the grove consists—Lal Baijnath v. Chandrapal, 47 All. 55.

When either immoveable or moveable property is offered as security, the proprietary interest of the surety is not automatically extinguished, but merely a first charge is created on the security which will have to be available in the first instance for the purpose for which it has been offered. Although the depositor cannot defeat that purpose, his power of disposal of his security subject to that charge will subsist, and his interest in the surplus which may remain over is both transferable and attachable. Such an interest does not come within any of the exceptions mentioned in this section—Shanthanand v. Basudevanand, 52 All. 619 (F.B.), 1930 A.L.J. 402, A.I.R. 1930 All. 225 (242), 125 I.C. 477.

A vested life interest under a will in a definite fund or income of property is property within the meaning of this section and is transfer-able—Khemchand v. Hemandas, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 306, 173 I.C. 40. So also a contingent interest—Ma Yait v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1930 P. C. 17, 8 Rang. 8, 57 I.A. 10, 34 C.W.N. 173, 121 I.C. 225,

In equity the benefit of a lien or a charge may be assigned with the debt. A mortgage of a chargee's right would be valid—Mohan Singh v. Sewa Ram, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 209, 75 I.C. 579.

Before any of the clauses (a), (d), (dd), and (f) can apply to a transaction, there must be a transfer of one of the various things mentioned in these clauses—Sarfaraz v. Ahmad, A.I.R. 1944 All. 104, I.L.R. 1944 All. 141.

42. Clause (a) :—"Chance of an heir-apparent":—

In England also, the expectancy of an heir-apparent is not capable of being made the subject of assignment—per Lord Eldon in Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Mer. 667 (671). The law in this respect was laid down by Kay, J. in the following words : "It is indisputable law that no one can have any estate or interest, at law or in equity, contingent or other, in the property of a living person to which he hopes to succeed as heir at law, or next-of-kin of such living person. During the life of such person no one can have more than a spes successionis, an expectation or hope of succeeding to the property."—In re Parsons, 45 Ch. D. 51 (55-56). Such an interest is not assignable at law—In re Madge, (1914) 1 Ch. 115 (C.A.). In equity, however, "future property, possibilities and expectancies are all assignable [Tailby v. Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523 (543)]. But when the assurance is not for value, a Court of Equity will not assist a volunteer"—Law v. Burne, (1903) 1 Ch. 697. The principles of equity on which English Courts grant relief in such cases when the property actually vests cannot be given effect to in the face of express prohibition in cl. (a)—Ramasami v. Ramasami, 30 Mad. 255; Shamsuddin v. Abdul, 8 Bom.-L.R. 781.

There is a general principle of law that only present rights can be dealt with as property and not inchoate future rights such as spes successionis, a right to future rent or a future right to maintenance. Public policy demands that such rights ought to be inalienable. Such rights are also not attachable or saleable under sec. 60 (1), C. P. Code—Zahiruddin v. Chokhey Lal, A.I.R. 1952 All. 662. See in this connection Krishna v. Damodaram, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 351. If in a suit for injunction instituted by a widow against her grandson to restrain the latter from interfering with her share under the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act there is a compromise to the effect that the grandson will be entitled to the disputed share after her death, the gift over being a spes successionis confers no title on the grandson—Rangaswami Naicker v. Chinnammal, 77, Mad. L.W. 9.

The right of a presumptive reversionary heir under the Hindu Law or the bare chance of surviving another and succeeding to his inheritance is no more than a spes successionis (hope of succession) or expectancy. A Hindu reversioner has no right or interest in presenti in the property which the female owner holds for her life. His right becomes concrete only on her demise; until then it is a mere spes successionis—

Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh, 45 Cal. 590 (P.C.). This chance of succession cannot be transferred under clause (a) of this section—Manikram v. Ramalinga, 29 Mad. 120; Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 Mad. 406 (410); Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti, 30 Mad. 201 (202); Ghulam Mahomed v. Tekchand, 2 Lah. 199; Shamsundar v. Achhan Kumar, 21 All. 71 (P.C.) (virtually overruling Brahmadeo v. Harjan, 25 Cal. 778); Har Nath v. Inder Bahadur, 45 All. 179 (183) (P.C.); Annada Mohan v. Gour Mohan, 48 Cal. 536; Nand Kishore v. Kanee Ram, 29 Cal. 355 (358); Anandi Bai v. Rajaram, 22 Bom. 984; Babu v. Ratnoji, 21 Bom. 319; Bai Parvati v. Dayabhai, 44 Bom. 488; Dwarka v. Nasir Ahmad, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 16; Bhagwan v. Mannu, 15 O.C. 122, 13 I.C. 495; Dio Chand v. Imam Din, 41 I.C. 347, 135 P.L.R. 1917; Jagannath v. Dibbo, 31 All. 53; Bahadur Singh v. Mahar Singh, 24 All. 94 (P.C.); Bhagwati v. Jagdam, 6 P.L.J. 604, 2 P.L.T. 471, 62 I.C. 933; Gurbhai v. Lachhman, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 341; Ramasami v. Ramasami, 30 Mad. 255; Ram Bharosey v. Bhagwandin, A.I.R. 1943 O.W.N. 5; Shenbhagavadiammal v. Mupidathi Ammal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 720; Subba Reddi v. Gunturu Govind Reddi, A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 49. Where a Hindu dies leaving behind his widow and a daughter by a pre-deceased wife, and the widow succeeds to the property of her husband taking a widow's interest therein, and subsequently the daughter in consideration of her getting a portion of the property from the widow, her step-mother, executes a deed of relinquishment in respect of the rest the relinquishment being of her reversionary right is invalid and not binding on her—Karusing v. Narasimha A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 121; I.L.R. 1937 Bom. 395. See also Nitayanand Ghorai v. Snehalata Deyee, 65 C.W.N. 1115. So an agreement between only two members of a family either to convey or to relinquish their future reversionary right is unenforceable. Such agreement, when not acted upon when the succession opens on the widow's death, does not estop a party from bringing an action for his share of the property—Joti Lal v. Beni Madho, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 280. A transfer by a Hindu of a reversionary interest is void under this clause, and the same cannot be given effect to by applying sec. 43, after the reversioner becomes full owner upon the death of the widow. The chance of a female succeeding as a reversioner if a partition had taken place according to the provisions of Madras Aliyasanthana Act is merely a spes successionis—Smt. Ratnamala v. State of Mysore, A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 216. See Note 202 under sec. 43.

A reversioner cannot transfer his interest even in moveable property (e.g., promissory notes)—Hargowan v. Baij Nath, 32 All. 88.

However illegal and unenforceable a bare relinquishment or renunciation may be of the chance of an heir-apparent it would be valid if it is based on a settlement of conflicting claims or bona fide disputes between the contracting parties—Shah Nawaz v. Ghulam Murtaza, A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 138 (142). Similarly, a partition is not a transfer; and therefore the daughters who had possession of the property during their mother's lifetime could effect a partition of the property—Pokhar v. Dulari, A.I.R. 1930 All. 687 (691). Where a Hindu died leaving a widow and three daughters, some of whom had sons and the widow claiming absolute title to certain properties entered into an arrangement with her daughters and grandsons for dividing up the properties between them in absolute right, and one of the daughters conveyed one item of property which fell to her share to a predecessor of the defendant, and the plaintiff another daughter, after the death of her other sisters sued to recover this property : Held that the plaintiff who was a party to the arrangement made to divide the property at a time when the rights of the widow and the daughters were in doubt could not repudiate the same and impeach a sale made on the faith of it—Mt. Hardei v. Bhagwan, 24 C.W.N. 105 (P.C.). So also, an acknowledgment by a reversioner of the widow's absolute right in her husband's property under his will does not amount to a transfer of the reversionary right in favour of the widow—Chetty v. Chetty, 31 Mad. 474. A contract between a reversioner and the widow is not binding on the reversioner when the succession opens on the death of the widow—Bahadur v. Mohar Singh, 24 All. 94 (P.C.). An admission by a reversioner for consideration that the disputed properties never formed part of the estate of the person from whom he claims as a reversioner, does not amount to a transfer of reversionary right—Kamaraju v. Kocherlakota, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1943.

Family settlement :—A family settlement deciding in what proportion the contesting parties would inherit when successions open is valid.—Mangal v. Ghasita (infra). Converting an expectancy into certainty and avoiding chance of litigation in future is good consideration for a family arrangement. There may be a valid family settlement even in the absence of an existing family dispute; it need not necessarily be a compromise of doubtful rights.—Pokhar Singh v. Mt. Dulari, A.I.R. 1930 All. 687. See also Mt. Hiran v. Mt. Sohan, 18 C.W.N. 929. In cases of family arrangements the consideration is not the sacrifice of any right but the settlement of a dispute. Equity leans towards the maintenance of family arrangements—Kamal Kumari v. Narendra Nath, 9 C.L.J. 19.

A family arrangement is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title was. It cannot be deemed to be a transfer of property, because by such arrangement no right, either vested or contingent is conveyed by one party to another—Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar, 1 I.A. 157; Sadhu Madho Das v. Pandit Mukand Ram, A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 481. In Baikunth v. Jhulan, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 488 it was however held that where an ekrarnama in the guise of a family arrangement seeks to transfer property likely to come into the hands of the reversioner on the death of the widow still alive, the ekrarnama is hit by sec. 6 (a).

If a dispute regarding joint family property is referred to arbitration and the parties agree that after the death of the widows the property in the possession of the widows will be divided equally among the parties and an award followed by a decree is given accordingly, the agreement is not hit by sec 6 (a)—Bachchu v. Harbans, A.I.R. 1953 All. 213.

A family arrangement in the nature of a partition is not a transfer, even though one of the results of the arrangement is to put one of the parties in the same position as if he had taken a transfer—Chahlu v.

Parmal, 41 All. 611 (616); Raghubir v. Narain, 1930 A.L.J. 1541, A.I.R. 1930 All. 498 (502). If on the death of H and S, two out of the four separated brothers, the surviving brothers agree that one of them, who married the widow of H, will retain the share of H and the other will get the share of S on the death of the widow of S, the arrangement not being a transfer is valid—Chahlu v. Parmal, 41 All. 611 (618). See also Muthuraman v. Ponnuswamy, 29 I.C. 549, 29 M.L.J. 214. Where the next reversioner agreed with another member of the family that during the life time of the widow each party would remain in possession of a moiety and on her death each would share the inheritance equally, and the parties actually divided the properties in their possession in accordance with the agreement, the arrangement was valid as a family arrangement and did not offend against the provisions of cl. (a) of this section—Ram Pratap v. Indrajit, A.I.R. 1950 All. 320. A provision in a family settlement whereby certain Hindu brothers divided the family property belonging to them among themselves and agreed that upon any of them dying without male issue his share would pass to the surviving brothers, was merely an agreement among the expectant heirs to divide a property in a particular way and did not amount to a transfer, and therefore it was not in contravention of the provisions of the Hindu law or of this section—Kanti Chandra v. Ali Nabi, 33 All. 414; Ram Nirajan v. Prayag Singh, 8 Cal. 138; Mangal Singh v. Ghasita, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 485 (487), 116 I.C. 312. A consent by the nearest reversionary heir (a female) to a gift of property made by the widow in possession, the donee undertaking to maintain the reversioner, does not amount to a transfer of spes successionis by the reversioner. The transaction is in the nature of a family arrangement—Annu v. Shripati, 32 Bom. L.R. 705, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 373 (374), 127 I.C. 332. Where a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate entered into a compromise of a claim by a reversioner, and the compromise was in the nature of a family settlement it was held to be binding upon the estate—Mata Prasad v. Nageswar Saha, 52 I.A. 398, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 272. In another case decided by the Privy Council, an appellant entered into and took the benefit of a compromise into which he entered at a time when he had no right of any kind to any share in the property but had the mere expectancy of a reversion: Held that he was precluded from claiming as reversioner subsequently—Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal, 45 I.A. 118, A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 70. Alienations made by a Hindu widow under a transaction which was regarded as a family arrangement was held binding on the reversioner who had attested the deeds by which the alienations had been made and had himself acquired a part of the estate by one of such alienations, all such alienations being regarded as parts of one and the same transaction—Ramgowda Annagowda v. Bahu Saheb, 54 I.A. 396, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 227.

The Patna High Court, however, holds that an agreement (by way of family settlement) entered into between the reversioners during the life time of a widow to the effect that on her death her life-estate should revert to a particular reversioner, is null and void, whether it is treated as a family arrangement or relinquishment. But as in this particular case the agreement was entered into in 1868 before the T. P. Act came into force, it was given effect to—Lalita Prasad v. Sarnam, 14 P.L.T. 27, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 165 (172, 173).

Under the Mahomedan Law also the chance of an heir-apparent is nothing more than an expectancy which is neither transferable nor reasonable—Shamsuddin v. Abdul, 31 Bom. 165 (171); Abdul Hossein v. Golam Hossain, 30 Bom. 304; Hossain Ali v. Narid, 11 All. 456; Muranjani v. Labhai, 24 M.L.J. 258; Rebati Mohun v. Ahmed Khan, 9 C.L.J. 50. Even the relinquishment by an heir-apparent of his right of inheritance is invalid under the Mahomedan Law—Asa Beevi v. Karuppan, 41 Mad. 365 (370); Sumsuddin v. Abdul, 31 Bom. 165 (171); Abdul Gafoor v. Abdul Razack, (1958) 2 Mad. L.J. 492; Valanhiyil v. Engayil, I.L.R. (1964) 1 Ker 335. But in an Allahabad case where there was an arrangement between the husband and wife whereby the wife accepted in lieu of her dower a life estate in a portion of the property of her husband, and the husband accepted a life estate in other portions of his property, and it was further stipulated that on the death of the wife the husband would not succeed to her property but that the estate would devolve on their children, held that this was in the nature of a family settlement and the relinquishment by the husband of his right to succeed as heir to his wife was valid as it did not amount to a transfer—Nasir-ul-Huq v. Faiyazul Rahman, 33 All. 457 (462).

Punjab :—The T. P. Act not being in force in the Punjab, it has been held there that a sale of reversionary right of succession, though at the time of the sale it does not effect a transfer of property, gives rise to a right which the Court will enforce when the inheritance falls into possession—Narayan v. Dharam Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 928, 129 I.C. 29.

43. Transfer of vested interests :—Where the right created is a vested interest or a vested remainder, it is transferable—Lakshman v. Babani, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 244, 34 Bom. L.R. 366, 139 I.C. 642; Shujaal Hasan v. Md. Moiz, 25 A.L.J. 41. Vested remainder in immovable property is present interest in property and can be sold or attached in execution of a decree—Gulamhusein v. Farmahomed, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 185, 48 Bom. L.R. 733. Where by a will a life-estate is given to two persons with a remainder to certain other persons, the interest in the remainder is not a mere chance or possibility but a vested interest. It is not property of the nature described in cl. (a) and so is transferable—Kali Prosad v. Ram Golam, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 163, 167 I.C. 831. Where the donee is not entitled to take possession of a portion of the gifted property until after the death of the donor and his wife, the donee gets a vested interest subject to the life interest of the widow—Lachman v. Baldeo, 21 O.C. 312, 48 I.C. 396 (398). Where there is an agreement between a widow and her adopted son postponing the son's estate during the life time of the widow, the interest in favour of the son is a vested one—Balwant v. Joti Prasad, 40 All. 692 (703), 16 A.L.J. 765, 47 I.C. 599. Where a will gives power to the widow of the testator to adopt and provides that the widow shall administer and enjoy the estate and that during her life time the adopted son will only get an allowance of Rs. 20 per month, the son has a vested interest in the remainder, which he can transfer—Sashi Kanta Acharjee v. Promode Chandra Roy A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 600 (610). If under a settlement any interest created is always ready from its commencement to its end to come into possession the moment the prior estates happen to determine, it is then a vested remainder. The gift is immediate, but the enjoyment must necessarily depend on the determination of the estates of those who have a prior right to the possession. Such an estate is not a mere spes successionis and is transferable—Ma Yait v. Mahomed Ibrahim, 5 Rang. 145, 102 I.C. 690, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 165.

43A. Transfer of contingent interest :—There is nothing in this clause to prohibit the transfer of a contingent interest—Phulwanti v. Janeshar, 46 All. 575 (592), A.I.R. 1924 All. 625, 83 I.C. 782; Commissioner of Wealth-tax, Gujrat v. Sri Ashok Kumar Ramanlal A.I.R. 1967 Guj 161. By a settlement the settlor directed the trustees to hold the properties specified in the first three schedules during the life of the widow and till attainment by the youngest child of the age of 20, distributing the income between the widow and the children in certain proportions, to sell the properties after the youngest child reaching 20 and distribute the proceeds equally between them. The trustees, further, were to have charge of the properties mentioned in the fourth schedule to be held up to the death of the youngest child and then to be divided among the children then living. One of the sons of the settlor transferred his interest under the settlement while the properties were in the hands of the trustees and the transfer was held to be valid—Ma Yait v. Official Assignee, 8 Rang. 8 (P.C.), 34 C.W.N. 173 (176), 32 Bom. L.R. 125, 1930 A.L.J. 119, 58 M.L.J. 83, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 17, 121 I.C. 225, on appeal from Ma Yait v. Md. Ibrahim, 5 Rang. 145, 102 I.C. 690, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 165.

44. Contract to transfer right of expectancy :—Even a contract to transfer a right of expectancy is invalid. Thus, a contract by a Hindu to sell immoveable property to which he is the then nearest reversionary heir, expectant upon the death of a widow in possession, and to transfer it upon possession accruing to him, is void. Section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, which forbids the transfer of a right of expectancy, would be futile if a contract of the above character were enforceable—Annada Mohan v. Gour Mohan, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 189; Sri Jagannadha v. Sri Rajah Prasada, 39 Mad. 554 (558, 559); Sumsuddin v. Abdul, 31 Bom. 165 (174); Basanta Kumar v. Lala Ram Sankar, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 600 (611); Mahadeo v. Mathura, A.I.R. 1931 All 589; Harnath v. Indar, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 403; Kamaraju v. Venkatalakshmi pati, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1043, 49 M.L.J. 296, 88 I.C. 982; Prem Sukh v. Habib Ullah, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 355, 49 C.W.N. 379. But transfers of non-existent or after acquired property, provided that they are not of the nature mentioned in cl. (a) of this section, are perfectly valid. The transfer would be regarded as a contract to transfer after the vendor had acquired title and would fasten upon the property as soon as the vendor acquires it, Ibid. Where a person expected that certain karnam lands would be enfranchised in his name, and he agreed to transfer his interest in the property when that event would take place, held that this was no more than a transfer of an expectancy and as such offended against clause (a) of this section. The agreement was void—Auryaprabhakara v. Gum-mudu, 48 M.L.J. 598, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 385, 88 I.C. 557; and the fact that the vendor was in physical possession of the property and was merely subject to the disability to alienate, did not make any difference—Ibid. In this respect the Indian law differs from the law in England. Under the English law, a man can contract to assign property which is to come into existence in future, and when it has come into existence, equity, treating as done that which ought to be done fastens upon that property, and the contract to assign becomes a complete assignment—Collyer v. Isaacs, 19 Ch. D. 342; Lyde v. Mynn, 1 My. & K. 683; Holroyd v. Marshall, 36 L.J. Ch. 193, 10 H.L.C. 191; Clements v. Mathews, 11 Q.B.D. 808 (818); Withered v. Withered, (1928) 2 Sim. 183. "It has long been settled", observed Lord Macnaughten in Tailby v. Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523 (543), "that future property, possibilities and expectancies are assignable in equity for value". The principle of these decisions was followed in certain earlier cases—Rajah Sahib Perhlad v. Doorga, 12 M.I.A. 286; Bhabo Soondree v. Issur Chunder, 11 B.L.R. 36; Mohendra v. Kali, 30 Cal. 265 (275). The last of these cases was decided without reference to the Transfer of Property Act, and the other two decisions were given before this statute was enacted. The tendency of modern decisions, however, is not to follow the principle of the English cases cited above. Before the Transfer of Property Act was extended to the Bombay Presidency, the Bombay High Court held that a contract to sell a reversionary interest was enforceable—Gitabai v. Balaji, 17 Bom. 232 (234). This ruling is no longer authoritative.

Under the Indian law, what in English law would be called a transfer of possibility or expectancy is expressly prohibited by cl. (a). Thus the mortgage of a future income to be derived from the work of scavengering where the house-owners were not bound to employ the scavenger for any particular period, is an expectancy or possibility within this clause, and the hypothecation of this income is therefore invalid—Palapatti v. Nallagadda, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 881, 48 M.L.J. 258.

45. Transfer of expectancy by consent decree or compromise :—

The Court does not allow the transfer of a mere right to succession to be effected even by means of a consent decree—Ramasami v. Ramasami, 30 Mad. 255 (263). A compromise of a suit, according to the terms of which the mortgagee (to whom the Hindu widow had mortgaged her property) and the reversioner agreed to divide the property in equal shares after the widow's death amounts to a transfer of an expectancy by the reversioner and is therefore invalid under the provisions of this clause—Bhagwan v. Munnu, 15 O.C. 112, 13 I.C. 495. The relinquishment of a reversionary right cannot be the consideration for compromise. But a man can, for good consideration, admit that the property in dispute did not form part of the estate to which he was a reversioner—Kamaraju v. Venkatalakshmi, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1043 (1044), 49 M.L.J. 296, 88 I.C. 982. If the substance of the transaction is found to be a bona fide settlement between the parties, then, in spite of the fact that the same transaction might be represented in one of its aspects as a dealing with a spes successionis, it is none the less a real compromise of disputed rights—per Srinivasa Iyengar, J., ibid at p. 1045.

When an agreement decides an antecedent title to the estate in the hands of the widow, the compromise is valid even though indirectly it affects the rights of a reversioner—Chanderjit v. Debi Das, A.I.R. 1952 All. 522. Where the sons and grandsons of T undertook to maintain T on T's giving up his rights in the family property and T instituted a suit claiming a liquidated sum on account of past and future maintenance, the assignment of the claim before the decree was held to be void being assignment of a mere possibility and the assignee was not allowed to execute the decree passed on compromise—Abdul Kadir v. Taraganar, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 681. It was agreed in a suit for partition that they would not claim any share which would otherwise have accrued to them on the death of either of the parties; Held that the compromise was not hit by any rule of Hindu law or by the provisions of cl. (a) of this section—Rai Kumar v. Abani Kumar, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 362. If two co-widows having the right of survivorship in the properties inherited by them from their husband enter into a partition arrangement excluding the right of survivorship the arrangement is not hit by sec. 6 (a)—Karpagathachi v. Nagarathinathachi, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1752.

Estoppel:—But although a transfer of an expectancy (in the shape of a compromise) by a reversioner is void, he may, by becoming a party to the compromise and by taking the benefit of the compromise, be estopped from subsequently claiming as a reversioner—Annada Mohan v. Gour Mohan, 48 Cal. 536 (542); See also Bhana v. Guman, 40 All. 384 (386); Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal, 40 All. 487 (496) (P.C.); Bahadur v. Ram Bahadur, 45 All. 277 (281); Raghubir v. Narain, 1930 A.L.J. 1541, A.I.R. 1930 All. 498 (500), 126 I.C. 24; Ramgowda v. Bhausahab, 52 Bom. 1 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 227. Therefore, where a reversioner enters into a compromise of a doubtful claim to the property to which he has a chance of succession, the compromise is binding on him, and when the succession opens he cannot claim the property in contravention of the compromise—Moti Shah v. Ghandarp, 48 All. 637, A.I.R. 1926 All. 715, 96 I.C. 595. A sale by the reversioners of their right of succession during the lifetime of the widow is void. But if after the death of the widow, when their reversionary rights have become rights of ownership, they enter into a compromise with the purchasers by virtue of which the latter enter into possession of the property, and a decree is passed in terms of the compromise, the vendors cannot afterwards claim the property in contravention of the compromise—Durga Prasad v. Narain, 4 Luck. 181, 5 O.W.N. 1081, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 63, 115 I.C. 294.

A reversioner who has expressly assented to an alienation made by the widow in possession cannot, on succeeding to the estate after the widow's death, repudiate his action and sue for possession of the property alienated by the widow—Fateh Singh v. Rukmini, 45 All. 339 (F.B.). Rangaswami Gounden v. Nachrappa Gounden, A.I.R. 1918, P.C. 196, 202; Sahu Madhudas v. Mukand Ram, A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 481. A gift made by a Hindu widow of her husband's property in favour of a person with the consent of the next reversioner is valid on the principle of estoppel as against the particular reversioner who consented to it—Basappa v. Fakirappa, 46 Bom. 292.

46. Chance of Legacy:—Although contracts to make testamentary dispositions are valid, the person in whose favour such a contract exists cannot transfer his supposed right under the contract to a third person, and the latter cannot, on the strength of such a transfer, sue for a declaration of those rights—Prag Dat v. Chote Singh, 9 O.C. 55.

47. “Any other mere possibility of a like nature” :—The words “of a like nature” indicate that the possibility referred to herein must belong to the same category as the chance of an heir-apparent or the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy—Pashupati Venkatapathi v. Venkata Subhadrayamma, 47 I.C. 563 (Mad.). See also Solomon v. Official Assignee, infra.

Transfer of the chance of receiving a gratuitous payment at the discretion of an employer for services being or about to be rendered consists of a possibility which is purely a fortuitous possibility. Solomon v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 8, 1938 R.L.R. 542, 180 I.C. 399 (per Robert, C.J., and Spargo, J.).

The right to receive the offerings made at a temple cannot be transferred, because the chance that future worshippers will give offerings to a temple is a mere ‘possibility’—Puncha Thakur v. Bindeshri, 43 Cal. 28, 19 C.W.N. 580, 28 I.C. 675; Kaniram Ramchandra v. Hazari Dharam Singh, 1930 Nag. L.J. (Notes) 96. But according to the Allahabad High Court the right to receive the offerings is not so uncertain, variable and limited as to pass out of the conception of law—Balmukund v. Tula Ram, 50 All. 394, 26 A.L.J. 185, A.I.R. 1928 All. 721, 113 I.C. 242. This has been followed in Oudh in Ganpat v. Kashmiri Bank, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 444, 120 I.C. 822 and Bhagwan v. Billeshar, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 15, 12 Luck. 358, 164 I.C. 1111.

Where persons sharing the income of a fair held in connection with a mandir do not perform any or other sacerdotal functions at the shrine, the right to receive shares of such income is property and is alienable—Zaharia v. Parameshri, A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 284, 44 P.L.R. 403.

There is no such thing as a right to scavenge. A mortgage or sale of such a right is not enforceable by a court—Radhya v. Kamraya, A.I.R. 1951 M.B. 120. Nor can a custom to claim a right to scavenge and to mortgage or sell such a right be recognized by a Court of law as such a custom is prima facie unreasonable, ibid.

A vendor’s right to receive the purchase-money, before the sale is completed, is merely a possible right or interest, which cannot be attached or sold—Ahmaduddin v. Majlis, 3 All. 12 (14). The future wages or salary of a servant before it is earned is a mere expectancy and not property so as to be capable of being attached or assigned—Debi Prasad v. Lewis, 6 A.L.J. 227. As to the attachment of the salary of public officers, see Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 60 (1) (i).

Where A by a deed of annuity agrees to pay during his life time a certain sum every month to the son of his step-mother after her death if he becomes the mutwali of a certain wakf estate and receives the income of the wakf, A’s obligation is not hit by sec. 6 (a)—Sarfarez Ali v. Ahmad Kamil, A.I.R. 1944 All. 104, I.L.R. 1944 All. 141.

The right of a Mahabrahman to officiate as priest in funeral ceremonies of Hindus is not a 'mere possibility' and is capable of transfer—Sukh Lal v. Bishambar, 39 All. 196, 37 I.C. 661. See also Raghoo v. Kassey, 10 Cal. 73. An agreement by quasi-permanent allottee to sell the land when permanent certificate is received under the Displaced persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1944 is not hit by sec. 6 (a)—Sevaji v. Sardarni Gurdial Kaur, I.L.R. (1967) Punj. 627.

48. Clause (b)—Right of re-entry :—A right of re-entry always presupposes an estate in the person asserting that right. Therefore, a lessor reserving a right of re-entry on breach of a covenant by his lessee cannot transfer that right by itself—Smith v. Pankhurst, 3 Atk. 139. But where the subject matter of the transfer was not the right of re-entry by itself but also the reversion as based on a clause of forfeiture in the lease for non-payment of rent, such transfer was held not to be invalid by reason of this clause—Vaguran v. Rangayyengar, 15 Mad. 125. What this clause prohibits is a transfer of a right of re-entry on a breach of a condition subsequent. Such a right of re-entry is different from a right of re-entry on the expiry of the term of the lease. If, however, the lessor transfers not merely a right of re-entry on breach of a condition, but the whole of his interest in the land, the transfer is perfectly valid.—Vishveshwar v. Mahabaleshwar, 43 Bom. 28 (33, 35,) 20 Bom. L.R. 767, 47 I.C. 330. The license to enter and take possession of goods the property in which has not passed to the assignee is not capable of being assigned—In re Davis & Co., 22 Q.B.D. 193.

49. Clause (c)—Easement :—In section 4 of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882), 'easement' has been defined as "a right which the owner or occupier of a certain land possesses as such for the beneficial enjoyment of that land, to do and continue to do something, or to prevent and continue to prevent something being done, in, or upon or in respect of, certain other land, not his own".

In the Limitation Act (sec. 26), the definition is much more comprehensive and includes what in English law is called a profit a prendre, i.e., a right to enjoy a profit out of the land of another.

An easement cannot be transferred apart from the dominant heritage. It is a right ancillary to the enjoyment of the land and cannot be disannexed from it—Hill v. Tupper, 32 L.J. Exch. 217. "There can be no easement properly so called, unless there be both a servient and a dominant tenement. An easement must be connected with a dominant tenement"—Per Lord Cairns, L.J., in Rangelay v. Midland Railway Co., I.L.R. 3 Ch. 310.

This clause lays down that there cannot be an easement in gross—Sital Chandra v. Delanney, 20 C.W.N. 1158 (1163); Municipal Board v. Ladlu, 20 All. 200. The right of certain villagers to hold village fairs in another's land is not alienable—Ashraff v. Jagannath, 6 All. 497; so also, a right to hold markets or horse-races in another's land—Mounsey v. Ismay, 34 L.J. Exch. 52; similarly, a right to bathe in another's tank (Channanam v. Manu, 1 M.L.J. 47) or to place taziah in another's land during the celebration of the Moharam festival (Mamman v. Kaur Sen, 16 All. 178) cannot be transferred.

But an easement can be released by the dominant owner in favour of the owner of the servient tenement. In such a case the easement is not transferred but extinguished—Kristodhone v. Nandarani, 35 Cal. 889, 12 C.W.N. 969.

50. Clause (d)—Interest in property restricted to personal enjoyment :—The prohibitions contained in cls. (d) and (dd) of this section relate to transfers inter vivos by act of parties. The prohibition contained therein cannot therefore apply to transfer by operation of law, i.e., by sale in execution of a decree—Zahiruddin v. Chokkey Lal, A.I.R. 1952 All. 662.

This clause contemplates cases like service-tenures or the office of an archaka in a temple, which is restricted in its enjoyment and cannot be transferred by the office-holder—Seshappa v. Chandayya, 37 M.L.J. 402, 53 I.C. 665 (667). An interest restricted to personal enjoyment cannot be transferred, because if its transfer were allowed, it might defeat the object underlying the restriction, and it would be manifestly inconsistent with the presumed intention of its founder—Juggurnath v. Kishen, 7 W.R. 266; Kalicharan v. Mohan, 6 B.L.R. 727; Rajah Varma v. Ravi Varma, 1 Mad. 235 (P.C.). Thus, a grant for the grantee's parwarish for life-time is a grant of an interest restricted in its enjoyment to the grantee personally and is not a creation of a life-estate; the transfer of such a grant is invalid under clause (d) of this section—Mad. Shahbar v. Har-nath, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 436. So also, religious offices, rights of maintenance, service-tenures, etc., cannot be transferred. See below.

The right of enjoyment of a grove is not "restricted in its enjoyment to the owner (original grove-holder) personally". Therefore, a successor of the original grove-holder can transfer the grove, unless there is a local custom or a condition to the contrary—Sheo Mangal v. Jagan, 123 I.C. 767, A.I.R. 1930 All. 377 (378).

Where the contract is based on personal considerations, e.g., manufacture of salt by the person with whom the contract is made, the interest in the contract cannot be assigned—Namasivaya v. Kadir, 17 Mad. 168, Toomey v. Rama, 17 Cal. 115 (122).

Where a sale-deed and an agreement to reconvey are not between the same parties and are independent transactions, the right conferred by the agreement to reconvey being personal is not transferable—Uthandi v. Raghavachari, 29 Mad. 307. In a contract of sale of property containing an option to repurchase reserved to the vendor the option is assignable in the absence of a contract to the contrary—Sinnakaruppa Gorender v. Aruppuswami Gorender, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 506.

Where munafi rights were not given to a person personally, but were given to him and his descendants in perpetuity, cl. (d) did not apply—Hari Kishan v. Ratan Singh, A.I.R. 1934 All. 973, 151 I.C. 562.

Where a settlor creates trust of his property, but reserves some interest as allowance to himself, it is an interest to which cl. (d) does not apply—Rajamier v. Subramaniam, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1201. See Shammuga v. Chidambaram, A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 123, 42 C.W.N. 565, 173 I.C.

772, wherein the Privy Council expressed the same view. Clause (dd) was not applicable in either of the two cases.

Where a property has been given to a Hindu widow in lieu of her maintenance the transfer of such property during her life is valid and is not affected by clauses (d) and (dd).—Kamal Chunder v. Sushilabala, 42 C.W.N. 1258, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 405.

A deed of partition between the father, his wife and three sons of a Mitakshara family provided that after the father's death his four-anna share should remain in possession and occupation of his wife up to her life time with life interest and that she would have a right to appropriate the profits therefrom without a power of making a mortgage or other transfers : held that her interest under the deed was an interest in the property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally within clause (d) of this section and was therefore not transferable—Luchmeshwar v. Mt. Moti Rani, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 157.

51. Religious office :—A priestly office with emoluments attached to it is inalienable.—Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 Cal. 455. Any such alienation is void and may be declared void even at the instance of the alienor—Nagendra v. Rabindra, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 490. Such an assignment being for the pecuniary advantage of the trustee cannot be validated by any proof of custom—Raja Verma v. Ravi Verma, 4 I.A. 76. A Mchunt of a mutt cannot transfer the right of management vested in him, though coupled with the obligation to manage in conformity with the trust annexed—Prayad Das v. Kriparam, 8 C.L.J. 499. It would be contrary to public policy to allow priestly offices to be transferred either by private sale or by sale in execution of a decree—Mallika v. Ratanmani, 1 C.W.N. 493. Thus, the right of a shebait of a Hindu idol to perform the services and receive the customary remuneration is not transferable—Juggurnath v. Kishen, 7 W.R. 266; Drobo v. Srineebash, 14 W.R. 409. The office of a Mutwalli or Sajjadanashin, is a personal trust, and the office may not be transferred nor the endowed property conveyed to any person whom the acting mutwalli may select—Wahid Ali v. Ashroff, 8 Cal. 732; Sarkum v. Rahaman, 24 Cal. 83; Haji Ali Mahomed v. Anjuman-Islamia, 12 Lah. 590, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 379 (382); Sahed v. Golam, 20 C.W.N. 996. The right of a purohit to perform religious ceremonies at a partiucular place or temple cannot be the subject of transfer—Rajaram v. Ganseh, 23 Bom. 131; Raja Varma v. Ravi Varma, 1 Mad. 235; Ganasambandha v. Velu, 23 Mad. 271, 27 I.A. 69. The hereditary right of a village joshi to perform religious ceremonies at his jajman's house is not transferable—Waman v. Balaji, 14 Bom. 167. A right to receive voluntary offerings made at the worship by votaries resorting to a temple or shrine is not transferable—Dinonath v. Pratap, 27 Cal. 30; Rameshuvar v. Ishan, 10 W.R. 457; Shailaja v. Peary, 29 Cal. 470; Puncha Thakur v. Bindeswari, 43 Cal. 28, 19 C.W.N. 580; Nityagopal v. Provasch, 47 Cal. 990, 31 C.L.J. 37; Paragi v. Guori, 6 O.L.J. 157, 51 I.C. 86; Kashi v. Kailash, 26 Cal. 356. But a sale of the Jajmani bahis (i.e., books in which lists are kept of pilgrims who visited the place in past years) is not forbidden by this clause because the sale is only a sale of the books as such and does not confer on the purchaser the right to act as the hereditary guide of the pilgrims—Gopi Nath v. Jhandu, 4 A.L.J. 712.

A shebaitship cannot be transferred unless the transaction amounts to a renunciation by the shebait of his entire rights resulting in the acceleration of the interests of persons next in the line of succession—Bameshwar v. Anath Nath, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 490, 84 C.L.J. 237. Whether a pala is a property or not, it is not alienable except by custom. If the pala represents shebaiti right, then palas cannot be transferred except when such transfer amounts to renunciation, ibid.

As a general rule, vrittis are inalienable. They may be alienated in special cases and under special conditions, provided that such alienation can be supported by local usage or custom—Manjunath v. Shankar, 39 Bom. 26. Utpat vritti shares having been frequently transferred among the utpats themselves, they are saleable—Digamber v. Hari, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 43, 29 Bom. L.R. 102, 100 I.C. 1008.

The holding of birat jajmani is not per se the holding of a religious office, for apart from the occasion when necessity arises to officiate as a priest, the Purohit does not hold any office—Chandī v. Rampratap, A.I.R. 1953 Raj. 144. In Sarda Kumwar v. Gajanand, A.I.R. 1942 All. 320, it has been held that the right of a birat jajmani is a right in property and that is heritable and in some cases transferable.

Emoluments attached to a priestly office, being inseparably connected with the office are not ordinarily transferable, but the offerings to a diety are alienable if the persons receiving them are not required to render services of a personal nature—Balmukund v. Tula Ram, 50 All. 394, A.I.R. 1928 All. 721, 113 I.C. 242; Subh Ram v. Ram Kishan, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 265. See also Ahmad v. Ilahi, 34 All. 465.

In the absence of any custom to the contrary or connection between the shares of the offerings of a temple and the right to officiate as a priest thereof, the shares cannot be said to be emoluments attached to the office and are therefore transferable—Nand v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1936 All. 131.

Although ordinarily religious offices cannot be the subject of sale, by the custom of a small particular institution such alienation might be valid—Rangasami v. Ranga, 16 Mad. 146. Thus, where it is found that mirasi offices in a temple had been the subject of frequent alienations and the temple authorities recognised their validity, the alienation of such offices can be upheld—Ibid. To hold the poles of the god's seat when taken in procession is a religious office alienable by custom of the institution—Ibid. The alienation of the priestly office to a person belonging to the founder's family and standing in the line of succession to him is sometimes allowed—Sitarambhat v. Sitaram, 6 B.H.C.R. 250; Mancharam v. Pransankar, 6 Bom. 298. The Madras High Court has held that a sale of a religious office to a person not in the line of heirs of the founder is illegal—Kuppa v. Dorasami, 6 Mad. 76. In a later case the Bombay High Court has considered all the rulings and come to the conclusion that where the members of a family are entitled to religious office (right to perform worship in a temple), one member of the family can transfer or surrender his share of the office and emoluments only in favour of the remaining members of the family, but not in favour of an outsider or even in favour of the original grantor or his heirs—Raghnath v. Purnanand, 47 Bom. 529 (533), A.I.R. 1923 Bom 358.

A pala or turn of worship is not transferable except by custom—Mohamaya v. Haridas, 42 Cal. 455. Where by custom a right to perform puja by turns is conferred on Brahmins only, the transfer of such a right to a non-Brahmin is not valid—Jagdeo v. Ram Saran, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 7. In a subsequent case where there was an alienation of a pala or turn of worships only, apart from the debutter land, and evidence was adduced of instances of alienation along with the debutter land, the Calcutta High Court held that no custom of alienating the pala apart from the debutter land was established—Nitya Gopal v. Nani Lal, 47 Cal. 990.

The office of a maha brahman who officiates at the funerals of Hindus, or of a brit acharje, is a right to perform personal service and as such is inalienable—Durga v. Shambhu, 41 All. 656. But a Maha Brahman is entitled to mortgage his right to offerings receivable by him in his professional capacity—Sukh Lal v. Bishambhar, 39 All. 196.

52. Right of pre-emption :—The Mahomedan law of pre-emption has long been judicially recognized as existing among Hindus in Bihar—Jadu v. Janki, 39 Cal. 915 (P.C.). The right of pre-emption is a purely personal right which cannot be transferred to any one except the owner of the property affected thereby—Jasudin v. Sakharam, 36 Bom. 139; Rajjo v. Lalman, 5 All. 180 (183). The pre-emptional property, and not the decree can be transferred—Ram Sahai v. Gaya, 7 All. 107 (111). But where a person has obtained a conditional decree for pre-emption, he can mortgage his rights under the decree to a stranger to raise funds to pay the purchase money—Bela Bibi v. Akbar Ali, 24 All. 119.

A right of pre-emption does not exist independently of its exercise so as to invalidate transactions which take place in defiance of it—Madho Singh v. Skinner, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 433 (F.B.) at p. 436, 43 P.L.R. 581. Under Or. 20, r. 14, C. P. Code a claim to pre-emption, if decreed, becomes effective only when the money is paid into Court and the vendee is entitled to the rents and profits so long as the purchase money is not paid—ibid; see also Deonandan v. Ramdhari, 44 Cal. 675 P.C., 44 I.A. 80; Md. Akram v. Md. Azim, 4 Lah. 137, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 451, 73 I.C. 318 and Nadir Ali v. Wali Amir, 5 Lah. 486, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 202, 85 I.C. 182.

A resale by the vendee in favour of a person possessing equal rights with the pre-emptor, thus leading to a dismissal of the pre-emptor's suit, is valid—Madho Singh v. Skinner, supra; see also Moolchand v. Ganga Jal, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 356. But where a vendee having an equal right of pre-emption associates with himself in a joint purchase a stranger, he loses his right of pre-emption and cannot be allowed to retain even his own share of the purchase; but if the vendee during the pendency of the suit removes the defect by purchasing the stranger's share, the pre-emptor cannot succeed irrespective of the fact that the subsequent acquisition has taken place after the period of limitation—Ali Mohammad

v. Mohammad Din, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 444 (F.B.) at pp. 446, 447, 43 P.L.R. 566.

53. Clause (dd)—Right to receive maintenance :—A right to receive maintenance, which originally fell under clause (d) of this section (interest in property restricted to personal enjoyment) has now been specially provided for by the new clause (dd), and has been declared to be inalienable.

In some circumstances an allowance may be paid in lieu of maintenance and in others the person entitled to maintenance gives up that right in consideration of a promise to pay an allowance. This distinction should always be borne in mind—Mahbub Ali v. Mahammad, A.I.R. 1944 All. 212, I.L.R. 1944 All. 299. See also Nageshwar v. Chhotey Lal, A.I.R. 1944 All. 91, I.L.R. 1944 All. 216. Where the trustees under a will were not under any obligation to maintain R, no question of a right to future maintenance arose. The allowance was an annuity like any other and was transferable, ibid.

Since under cl. (dd) a right to future maintenance in whatsoever manner arising, secured or determined, cannot be transferred, it is immaterial whether the right was acquired under a deed for the first time or not—Ashfaq Md. v. Nazir Banu, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 410. A right to future maintenance, in order to be non-attachable under sec. 60 (1) (n), C. P. Code and non-transferable under the present clause should be personal as distinguished from heritable, ibid. A heritable khorphosh grant to appropriate the income of certain villages by way of maintenance was given by a proprietor of an impartible raj to the ancestor of the judgment-debtor : held that in the absence of proof of any special custom in the family, it was a case of an assignment of property in lieu of maintenance, and therefore cl. (dd) did not apply—Ram Prasad v. Motiram, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 404, 25 Pat. 705.

A right to future maintenance cannot be transferred—Bala Prasad v. Ajodhya Prasad, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 78. The right of maintenance which a Hindu widow has out of lands which belonged to her husband and has devolved on her son, is a purely personal right and cannot be transferred—Bhyrub v. Nabo Chunder, 5 W.R. 111. The husband's duty of maintaining his wife is one which he cannot owe to another. Her right as against him is one that she cannot transfer to another—Narbadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 Bom. 99. A right to receive future maintenance can neither be attached in execution of a decree nor transferred under clause (d) or (h)—Palikandy v. Krishnan Nair, 40 Mad. 302 (307). Where a widow who had succeeded as heir to the property of her husband by a registered deed surrendered her life-interest in the property to the nearest reversioner, who in return agreed to maintain her, held that the right to maintenance thus conferred on the widow was purely 'personal' to her within clause (d) and was not transferable—Subraya v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 22. Similarly where a Mahomedan transferred the whole of his property to his daughter for a certain sum, the daughter entering into an agreement undertaking to pay a certain sum annually to the father, as long as he lived, it was held that the right to receive it was not assignable—Bibi Haliman v. Bibi Umadatunnissa,

A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 506 (509), 181 I.C. 37. The right given under a deed of wakf to a beneficiary to receive a certain amount periodically during his life time for maintenance is covered by sec. 6 (dd) and sec. 60 (1) (n) C.P.C.—Zahiruddin v. Chokkey Lal, A.I.R. 1952 All. 662. In England also it has been held that alimony granted to a separated wife is not alienable by her—Watkins v. Watkins, [1896] Prob. 222. But where in discharge of the obligation a maintenance-grant is made to the widow, there can be no prohibition against the transfer of the grant; and if in the grant there is any stipulation restraining alienation, such stipulation is void under sec. 10—Singai v. Baji Rao, 14 C.P.L.R. 114. Ram Chandra v. Gopianth, 29 I.C. 251 (Cal.). Property granted in lieu of a right to maintenance may be transferred, for the period of the limited interest, in the absence of any restriction of alienation in the deed of grant—Balkrishna v. Paj Singh, A.I.R. 1930 All. 593 (594); Dhup Nath v. Ram Charitra, A.I.R. 1932 All. Kamal Chunder v. Shushilabala, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 405.

It was held prior to the insertion of this clause, that an annuity by way of maintenance charged upon the estate was alienable whether by voluntary or involuntary transfer—Murlidhar v. Mulchand, 52 I.C. 953 (Nag.); Rajat Kamini v. Satyanirajan, 23 C.W.N. 824. So also, where the claim of maintenance based on an agreement merged in a decree, the right under the decree was held to be assignable—Asad Ali v. Haider Ali, 38 Cal. 13; Raja of Kalahasti v. Venkatappa, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 713; Seshappa v. Chandayya, 37 M.L.J. 402; Annapurni v. Swaminatha, 34 Mad. 7 (9), 6 I.C. 439. But these cases are no longer good law in view of clause (dd) which expressly prohibits the alienation of a right to maintenance, in whatsoever manner arising, secured or determined.

There is however a distinction between a maintenance allowance and an annuity. Whether an allowance is the one or the other depends upon the facts of each case—Aniruddh v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 241, 74 C.L.J. 528; see also Subraya v. Krishna, 46 Mad. 659 (F.B.), 46 M.L.J. 533, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 22; Altap Begam v. Brij Narain, A.I.R. 1929 All. 281, 1929 A.L.J. 367, 51 All. 612. Where the testator had vast properties and he practically disinherited his son giving him only so much as was necessary for his maintenance, held, that it was a maintenance grant and the moneys not accrued due could not be transferred—Aniruddh v. Official Receiver, supra at p. 243.

A right to future maintenance as contemplated by the Legislature in cl. (dd) means a personal right for maintenance or personal enjoyment of the grantee, and does not include a heritable interest in land—Sharif v. Hunter, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 420 (421-22), 167 I.C. 52. The right of a Hindu widow to claim maintenance out of her husband's estate when it has not crystallized into a definite sum, is an inchoate right which cannot be transferred. The claim is personal and consequently if she dies pending her suit for maintenance against the estate of her husband in the hands of a coparcener, the claim does not survive to her legal personal representative—Muthalammal v. Veeraraghavalu, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 202, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 344. But whereby a preliminary decree in a suit for partition provision is made for the maintenance of three defendants, one of whom is the mother of the other two, maintenance arrears due to the mother can be claimed by the two sons after the death of the mother because they are claiming not any future right to maintenance but arrears of maintenance that had already accrued due—Dhan Pala v. Krishna Chettiar, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 165.

Where a settlor creates a trust of his property, but reserves some interest in the property as allowance to himself, such allowance does not fall under clause (d) or (dd) and is alienable—Rajamier v. Subramanian, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1201.

Babuana land or property granted by the Maharaja of Durbhanga to junior members of the Raj family to be enjoyed by them in lieu of money maintenance is alienable by custom, subject to the proprietary right of the grantor and to his ultimate claim as reversioner, on extinction of the grantee's descendants in the male line—Rameshwar v. Jibendar, 32 Cal. 683; Ramachandra v. Mudeshwar, 33 Cal. 1158 (1161); Durgadut v. Rameshwar, 36 Cal. 943 (P.C.).

Arrears of maintenance :—Arrears of maintenance which have accrued due can be assigned—Seshappa v. Chandayya, 37 M.L.J. 402; Asad Ali v. Haidar Ali, 38 Cal. 13; Bibi Haliman v. Bibi Umadatunnissa, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 506 (508); Province of Orissa v. Venkata Rangamma, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 220.

Right of residence :—The right of residence is intimately connected with the right of maintenance and follows the same rule. It is neither capable of voluntary transfer, nor can it be attached and sold in execution of a money decree—Nanak Chand v. Kishen Chand, 1 P.L.R. 209.

Creditor's right to have a receiver appointed :—In Lal Rajindra v. Sundar Bibi, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 176, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee has held that the right of maintenance granted by one brother to another by a compromise decree is not saleable in execution of a decree obtained by a creditor, who can, however, apply for the appointment of a receiver with authority to realise the rents and profits and pay out a sufficient sum out of the same for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and apply the balance, if any, to the liquidation of the decretal dues.

Where a plaintiff suing as a pauper obtains a charge decree for maintenance, a receiver may be appointed at the instance of the Government to recover the court-fee leaving adequate provision for the plaintiff—Province of Orissa v. Venkata Rangamma, supra.

54. Service tenures :—A ghatwali tenure is inalienable because its income must remain unimpaired to enable each succeeding ghatwal to discharge efficiently his duty of guarding the land against the invasion of hillmen and others—Narain v. Badi Roy, 29 Cal. 227 (229). A ghatwali tenure is inalienable in the absence of proof of local custom—Narayan v. Satya Niranjan, 51 I.A. 37, A.I.R. (1924) P.C. 183; Purna v. Soudamini, 28 C.L.J. 283; Nilmoni v. Bakranath, 9 Cal. 187 (P.C.). On this principle, the attachment of the future rents and profits that may become due to a ghatwal, in execution of a decree against him, is prohibited—Udoy Kumari v. Hari Ram, 28 Cal. 483 (485). A ghatwali tenure, however, loses its character of inalienability when the services have been commuted by money payment, or the tenure on military service has been abolished—Bansidhar Sharaff v. Thakur Asutosh Deo, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 346 (services commuted by money payment); Appayasami Naicker v. Midnapore Zamindari Co., 48 I.A. 100, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 154 (Military service abolished).

Inam lands granted to a person on condition that he will perform swastivachakam service in a temple and that he and his family should enjoy the inam so long as they perform the service are not transferable, because if the inamdar is allowed to transfer the inam he would be without any means to support himself and to perform the services of the temple—Anjaneyulu v. Sri Venugopala, 45 Mad. 620, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 197, 70 I.C. 466, 42 M.L.J. 477. A chowkidar in Bengal holding chakran lands can induct a tenant who may acquire a right of occupancy in the lands, which will not be affected even if the lands are resumed by the Government—Ram Kumar v. Ram Nawaj 31 Cal. 1021, 8 C.W.N. 860.

56. Clause (e)—Mere right to sue :—Cf. clause (e) of section 60 (1), C. P. Code, under which a mere right to sue for damages is not attachable.

A right to sue is not transferable. Consequently, the sale of a right to sue for immoveable property does not confer on the vendee any title to immoveable property, and the vendee cannot sue for possession—Nazir Hassan v. Mutinuzzaman, 11 O.L.J. 672, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 299 (300). "How can there be", as observed by the Privy Council, "any such transfer, actual or constructive, upon a contract under which the vendor sells that of which he has not possession and to which he may never establish a title"—Perhlad Sein v. Rajendra, 12 M.I.A. 292 (307). But the transfer of a property which is the subject-matter of a litigation is not a transfer of a mere right to sue, although the transfer necessarily carries with it the right to sue—Khudiram v. Shomnath, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 454. When a manager of a joint family property alienates the property for himself and his minor brother, the alienee is entitled to sue, as it is not a transfer of a mere right to sue—Hanmantappa v. Dandappa, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 234; Pethu v. Kandswami, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 560.

When a minor's property is sold by his natural guardian without legal necessity and the purchaser goes into possession and is still in possession, all the interest which the minor possesses in the property is a mere right to sue to have the sale set aside and a transfer of such a right is prohibited under this clause—Man Mohan v. Bidhu Bhusan, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 460. But in a recent case the Madras High Court has held that in such a case the ex-minor transfers not a mere right to sue but his interest in the property, though a suit may be necessary to avoid the transfer by the guardian and recover possession of the property from the alienee—Palaniappa v. Naliappa, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 817. It may however be pointed out that in the Calcutta case the minor's property was sold by his natural guardian, whereas in the Madras case the minor's property was sold by his de facto guardian. The view of the Madras High Court has been accepted by the Andhra High Court in K.

Nagabhushana Rao v. K. Gowramma, (1968) 2 An. W.R. 57 and also by the Patna High Court in Sadhu Saran v. Sheo Prasad, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 278. Where an ex-minor, instead of challenging within 3 years of his attaining majority alienation of property made during his minority by his guardian, transfers the property to a third person after expiry of the said period of 3 years, the transfer is of nothing more than a mere right to sue and therefore without effect—Natha v. Thakur, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 122, 1939 O.W.N. 241, 180 I.C. 329.

An action for damages in tort is not transferable and an owner cannot bring an action for damages in tort for trespass committed on the premises, before he becomes the owner thereof—Sri Sri Iswar Gopal Jew v. Globe Theatres, Ltd., A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 200. But the purchaser of immoveable property in the possession of a trespasser can sue for mesne profits that accrued due before his purchase—see the cases noted in the last paragraph. A mere right to sue for damages for injury caused by a wrongful act, such as a wrongful attachment of moveable property in execution of a decree, is not transferable—Pragi Lall v. Fateh Chand, 5 All. 207; Parma Sah v. United Provinces, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 196.

A right to recover mesne profits is a mere right to sue and is not transferable—Durga v. Kailash, 2 C.W.N. 43; Seetamma v. Venkataramanayya, 38 Mad. 308; Jai Narayan v. Kishun Dutta, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 551; Dayadaru v. Arigapudi, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 817; Shyam Chand v. Land Mortgage Bank, 9 Cal. 695; Parma Sah v. United Provinces, supra; Thoma v. Govindakurup, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 180; Bhag Singh v. Dan Singh, 69 Pun. L.R. 759.

But where the property itself is sold together with the mesne profits, the transfer is valid. An assignment of a mere right to sue does not convey any property, e.g., if a person out of possession of immoveable property makes an assignment to the effect that the assignee would have a right to sue, without conveying any interest in the property, the assignee would not be entitled to maintain any suit for the recovery of the property. But it would be otherwise if the property itself is transferred—Monmatha v. Matilal, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 719; Ganga Din v. Piyare, A.I.R. 1929 All. 63; Shankarappa v. Khatumbi, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 478; Susat v. Ramaswami, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 710; Thoma v. Govindakurup, supra; Muralidhar v. Rupendra, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 321. Where the properties of A Company are transferred to C Co. during the pendency of a suit by A Company for damages or a breach of contract, C Company can proceed with the suit on substitution—New Central Jute Mills Co. Ltd. v. Rivers Steam Navigation Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 352. "Where the right of action was not a bare right but was incident or subsidiary to a right in property, an assignment of the right of action was permissible, and did not savour of champerty or maintenance"—per Scrutton, L.J., in Ellis v. Torrington, [1920] 1 K.B. 399 (411). The distinction, however, was not noticed in Seetamma v. Venkataramanayya, 38 Mad. 308, which was a suit for recovery of property as well as mesne profits. A transfer of the right to recover profits which arose out of the land along with the transfer of the land itself is not hit by sec. 6 (e)—Gangaraju v. Gopala

Krishnamurthi, A.I.R. 1957 And. Pra. 190 (F.B.); Albion Jute Mills v. Rivers Steam Navigation Co., (1957) 100 C.L.J. 70.

Similarly, where the plaintiff purchased a tank and along with the vendor's right to sue the defendant, owner of the subjacent colliery, for the subsidence of the tank held that what was purchased was not a mere right to sue but a property with an incidental remedy to recover damages for subsidence—Jagannath v. Kalidas, 8 Pat. 776, 10 P.L.T. 191, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 245 (247), 120 L.C. 626; Radha Govinda v. Khas Dhar-maband Colliery, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 160.

Where certain property was entrusted to an agent for collection of the rents and profits, and the agent fails to pay balance due after rendering accounts, the claim of the principal is in essence a claim for property. Where such a claim is assigned, it is an assignment of property in the hands of the agent and not an assignment of a mere right to sue—Sheikh Muhammad v. Bathummal, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 458.

The right to recover an ascertained and definite debt is not a mere right to sue and is transferable. It is an actionable claim. The principle is, that if a certain sum of money is due from any person, that sum is recoverable on assignment; the right to recover the money is not a mere right to sue and the transfer of such a right does not offend against section 6 (e) of the T. P. Act. But if that sum is to be ascertained only on taking accounts it might be that the right to take the accounts is not assignable—Ramaseshiah v. Ramiah, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 417, following Subhadramma v. Venkatapati, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 162. As regards actionable claims see Manmatha v. Hedait Ali, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 32; Baijnath v. Parmeshwari, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 240; Nagappa v. Badridas, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 409; Muthu v. Achu, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 461. But the assignee of a debt, so far as the claim to interest due before the date of assignment is concerned, purchases a mere right to sue which is not transferable under this clause—Baijnath v. Parmeshwari, supra. Cl. (e) must be read in conjunction with sec. 130 and sec. 3. The definition of 'actionable claim' has been extended to include such equitable choses in action as debts or beneficial interests in moveable property, whether existent, accruing, conditional or contingent. A 'debt' is an obligation to pay a liquidated or certain sum of money—Tikam Singh v. Bhola Nath, A.I.R. 1937 All. 470 (471-72). Where a sale is set aside, a contract to repay the purchase-money is an implied term of the contract of sale. The right of the vendee to claim an enforcement of this contract is an actionable claim and is therefore clearly assignable. Chinnapareddi v. Venkataramanappa, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 209. An assignment by the assured to the insurer of his rights and remedies not being a transfer of a mere right to sue enables the insurer to sue in his own name—Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Caledonian Insurance Co., A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 159. See also Union of India v. Alliance Assurance Co. Ltd., 66 C.W.N. 419.

There cannot be an assignment of a suit which has been filed for the purpose of recovering damages either in contract or in tort. It is lawful however to a plaintiff in a pending suit to assign the benefit which he may obtain under the decree to be passed in the suit—Rajamanickam v. Abdul Halim, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 389; see also Purna Chandra v. Barna Kumari, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 715. But this does not give the assignee of the fruits of the action the right to interfere in the proceedings in the action—Rajamanickam v. Abdul Halim, supra.

The words "right to sue" not only refer to rights to damages arising out of torts, but also include rights arising out of contracts. Thus, a right to sue the gomasta (agent) for accounts (which is a right ex contractu) falls under this clause and is unassignable—Kshetra Mohan v. Biswa Nath, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1047; Kalusa v. Madhorao, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 357. (Contra—Churamoni v. Rajendra, 42 I.C. 390). The right of a person to recover damages (whether liquidated or unliquidated) for the breach of a contract is a right to sue within the meaning of this section and is not capable of being transferred—Janglimal v. Pioneer Flour Mills, 106 P.R. 1914, 27 I.C. 115; Abu Muhammad v. S. C. Chunder, 36 Cal. 345; Jewan Ram v. Ratan Chand, A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 795; Hira Chand v. Nem Chand, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 403; Yadavendra v. Srinivasa, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 62; Gopala v. Ramaswami, 21 M.L.J. 153, 22 M.L.J. 207; Chiman Mal v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 187. Moti Lal v. Radhey Lal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 642, (646, 647); Shahrukh v. Sheo Prasad, 41 I.C. 435; Nakhela v. Kokaya A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 67 (68); Gerimal v. Raghunath, A.I.R. 1921 Sind 59; Mt. Powri v. Shiva, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 2. But see Bans Gopal v. P. K. Banerje, A.I.R. 1949 All. 433. It has been held in this case that where the Official Receiver has become entitled to the benefits of a contract between the insolvent and another person, the right to sue for damages for breach of the contract in his hands will not be a mere right to sue for damages. An executory contract for the future sale of immoveable property is, however, not a mere right to sue, although a right to sue is involved in it on breach of its conditions. But where at the time of execution of the assignment deed by the vendee, the assignor is aware that the contract was incapable of execution, what he assigns is not an executory contract, but a claim in respect of compensation for breach thereof and hence a mere right to sue—Punjaram v. Hariso, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 268. The benefit of a contract, that is, the beneficial right or interest of a party under the contract and the right to sue to recover the benefits created thereby are, however, assignable provided that, (a) the benefit is not coupled with any liability or obligation that the assignor is bound to discharge, and (b) that the contract has not been induced by personal qualifications or considerations as regards the parties to it—Nathu v. Hansraj, 9 Bom. L.R. 114; Jaffer v. Budge-Budge Jute Mills Co., 33 Cal. 702. See also Bhabhootmal v. Moolchand, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 266. The right of the mortgagor to sue the mortgagee for the balance of the consideration which has not been paid by the mortgagee is a right to obtain damages for breach of the agreement to lend money, and is a right to sue within the meaning of this clause, such a right cannot be assigned and the transferee of the right cannot sue the mortgagee for the money—Yadavendra v. Srinivasa, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 62. But where A, after mortgaging his property to B, subsequently sells it to C, who retains part of the purchase money for payment of B's mortgage but does not pay it, A has a charge on the property until the amount is paid, and his right to recover the unpaid purchase money from C is not a mere right to sue, but is assignable at law—Nathu Mali v. Bansaji, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 89 (90). But in a later case of the same High Court where the mortgagee accepted the liability to pay off the mortgagor's creditors as part of the consideration for the mortgage but failed to do so, it was held that the mortgagee committed a breach of his agreement with the mortgagor which gave rise to a right to claim damages and so the mortgagor was not entitled to recover the sum as a debt and it could not be treated as an actionable claim—Mohanlal v. Motilal, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 135. A right to sue for the remainder of the maintenance allowance that may fall due in future cannot be transferred—Altaf Begum v. Brij Narain, A.I.R. 1929 All. 281 (285). But it has recently been held by the Patna High Court that a right of maintenance in a definite sum of money cannot be a mere right to sue. It may not be attachable under cl. (n) to sec. 60 (1), C. P. C., but that is not sufficient to bring it within cl. (e), for it will, in case of breach, support a suit for a debt and not for damages—Mt. Alimunnissa v. Abdul Aziz, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 527, 165 I.C. 298. A right to recover damages from the purchaser for breach of contract to purchase goods is not an actionable claim but a right to sue, and cannot be transferred—Hira Chand v. Nem Chand, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 403. But the right to recover earnest money paid under a broken contract is not a mere right to sue. It is a claim for an ascertained amount and can be transferred as an actionable claim—Chiman Mal v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 187. A claim to recover damages from an agent for negligence in collecting rents (whether the claim is viewed as one for compensation for breach of contract or as one founded on tort) is a mere right to sue and cannot be transferred—Varahata-swami v. Rama Chandra, 38 Mad. 138. A claim to damages for use and occupation from a tenant continuing on the land after the expiration of the lease without the landlord's consent, is a mere right to sue for damages and is not transferable—Govindaswami v. Ramaswami, 30 M.L.J. 492, (reversing on appeal Govindaswami v. Ramaswami, 31 I.C. 604). Where a person sues not for recovery of the actual crops, but for compensation for wrongful appropriation of the crops by the defendant in violation of an agreement, the suit is professedly one for damages resulting from breach of contract. Such a right of action is purely personal and incapable of assignment or attachment—Liladhar v. Nago, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 6 (9). A contract of service, being a personal contract, is not assignable before breach, as the transfer would be of a mere right to sue—Karam Khan v. Dangushti, 47 I.C. 902 (Nag).

Sales by an Official Assignee of lands in possession of alienees from an insolvent as being part of the insolvent's estate are in substance, if not in form, nothing more than sales of the right to litigate, and assuming that they do not come within the prohibition in the Transfer of Property Act against the transfer of a mere right to sue, they are open to the same objection and are strongly to be deprecated—Chockalingam v. Seethai Ache, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 252.

If what was attached had not accrued due at the date of the attachment, then what is later sold in virtue of the attachment is a mere right to sue—Jagannath v. Jamnaballabh, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 97.

A right to recover money fraudulently omitted to be accounted for in a partition is not a mere right to sue but is an interest in property and therefore an actionable claim. Neither a mere uncertainty as to the amount to be recovered, nor the fact that it may be necessary to look into the accounts settled makes the right a mere right to sue—Ramiah v. Rukmani, 24 M.L.J. 313, 18 I.C. 138. A right to recover past profits of a partnership on taking accounts is not a mere right to sue but is an actionable claim, and is transferable—Shrinath v. Kanhaiyalal, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 145. A right to reconveyance of land is property and not a mere right to sue, and can be attached and sold in execution—Narasingerji v. Panaganti, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 498. A right to contribution is not a mere right to sue for damages and is assignable—Ramaswami v. Deivasigamani, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 397. Where the vendee in a contract of sale of land transfers his rights under the contract, the transfer is not a mere right to sue, although a right to sue is involved in it on breach of its conditions. The transfer is therefore not invalid under this clause—Akhtar Beg v. Haq Newaz, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 709 (711); Venkateswara v. Raman, 3 L.W. 435 (439), 33 I.C. 696; Venkateswara v. Raman, 3 L.W. 435, 33 I.C. 696. Where the mortgagor left with the mortgagee a portion of the consideration money, with the understanding that the same should be paid to him whenever he so required, and subsequently the mortgagor assigned his rights regarding the same held that what was transferred was a mere right to sue which is non-transferable under this clause—Indar v. Raghubir, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 88. A transfer of the share of the profits of a village which have at the time actually accrued due, is an assignment of a debt and not of a right to sue, and is therefore not bad in law, although the transfer of a right to sue is a necessary incident of the transaction—Bharat Singh v. Bindu, 6 O.L.J. 398, 47 I.C. 634; Girdhari v. Ahmad Mirza Beg, 23 O.C. 384, 60 I.C. 690 (691). The transfer of a share in a partnership is not a transfer of a mere right to sue and is valid—Vishindas v. Thawerdas, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 18. Where a lessee under the mortgage in violation of his agreement to pay the Government dues or to pay damages in case of default makes default in paying Government dues and the mortgagee in execution of his previous mortgage decree purchases the mortgaged property and clears the Government dues in arrears, he can recover the amount so paid from the lessee—Manmatha v. Sheikh Hedait, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 32. If the consignee of goods carried by a Railway, after getting compensation from the insurer on account of short delivery, assigns his rights against the Railway to the insurer the assignment is not hit by sec. 6 (e)—Union of India v. Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd., A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 31.

A present right under a settlement to enjoy the income of the property divided among heirs can be transferred by the beneficiary—Ma'ait v. Mahomed Ebrahim, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 165.

Where the right to sue has merged in a decree, the right under the decree is assignable. Thus, where a claim for mesne profits has merged in a judgment before assignment, the right under the judgment can be transferred, although the original cause of action was not transferable—Prasanna v. Ashutosh, 18 C.W.N. 450, 20 I.C. 685; Venkatarama v. Ramaswami, 44 Mad. 539 (543); Hari Prasad v. Kodo Marya, 1 P.L.J. 427, 37 I.C. 998.

A right to take accounts and to recover such sums as may be found due is not assignable, being a mere right to sue within the meaning of cl. (e)—Hakam v. Naranjin, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 934. In commission agency before an agent can claim an indemnity he has a duty to account. The right of the principal to ask for accounts cannot be assigned—Ghisulal v. Gumbhirmull, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 377. But where the income from the Jagir has been received by the certificate holder, the other sharers can validly assign their right to take accounts of their share in the income of the Jagir—Ajijoddin v. Jainwant, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 355. A partner's right to sue for an account of a dissolved partnership has, however, been held to be moveable property and such a right is not a mere right to sue and can be assigned as an actionable claim—Thakurdas v. Vishindas, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 72, 79 I.C. 384.

Where pending an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts the appellant transferred by will her share in the rice mill with all its assets and liabilities and the right to continue the appeal and enjoy all the profits arising therefrom what is transferred is not a mere right to sue but a tangible interest in the partnership—Srinivasa v. Abraham, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 824. When a bank sues its employees on acts of misfeasance and it is thereafter taken over by another bank under a scheme settled by the Central Government the second bank can continue the suit—The Merchants Bank Ltd. v. Dharmasambarthani Ammal, A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 26.

An assignee from the plaintiff can apply for a personal decree against the defendant under O. 34, r. 6, C. P. Code. Such assignment is not invalid by reason of the present section—Shanmugam v. Radha Krishan, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 628. A preliminary decree for accounts is not a mere right to sue and it can be sold by private negotiation though it may not be sold in execution—Jammula Venkayya v. Kasi-reddi Narasimha Murthi, (1969) 1 An. W.R. 74.

57. Clause (f) :—Public office :—If the office be not a public one in the strict sense it would be transferable, even though the discharge of its duties should be indirectly beneficial to the public—In re Mirams, (1891) 1 Q.B.D. 594.

The following public offices have been held to be non-transferable :—

(a) Office of archaka in a temple—Venkatrayar v. Srinivasa, 7 M.H.C.R. 32.

(b) Office of paricharaka in a temple—Narasimma v. Anantha, 4 Mad. 391.

(c) Karaima right in a temple—Keyaka v. Yaddatil, 3 M.H.C.R. 380.

(d) Miras office in a temple—Ramaswami v. Ranga, 16 Mad. 146.

(e) Dharmakartaship in a temple—Subbarayudu v. Kotayya, 15 Mad. 389.

(f) Office of Mutawalli, Sajjadanashin, Mahant, or Shebait—Wahid v. Ashruff, 8 Cal. 732; Sarkum v. Rahaman, 24 Cal. 83; Girijanand v. Sailajanand, 23 Cal. 645; Gobind Kumar v. Debendra, 12 C.W.N. 98; Munshi Shahed Baksh v. Golam Nabi, 22 C.W.N. 996. See also Note 51.

- (g) Office of Ghatwal—Narain v. Badi Roy, 29 Cal. 227.
- (h) Office of Karnam—Kumarasami Pillai v. Orr, 20 Mad. 145.
- (i) Office of Chowkidar—Ram Kumar v. Ram Newaj, 31 Cal. 1021.

When one member of a family in accordance with custom transfers his turn of worship the transaction is valid for the following reasons : (1) the office of worship is not a public office as it is capable of being divided whereas public office is indivisible; (2) the transaction is valid under Hindu law; (3) the transaction is really not a transfer because the office is still retained by the family—Hanmappa v. Hanmantganda, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 233. An office of worship in a temple, which is heritable and partible, is not a public office—Narayanam Seshacharyulu v. Narayanam Venkatacharyulu, 1956 Andhra W.R. 1050.

58. Salary of public officer :—The salary of a public officer is not transferable under this Act, although under clause (i) of sec. 60 (1) of the C. P. Code it is attachable under certain restrictions.

Where the law assigns fees to an officer, it is for the purpose of upholding the dignity and performing properly the duties of that office, and the policy of the law will not allow the officer to bargain away those fees to the appointer or to any one else—Corporation of Liverpool v. Wright, 28 L.J.N.S. Ch. 868.

For definition of "Public Officer" see C.P. Code, Sec. 2 (17).

Salary :—The word 'salary' means the recompense or consideration stipulated to be paid to a person periodically for services.

The percentage allowance which a khot receives for collecting the assessments is not his salary—Ravji v. Sayajirao, 13 Bom. 673.

Travelling allowances paid to public officers in excess of their fixed stipends are not salaries. Cf. clauses (h) and (i) of sec. 60 (1), C. P. Code.

A consent decree was passed with a term that the plaintiff might recover the amount from the salary of the defendant at Rs. 2 per month by attachment. The defendant was a railway servant : Held, the contract was opposed to public policy and void under this section—M. & S. Ry. v. Rupchand, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 155. Where a younger brother, a university student, out of natural love and affection promises to pay his elder brother a specified sum based on his monthly earning on his getting an employment, the promise is not hit by sec. 6 (f)—B. Ananthayya v. B. Subba Rao, A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 188.

59. Clause (g) :—Pensions :—Under cl. (g) stipends allowed to military and civil pensioners of Government and political pensions cannot be transferred; they are also exempt from attachment under sec. 60 (1) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section does not prohibit the assignment of a pension not granted on political considerations, on account of past services or present infirmities or as a compassionate allowance. A grant of land revenue as such cannot be comprised in the term "pension". Such a grant may be a hereditary grant and partakes of the nature and character of jagir. Its liability to resumption would be dependent upon the terms under which it was created and upon the will of the Sovereign power—Bhopal v. Shalm, A.I.R. 1929 All. 781 (786-87), (1929) A.L.J. 724. Where a munafi grant of landed property had been made by the Mogul Government to the plaintiff's family, but subsequently the land was resumed and cash allowance was substituted thereof and is recognised by the British Government, the cash allowance is a substitution for land which can be alienated by the grantee. The allowance is not a pension within sec. 11 of the Pensions Act, 23 of 1871—Habibul Rahaman v. Abdul Hai, A.I.R. 1926 All. 521; Duni Chand v. Gurmukh, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 816.

Clause (g) follows section 12 of the Pensions Act (Act XXIII of 1871) under which "all assignments, agreements, orders, sales and securities of every kind made by the person entitled to any pension, pay or allowance in respect of any money not payable at or before the making thereof, on account of any such pension, pay or allowance, or for giving or assigning any future interest therein, are null and void".

The word "pension" has nowhere been defined in the Pensions Act. But the Bombay High Court has laid down that "pension" means a periodical allowance or stipend granted not in respect of a right, privilege, perquisite or office, but on account of past services or particular merits, or as compensation to dethroned princes, their families and dependants—Secretary of State v. Khemchand, 4 Bom. 432 (136); Bhoopal v. Shiam, supra.

A pension is a periodical payment of money by Government to the pensioner—Lachmi Narain v. Makund, 26 All. 617; Wasif Ali Mirza v. Kernani Industrial Bank, 35 C.W.N. 791 (794) (P.C.). The rents of the properties granted by the Government to the Nawab of Murshidabad are not included in the term "pension," because the Nawab draws the rents not as a pensioner, but as the owner (though a limited owner) of the properties—Wasif Ali Mirza, supra. A land granted once for all in lieu of pension is not a pension, and a transfer of such land is not prohibited—Balwant v. Secretary of State, 29 Bom. 480; Ganpat Rao v. Ananda Rao, 28 All. 104, 32 All. 148 (P.C.); Anna Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa, 31 All. 382; Kumar Tirumalai v. Bangaru, 21 Mad. 310; Subbarayya Mudali v. Velayuda, 30 Mad. 153. But see Atma Ram v. Kehar, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 904 (905), where it is said that a pension may take the form of an assignment of land revenue.

A Zemindari burdened with the payment of land revenue, granted as a reward for past service rendered to Government, is not a pension, and is therefore transferable—Lachmi Narain v. Makund Singh, 26 All. 617. An annual grant by Government as compensation for loss sustained by the grantee on account of improper redemption of rent-free land is not a pension—Jiban Krihsna v. Sripati, 8 C.W.N. 665. Where the Government after considerably raising the assessment assigns as an act of grace certain shares out of the increased revenue to the junior members of the family, the shares so assigned do not constitute pension—Balkrishna v. Govind, 1902 A.W.N. 161. The grant of a reward or bonus by Government is not a pension—Khasim v. Carliet, 5 Mad. 272. A toda giras hak which is an allowance made to garasias to preserve the peace of the country and to render police service if required is not a pension—Secretary of State v. Khemchand, 4 Bom. 432.

Political Pensions :—An allowance granted to a political prisoner detained under the provisions of the State Prisoner's Regulation III of 1818 is a political pension, and cannot be transferred. The allowance granted to the ex-Maharaja of Panna who is interned under the above Regulation is a political pension even though the Government of India makes some arrangement with the Panna Durbar under which the latter pays the money into the Government Treasury to be paid to the ex-Maharaja—Satraji Dongorchand v. Madho Singh, 50 Mad. 711, 52 M.L.J. 622, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 64, 103 I.C. 339. A pension guaranteed payable by the Government of India by a treaty with another sovereign power is in the strictest sense a political pension. Thus an allowance so payable to one of the heirs of the King of Oudh who has inherited it is a political pension—Bishambar v. Imdad Ali, 18 Cal. 216 (P.C.). The stipends allowed by the Government to the members of the Mysore family cannot be attached—Hazee Mahammad v. Shazada Mahammad, 7 W.R. 169. The character of a political pension remains unchanged so long as it remains unpaid in the hands of the Government irrespective of whether the beneficiary is alive or dead—Valia v. Anujani, 26 Mad. 69. Pensions payable by a foreign State when received by a pensioner in India appear to be outside the scope of this clause—Bishambhar Nath v. Imdad Ali, 18 Cal. 216, 17 I.A. 181.

60. Clause (h) :—“Opposed to the nature of the interest” :—The transfer of a service inam by the inamdar is opposed to the nature of his interest in the property. If he sells the property, he can no longer perform the services—Anjaneyulu v. Venugopala, 45 Mad. 620 (624), A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 197, 70 I.C. 466. So also, ghatwali tenures are non-transferable. See Note 54, ante. The archakatvam service lands are not alienable but the standing crops on such lands are transferable and liable to be attached and sold in execution—C. V. Kutumba Rao v. Govardhanam, A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 349. As to the validity of the lease of service inam lands the Andhra Pradesh High Court observed as follows : “... a lease by itself will not attract s. 6 (h) ... If under the lease a provision is made for payment of rent ... that is a valid transaction ... If, on the other hand, all the rent ... is to go in reduction of a premium received at that time of the granting of the lease. ... that would contravene ... s 6 (h)”,—Suryanarayana v. Venkata Suryanarayana, A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 286.

61. Unlawful object or consideration :—Section 24 of the Indian Contract Act enacts :—

“The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless it is forbidden by law; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law; or is fraudulent; or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another; or the Court regards it as immoral, or opposed to public policy.

In each of these cases the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void.”

This clause would be inapplicable where the object or the consideration for the transfer is not unlawful, but the transfer is ineffective on some other ground—Dip Narain v. Nageshar, 52 All. 338 (F.B.), 1930 A.L.J. 45, 122 I.C. 872, A.I.R. 1930 All. 1 (2). Although the words 'object' and 'consideration' have been coupled together, they are distinguishable. The term 'object' means purpose or design. Thus, if the object of an assignment was to defeat the provisions of the Insolvency Act in such a manner as to prevent the property of the insolvent vesting in the Official Assignee and thereby becoming available for distribution under the provisions of that Act, such an object is unlawful and the transfer is inoperative under this section, although the transfer was supported by consideration—Jaffar v. Budge Budge Jute Mills, 33 Cal. 702 (709, 710); and on appeal 34 Cal. 289; Chinniram v. Shibendra, 16 C.L.J. 162, 14 I.C. 519.

A contract may be invalidated either by the illegality of the object or the consideration itself, or by the incapacity of the promisor to enter into such a contract. In cases of inherent illegality, it is sometimes impossible to say whether the legal or the illegal portion of the consideration affected the mind of the promisor most. But in cases of contract only partly beyond the competence of the promisor, there is no good ground why the promisee who has paid good consideration should not be allowed to enforce that part of the promise which the promisor was competent to make—Dip Narain v. Nageswar, A.I.R. 1930 All. 1 (3) (F.B.).

62. Transfers forbidden by law :—There is a clear distinction between an agreement which may be forbidden by law and one which is merely declared to be void. In the former case the Legislature penalises it or prohibits it. If a void agreement has been carried out and consideration has passed the promisor may not in equity be allowed to go back upon it without restoring the benefit which he has received. But if the promisee comes to Court to enforce it, he would receive no help from a Court of law—Dip Narain v. Nageswar, supra, at p. 3. A contract which is ultra vires is not necessarily illegal. Thus, a bank was allowed to sue to enforce a mortgage, although its memorandum of association prohibited the bank to lend money on mortgage—Ahmed Saif v. Bank of Mysore, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 512, 53 Mad. 771, 126 I.C. 614.

Here the 'law' refers to some substantive law, and not to an adjective law such as the C. P. Code—Hukum Chand v. Taharunnessa, 16 Cal. 504. An alienation of the minor's property by the certificated guardian without the sanction of the Court is voidable—Sec. 30, Guardians and Wards Act. A license granted under the excise law is a personal privilege, and the rights and privileges conferred by the license cannot be transferred by one private individual to another—Behari Lall v. Jagadish, 31 Cal. 798 (805). Where a person, who held the lease of a farm to retail opium at certain shops and whose lease contained a clause prohibiting subletting without the Collector's sanction, entered into an agreement to sublet some of the shops, held that the agreement was void—Raghunath v. Nathu, 19 Bom. 626. Where the transfer of an occupancy right is forbidden by law, its transfer by the tenant is void—Durga v. Jhinguri, 7 All. 511 (514); Jhinguri v. Durga, 7 All. 578 (880) (F.B.). Where the object of a lease was to secure a higher rent than that allowed by the Calcutta Rent Act, the lease was void as it intended to defeat the provisions of that Act—Saleh Abraham v. Manekji, 50 Cal. 491, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 57, 75 I.C. 521.

If any portion of the consideration for a transfer is forbidden by law, the whole transfer should be set aside—Shenbagavadiammal v. Mupidathi Ammal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 720, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 364.

This clause applies to cases where the transfer is forbidden by statute, and not to cases where the restriction on alienation is imposed by an agreement of parties or decree of Court—Wazir Md. v. Har Prasad, 15 O.C. 67, 13 I.C. 613 (615).

Fraudulent transfers :—See sec. 53 of this Act.

63. Transfers with immoral object :—Where the landlord knowingly let out his house to a prostitute to be used by her as a brothel, held that he could not recover rent—Gourinath v. Madhumani, 18 W.R. 445, 9 B.L.R. App. 37; Choga Lal v. Pujari, 31 All. 58. If, however, the landlord was ignorant of the fact that the prostitute took the house for prostitution (and not for mere habitation), he could recover rent—Sultan v. Nanu, 22 P.R. 1877; Pirithi Mal v. Bhagan, 2 P.R. 1898. Where a person mortgaged his property in order to raise money for the purpose of getting his daughters taught singing, held that the mortgage was not void, in as much as amongst the community of the Naickens to which the mortgagor belonged, singing was not a necessary prelude to prostitution—Khubchand v. Beram, 13 Bom. 150. An assignment of a mortgage by a person to a woman, ostensibly for money consideration but really for the purpose of future illicit cohabitation with her is void and can be set aside at the instance of the assignor—Methukannu v. Shunmugavelu, 28 Mad. 413. Where the donor made a gift of his property to a husband and wife on condition that he should have physical enjoyment of the latter, held that the consideration for the gift being future illicit connection, the gift was void under sec. 23 Contract Act—Ghumna v. Ramchandra, 47 All. 619, A.I.R. 1925 All. 437, 88 I.C. 411; see also Istak v. Ranchod, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 198, 48 Bom. L.R. 775. A bequest by a Hindu testator made conditional on the continuance of immoral relations between himself and the legatee is void—Tayaramma v. Sitaramasami, 23 Mad. 613. But where a gift of a property was made by a person to his kept mistress on condition of her continuing to live with him, which was followed by possession of the property by her for a number of years, and afterwards a creditor of the donor sued for a declaration that the gift was invalid, held that even assuming that the consideration was immoral and illegal, the gift could not be set aside because of the long possession of the donee—Lachmi v. Wilayti Begam, 2 All. 433. But see Sabava v. Yamanappa, 35 Bom. L.R. 345, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 209 (211), which holds that an immoral consideration does not become innocuous by passage of time. Similarly, where a deed of settlement was made with the object and in consideration of the donee cohabiting with the settlor, and the immoral purpose of the donor was achieved by the donee in fact remaining in his keeping as contemplated in the settlement-deed, held that the settlor could not afterwards avoid the deed and recover the property transferred for an immoral purpose which had already been achieved. It is a well-established rule of equity that when a transaction is entered into for unlawful and immoral purpose, and that purpose has been achieved, the Court will not interfere at the instance of a particeps criminis to relieve him from the legal effect of the transaction. Section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act does not modify this rule of equity but only lays down that the Court will not enforce a transfer which would have the effect of carrying out its unlawful object—Deivanayaga v. Muthu Reddi, 44 Mad. 329 (330, 332); Sabava v. Yamanappa, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 209 (212); Ayerst v. Jenkins, (1873) 16 Eq. 275. In the last cited case Lord Selbourne observed as follows (at p. 283):—"The voluntary gift of part of his own property by one particeps criminis to another is in itself neither fraudulent nor prohibited by law . . . If, public policy is opposed (as it is) to vice and immorality, it is no less true that the law in sanctioning the defence of a particeps criminis does so on the grounds of public policy, namely, that those who violate the law must not apply to the law for protection It is a maxim of law, not opposed to any equity, that in pari delicto meliorem conditis possidentis". But see Pranballav v. Tulsibala, 63 C.W.N. 258 where the executors who obtained the probate of a will left by a testatrix were allowed to recover possession of a house let out by the testatrix for running a brothel as they wanted to establish a hospital in that house as per direction contained in the will. But past cohabitation is not an immoral consideration, and a promise to pay a woman an allowance or some property for such consideration has been held to be valid—Dhiraj v. Bikramjit, 3 All. 787; Mankuar v. Jasodha, 1 All. 478 (480); Mt. Balo v. Mt. Parbati, I.L.R. 1940 All. 371, A.I.R. 1940 All. 385, 190 I.C. 578; see also Lakshmi Narayana v. Subhadri Ammal, 13 M.L.J. 7 and Godfrey v. Mt. Parbati, 17 Pat. 508, 19 P.L.T. 893, A. I. R. 1938 Pat. 502; Istak v. Ranchod, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 198, 48 Bom. L.R. 775. In some cases, however, a transfer in consideration of past cohabitation has been held to be invalid—Kisandas v. Dhondhu, 44 Bom. 542; Husseinali v. Dinbai, 25 Bom. L.R. 252, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 135, 86 I.C. 240 (dissenting from 3 All. 787); Sabava v. Yamanappa, supra. Gift to a concubine motivated by a desire to compensate her for past services is not hit by sec. 6 (h)—Duxampadi v. Kunuko, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 253.

The fact that in the community to which the parties belong concubinage is allowed and is not regarded as immoral does not make a settlement made in consideration of concubinage any the less immoral—Sabava v. Yamanappa, supra. Where the owner of a house lets out the property to the defendant for the immoral purpose of running a brothel, the executors of the will of the owner can sue to eject the defendant on the basis that the transfer is void—Pranballav Saha v. Sm. Tulsibala Dassi, A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 713.

64. Transfers opposed to public policy:—As to what is "public policy" the decision of the House of Lords in Janson v. Driefontien Consolidated Mines, (1902) A.C. 484 is instructive. There Lord Halsbury, L.C. observed as follows:—"But I deny that the Court can invent a new head of public policy; so a contract for marriage brokerage, the creation of a perpetuity, a contract in restraint of trade, a gaming or wagering contract or, what is relevant here, the assisting of the King's enemies, are all undoubtedly unlawful things; and you may say that it is because they are contrary to public policy they are unlawful; but it is because these things have been either enacted or assumed to be by the common law unlawful, and not because a Judge or Court have a right to declare that such and such things are in his or their view contrary to public policy"—at pp. 491-92. Lord Davey in the same case went so far as to say: "Public policy is always an unsafe and treacherous ground for legal decision"—at p. 484.

Marriage brokage contracts:—A contract according to the terms of which the father or guardian is to be paid money in consideration of giving his daughter or ward in marriage is against public policy and unenforceable in a Court of law—Dholidas v. Fulchand, 22 Bom. 42 and 22 Bom. 658; Dulari v. Vallabhdas, 13 Bom. 126; Venkata v. Lakshmi, 32 Bom. 185. An agreement to allow maintenance to the parents of a girl who had to enter into an unsuitable marriage is void as opposed to public policy—Baldeo v. Jamna, 23 All. 496. In some cases however, it has been held that if the person who is remunerated in money or by way of maintenance stands in near relationship to the girl, the agreement is not void. Thus a promise made by a person to give his sister or daughter in marriage to the plaintiff in consideration of the latter paying a sum of money or any property to the promisor (brother or father of the girl) was held to be lawful, where it was not shown that the guardian was giving the girl to a husband otherwise ineligible—Jogeshwar v. Panch Kauri, 13 W.R. 154; Ranee Lallu Monee v. Nabin Mohan, 25 W.R. 32; Bakshi Das v. Nadu Das, 1 C.L.J. 261.

Other contracts and transfers:—To compound a charge of a non-compoundable offence is both opposed to public policy and forbidden by law, and so unlawful; and therefore an agreement, in which such compounding is either a consideration or an object, is void under secs. 23 and 24 of the Contract Act. Thus, where the consideration for submission by the defendant to arbitration of his alleged liability and for execution of a mortgage bond by him for the debt settled by the award was a promise on behalf of the plaintiff bank to drop such a criminal proceeding against the defendant, both the award and the mortgage are invalid—per Derbyshire, C.J., in Sudhindra v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 840. See also Gopal v. Lakshmikanta, 37 C.W.N. 749.

If it is an implied term of the reference to the arbitration of a civil dispute that the criminal complaint already filed would not be further proceeded with then the consideration of the reference is unlawful and the award is invalid, no matter whether any prosecution in law had been started or not—Kamini Kumar v. Birendra Nath, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 100.

Whether a pre-existing debt will support a security given, when a criminal prosecution is withdrawn is more a question of fact than of law. Where the entire consideration for the security is the pre-existing debt the transaction is good even though the criminal case is withdrawn thereafter; but if the dropping of the prosecution constitutes even a part of the consideration apart from the pre-existing debt, the security cannot be enforced—Sudhindra v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 840.

There is, however, a distinction between getting a security for a debt from a debtor and getting it from a third person who is under no obligation to the creditor. In such a case the security is not enforceable—per Mukherjea, J. in Sudhindra v. Ganesh, supra at p. 162. This distinction was pointed out by Cotton, L.J. in Flower v. Sadler, 10 Q. B.D. 572. An agreement for an illegal consideration, both the parties to which know of the illegality of the object, cannot be said to be an agreement which is discovered to be void within the meaning of sec. 65 of the Contract Act, so as to attract the operation of that section—Durgesh Nandini v. Bhowanipur Banking Corporation, (1939) 43 C.W.N. 260. Accordingly, when for securing the withdrawal of a criminal prosecution against a third person, a third party takes a make-believe loan from the complainant and the major part of the consideration is applied by the latter for the satisfaction of a debt owing to him by the accused, the complainant cannot recover from such third party even such small part of the loan as he may have actually received himself—Ibid.

On appeal the last cited decision has been affirmed by the Privy Council and it has been held that in order to make out the defence that the contract sued on is void on account of its consideration being the stifling of a prosecution, the defendant must establish a contract whereby the proposed or actual prosecutor agreed, as part of the consideration received or to be received by him, either not to bring or discontinue criminal proceedings for some alleged offence—Bhowanipur Banking Corporation v. Durgesh Nandini, 46 C.W.N. 1 (P.C.).

A mortgage executed to stifle criminal prosecution against some of the executants cannot be enforced against the executants—Karam Singh v. Khairati, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 686, 168 I.C. 991. Where a criminal prosecution was pending against the defendant, and his pleader entered into a bail-bond for his appearance, and to indemnify the pleader against any loss he might suffer under the bail-bond a nominal sale deed and rent note were passed by the defendant to the plaintiff : held that the consideration for the sale deed was opposed to public policy, so it was void—Laxmanlal v. Kanak Kirti, 32 Bom. 449. A contract which is against public policy and intended to evade the course of law cannot be enforced in a Court of Justice ; money paid under such contract, e.g., for an illegal purpose, such as bribing a Darogah, cannot be recovered—Protima v. Dookhia, 18 W.R. 450. A transfer of land to a Patwari in contravention of rules is void as opposed to public policy—Abdul v. Ghulam Mahammad, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 18, 7 Lah. 463, 98 I.C. 673. But a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that the taking of an assignment of a mortgage by a patwari is not a transaction opposed to public policy—Bhagwan v. Murari, 39 All. 51 (54) (F.B.).

65. Maintenance and Champerty :—Maintenance means the stirring up of improper litigation with a bad motive for purposes contrary to public policy and justice. Champerty is a species of maintenance and of the same character, but with the additional feature of a condition or bargain providing for participation in the subject matter of the litigation—Pitchakutty v. Kamala, 1 M.H.C.R. 153. "It must be something against good policy and justice, something tending to promote unnecessary litigation, something that in a legal sense is immoral, and to the constitution of which a bad motive in the same sense is necessary. It was necessary, therefore, to look to the substance of the transaction and not merely the languages of the instruments"—Fisher v. Kamala, 8 M.I.A. 170 (187).

In India agreements to finance litigation, in consideration of having a share of the property if recovered, are not per se opposed to public policy. It may be so if the object of the agreement is an improper one, such as abetting or encouraging unrighteous suits or gambling in litigation or their enforcement against a party may be contrary to the principles of equity and good conscience as unconscionable or extortionate bargain—Ramanamma v. Viranna, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 100, 35 C.W.N. 633, 61 M.L.J. 94., 131 I.C. 401; Vatsavaya v. Poosapati, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 162; 47 M.L.J. 93, 29 C.W.N. 57, 80 I.C. 807; Moss v. Ma Nyein, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 418. The English law of Champerty is not in force in India—Raghunath v. Nilkanth, 20 Cal. 343 (846-47) (P.C.); Bhagwat v. Debi Dayal, 35 Cal. 420 (P.C.).

In agreements of this kind the questions to be considered are, whether the agreement is so extortionate and unconscionable as to be inequitable against the borrower, and whether the agreement has been made, not with the bona fide object of assisting a claim believed to be just and of obtaining a reasonable recompense therefor, but for improper objects, as for the purpose of gambling in litigation, or of injuring or oppressing others by abetting and encouraging unrighteous suits so as to be contrary to public policy—Ram Coomar v. Chunder Canto, 2 Cal. 233 (P.C.); Raja Mokham Singh v. Raja Rup Singh, 15 All. 352 (P.C.); Achal Ram v. Kazim Hosain, 27 All. 271 (P.C.); Bhagwat Dayal v. Debi Dayal, 35 Cal. 420 (P.C.); Gokuldas v. Lakshmidas, 3 Bom. 402. Where a person is himself unable to prosecute a suit, a contract made in good faith to supply him with funds to carry on the suit, on the security of the property in dispute, will be enforced—Ram Coomar v. Chunder, 2 Cal. 233 (P.C.). The law does not prevent persons from transferring the subject matter of a litigation in order to obtain the means of prosecuting it—Khudiram v. Shomnath, 37 C.W.N. 706 (708), A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 454.

So, an assignment, merely with a view of litigation, to a person who, but for the litigation would have no interest whatever in the subject-matter of the assignment, is champertous—Gokuldas v. Lakshmidas, 3 Bom. 402. An agreement between pleader and client for the supply of funds for the litigation of the latter, in consideration of the former getting a share of the property in suit on its success, is void—In re Ali Muhammad Mukhtear, 111 P.R. 1894.

A fair agreement to supply funds to carry on a suit in consideration of having a share of the property, if recovered, ought not however to be regarded as per se opposed to public policy. But agreements of such kind ought to be carefully watched, and when extortionate, unconscionable or made for improper objects, ought to be held invalid—Alopi v. Court of Wards, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 23. Thus, where by an agreement between A and B, B agreed to finance the litigation of A in respect of certain property in return for part worth about a lac of rupees knowing full well that the litigation would cost about Rs. 9,000, A was a man of weak intellect and was in the habit of drinking, it was held that the agreement was unconscionable and invalid—Ibid at p. 29.

An assignment of property said to be worth 3 lacs by persons claiming to be the next reversioners on the death of a female owner, for a consideration of Rs. 52,000 of which sum Rs. 600 was paid at the time of execution of the deed, and the balance payable in proportion to the success of a suit by the assignee and the assignors to recover the property was held not to be a transaction contrary to public policy and void on that ground—Bhagwat v. Debi Dayal, 35 Cal. 420 (P.C.).

Where a suitor has a just claim to property in dispute and being unable to understand English language and to spend the time necessary for explaining his case to the Advocate and himself to go to the Court, enters into an agreement with another person to act for or represent him wherever necessary and promises to pay him on success of the case for services rendered by the latter, such agreement, though champertous according to English law is not champertous or void as against public policy in India. Mere inadequacy of consideration is not sufficient to set aside such a contract. But where the inadequacy is so glaring and the circumstances surrounding the contract are so suspicious as to lead the Court to the view, not that one of the parties has made a bad bargain merely, but that one of the parties must have imposed upon and taken advantage of by a person who had better means of knowledge, the contract may be set aside—Kalimutha v. Maung Tha, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 491, 14 Rang. 392, 166 I.C. 273.

66. Persons disqualified to be transferees:—See section 136 of this Act, under which Judges, legal practitioners, mukhtears, and other officers connected with Courts of Justice are disqualified from purchasing any actionable claims.

Minors are not included in the term 'persons disqualified'. There is no provision in the T. P. Act under which a minor is incapable of being a transferee of property. Section 7 which speaks of persons competent to contract applies only to a transferor, and does not prevent a minor from being a transferee of property. The Privy Council decision in Mohori Bibi v. Dharmadas (30 Cal. 539) declaring contracts by minors to be void does not apply to a transfer in favour of a minor—Muni Koer v. Madan Gopal, 38 All. 62; Narain Das v. Dhanja, 38 All. 154; Ulfat v. Gouri Shankar, 33 All. 657. A sale-deed in favour of a minor is not void—Subba v. Guruvu, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 425, 120 I.C. 77. It can be enforced specially when the consideration has been paid in full to the vendor—Thakar Das v. Mt. Putli, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 611, 5 Lah. 317; 82 I.C. 96; Gangai v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 544, 84 I.C. 626. So also, a mortgage executed in favour of a minor who has paid the consideration, is valid and enforceable—Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa, 40 Mad. 308 (315) (F.B.) (overruling Navakotti Narayana v. Loyalinga, 33 Mad. 312); Zafar Ashan v. Zubaida, 1929 A.L.J. 1114, 121 I.C. 398, A.I.R. 1929 All. 604 (605); Madhab v. Baikuntha, 4 Pat. L.J. 682; Satyadeca v. Tribeni, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 153, 161 I.C. 579. But where the transfer to a minor involves certain covenants which are to be performed by the minor, e.g., in case of a lease to a minor, in which the minor agrees to pay rent and to perform any particular covenants which form an essential part of the transaction, the transfer (lease) is void, as it falls within the mischief of the rule laid down in Mohori Bibi's case (30 Cal. 539)—Pramila v. Jogesher, 3 Pat. L.J. 518 (521, 522), 46 I.C. 670; Sew Sankar Lal v. Bejoy Krishna, 57 C.W.N. 65.

Where a clause in a grant prohibits a transfer to a person who does not hold a certain certificate, the person who does not hold the certificate should not be regarded as a person legally disqualified to be a transferee, and there is no basis for holding that the transfer to such a person is void ab initio and cannot be validated by a subsequent removal of the disqualification—Maung Ye v. M. A. S. Firm, 6 Rang. 423, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 136, 111 I.C. 105.

A Buddhist monk may hold property such as paddy land, and he may be a transferee of such property. He is not legally disqualified to be a transferee, and the transfer to him is valid—U. Pyinnya v. Maung Law, 7 Rang. 677 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 354 (360).

67. Clause (i) :—This clause which is identical with the second para of section 108 (j) has been inserted by the Transfer of Property Amendment Act of 1885, in order to remove any doubt which might arise in view of sec. 117, as to its applicability to leases for agricultural purposes.

By reason of cl. (i) the interest of an occupancy tenant cannot be transferred—Shanti Prasad v. Bachhi Devi, A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 349, (1948) O.W.N. 122. An occupancy tenant holding an untransferable right of occupancy cannot transfer his right out and out by sale; but he can hypothecate such right—Gopal Panday v. Parshotam, 5 All. 121 (explained in 13 All. 28). But see Makund v. Mt. Sumita, A.I.R. 1931 All. 461, 132 I.C. 422, where it has been held that a contract for possessory mortgage of an occupancy holding is void under sec. 23 of the Contract Act being against the tenancy law and the right to recover money being contingent upon non-delivery of possession, a covenant illegal in itself and not capable of enforcement, the plaintiff has been held not to be entitled to recover the money. The land under what is known in Gprakhpur chiefly as a mandadari tenure is nothing more than an occupancy holding and is not, therefore, transferable; such land cannot be sold in execution of a decree upon a mortgage thereof—Kedar v. Naipal, 34 All. 155; Banamali v. Bisheshar, 29 All. 129. Mortgage of an exproprietary tenancy land being in contravention of sub-section (3) of section 7A, Oudh Rent Act, 1886, is void—Md. Muzaffar v. Madad Ali, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 309, 132 I.C. 543. Under the law as it stood before the T. P. Act, tenancies whether of homestead lands or of agricultural lands were not transferable in the absence of a custom or contract to the contrary—Sarada v. Nabin, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 39, 54 Cal. 333, 31 C.W.N. 231; Manmatha v. Anath, 23 C.W.N. 201. In Bengal, the transfer of an occupancy holding has now been expressly permitted by sec. 26B of the Bengal Tenancy Act (as amended in 1928). For a case of relinquishment by a tenant of his agricultural holding in Oudh, see Amar Nath v. Har Prasad, 7 Luck 425, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 79, 136 I.C. 333.

If a non-transferable occupancy-holding is mortgaged along with certain other properties which are transferable, the whole transaction is not bad, if without defeating the provisions of this Act part of the mortgage can be enforced—Dip Narain v. Nageshar, 52 All. 338 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1930 All. 1 (3), 122 I.C. 872.

The interests which are declared inalienable by this clause are particular interests which have been created by statutes enacted to regulate the relations between landlord and tenant. An interest conferred by a decree is not covered by this clause. There is an essential distinction between restrictions on transfers imposed by the Legislature, and restrictions imposed by contract or decree. Where the Legislature deem it expedient to fetter the privilege of free alienation, the prohibition founded upon considerations of public interest must be treated as absolute. But no such force can be attributed to a restriction which has its origin in an agreement of the parties or a decree of Court. The contract or decree does not purport to affect the rights and interests of any one but the parties themselves; it merely regulates the relations of the parties inter se. Consequently, where there is a decree of Court settling the rights of two parties, which contains a provision that one of them (tenant) shall not alienate the property which he has got from the other, the presumption is that the condition against alienation is inserted for the benefit of the other party (superior proprietor). The latter may waive the benefit of the condition and if he elects to do so by giving his consent to a transfer, the transfer is a valid transaction—Wazir Muhammad v. Har Prasad, 15 O.C. 67, 13 I.C. 613 (614, 615).

7. Every person competent to contract and entitled to transfer. Persons competent to transferable property, or authorised to dispose of transferable property not his own, is competent to transfer such property either wholly or in part, and either absolutely or conditionally, in the circumstances, to the extent and in the manner allowed and prescribed by any law for the time being in force.

68. Persons competent to contract:—Under section 11 of the Indian Contract Act, "every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject and who is of sound mind and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject."

Minors:—It has now been settled by the Privy Council that a minor is incapable of contract, and that his contract is not only voidable but void—Mohori Bibi v. Dharmodas, 30 Cal. 539 (P.C.). A minor is therefore incompetent to make a transfer of his property by sale, mortgage or lease.

A lease by a minor is void. That it was executed only by the lessee in favour of the lessor (by means of a kabuliyat) and not by the lessor (by means of a patta) does not cure its invalidity. The fundamental conception of a lease involves the transfer by the lessor. A lease is essentially a bilateral contract—Govinda v. Chowakkaran, 59 M.L.J. 941, 129 I.C. 449, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 147 (149). See the amendment made in sec. 107.

Where the actual lease executed by a minor was only for 5 years, and the stipulation with regard to the continuance of the lease in future, should the tenant require it, had not passed from the domain of contract, the stipulation could not be ratified by the minor on his coming of age, as the agreement with regard to the future lease was void—Indian Cotton Co. v. Raghunath, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 178 (182), 33 Bom. L.R. 111, 130 I.C. 598.

Where a deed is executed by a person who alleges himself to be a major but the fact of the minority is established, such a deed executed by minors being a nullity, is incapable of founding a plea of estoppel—Sadiq Ali v. Jai Kishori, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 152 (156), 32 C.W.N. 874, 26 A.L.J. 685, 109 I.C. 387. When a contract has been induced by a false representation made by an infant as to his age, he is liable neither in the contract nor in tort. No estoppel can be pleaded against a statute—Ajudhia Prasad v. Chandan Lal, A.I.R. 1937 All. 610, I.L.R. 1937 All. 860, 170 I.C. 934 (F.B.). In the last cited case money was borrowed on mortgage by two minors at a time when they were more than 18 years but less than 21 years of age concealing the fact that a guardian had been appointed by the Court under the Guardians and Wards Act. It was held that the mortgagee could not get a decree on the mortgage. See also Gadigeppa v. Balangowda, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 561, 55 Bom. 741, 33 Bom. L.R. 1313, 135 I.C. 161 (F.B.), and Khan Gul v. Ladha Singh, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 609 (F.B.), 9 Lah. 701, 111 I.C. 705.

If the manager of a minor's estate enters into an agreement for the purchase of certain immovable property, the minor is not bound by the contract, nor can he sue for the specific performance of the contract—Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin, 39 Cal. 232 (P.C.). A contract by a minor's guardian to sell his immoveable property cannot be enforced against the minor—Raghunathan v. Ravuthakanni, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 765, 48 M.L.W. 112; Venkatachalan v. Sethuram, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 322. But see K. Subrahmanyam v. Kurra Subba Rao, 52 C.W.N. 706 (P.C.), where the Privy Council quoted with approval the following extract from Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act and Specific Relief Act, 7th edition, p. 70: "It is, however, different with regard to contracts entered into on behalf of a minor by his guardian . . . In such a case . . . the contract can be specifically enforced by or against the minor, if the contract is one which it is within the competence of the guardian to enter into on his behalf so as to bind him by it, and, further, it is for the benefit of the minor . . ." What has been actually decided in that case is that where a guardian enters into a contract for the sale of immoveable property for repaying the debts of the minor's father, and the purchaser enters into possession on payment of the consideration, and the guardian files a suit for recovery of possession taking advantage of the non-execution of the deed of sale, the purchaser is entitled to get the protection under sec. 53A T.P. Act.

Onus :—Where a mortgagor alleges that he was a minor on the date the mortgage was executed, the burden is on him to prove that he was a minor on that date—Dhanapala v. Goverchand, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 959 (1960), (1938) M.W.N. 938.

There is nothing in this Act to prevent a minor from being a transferee (purchaser) of property and from suing to recover possession of that property. See Note 295 under sec. 54, and Note 66 under sec. 6. The acceptance of a minor's bid at an auction sale held under the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879 vitiates the sale—Shiva Mart v. Arun Nanakchand Khatri, A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 93.

Lunatics :—A lease of property granted by the lessor at a time when he was mentally unfit and incapable of understanding the effect of the transaction is void—Amina Bibi v. Saiyed Yusuf, 44 All. 748 (752), 20 A.L.J. 731, A.I.R. 1922 All. 449.

A disposition of property by a lunatic during a lucid interval is considered as done by a person perfectly capable of contracting, managing and disposing of his affairs at that period—Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. 605 (per Eldon L. C.).

Disqualified proprietors :—A proprietor whose property is under the management of the Court of Wards cannot validly transfer his property. Thus, a mortgage entered into by a Government ward in contravention of the provisions of sec. 23 of the Central Provinces Government Wards Act, is absolutely void—Jiwan Lal v. Gokul Das, 17 C.P.L.R. 13. A mortgage by a person whose estate is under the management of an officer under the Jhansi Encumbered Estates Act is not valid, and the mortgagee cannot invoke the assistance of sec. 43 to compel the disqualified mortgagor to make good his transfer after the removal of his disqualification—Radhabai v. Kamod Singh, 30 All. 38. Where on the date of the mortgage or sale the property of the mortgagor is under the charge of the Collector under Sch. III, Civil Procedure Code, the judgment-debtor or his representative is incompetent to mortgage or charge the property without the permission of the Collector—Sarju v. Ramsaran, A.I.R. 1931 All. 541, (1931) A.L.J. 400, 132 I.C. 568. Gouri Shankar v. Chennumiya, 46 Cal. 183 (P.C.); Ganesh Prasad v. Baiyalal, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 253, 175 I.C. 384.

69. Pardanashin ladies :—Transactions with pardanashin women are almost placed on the same footing as transactions with minors or other persons of limited capacity.

It is, therefore, always incumbent on the person who is dealing with a pardah lady to show that its terms are fair and equitable, and that the lady had good independent advice in the matter and acted therein altogether at arm's length from the other contracting party—Kanailal v. Kamini, 1 B.L.R. (O.C.) 31 (n). But where a lady attended to her own business herself, communicated in matters of business with men other than members of her own family, was able to go to Court to give evidence in litigation, and was able to attend at the Registration office in person to acknowledge her deeds for the purpose of registration, held she could not be spoken of as a pardanashin lady, and documents executed by her need not be looked upon with the same amount of scrutiny and suspicion as documents executed by females are generally looked upon—Ismail Messajee v. Hafiz, 33 Cal. 773 (783) (P.C.).

To charge a pardanashin woman upon an instrument alleged to have been executed by her, it must be shown by satisfactory evidence that the document was explained to and understood by her—Sudisht Lal v. Sheoharat 7 Cal. 245 (P.C.); Shambati v. Joga, 29 Cal. 749 (P.C.); Sum-suddin v. Abdul, 31 Bom. 165 (180); Amirbai v. Abdul, 3 Bom. L.R. 658; Achan v. Thakur Das, 17 All. 125; Shamsundar v. Achhan Kumar, 21 All. 71 (P.C.). Where a person sets up the validity of a lease granted by a pardanashin lady, the onus is upon him to prove that she understood the nature and effect of her act—Jugal Kishore v. Charoo Chandra, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 159. But to validate a transaction with a pardanashin lady, it is not necessary to prove that she understood every detail of the matter. It is sufficient that she should understand its general effect, and that people disinterested and competent to give advice should, with a fair understanding of the whole matter, advise her to enter into it—Sumitibala v. Dhara Sundari, 47 Cal. 175 (P.C.). For though there may not be a clear understanding of each detail of a matter which may be greatly involved in technicalities, there may still be an intelligent comprehension of the bargain on the part of the lady. In such a case the bargain is good and good as a whole. But if a feature of the transaction affecting in a high degree the expediency of her entering into it is not understood by the lady, the bargain cannot be divided into parts or otherwise reformed by the Courts so as to uphold certain portion of it while rejecting others—Hem Chandra v. Suradhani, I.L.R. (1940) 2 Cal. 436 (P.C.), 45 C.W.N. 253, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 134; see also Farid-un-Nissa v. Mukhtar Ahmad, 47 All. 703 (P.C.), 52 I.A. 342, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 204. "The real point is that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act as its execution is the physical act, of the person who makes it"—Farid-un-Nissa v. Mukhtar Ahmad, (supra), 47 All. 703 (P.C.) at p. 711.

An old pardanashin lady having considerable capacity for business executed a mortgage deed which was read over to her, though it was not explained. She understood its effect except that she did not understand that she was making herself personally liable: held, the mortgage deed did not bind her at all—Hem Chandra v. Suradhani, supra. Where a pardanashin lady to pay her husband's debts executed a mortgage deed under a mistaken view of the nature of her interest under a partition deed between her husband and his sons and the Court was not satisfied that the assumption by her of liability of her husband's debts was made with knowledge of the true position, she was not liable for any sums which she did not herself receive from the mortgagee, though no fraud was practised upon her and she knew that she was mortgaging her interest for her husband's debts—Luchmeshwar v. Moti Rani, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 157 (159).

Where the execution of a mortgage deed by a pardanashin lady is found not to be her mental conscious act, there being no room for a semi-conscious act, the whole deed is affected and must be set aside—Bank of Khulna v. Jyoti Prakash, 67 I.A. 377, 45 C.W.N. 259, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 147. It is only when a party founding on the deed has established the grantor's intelligent understanding of the deed that the question of undue influence arises—ibid.

The question whether the lady is pardanashin or that she adopted the deed with full knowledge and comprehension involves a question of fact. It should be put in issue and investigated at the trial. It cannot be raised for the first time in Privy Council appeal—ibid. Where the assertion that the lady is pardanashin is challenged, evidence may be produced to show that even if she was outside the class, the circumstances were such that the person dealing with her was bound to take special precautions and to prove that he had done so—Bank of Khulna v. Jyoti Prakash, supra; Hodges v. Delhi & London Bank, 27 I.A. 168, 23 All. 137 (P.C.).

71. Person authorised to dispose of transferable property not his own :—These persons include the manager of a joint Hindu family, guardian (see secs. 27 and 29, Guardians and Wards Act), executor, administrator (sec. 307, Indian Succession Act, 1925) and trustee (secs. 11 and 12, Indian Trusts Act).

A man has no right to deal with property which is not his own, and unless he can show some right to deal with it either as agent or guardian of the owner or as trustee or the like, any transfer which he purports to make cannot bind the lawful owner. Section 7 of the T. P. Act embodies this principle—Chitu v. Charan Singh, A.I.R. 1923 All. 563 (564), 77 I.C. 705. A person who has no right at all to present possession cannot make any valid transfer—Padma Kumari v. Nanda Padhan, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 219.

If a person (e.g., the manager or Karnavan of a tarwad) is authorised to dispose of the tarwad property absolutely and without condition, any false recital as to under what particular state of facts he obtained his power to convey, does not affect the title of the transferee, provided the transferor has got the power to give an absolute title and professes to convey such absolute title—Subramania v. Krishna, 39 M.L.J. 590, 60 I.C. 77 (80).

The power of a Mohunt to alienate debutter property being like the power of a manager for an infant heir limited to cases of unavoidable necessity, a permanent lease at a fixed rate, though adequate at the time, is a "breach of duty in the Mohunt" and on the most favourable construction can only enure for the life of grantor and is not binding on his successor—Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 Cal. 1003 (1113) (P.C.).

8. Unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forth-
 Operation of transfer. with to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property and in the legal incidents thereof.

Such incidents include, where the property is land, the easements annexed thereto, the rents and profits thereof accruing after the transfer, and all things attached to the earth ; and, where the property is machinery attached to the earth the moveable parts thereof ; and, where the property is a house, the easements annexed thereto, the rent thereof accruing after the transfer, and the locks, keys, bars, doors, windows, and all other things provided for permanent use therewith ; and, where the property is a debt or other actionable claim, the securities therefor, (except where they are also for other debts or claims not transferred to the transferee) but not arrears of interest accrued before the transfer ;

and, where the property is money or other property yielding income, the interest or income thereof accruing after the transfer takes effect.

This section corresponds to sections 63 and 6 of the English Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41). The object of this section is to cut down the length of deeds and to simplify them by doing away with the description of the minute details and incidents of the property intended to be conveyed. These incidents will be implied to be automatically conveyed by this section.

72. Scope :—This section is not intended to lay down any rule as to what words are necessary to effect a transfer of any particular kind of property. What property is actually conveyed by a particular deed depends upon its own terms—Jyoti Prasad v. Seldon, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 516 (536), 19 Pat. 433, 192 I.C. 17. Where what is transferred by the endorsement is only the property in the promissory note and not either a debt or an actionable claim, this section does not apply—Vira Raghavalu v. Rajalingam, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 531, 1939 M.W.N. 774, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 846. This section is inapplicable to transfers by execution sales—Sribharaju v. Seetharamaraju, 39 Mad. 283 (286); Penumeta v. Veegesena, 28 I.C. 232. But see Hariharan v. Pachuveetial, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 482, 145 I.C. 174. See sec. 2 (d). But in an Allahabad case, the principle of this section, though not the section itself, has been applied to a Court-sale. Thus, if the property is at the date of the auction-sale subject to a charge, the purchaser gets only what the "transferor is capable of passing", that is, he takes the property subject to the charge, and cannot disregard it; he is not clothed with a higher interest in the property than what the transferor was capable of passing—Nathan Lal v. Durga Das, 52 All. 985, 1930 A.L.J. 1267, 130 I.C. 489, A.I.R. 1931 All. 62 (64).

It is incompetent to an undivided member of a Hindu family to alienate, by way of gift, his undivided share or any portion thereof, and such alienation is void in toto. The rule of Hindu law is not affected by s. 8—Venkatappayya v. Raghavayya, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 318, (1950) 2 M.L.J. 466.

This section does not apply to rights under a decree in respect of immoveable property obtained by the transferor—Lakshmi v. Yacob, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 254.

73. "Unless a different intention is expressed or implied" :—Where a property is transferred, unless there is ambiguity in the document effecting the transfer, an intention to reserve a certain right cannot be necessarily implied under this section except from the terms of the document itself. If the document, however, is ambiguous, a Court can consider the object of the grantor and other circumstances attending its execution and the acts of the parties since the date of its execution—Suresh v. Surendra, 37 I.C. 870 (871) (Cal.). There is a distinction between a grant or a reservation of coal, and that of a mine. The meaning of “coal” must be gathered from the document under construction—Radha Gobinda v. Nilkantha, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 556, 30 Pat. 406.

Construction of document :—The construction of a document depends upon the words used therein and a document cannot be construed in the light of authorities interpreting the terms of documents in other cases. Those decisions may serve as a useful guide if they contain general rules of construction—Poomalai Ammal v. Subbammal, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 566, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 884; Fozmal v. Shridhar, A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 499, 48 Bom. L.R. 327; Bapiraju, A. v. Dist. Registrar, A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 142 (F.B.); Trivenibai v. Smt. Lilabai, A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 620. Terms in the operative part are not controlled by those in the recitals—Banki Das Mod Raj v. State of Rajasthan, 1968 Raj L.J. 171. If the landlord signs the Kabuliyat along with the tenant it is a lease within the meaning of sec. 107 T. P. Act—Madan Lal v. Noor Mohamed, 1968 Raj. L.W. 334. The intention of the settlor has to be ascertained by a reading of the document as a whole and if there is ambiguity the Court can look to the circumstances under which the document came into existence and also, if necessary, to the subsequent conduct of the parties. A defeasance clause could not be operative so as to curtail the absolute estate given to the settlee in the earlier portion of the document, ibid. Words used in connection with legal transactions in India should not be given the special and technical meaning which they possess in England—Shiba Prasad v. Lekhranj Shewakaram & Co., A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 162, 23 Pat. 871 relying on Shashi Bhusan v. Jyoti Prasad, 44 I.A. 46, 44 Cal. 585; Kalidas v. Kanhaiyalal, 11 Cal. 121 (131) P.C.; Ramkishorelal v. Kumla Narayan, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 890.

To ascertain the rights of the grantee, the language of the instrument and the intention of the parties, as well as the estate held by the grantor, have to be taken into consideration—Megh Lal v. Raj Kumar, 34 Cal. 358; Commissioner of Wealth Tax v. Gayatri Devi, A.I.R. 1968, Raj. 129. Where a transaction is contained in more than one document between the same parties, the documents must be read together—Narayani Amma v. Bhaskaran Pillai, A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 214. The word “malik” as applied to the grantee in a deed of grant imports full proprietary rights, unless there is something in the text to indicate a contrary intention. Where the word “malik” is not used but it is said that the grantee (a female) and the sons born of her womb and the sons born of their loins in succession and the daughters born of the grantee’s womb shall enjoy the property in succession with right of transfer by sale and gift, then also an absolute estate is conferred as if the grantee was constituted malik of the property—Sarajubala v. Jyotirmoyee, 59 Cal. 142 (P.C.), 35 C.W.N. 903 (906), A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179, 134 I.C. 648. Where a gift “making over certain taluks to the donee” was preceded by the words "in order that you may perform those religious ceremonies, celebrate the festivals satisfactorily, and may provide for your own support, by having the property under your authority and control", held that the words of the gift were limited by its purpose, and the donor's intention as gathered from the whole instrument was that the donee should take the property for life only—Kalidas v. Kanhayalal, 11 Cal. 121 (131) (P.C.). The words "istimrari mokurari" in a pattah granting land do not per se convey an estate of inheritance; but it is also true that such an estate may be created without the addition of such expressions as "ba farz-andan" (with children) or "vaslan bad vaslan" (generation after generation). Without them, the other terms of the instrument, the circumstances under which it has been made, or the conduct of the parties, may show the intention with sufficient certainty to enable the Courts to pronounce the grant to be perpetual—Tulshi Pershad v. Ram Narain, 12 Cal. 117; Gaya v. Ramjivan, 8 All. 569. The grant of a mokurari ijara at a fixed rent in a mauza may be only for the life of the grantee; and in the absence of words importing perpetuity, the question to be considered is whether the intention of the parties is shown by the other terms of the instrument, the circumstances under which it was made or the subsequent conduct of the parties, with sufficient certainty to enable the Court to pronounce that the grant was perpetual—Bilasmani v. Raja Sheopershad, 8 Cal. 664 (P.C.). A condition in a lease that the tenant will not be ejected so long as he pays the rent due from him and remains obedient, is at best good only for the lifetime of the tenant and creates no heritable estate—Madho Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, 8 O.C. 61. In the absence of anything to the contrary, the simple grant of an annuity conveys only a life interest to the grantee. The mere circumstance that an annuity is continued after the life of the first grantee or that it is being charged on village revenues does not lead to an inference that it is of absolute duration, and does not indicate an intention to create an annuity as co-equal with the duration of the property itself—Gopal Krishna v. Ramnath, 5 Bom. L.R. 729. In the absence of direct evidence of its terms or territorial custom to the contrary, a khorphosh grant cannot be presumed to be of greater duration than for the life-time of the grantee. Such a grant cannot be presumed to be more than a grant of the rents and profits, and does not carry with it a right to open mines and remove minerals which are properties of the soil—Tituram v. Cohen, 33 Cal. 203 (P.C.). Trees standing on the land pass to the purchaser on a sale of the land; the mere fact that the trees had been prior to the sale of the land mortgaged to another person and no mention of the mortgage is made in the sale-deed, does not lead to the inference of a "different intention" to the effect that the vendor's interest in the trees should not pass to the purchaser of the land—Pandurang v. Bhimrao, 22 Bom. 610 (612).

If the purchaser of a property refuses to produce the deed of conveyance, it is impossible to ascertain whether a 'different intention is expressed or necessarily implied' and the Court will not be entitled to hold that any easement passed by virtue of this section to the purchaser as a legal incident of the property—Wutzler v. Sharpe, 15 All. 270 (289).

Provisos and exceptions :—The technical rules of interpretation of proviso and exceptions with reference to their scope and legal effect adopted in construing statutes should not ordinarily be imported in interpreting deeds and documents executed by lay men. In ordinary deeds a proviso may sometimes be in the nature of an explanation of the main clause or provision, and the Court must look not merely at the form of the language but its substance, the governing idea or purpose of the deed, the context and the surrounding circumstances to gather the real meaning or intention of the executant—Angurbala v. Debabrata, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 293, 1951 S.C.J. 394 per Chandrasekhara Aiyar, J. A proviso is normally an excepting or a qualifying clause and the effect of it is to except out of the preceding clause upon which it is engrafted, something which but for the proviso would be within it, ibid per Mukherjea, J.

Power of Court to strike out words :—See M/s. Parekh Bros. v. Kartik, A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 532.

74. Transfer passes transferor's entire interest :—When a certain property is conveyed, it must be taken strongly against the grantor and in favour of the grantee, and all the interest which the grantor possessed in the property sold should be deemed to have passed. Hence, where in a sale deed certain specific lands are described as being conveyed without specifying the extent of the interest possessed by the vendor, it must be taken that all the interest which the vendor possessed including the vested interest would pass under the deed—Budhiaraju v. Vullipallem, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 802 (803), (1939) 2 M.L.J. 600, 1939 M.W.N. 810. Unless there is an express or implied qualification to the contrary, the donor must be deemed to have conveyed all that he was possessed of in the property granted. Consequently, if the words employed are clear and unambiguous, no matter who the donee is, whether a male or a female, the language of the gift must be given effect to. Broadly speaking it may be said that if the language of the instrument is capable of conferring an estate of inheritance, considerations regarding the sex of the donee should be discarded. Where the language is ambiguous then recourse can be had to the personal law of the donee and the rule of inheritance applicable to him or her in finding out what the intention of the donor was (i.e., whether he intended to confer an absolute estate or a mere life-estate on the female donee)—Rama Chandra v. Ram Chandra, 42 Mad. 283 (290, 291). This section, which provides that a transfer of property passes the transferor's entire interest to the transferee, must be read subject to the provisions of sec. 2 (old) which laid down that nothing in this chapter should be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu law. It is a rule of Hindu law as understood in Mithila that a gift by a Hindu to his wife does not carry with it the right to alienate. This rule of Mithila law is unaffected by sec. 6 of the T. P. Act—Hitendra v. Rameswar, 4 Pat. 510, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 625, 87 I.C. 849. And the omission of the word "Hindu" from sec. 2 has not changed the Hindu Law in this respect.

In the case of a gift to a Hindu female by a Hindu this section is not of much practical utility as the words "or necessarily implied" do attract the operation of the general notion of a Hindu that a Hindu woman ordinarily gets an estate for life and not an absolute estate—Mt. Sheoraji v. Ram Sawari, A.I.R. 1935 All. 43, (1934) A.L.J. 1013, 152 I.C. 387. But see Rampyari Kuer v. Dulhin Bachuraj Kuer, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 217, where it has been held that a wife may get an absolute estate if so intended by the husband.

When an owner of a grove sells it by declaring that he was selling it with every right that he possessed therein, it follows that his right to the land is also conveyed to the vendee, unless it is expressly reserved by him—Mahmood v. Bhikari A.I.R. 1953 All. 705.

A transfer of his rights by a person having proprietary and under-proprietary rights in land without reservation includes the under-proprietary rights also—Besheshwar v. Achaihar, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 507, 1941 O.W.N. 820, 195 I.C. 242 relying on Gour Chandra v. Makunda Deb, 9 C.W.N. 710 and Bhojohari v. Bhagabati, 17 I.C. 494. Where an entire zemindari patti, constituting a distinct unit like the village itself in which it is situate, is sold by auction without any exception or reservation, the abadi numbers, whose area is included in the area of the zemindari patti and which are a part and parcel of the latter, also pass to the purchaser—Sheoraj v. Ganga Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 395, 1941 O.W.N. 618, 193 I.C. 675. See also Abu Husan v. Ramzan Ali, 4 All. 381; Abhainandan v. Pashpat, 47 All. 470, 23 A.L.J. 283, A.I.R. 1925 All. 449; Asgar Reza v. Md. Mehdi Hossien, 30 I.A. 71, 30 Cal. 556, 7 C.W.N. 482; Balram v. Ganga, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 358, 93 I.C. 287; Krishna Kumari v. Rajendra Bahadur, 2 Luck. 43, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 240, 104 I.C. 155. On a transfer of a village, all the interest possessed by the proprietor in that village passes to the transferee, e.g., houses and graves situate in that village—Krishna Kumari v. Rajendra, 2 Luck. 43, 13 O.L.J. 846, 104 I.C. 155, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 240; Bhagabutti v. Bholanath, 1 Cal. 104 (P.C.). The sale of the rights and interests of a zemindar in a village passes also the buildings appurtenant to the zemindari rights—Abu Hasan v. Ramzan, 4 All. 381 (382); Banke Lal v. Jagat Narain, 22 All. 168 (172, 173). But this is subject to the qualification laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the following words: "It was, however, determined by this Board in Bejoy Singh v. Surendra Narayan, [A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 234, 56 Cal. 1, 111 I.C. 345] that unless the terms of a putni lease showed an intention to grant a right of user other than that to which the zemindary lands were subject at the date of the grant, no other right passed to the grantee, and that such general words as "including all interests therein" were not sufficient to pass a right to excavate brick or earth Their Lordships think that the effect of the decision is to put putni tenures generally in this respect on the same footing as other permanent heritable and transferable tenures created by a zemindar and that the sub-soil rights will only pass under a putni, as in the case of other tenures referred to when granted in express terms: See Gobinda Narayan Singh v. Sham Lal [A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 89, 131 I.C. 753]"—Bhupendra v. Rajeshwar, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 162, 59 Cal. 80, 58 I.A. 228, 35 C.W.N. 870, 132 I.C. 610; Jagat v. Pratap, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 302, 10 Pat. 877, 134 I.C. 1073; Sashi Bhusan v. Jyoti Prasad, 44 Cal. 585, 44 I.A. 46 (53).

Where the grantor has used unqualified words of conveyance, he cannot subsequently claim to have reserved any rights in the property—Tarachand v. Lakshman, 1 Bom. 91 (94). The rule as to the construction of the language of a grant is that indefinite words are calculated to convey all the interests of the grantor—Kalidas v. Kanhayalal, 11 Cal. 121 (131) (P.C.). If a person is the executor of the estate of his father, and has as one of his several sons a beneficial interest in the estate left by his father, and then he executes a sale-deed along with his other brothers, the deed will convey all the right and title which all the brothers possessed in the property, and this will undoubtedly include the right and title which the first-named person possessed as executor, although he did not expressly state in the deed that he was conveying the property in his capacity as executor. The meaning of a deed is to be decided by the language used, interpreted in a natural sense; and there being nothing in the deed to show that only his beneficial interest was to be sold, his interest as executor would also pass—Bijraj Nopani v. Pura Sundary, 42 Cal. 56 (64-66) (P.C.); Gangabai v. Sonabai, 40 Bom. 69. Where the share of a Hindu father as well as his power of disposal over his son's share vests in the Official Assignee, the son's share is also conveyed on alienation by the assignee although there is no express mention to that effect in the sale deed—P. N. Kailasanatha Mudaliar v. P. Biswanatha Mudaliar, (1967) 1 M.L.J. 383.

The general words used in a mortgage deed were in the absence of reservation of a sarbarakari interest sufficient to pass the entire interest of the mortgagor—Gour v. Makunda, 9 C.W.N. 710. The presumption under this section is that all the interest of the transferor would pass to the transferee—Mt. Ram Kumar v. Mt. Chhitra, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 367, 172 I.C. 289. Where a mortgagee in possession grants an ordinary rayati lease, the lessee by virtue of this section acquires a right to cultivate the lands as a tenant for the period during which the mortgagee continues in possession, i.e., till the mortgage is redeemed—Pramatha v. Sashi Bhusan, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 763, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 181. Where the question was whether a residential house standing on land included in the 13 gandas zemindari passed to the auction purchaser thereof in execution of the mortgage decree, it was held that no words of exclusion or reservation being found in the mortgage deed or sale certificate the words therein were ample to pass all the interest of the mortgagor in the 13 gandas zemindari including the land upon which the house was situate—Deokinandan v. Aghorenath, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 400, 24 Pat. 268. Transfer of land includes, unless a different intention is expressed or implied, trees standing on it—Divisional Forest Officer v. Daut, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 612.

A Mahomedan executed a sale-deed of the whole of his property in favour of his mother R and then died. The conveyance was ultimately declared to be void, but before such declaration the mother dedicated a portion of the property to a wakf. The question arose whether the dedication was valid to the extent of the one-third share which she inherited from her son. The High Court held that the wakf did attach to the one-third share. When R transferred the property to wakf, she passed not only such title as she had acquired or believed to have acquired from her son by virtue of the sale-deed, but also such title as she had, as a matter of fact, acquired by inheritance on the death of her son. And if R's title to the whole property, by purchase from her son, failed her other title, viz., title by inheritance to the one-third share passed to the wakf—Fazal Ahmad v. Har Prasad, 1929 A.L.J. 620 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1929 All. 465 (475, 476), 116 I.C. 1. But the Privy Council has reversed this decision, remarking that since the sale-deed was invalid, the wakf fell with it and was not valid even to the extent of R's share inherited from her son, and that sec. 8 did not apply to the case—Har Prasad v. Fazal Ahmad, 55, All. 83 (P.C.), 1933 A.L.J. 331, 37 C.W.N. 490 (494), A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 83, 142 I.C. 217.

75. Legal incidents thereof:—Incident has been defined in Wharton's Law Lexicon as a "thing necessarily depending upon, appertaining to or following another that is more worthy, as rent is incident to a reversion". Webster defines it as "something appertaining to or passing with or depending on another called the principal".

Examples:—An assignment of the subject-matter of a suit carries with it the right to continue the suit and consequently the right to be brought on the record as plaintiff—Commercial Bank v. Sabju, 24 Mad. 252. A liability to pay customary dues known as haq-i-chahorum is of the nature of an incident attaching to land, and may be enforced against the vendee unless it is limited by a right to claim it from the vendor—Dhandia v. Abdur Rahman, 23 All. 209. The right of pre-emption attached to ownership is a legal incident of the property and passes along with it—Bhajan v. Mushtaq Ahmed, 5 All. 324 (330) (F.B.). The title deeds of an estate, counterparts, leases and other documents of the like kind such as kabuliyats are regarded as necessary to the estate and pass with it, whether the transfer is made by a conveyance, decree or certificate of sale—Sri Bhavani v. Devrao, 11 Bom. 485; Harrington v. Price, 3 B. & Ad. 170. A right of property carries with it the right to execute decrees obtained in respect of such property. Thus, the purchaser of a village is entitled to execute decrees for ejectment obtained by the vendor against the tenants of the village for non-payment of rent, except when the decrees are personal as in the case of decrees for pre-emption or when they relate to past profits—Onkardas v. Shahbaz Khan, 1 N.L.R. 48. Where during the pendency of a suit for the recovery of a debt the plaintiff transfers to a third party, the debt in suit and a decree is thereafter passed in favour of the plaintiff, the transferee becomes entitled to the decree as legal incident of the debt transferred and the transferee can execute the decree without assignment—Jugal Kishore v. Raw Cotton Co., A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 376. Where the right of unpaid purchase-money is transferred, the lien for the unpaid purchase-money also goes with it to the transferee—Sambasiva v. Venkatarama, 51 M.L.J. 95, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 903, 95 I.C. 447. A covenant for renewal is a covenant running with the land, and therefore where a grantee of land for a term of years transfers his interest, the right to renewal goes with the transfer unless there is an express or implied intention in the document of transfer to the contrary—Jogendra v. Mtasha, 12 Bur. L.T. 133, 9 L.B.R. 268, 51 I.C. 360.

But an injunction does not run with the land. Hence if a property regarding which an injunction is granted is sold under a decree, the vendee thereof cannot be made amenable to the injunction—Dahyabhai v. Bapulal, 3 Bom. L.R. 564; Attorney-General v. Birmingham Drainage Board, 17 Ch. D. 685.

The goodwill of a trade or business passes with the premises—Hall v. Barrows, 4 DeG. J. and S. 150; Re David and Matthews, [1899] 1 Ch. 378. Similarly, trademarks and trade names denoting the goods of a particular manufacturer would pass with the sale of the business to which they relate—Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Long, 18 Ch. D. 395, 8 App. Cas. 15; Siegart v. Findlater, 7 Ch. D. 801. The right to eject on the ground of unlawful subletting under the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act 1956 is transferred along with the transfer of premises—Munni Devi v. Pushpalata, 71 C.W.N. 282.

76. Easements annexed thereto :—The characteristic of an easement is that it is a right which the owner of a dominant tenement as such has over the property of another. Where the owner of a portion of a holding, who is himself the owner of a common passage in the holding and as such entitled to use it, transfers the portion of the holding, such easement, if any, as may arise by the transfer in favour of the transferred property over the property remaining in the hands of the transferor, is not contemplated by this section—Hamida Khatoon v. Panchayat, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 122, 12 B.R. 622. When a common passage was left for the use of the co-sharers in a partition between members of one family, the right to a share in the passage or even to the use of the passage, was not a legal incident of the shares allotted to the co-sharers, with the result that any stranger who might acquire the share of one of the co-sharers would not automatically become entitled to the common passage, ibid.

Easements 'annexed' may mean those considered as appurtenant thereto, as held in England—Ibid (at p. 288). But the term does not mean an easement which first came into existence as a consequence of a transfer of a house or land; it means those easements which at and prior to the transfer were existing easements—Wutzler v. Sharpe, 15 All. 270 at p. 290.

Under section 19 of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882) an easement passes to the transferee with the dominant heritage. Thus, A has a certain land to which a right of way is annexed. A lets the land to B for 20 years. The right of way vests in B and his legal representatives so long as the lease continues. (Illustration to sec. 19, Indian Easements Act). See also Rajpur Colliery Co. v. Pursottam Cohil, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 463.

Even where the grantor reserves a portion of the property to himself, the easements of necessity which had been enjoyed by the part granted over the part reserved go with the former, and the transferor is also entitled to exercise the rights of easements of necessity over the transferred land. Question of this character frequently arises in cases of partition of the premises. See Kadombini v. Kali Kumar, 26 Cal. 516; Charu v. Dokawri, 8 Cal. 956; Bolye v. Lalmoni, 14 Cal. 797; Purshotam v. Durgoji, 14 Bom. 452 (454); Attar Singh v. Jawahir, 60 P.R. 1888; Sultani v. Ram Saran, 49 P.R. 1900. It is only the easements of necessity or continuous easements that pass by implication of law—Polden v. Bastard, L.R. 1 Q.B. 156 (161). And if the easements are not easements of necessity, the transferor cannot exercise them against the transferee unless they are expressly reserved to the transferor in the deed of conveyance—Chunilal v. Manishankar, 18 Bom. 616; Attar v. Jawahir, supra; Wheeldom v. Burrows, 12 Ch. D. 81.

An easement is extinguished when either the dominant or the servient heritage is completely destroyed (Indian Easements Act, sec. 45), or when the same person becomes entitled to the absolute ownership of the whole of the dominant and servient heritages (Ibid, sec. 46).

77. Rents and profits :—This section speaks of rents and profits accruing after the transfer. The right to recover rents and profits which have accrued to the property prior to the date of assignment does not pass with the property unless the right is expressly conveyed—Ganesh v. Shannarain, 6 Cal. 213; Bhogilal v. Jethalal, 30 Bom. L.R. 1588, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 51, 114 I.C. 262; Muthu v. Neevanathi, 12 L.W. 44, 58 I.C. 383; Poongavanam v. Subramanya, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 601, (1951) 1 M.L.J. 601. Such arrears of rent are a debt or actionable claim and if they are to be transferred, they must be assigned separately, ibid. As to profits that accrued due prior to sale, it cannot be said that they are subsidiary to the enjoyment of the property. It cannot be said that to make a sale operative and effective, the right to collect past profits must be conveyed to the vendee—Chandrasekaralingam v. Nagabhushanam, 53 M.L.J. 342, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 817, 104 I.C. 409. The purchaser of a village is not entitled to execute decrees which relate to rents and profits which had accrued prior to the transfer—Onkardas v. Shabaj, 1 N.L.R. 48.

Where a mortgage deed provided that the property mentioned therein was mortgaged with "all the appurtenances to the said premises belonging to and all the estate, right, title and interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of the mortgagors into and upon the said premises unto the mortgagees subject to the proviso for redemption hereinafter contained": held that the mortgagee was entitled as a secured creditor to the rents and profits of the land and that by reason of this section the rents and profits arising out of the mortgaged land in the hands of the receiver appointed pending the mortgage suit would form part of the mortgage—Ma Joo v. Collector, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 321, 12 Rang. 437; see also Ashgar v. Mehdi Hussain, 30 Cal. 556, 30 I.A. 71.

78. "Things attached to the earth" :—For the meaning of the term 'attached to the earth' see Notes under section 3.

Trees, crops :—The title to trees and shrubs passes with the transfer of proprietary rights in the land—Fitrat Hussain v. Liaquat Ali, I.L.R. 1939 All. 518 (F.B.), 1939 A.L.J. 281, A.I.R. 1939 All. 291 (294) (F.B.). See also Yakub Ali v. Tajammul Hussain, A.I.R. 1932 All. 653, 143 I.C. 247. Trees and shrubs being rooted to the earth are deemed to be 'attached' thereto, and so long as they are attached they form part of the soil to which they are attached, hence the sale of a house and compound would comprise the trees and growing crops thereon unless they are expressly expected—Faquir Sonar v. Khuderam, 2 N.W.P. 251; Land Mortgage Bank v. Vishnu, 2 Bom. 670 (673); Pandurang v. Bhimrav, 22 Bom. 610 (611); Ramlinga v. Samiappa, 13 Mad. 15 (16); Iqbal Husen v. Nand Kishore, 24 All. 294 (297). A lease of land carries with it to the tenant a right to the trees standing on the demised land so as to entitle him to their usufruct—Shaik Mohammad Ali v. Bolakee, 24 W.R. 330. A tenant at fixed rates has a transferable right in his holding which includes a transferable right in the trees growing thereon—Harbans Lal v. Maharaja of Benares, 23 All. 126. In the absence of any special provision in a lease granted before the T. P. Act came into force, the property in the trees planted by the lessee after a kaimi lease had been granted did not vest in the landlord—Mofiz v. Rashik, 37 Cal. 815. But in the case of a lease for a limited period of waste land, for the purpose of cultivation, the lessee could only cut trees growing on the land for the purpose of clearance and cultivation or for repairs, but he had no right to fell or carry away for sale unassessed forest timber growing on the demised land—Rustomji v. Collector of Tana, 11 M.I.A. 295.

The right to the growing crops passes by the sale unless there is some provision to the contrary, and in the case of a Court sale the right to possession of the crops accrues from the date of the delivery of possession of the land—Suptd. & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. Bhagirath, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 610, 38 C.W.N. 854, 59 C.L.J. 482. Where in execution of a pre-emption decree possession is delivered to the pre-emptor from the purchaser and the crops are still standing on the land, they pass with the land, Chela Ram v. Gopi Chand, A.I.R. 1942 Pesh 88.

Bamboo trees standing on the land are "attached to the earth" and pass to the transferee upon a transfer of the land—Jagmohan v. Emp., 13 P.L.T. 519, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 344 (345).

Groves :—In the case of a sole proprietor he cannot have inferior rights as grove-holder as well as full proprietary rights as a zemindar in the land in which he has planted a grove. His rights in the groves merge completely in his zemindary rights. The trees pass to the purchaser with the auction-sale of the zemindary—Bhoop Singh v. Sri Ram, I.L.R. 1940 All. 599, 1940 A.L.J. 443, A.I.R. 1940 All. 427. See also Khan Chand v. Mt. Chandan, 24 I.C. 81 and Hasan Ali v. Azharul Hasan, 47 All. 45. If the zemindar elects to sell a part of his zemindary holding retaining his entire share in the grove land that entire share continues to appertain to his remaining share in the village. Hence, if the remaining share of the zemindary is sold at an auction-sale, his entire share in the grove land passes to the auction-purchaser; Raj Narain v. Imam Reza, I.L.R. 1940 All. 667, 1940 A.L.J. 587, A.I.R. 1940 All. 457.

Buildings :—The maxim of English law that quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit has at the most a limited application in India where there exists a rule as a part of the customary law that the ownership of a superstructure may exist in one person and the ownership of the soil in another—Mritunjai v. Hinga, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 468 145 I.C. 627; Narayan v. Jatindra, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 135, 54 Cal. 669, 54 I.A. 218. So, in order to make a house erected upon the land as well as the land itself subject to the Government's power of sale for arrears of revenue, special words indicating the intention of the Legislature to make the building subject to sale would be necessary—Narayan v. Jatindra, supra, at pp. 137-38; Ismail Kani v. Nazarali, 27 Mad. 211 (214); In re Thakoor Ch. Paramanick, B.L.R. Supp. Vol. 595 (F.B.). In the last cited case their Lordships observed: "We think it clear that according to the usages and customs of the country, buildings and other such improvements made on land do not, by the mere accident of their attachment to the soil, become the property of the owner of the soil; and we think it should be laid down as a general rule that if he who makes the improvement is not a mere trespasser, but is in possession under any bona fide title or claim of title, he is entitled either to remove the materials, restoring the land to the state in which it was before the improvement was made, or to obtain compensation for the value of the building, if it is allowed to remain for the benefit of the owner of the soil, the option of taking the building or allowing the removal of the material remaining with the owner of the land in those cases in which the building is not taken down by the builder during the continuance of any estate he may possess—"per Sir Barnes Peacock delivering the judgment of the Full Bench at p. 598.

On the sale of a building only the land on which it stands does not pass—Katkar Jute Mills v. Calcutta Match Works, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 133. A life tenant executed two mortgages. The mortgage deed provided that any future building that might be erected on the mortgaged land by the mortgagor would remain security for the mortgage money. On the death of the life tenant, Held: that the mortgage could be enforced against the structure, because the remainderman on the death of the life tenant got the land but not the structure—Venkatasubbiah v. Thirupurasundari, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 185.

According to the Mahomedan law also the owner of land on whose property another person has built without his consent is not entitled to the building as having become attached to the land, but is only entitled to have the building removed and the land restored to the original state—Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs v. Charlesworth, Pulling & Co., 26 Bom. 1 (P.C.).

But where the deeds of mortgage and sale certificate in respect of a zemindary contained no words of exception and reservation and were otherwise apt for the purpose, they conveyed all the interest in the zemindary which was possessed by the former owner including his interest in the houses on that land and in the profit rents derived from them in the absence of words showing an intention to retain them—Syed Ashgar v. Syed Mahomed, 30 Cal. 556 (P.C.), 30 I.A. 71 (75). If a zemindar sells his zemindary share in a village it may be presumed that he sells the property with all his interests therein if there are no words in the deed showing an intention to retain or exclude the house therein—Balaram v. Ganga, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 358 (359), 93 I.C. 287. Where immoveable property is mortgaged a theatre erected by the mortgagor or other fixtures pass to the mortgagee—MacLeod v. Kissan, 30 Bom. 250; Hari Pada v. Anath, 22 C.W.N. 758 (759), 44 I.C. 211; George v. South Indian Bank Ltd., A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 294. The "rights and interests" of a zemindar in a certain village were sold in execution of a decree. At the time of the sale a certain building was his property qua zemindar, held that in the absence of a proof that such building was excluded from sale, the sale passed the building to the auction purchaser—Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali, 4 All. 381.

A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has however held in a recent case (Allsop, J. dissenting) that the residential house of a zemindary is a separate unit and in no sense a part and parcel of the proprietary right owned by him in the mahal. Hence on transfer of the proprietary interest of zemindar in the mahal in execution of a mortgage decree against him, his residential house in the abadi site, unless it is included in the mortgage itself, cannot pass to the transferee under this section which has no application to compulsory sales in execution of a decree or to transfers of undivided shares in land—Umrao Singh v. Kacheru Singh, A.I.R. 1939 All. 415 (428) (F.B.), I.L.R. 1939 All. 607, 1939 A.L.J. 308. The residential house of a zamindar is not necessarily appurtenant to the Zamindary and it must be deemed to have remained the property of the Zamindar on the transfer of the Zamindary unless it is proved that the house was intended to be transferred along with the rest of the zamindary—Deota Din v. Gur Prasad, A.I.R. 1955 All. 292 (F.B.).

Agricultural fixtures :—The purchaser of lands irrigated by a tank becomes entitled to the use of the water of the tank for the purpose of irrigating the lands—Venkata v. Secretary of State, 12 M.L.J. 432. The grant of a village with all “wells, tanks and waters” within its boundaries does not necessarily pass to the grantee an artificial channel which was in existence before the grant of the village and which ran through that and two other villages and in enjoyment of which those villagers were equally interested—Ambalavana v. Secretary of State, 28 Mad. 539.

Although an agricultural tenant may possibly be justified in digging up shells for cultivating the land properly and in a husbandman-like manner, the property in the shells is not in him, but in the landlord; and in the absence of a local custom, the tenant has no right to convert the shells so dug up to his own use—Chaladom v. Kakkath Kunhambu, 25 Mad. 669 (671); Tucker v. Linger, L.R. 8 A.C. 508; Elwes v. Briggs Gas Co., 33 Ch. D. 562. The grant of a village with ‘water’ does not include flowing water in the river passing through the village—S. N. Ranade v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 24.

Minerals :—The rights of the grantee of a land to the minerals underground must depend upon the terms of the deeds by which they are conveyed or reserved—Rowbotham v. Wilson, 8 H.L.C. 348 (at p. 360). The Zemindar is presumed to be the owner of the mineral rights appertaining to a tenure, in the absence of evidence that he parted with them. Therefore, on the grant of a mokarari lease by the Zemindar, the mineral rights do not by implication pass to the tenant—Hari Narayan v. Sriram, 37 Cal. 723 (P.C.) (reversing Sriram v. Hari Narayan, 33 Cal. 54, and practically overruling Meghlal v. Rajkumar, 34 Cal. 358; Tituram v. Cohen, 33 Cal. 203 (P.C.); Giridhari v. Megh Lal, 45 Cal. 87 (P.C.); Sashi Bhusan v. Jyoti Prasad, 44 I.A. 46. This principle applies as well to rent-free grants as to grants of tenures at fixed rents—Raghunath v. Durga Prasad, 47 Cal. 95 (P.C.). “A long series of recent decisions by the Board has established that if a claimant to sub-soil rights holds under the Zamnidar or by a grant emanating from him, even though his powers may be permanent, heritable and transferable, he must still prove the express inclusion of the sub-soil rights; Gobinda Narayan Singh v. Sham Lal Singh, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 89, 58 I.A. 125, 131 I.C. 753 and see cases cited there"—H. V. Low & Co. v. Jyoti Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 299 (301), 35 C.W.N. 1246, 58 I.A. 392, 135 I.C. 632. But the permanent tenure holder may acquire right to the minerals by adverse possession—Onkarmal Agarwalla v. Bireswar Hazra, 61 C.W.N. 970. Minerals necessarily pass with the rights to the surface unless there is express or implied reservation in grant—Raja Anand Brahma Shah v. State of Uttar Pradesh, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1081.

Sub-soil rights :—Sub-soil rights in a tenure are not granted, unless an express grant is made. Of course the tenant has a right to make bricks for his own domestic or agricultural purposes. But unless the tenant has acquired by grant or by adverse possession a right of ownership in the sub-soil, the digging of earth for bricks to be taken away from the area of the tenure and disposed of to strangers is an appropriation of the corpus of the grant which in India a tenure-holder is not entitled to make—Purnendu v. Narendra, A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 31, 23 P.L.T. 662.

Factory includes machinery :—On a mortgage of a factory (which is immoveable property) the fixed machinery would also be comprised within the factory—see Amratlal v. Keshavlal, 28 Bom. L.R. 939, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 495 (496), 98 I.C. 696. But see Muni Lal v. Kishore Chand, 28 P.L.R. 325, 103 I.C. 742, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 373 (374).

79. House and its easements :—The transfer of a house passes with it the easements annexed thereto. Thus, where a person has a right to use a drain or passage as incidental to his property, such right may be enjoyed at all times by any person who may be placed in his shoes in regard to the property. So, a tenant may also enjoy that right—Amjudee Begum v. Syed Ahmad, 6 W.R. 314. The purchaser of a house acquires the right to the use of the way over a definite path communicating with the house, which the vendor of the house had been enjoying—Nabeen Chander v. Bhooban Chander, 15 W.R. 526.

The phrase "easements annexed thereto" in this section refers to those easements which at and prior to the transfer were existing easements, for instance, a right of way over a field belonging to a different owner by which alone a house could be approached. It does not refer to an easement which first came into existence as a consequence of transfer—Ahmad v. Dhonfa, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 179 (180), 171 I.C. 496.

80. Doors, windows, etc. :—Doors and window shutters of a pucca building form part of the immoveable property and have no separate existence—Peru Bepari v. Bonuo, 11 Cal. 164 (166); Queen-Empress v. Shaikh Ibrahim, 13 Mad. 518.

The enumeration of the words "locks, keys, bars, etc." corresponds to fitting or permanent fixtures to the house. The words "other things provided, etc." do not include a right of access by a staircase when the ownership of the staircase itself is not claimed and the right of way is not an easement of necessity—Ahmad v. Dhondba, supra.

House does not include machinery :—In cases where business is carried on in the premises, and the sale is only of the premises and not of the business as a going concern nor of the premises together with the fixtures of machinery, prima facie all that the purchaser is entitled to are the buildings. It can hardly be the intention of the parties when they sell the building alone without reference to the machinery or the business, that the purchaser should get the valuable machinery in the building by calling them fixtures and by claiming to get them under that head. The technical English law of fixtures is not applicable to India. The provisions as to fixtures are contained in sec. 8 of the T. P. Act, under which the transfer of a house carries with it "all other things provided for permanent use". A machinery brought into a house for carrying on a business is not a thing provided for the permanent use of the house and is not necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the same. Therefore, on a sale of the house the machinery does not pass to the purchaser—Narayana v. Balaguruswami, 45 M.L.J. 385, 79 I.C. 838, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 187 (188); Veerappa v. Ma Tin, 4 Bur. L.J. 52, 88 I.C. 1011, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 250.

81. Debt—Securities :—The words used in the penultimate clause of this section are "debt or other actionable claim"; consequently, a debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property does not come under this clause, as it is not actionable claim. But a difficulty arises with regard to the application of this clause to a promissory-note secured by deposit of title-deeds. In a Madras case it has been held that where a promissory-note secured by a deposit of title-deeds was endorsed over to the plaintiff for collection, and title-deeds were also delivered over to him, and the plaintiff brought a suit to enforce the equitable mortgage, held that along with the transfer of the promissory-note-debt by the endorsement the equitable mortgage passed thereunder to the transferee by operation of this section, and the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the equitable mortgage, and not to sue upon the promissory-note alone—Cunniah v. Gopala Chettiar, 1919 M.W.N. 613, 52 I.C. 879. In this case, the endorsement was for collection and hence the endorsement of the pro-note was sufficient to pass the security. But if the endorsement is for value, it amounts to a sale, and a sale of a mortgage-debt (even though it is a promissory-note-debt secured by an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds) can be made only by a registered instrument. Consequently, if the promissory-note is simply transferred by endorsement, without the transferor taking care to transfer the mortgage right by a registered instrument, the debt and the security will get dissociated, and the security will cease. The transferee will get only the right to the debt but not to security. Section 8 cannot apply to such a case, because that section applies only to a debt or other actionable claim, and not to a mortgage-debt—Ehumalai v. Balakrishna, 44 Mad. 965 (969) (distinguishing Cunniah v. Gopala, supra). In another Madras case, however, Wallis, C.J., went to the length of saying that even if a promissory-note secured by deposit of title-deeds was transferred by mere endorsement, this section operated to pass the right to the security along with the right to the debt—Perumal v. Perumal, 44 Mad. 196. But this case has been dissented from in 44 Mad. 965, supra. See Note 356 under sec. 59, post.

If the debt is merged in a decree, the transfer of the decree does not carry with it the securities of the debt, and the purchaser is not entitled to maintain a suit on the securities. Thus, the purchaser of a simple money-decree passed on a simple mortgage-bond does not acquire a lien on the property mortgaged—Ganpat v. Sarupi, 1 All. 446 (447). But it has been held by the Patna High Court that where a decretal debt is transferred by a registered instrument, the securities therefor are also transferred to the transferee—Bhagirath v. Jamuna, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 211.

The stipulation for payment of interest upon arrears of rent is an ordinary incident of a tenancy in this country, unless there is something unusual in the stipulation, and as a rule, it attaches to the tenancy so that a purchaser of the tenancy will also be bound by the stipulation—Raj Narain v. Panna, 30 Cal. 213.

9. A transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law.

Oral transfer.

Scope :—This section does not in terms apply to charges, for a charge is not a "transfer of property"—Bapurao v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 117, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 802.

83. Transfer cannot be made otherwise than under this Act:—

After this Act comes into force, a transfer of immoveable property within this Act cannot be effected in any manner not prescribed by this Act. Thus, where the Act requires a transfer to be effected only by means of a registered instrument, it cannot be effected in any other manner, e.g., by filing a petition to the Collector admitting the transfer, or by the admission recorded in a registered mortgage not being itself the deed of transfer, or by mere mutation of names or change of possession in favour of the transferee—Immudipattam v. Periya Dorasami, 24 Mad. 377 (P.C.); Bishen Lal v. Ghaziuddin, 23 All. 175. Title to land cannot pass by mere admission where the statute requires a deed. Therefore, the mere execution of a baziwada (release or relinquishment) by a benamidar which contains an undertaking not to interfere with the plaintiff's possession cannot itself give or transfer title to the property from the benamidar to the plaintiff (real owner)—Keshri Mull v. Sukan Ram, 12 Pat. 616, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 264 (266).

Unlike the Statute of Frauds, the T. P. Act adopts it as a general principle in this section that a transfer may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law—Arumugham v. Subramaniam, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 882 (892), I.L.R. 1937 Mad. 638, 171 I.C. 444 (F.B.).

Punjab :—No doubt oral transfers of any value are valid outside the municipal and cantonment limits in the Punjab, but when the transaction is intended to be a transfer by writing, it cannot be treated as an oral sale—Mt. Shankri v. Melkha Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 407 (F.B.) at p. 410. Delivery of possession is not in itself conclusive evidence of an oral transfer—Ibid.

84. Where writing not necessary:—A relinquishment or surrender by a Government ryot to the Government of the properties included in his patta is neither a mortgage nor a sale, nor a gift, nor a lease, as defined in this Act and is not by law required to be in writing or in any of the modes prescribed by this Act—Fowler v. Secretary of State, 13 L.W. 230, 61 I.C. 852. Similarly relinquishment or surrender by a limited owner under the Hindu law may be effected by any voluntary act which may operate as her civil death—Mt. Akhaj v. Arjun Koeri, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 67. Mother may relinquish her interest in the joint family property without a written instrument—Ramdas Chimna v. Pralhad Deoras, A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 74.

A surrender of a lease is not a transfer and need not be in writing—Brojonath v. Mameshwar, 28 C.L.J. 220, 46 I.C. 100; Elias Meyer v. Monoranjan, 22 C.W.N. 441, 44 I.C. 297; Fowler v. Secretary of State, supra.

A transfer made in compromise of a claim is neither a sale nor a gift nor an exchange and no writing is necessary under the T. P. Act to validate the same, though such transfer may relate to immoveable property—Thiruvengada Chariar v. Ranganatha, 13 M.L.J. 500.

A partition of joint family property is not an exchange and is not by law required to be in writing—Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503, 3 I.C. 247; Ma Sein Nyun v. Maung U., 25 I.C. 498; Peddu Reddiar v. Kothanda Reddi, A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 419.

The creation of an easement is not a transfer thereof, and therefore it can be created by oral agreement, without requiring any writing—Sital Chandra v. Delanney, 20 C.W.N. 1158 (1164), 34 I.C. 450.

A grant of immoveable property by way of guzara; not being a grant of the corpus, but only of the right to enjoy the usufruct, need not necessarily be in writing—Gajraj v. Indarpal, 21 O.C. 360, 49 I.C. 406.

A transfer of land by a husband to be enjoyed by his wife during his life-time in discharge of future maintenance is not a gift or sale and may be made without writing—Madam Pillai v. Badrakali, 45 Mad. 612 (F.B.). If an owner orally agrees to settle some properties in consideration of marriage and thereafter delivers possession to the settlee, the transaction is a valid transfer under sec. 9—Serandaya Pillai v. Sankaralingam Pillai, (1959) 2 M.L.J. 502.

Where a purchase is made by a joint decree-holder in his own name, other joint decree-holders are beneficially interested in the purchase, and their right which is short of ownership can be relinquished without a written instrument—Lal Singh v. Mt. Chotey, A.I.R. 1933 All. 854 (1934) A.L.J. 107.

There is no express provision of law that a charge can be created only by a document. Consequently a valid charge can be created orally. But if a charge is created by a document, it must be registered where the charge is for a sum in excess of Rs. 100—Kuppuswamy v. Rasappa, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 865, 44 M.L.W. 438.

To enable parties to come to an agreement to treat a sale as a mortgage by a subsequent agreement, no writing is necessary—Narsingdas v. Radhakisan, A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 425.

85. Where writing is necessary :—Writing is necessary in the case of the following transactions :—

(a) Sale of immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards—sec. 54, infra.

(b) Sale of a reversion or other intangible thing—Ibid.

(c) Simple mortgage irrespective of the amount secured—Sec. 59, infra.

(d) All other mortgages securing Rs. 100 or upwards—Ibid.

(e) Leases of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent—Sec. 107, post. But see Sec. 107 proviso; Sec. 117, post; and Sec. 17 (d) proviso, of Act XVI of 1908 (Registration Act) for exemptions.

(f) Exchange (subject to the same rules as sale)—Sec. 118, post.

(g) Gift of immoveable property—Sec. 123, post.

(h) Transfer of an actionable claim—Sec. 130, post.

(i) Notice of transfer of actionable claim—Sec. 131, post.

10. Where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation absolutely restraining the transferee or any person claiming under him from parting with or disposing of his interest in the property, the condition or limitation is void, except in the case of a lease where the condition is for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him: Provided that property may be transferred to or for the benefit of a woman (not being a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist), so that she shall not have power during her marriage to transfer or charge the same or her beneficial interest therein.

86. Principle of section :—The rule in this section that a condition of absolute restraint of alienation is void, is founded on the principle of public policy allowing free circulation and disposition of property—Rosher v. Rosher, 26 Ch. D. 801; Renaud v. Gullet, L.R. 2 P.C. 4; Faiyaz Husain v. Nilkanth, 4 O.C. 163. "From the earliest times," observed Lord Justice Fry, "the Courts have always leant against any device to render an estate inalienable. It is the policy of the law always to make estates alienable, and it is immaterial by what device it is attempted to prevent an owner from exercising the power of ownership"—In re Parry & Daggs, 31 Ch. D. 130 (134) (C.A.). It is a general rule of jurisprudence that where an estate in fee is given, a condition in restraint of alienation is a condition repugnant to the nature of the grant and as such inoperative. There can be no doubt, on general principles, that when property is transferred absolutely, it must be transferred with all its legal incidents, and that it is not competent to the grantor to sever from the property those incidents which the law inseparably annexes to it, and thereby to abrogate the law by private agreement. The introduction of a condition against alienation in a grant absolute in its terms has been declared to be equivalent to introducing an exception of the very thing which is of the essence of the grant—Anantha v. Nagamuthu, 4 Mad. 200 (202). It is the principle of English law that where an estate is created for life for a man and afterwards to the heirs of his body, then that will give him an absolute estate, and there is nothing in the T. P. Act which recognises that there can be any remainder left over after the creation of such estate—Raj Deo v. Brahm Deo, A.I.R. 1937 All 235, 168 I.C. 142. A provision in a deed of absolute dedication that the sebit for the time being shall have no power to alienate is void—Ramchandraj Maharaaj v. Lalji Singh, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 305.

87. Application of section :—The provisions of sections 10 and 12 are perfectly general and refer to all transfers—transfer by gift, sale or otherwise. The conditions imposed upon a donee of a gift must, before it can be valid, be consistent with the general principles in regard to conditions in transfers contained in Chapter II of the Act and in particular in sec. 10 thereof—Brij Devi v. Shiva Nanda, I.L.R. 1939 All. 298, 1939 A.L.J. 77, A.I.R. 1939 All. 221. The principle of this section is of universal application and has therefore been applied both to Hindus and Muhammadans—Krishna v. Shanmuga, 6 M.H.C.R. 248; Raja Chunder v. Koor Gobinmanath, 11 B.L.R. 86 (P.C.):

Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (P.C.); Pudmananda v. Hayes, 28 Cal. 720; Bhairon v. Parmeshri, 7 All. 516; Mahram v. Ajudhi, 8 All. 452 (459); Laliyan v. Muhammad Shafi, 34 All. 478 (480); Broughton v. Mercer, 14 B.L.R. 442; Anantha v. Nagamuthu, 4 Mad. 220; Gomti v. Anari, A.I.R. 1929 All. 492, 118 I.C. 152; Muthu Kumara v. Udaya, 33 Mad. 867. In an Oudh case it has been remarked that this section does not apply to cases under the Muhammadan Law—Hanuman v. Abbas, 4 Luck. 452, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 193 (201), 120 I.C. 387.

The principles of this section have been applied to the Punjab although the Act does not apply to that province—Bhawgan Dei v. Secretary of State, (1902) P.L.R. page 518; Nand Singh v. Partab, 76 I.C. 16, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 674.

The provisions of the T. P. Act do not apply to a case governed by the Muhomedan law; but in a gift under that law the provision that the donee shall have no right of transfer is void, and the donee takes an absolute estate—Babu Lal v. Ghansham, A.I.R. 1922 All. 205, 44 All. 633, 70 I.C. 84. Where a Mahomedan makes a gift and stipulates for a condition that is fasid or invalid, the gift is valid and the condition is void—Siddiq v. Wiliyat, A.I.R. 1952 All. 1.

A condition imposing a partial restraint only is not void—Ratanlal v. Ramanujdas, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 187, I.L.R. 1945 Nag. 174; Venkatachallam v. Kabala Murthy, A.I.R., 1955 Mad. 350.

Compromise, family settlement etc. :—A restriction in the power of alienation is void, even though the restriction is contained in a compromise—Partab v. Nand Singh, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 729, 85 I.C. 323. Thus, where one of the terms of a compromise embodied in a decree was that the party to whom a house was conveyed under it was not at liberty to transfer it without the consent and permission of the other party to the compromise and decree, held that such a condition was void as being a restraint on alienation and the house could be transferred in disregard of that condition—Khaiiali Ram v. Raghunath, 3 A.L.J. 621. Although this section applies only to cases where the restraint on alienation is annexed to a transfer of property and as such does not apply where the restraint is contained in a compromise by way of family settlement, still a restraint on alienation embodied in a compromise is invalid on general principles of law—Nageshar v. Mata Prasad, 25 O.C. 189, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 236 (244), 69 I.C. 730, approved in Mata Prasad v. Nageshar, 47 All. 883 (P.C.) A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 272, 91 I.C. 370; Venkatachallam v. Kabala Murthy, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 350. Similarly a condition absolutely restraining alienation, contained in a deed of partition, is void—Jagannathpuri v. Godabai, A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 25. In an Oudh case it has been held that since a family settlement is not a transfer, it is unnecessary as to whether the restriction imposed in the deed of settlement is an absolute or partial restraint on alienation. In a family settlement, every attempt must be made to give effect to the wishes of the parties to the agreement—Hanuman v. Abbas, 4 Luck. 452, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 193 (201), 120 I.C. 387. But see, Venkatachallam v. Kabala Murthy, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 350 where it has been held that the principle underlying sec. 10 applies to a family settlement.

Where a compromise decree contained a term against alienation of certain property and gave the other party right to its possession on such alienation, the decree was not a nullity in spite of the fact that the term was opposed to this section. It was merely contrary to law and bound the parties thereto, unless it was set aside by taking proper proceedings—Govind v. Murlidhar, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 412. A suit was compromised. The deed of compromise recited that A would remain in possession of certain land, that A would not be entitled to mortgage or sell and that on the death of A without sons the land would revert to B. Held in a suit by the successor-in-interest of B against the alienee from A's alienee: (1) that the deed gave an absolute estate to A: (2) that the transaction embodied in the deed was a transfer and (3) that the restriction on alienation was hit by sec. 10. Where an agreement contains a condition restraining alienation and the agreement is embodied in a deed of partition the agreement is not hit by sec. 10—Bai Mangu v. Bai Vijli, A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 81. If a widow under a family settlement between her and husband's brother obtains a life interest in her husband's share without any power of alienation, an alienee from the widow acquires no interest—Bulkan Sah v. Guneval Devi Nathani, A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 214.

A compromise between A and B had two main clauses. No. 1 provided that B was to hold the property for his life with no right to transfer it except for necessity (Zarurat) and unless his other property proved insufficient. No. 2 provided that if B died without leaving any heirs (aulad) of his body or legal widow, then A would become owner and the other heirs of B would have no right to succeed: held that the restraint was void and unenforceable under this section—Raja Deo v. Brahmdao, A.I.R. 1937 All. 235 (236), 168 I.C. 142.

Where upon an objection by the collaterals of the donor to a gift of property in favour of a pichhlag son an agreement was made between the parties that the donee or his descendants would not have the right of sale or mortgage over the property: it was held that the agreement amounted to a compromise and not a transfer, so the restriction on alienation was not hit by this section, and the agreement was not contrary to the principles of equity or any provision of law—Gurdit v. Babu, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 282.

Restraint imposed by law:—Restraints on alienation imposed by statute are binding upon all persons. There is an essential distinction between restraints on transfers imposed by the Legislature, and restrictions imposed by contract or decree. The general policy of the law, no doubt, is to promote the free alienation and circulation of property and to discourage the introduction of restrictions calculated to interfere with the fulfilment of these objects. But cases may and do arise in which for the protection of particular interests it is deemed expedient by the Legislature to depart from this general principle and to fetter the privilege of free alienations. In such cases, the prohibition against transfer being founded upon considerations of public interest must be treated as absolute—Wazir Muhammad v. Har Prasad, 15 O.C. 67, 13 I.C. 613 (615). For instances of such restrictions see clause (i) of sec. 6.

88. Property :—Life-interest :—The life-interest of a widow in property given to her for maintenance is just as much property as an absolute interest therein, and any condition annexed to a grant of such an estate absolutely restraining the widow from disposing of that interest, is void under this section—Ram Chandra v. Gopinath, 29 I.C. 251. But see Brijlal v. Smt. Soma, cur. L.J. 556 (Punj).

89. Partial restraint :—This section is confined only to those cases of transfer which are made subject to a limitation absolutely restraining the transferee from alienating his interest in the property. Thus, if A transfers his property to B, and imposes a condition that B will never alienate it, the condition is void—Amiruddaula v. Nateri, 6 M.H.C.R. 356. But although sec. 10 renders void all conditions which absolutely restrain the transferee from disposing of the property, it is wholly silent as to the validity of qualified restraints on alienations. See Mukhopadhyaya's Law of Perpetuities, p. 296. A restraint on alienation qualified as to time may be valid—Chamaru v. Sona, 14 C.L.J. 303, 16 C.W.N. 99 (102), 11 I.C. 301. But see Renaud v. Gillet, L.R. 2 (P.C.), where it was held that a restraint on alienation for 20 years was invalid on the general principles of jurisprudence. A condition restraining the donee from alienating the property to any person outside the family is not invalid—Muhammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 158. But see Gayasi Ram v. Shahabuddin, A.I.R. 1935 All. 493, where it has been held that such condition in a sale-deed is contrary to this section and is void. See also Mudara v. Murthu, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 33 : Venkatarammanna v. Brammanna, 4 Mad. H.C.R. 345. Where a patnidar granted a darpatni lease, wherein it was provided that the darpatnidar should have full rights to grant leases or create incumbrances subject to the restriction that if the darpatni was sold for arrears of rent, the subordinate titles created by the darpatnidar should come to an end, held that there was no absolute restraint on alienation by the darpatnidar. Such a condition is not invalid—Madhusudan v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. Ltd., 45 Cal. 940 (945), 27 C.L.J. 511. Where in a deed of gift the donee promised that he was not to make a transfer (by way of sale, gift or mortgage) of the gifted property without the knowledge, consent and permission of the donor, and that if he did so, he would return the property to the donor, held that there was no absolute restraint on the power of alienation—Ma Yin v. Ma Chit, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 226 (228).

90. Restraint on alienation—Examples :—A restraint on alienation which is absolute in its terms, and extended over a period of indefinite duration, is none the less an absolute restraint on alienation within the meaning of this section and is legally invalid. Thus, where a reversioner agreed not to alienate the property during the lifetime of the widow, held that the restraint was invalid—Nageshwar v. Mata Prasad, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 236 (244). A condition that the donee will not have power to alienate the property during the life-time of the donor's grandson is invalid—Lali Jan v. Muhammad Shafi, 34 All. 478 (480).

Restrictions on the power to alienate land with full proprietary rights is void, though it is the result of a compromise—Partap v. Nand, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 729.

Where by a deed of lease executed by a father in favour of his daughter, she was constituted 'malik' in possession by right of mīrash talukdhari of several taluks but subject to the condition that neither the grantee nor her heirs should transfer the taluks by gifts except to the extent of 5 pakhis, and that only for a religious purpose, held that the words contained in the lease deed conferred an absolute estate on the daughter, and the attempt to restrict the powers of an absolute owner was repugnant to the absolute estate and therefore void—Sarajubala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179. Where property was transferred to a Hindu, and the deed recited that he should enjoy it from generation to generation but that he should have no power of transferring it in any shape, and that it should not be sold in auction for any debt payable by him, and that any transfer or sale made in violation of such condition should be invalid and should entitle the transferor to claim possession of the property, held that the restraints on alienation could not be given effect to—Bhairon v. Parmesri, 7 All. 516; Ashutosh v. Doorga, 5 Cal. 438 (444) (P.C.). A Mahomedan father during his son's minority gave certain property to him, and, on the delivery of possession, got from him a document stipulating that the latter (son) would not alienate the property: Held, that by the Muhammadan Law as well as by the general principles of law, such a restriction on alienation, especially after the gift had become complete, is absolutely void—Amiruddaula v. Nateri, 6 M.H.C.R. 356. Where the parties to a family partition deed entered into an agreement to the effect that the share of each issue-less members should not be alienated but be distributed among the remaining members, held that such an agreement was void—Venkataramanna v. Brahmanna, 7 M.H.C.R. 345.

A provision in a partition deed prohibiting alienation, except with the consent of other co-sharers, is repugnant to this section and is therefore invalid—Mudara v. Muthu, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 33. A partition deed between the father and the sons provided that certain residential houses should be held by them as tenants-in-common and restrained the sons during as well as after the father's life time from alienating their shares to a stranger to the family, but gave a right to sell within the family at a maximum price which was far below the real value of the share of each son. There was no obligation to buy at that price. Held, the restriction on alienation amounted to an absolute restriction and therefore was void under this section—Trichinopoly Vartaga Sangam, Ltd. v. Shanmugasundaram, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 769 (S.B.).

A deed of gift stating that the donor had put the donee in proprietary possession of the property recited that the donee or his successor had no right to transfer the property and that the donor and his successor would have a right to revoke the gift in case of transfer by the donee: held, that the condition restraining alienation was void and inoperative—Brij Devi v. Shiva Nanda, I.L.R. 1939 All. 298, 1939 A.L.J. 77, A.I.R. 1939 All. 221.

Condition to sell the property at a fixed price:—Where a testator devised an estate to his son providing that if the son or his heirs or devisees should desire to sell the estate during the lifetime of the testator's wife, she should have the option to purchase it at a fixed price (which was one-fifth of the real market value of the estate), it was held that the condition to sell at a fixed price much below its real value was equivalent to an absolute restraint on sale, and as such void—Rosher v. Rosher, 26 Ch. D. 801. See also Dolsing v. Khubchand, cited below.

A condition restraining alienation of the property except to a particular person or persons is void—Teja Singh v. Moti Snigh, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 125; Muschamp v. Bluet, 123 E.R. 1253; In re Mackay, 20 Eq. 186. Thus a testator gave an estate to A with an injunction never to sell it out of the family, but if sold at all, it must be to one of the brothers hereinafter named: Held, that the restriction on alienation was inoperative—Attwater v. Attwater, 18 Beav. 330. On a sale of certain property the vendee executed on the same day a separate instrument by which he agreed that when he or his heirs should want to transfer the property purchased, he or they should sell it to the vendor or his heirs for the same price which he had paid for it, and to no one else; and that any transfer to any other person would be void: Held that the agreement in substance amounted to an absolute restraint on alienation and was unenforceable—Dolsing v. Khub Chand, 64 I.C. 408, 19 A.L.J. 848; Nabin Chandra v. Rajani, 25 C.W.N. 901, 63 I.C. 196 (198); Asghari Begam v. Maula Baksh, A.I.R. 1929 All. 381 (382).

91. Conditions which are valid—Examples:—Where a Hindu widow executed an agreement in favour of her husband's cousins in settlement of disputes in respect of her husband's property, by which she agreed not to lease the property without obtaining their signatures, adding that if the document (of lease) be not signed and consented to by both parties it would be null and void, it was held that the agreement being only a qualified restraint on alienation was valid—Kuldip v. Khetrani, 25 Cal. 869 (871).

A sold his house to B for Rs. 175 and B made an agreement that in case he would transfer the house he would sell it back to A for the same price and to nobody else, unless A declined to purchase it for that price, held that it was merely a personal contract between A and B, it was not void as absolute restraint on alienation and could be enforced against a purchaser who had notice of the contract—Debi Dayal v. Ghasita, A.I.R. 1929 All. 667. Where the defendants made a gift of certain property to the plaintiffs on the condition that the land would be liable to be taken back in the event of the plaintiff transferring it, it was held that the gift was a gift subject to a power of revocation and was not repugnant under this section and sec. 12—Makund v. Rajrup, 4 A.L.J. 708.

Pre-emption:—A stipulation for pre-emption is not void. Thus, a stipulation in a deed of sale to the effect that in the event of the purchaser selling the property he will give the vendor the first offer, is perfectly valid—London and S. W. Ry. Co. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562. Where a wajib-ul-arz says that there is a custom of pre-emption on a transfer of a share, it applies not only to a transfer of a completed share, but also to a portion of it—Rauf Ahmad v. Mt. Fatima Begum, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 116. This subject has been fully discussed in Note 107 to sec. 14 under heading "Personal covenant". A provision reserving a right of pre-emption or pre-mortgage is a valid provision. Thus, a stipulation in a lease deed that should necessities of alienation arise for the lessee (who had permanent rights) the property would be surrendered to the lessor, is valid under this section, and is specifically enforceable against the covenantor and persons claiming under him—Chethu Kutti v. Kunhunni, 9 M.L.T. 484, 9 I.C. 171 (173). Where in execution of a decree for specific performance of a contract to execute a sale deed the Court executes the deed, it does not do so as a vendor, but for and on behalf of the judgment-debtor acting as the machinery of law for enforcing the execution of the deed with the result that the property conveyed by the deed is open to pre-emption—Ram Avadh v. Ghisa Pande, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 611. Where a partition deed states that in case any of the sharers desires to sell his share it shall be sold to whomsoever among the other sharers offers to purchase it, the restriction is not hit by this section—Parameswaran Nair v. Janaki Amma, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 156. Mahmud Ali v. Brikkodar, A.I.R. 1960 Assam, 178.

92. Restraint on alienation by lessees:—The exclusion of leases from the main provisions of secs. 10 and 12 is based on a very definite principle. Under sec. 105 "a lease of immovable property is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property." It is thus not a transfer of property itself which remains the property of the owner—Shiba Prasad v. Lekhraj Shewakaram & Co., A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 162. The holder of an impartible estate made a grant of certain pargana to a junior member of the family who was to enjoy and possess the income of the pargana in perpetuity in lieu of maintenance. The grant was made inter alia with the condition: "No one would be competent to get this property attached or sold for your debts. If the said property is sold by auction for your debts, then this settlement will stand cancelled and the said property shall come in my khash possession": Held that there was no absolute restraint on alienation by the grantee, ibid.

It is permissible for a lessor to fetter the liberty of alienation which the lessee would otherwise possess (and this principle is applicable even to grants of permanent leases)—Vyankatraya v. Shivram, 7 Bom. 256 (260); Subbaraya v. Krishna, 6 Mad. 159; Tamaya v. Timapa, 7 Bom. 262 (265); Deputy Commissioner v. Md. Amir, 5 C.L.J. 149, 46 I.C. 73. A landlord is entitled to insert a stipulation in a permanent lease providing for the fulfilment of certain conditions without which a transfer by the lessee would not be binding on the landlord—Abdul Rashid v. Sachidananda, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 523; Dinabandhu v. W. C. Banerjee, 19 Cal. 774; Nabijan v. Neburali, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 506.

Stipulation in a Kabuliyat that if the tenant or his successors gift or sold or otherwise transferred the Kabuliyat lands, the tenant and the transferee would be liable to pay to the landlord as chouth one fourth of the price of the land, otherwise the transfer would not be valid and the landlord would be entitled to Khash possession, are perfectly valid and legal—Chandi Charan v. Tara Nath, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 452, 46 C.W.N. 686. A mortgage by conditional sale followed by a decree for foreclosure and the taking of possession thereunder constituted a transfer within the meaning of the Kabuliyat, and consequently the mortgagee was liable to pay the chouth to the landlord, ibid.

A covenant in a lease forbidding transfer by the lessee is valid and enforceable even when the lessee has not transferred the whole of the property leased but reserved a fraction for himself—Umesh v. Kala Chand, 34 I.C. 516 (Cal.).

But it should be noted that a mere stipulation in a lease that "the lessee shall not transfer his interest to any third person and that such transfer should be void" is not valid; in order that stipulation should be valid under this section it is necessary that such stipulation should be for the benefit of the lessor, i.e., it must be supplemented by a clause that "the lessor shall have a right of re-entry in case of the lessee's breach of the condition against alienation." In other words, if there is a clause in a lease merely stipulating that the lessee should not transfer his interest to any third person, but the lease does not reserve a right of re-entry, the clause is inoperative, in as much as it cannot be said to be a condition for the benefit of the lessor, and an assignment by the lessee of his interest in the lease would not work a forfeiture of the lease—Nilmadhab v. Narottam, 17 Cal. 826; Netrapal v. Kalyan Das, 28 All. 400; Sital Prasad v. Nawab Dildar, 1 P.L.J. 1; Mahananda v. Saratmam, 10 I.C. 374, 14 C.L.J. 585; Basarat v. Manirulla, 36 Cal. 745; Udipi v. Seshamma, 43 Mad. 503; Parmeshri v. Vitappa, 26 Mad. 157; Tamaya v. Timapa, 7 Bom. 262 (265); Madar Saheb v. Sanabawa Gujran Shah, 21 Bom. 195; Annada v. Dasarath, 40 I.C. 444 (Cal.); Khetra Nath v. Baharli, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 228. The landlord's remedy in the case of a breach of such stipulation would be a suit for damages only and not a suit for ejectment—Sital Prosad v. Nawab Dildar, 1 P.L.J. 1, 33 I.C. 408; Tamaya v. Timapa, 7 Bom. 262. See notes under sec. 111, clause (g).

But where there is no restraint on alienation, a covenant for the benefit of the lessor need not reserve a right of entry. Thus, a covenant in a lease that the transferee from the lessee, whoever he may be, will have to pay a chouth (one-fourth of the price of the land) to the lessor, and if it does not pay it the transfer would be void, is a valid covenant for the benefit of the lessor and is operative—Nabjan v. Neburali, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 506, (distinguishing the above cases).

Where a patnidar granted a darpatni lease and it was provided that the darpatnidar should have full rights to grant leases and make settlements of lands, but that all such subordinate interests created by the darpatnidar should be extinguished on a sale of the darpatni mahal for arrears of rent, held that the provision in the darpatni lease was valid as it was obviously for the benefit of the lessor, since his object was to ensure that the property might fetch full value in the event of a sale for arrears of rent—Madhusudan v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. Ltd., 45 Cal. 940 (946). But where in a permanent lease there was a condition that if the lessee or any of his representatives intended to transfer the whole or any portion of the lease, the transfer would be made in favour of the lessors for proper price, that the lessee would not be able to transfer in favour of a third party without the lessor's permission or wishes, that in the case of a transfer to a co-sharer of the lessee, such consent would not be necessary and that in case of any act against the aforesaid conditions, the said act would be invalid, held that the covenant was void and was not binding on the lessee—Sivarna v. Prahlad, 26 C.W.N. 874.

A purchaser from a permanent lessee who had covenanted not to alienate, if recognized by the lessor, is not bound by the covenant against alienation—Khetra Nath v. Baharali, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 228.

Where a clause in a permanent lease provides that in case of transfer by the lessee, so long as the transferee does not establish the relationship of landlord and tenant with the landlord the lessee would remain liable for rent and the clause does not provide for anything being done by the transferee before the transfer can be recognized by the landlord, the relation of landlord and tenant as between the lessor and the transferee is established as soon as the document is executed and registered and the landlord's fees are paid. In such a case if the conditions in the lease are complied with, the transfer is operative and binding on the landlord—Abdul Rashid v. Sachidananda, 43 C.W.N. 938, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 523.

The question whether the vendees or lessees of building sites would be liable to pay liaq-i-chaharan to the zamindar on transfer of the buildings is not a question of custom having the force of law, but one of contract between the zamindar and the person in occupation of the site—Ramai v. Ram Dutt, A.I.R. 1940 All. 314.

93. Involuntary alienations :—A general restriction on assignment does not apply to an assignment by operation of law, taking effect in invitum, as a sale under an execution—Doe v. Carter, 4 R.R. 586; Croft v. Lumley, 27 L.J.Q.B. 32; Golak Nath v. Mathura Nath, 20 Cal. 273. Where according to the terms of the lease, the lessee was not competent to transfer his rights under the lease "by sale, gift or any other manner of alienation," and afterwards the rights of the lessee were sold in execution of a decree, held that the prohibition in the lease against alienation did not apply to an involuntary alienation (execution sale) and that the execution sale passed a good title to the auction purchaser—Golak Nath v. Mathura, 20 Cal. 273; Nilmadhab v. Narottam, 17 Cal. 826; Subbaraya v. Krishna, 6 Mad. 159; In re West Hopetown Tea, Co., 12 All. 192; Hamaya v. Timapa, 7 Bom. 262 (265); Mohendra v. Gagan Chandra, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 471; Promode Ranjan v. Aswini Kumar, 18 C.W.N. 1138, 26 I.C. 23.

Where a compromise decree contained a clause that a party to the compromise should have no power to alienate or encumber the property by gift, mortgage or sale, held that there was no provision in the compromise restraining sale in execution of a decree, and there was nothing to prevent the property from being attached and sold—Bachumal v. Vessimal, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 143.

An arbitrator has no power to make property, which is divisible in law, indivisible for ever—Jafri Begam v. Syed Ali Raza, 23 All. 383.

11. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created absolutely in favour of any person, but the terms of the transfer direct that such interest shall be applied or enjoyed by him in a particular manner, he shall be entitled to receive and dispose of such interest as if there were no such direction.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the right to restrain, for the beneficial enjoyment of one piece of immoveable property, the enjoyment of another piece of such property, or to compel the enjoyment thereof in a particular manner.

11. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created absolutely in favour of any person, but the terms of the transfer direct that such interest shall be applied or enjoyed by him in a particular manner, he shall be entitled to receive and dispose of such interest as if there were no such direction.

Where any such direction has been made in respect of one piece of immoveable property for the purpose of securing the beneficial enjoyment of another piece of such property, nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect any right which the transferor may have to enforce such direction or any remedy which he may have in respect of a breach thereof.

Amendment :—The second para. has been amended by sec. 8 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). See Note 98 below.

Compare this section with sec. 138, Indian Succession Act, 1925.

Secs. 10 and 11 :—The difference between sections 10 and 11 is that while the restriction prohibited by the former section is against the transfer of the interest, the restriction referred to in the latter section is against its free enjoyment.

Scope :—This section applies even if the restriction is for a limited period only—Umrao v. Baldev, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 201 (202). In such a case if the donor meant to grant an absolute estate, he cannot reduce the powers of the owner, but if, on the other hand, it appears that his full intention has been directed towards restriction, it will have to be held, if the restriction is good, that the estate is not absolute. It is necessary to decide what the donor's real intentions were. In order to operate as a valid clause of defeasance, the clause must amount to a definite gift in favour of a definite individual in existence at the time of the gift—Jagmohan v. Sheoraj Kuar, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 49 (F.B.).

94. Principle :—This section recognises the elementary principle that a transferee of property who takes an absolute interest, as for instance, a donee or a purchaser, cannot be restrained in his enjoyment or disposition of it by any condition inserted in the transfer. Such a condition deprives the property of its legal incidents and is inconsistent with or repugnant to the main purpose of the transfer. It is consequently arbitrary and not enforceable in a Court of law—Chamaru v. Sona, 16 C.W.N. 99 (103), 14 C.L.J. 303, 11 I.C. 301. "Notwithstanding the general principle that a donee or legatee can only take what is given him on the terms on which it is given, yet by our law there is a remarkable exception to this general principle. Conditions which are repugnant to the estate to which they are annexed are absolutely void and may consequently be disregarded"—per Lindley, L.J. in Harbin v. Masterman, (1894) 2 Ch. 184 (196).

The principle of this section applies as much to mortgages or leases as to gifts or sales—Mohram v. Ajudhia, 8 All. 452 (459).

95. Restrictions repugnant to interest created :

(a) Condition in a sale :—Where a vendor sold a portion of his property to the vendee by a deed of sale, and on the same date the vendee executed an ikramnama in which he agreed that he would not collect the rents, that he would never demand partition of that portion, and that he would not alienate or mortgage it or otherwise exercise proprietary rights over it, held that the covenant violated the principles enunciated in sections 10 and 11, and was therefore one which no Court would enforce—Mohram v. Ajudhia, 8 All. 452 (455, 456).

Where a vendor makes an absolute conveyance by sale for cash consideration, the stipulation in the sale deed for payment of a certain amount to the vendor out of the profits of the property by way of rent is clear restriction on the enjoyment of the right created absolutely in favour of the vendee and as such illegal—Mt. Shiv Nath Kunwar v. Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 17. When the ownership of a site of a shop is transferred to the vendee, its enjoyment cannot be restricted by conditions, e.g., that the vendee should not convert the shop into two or more—Daulat Ram v. Haveli Shah, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 479.

A condition that neither the grantee nor her heirs should transfer the properties or any part thereof by way of gift except a gift for religious purpose which also should not exceed 5 pakhis of land is repugnant to the absolute estate and is void on that ground—Saraju Bala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179 (182).

(b) Restriction as regards succession :—The Crown has power in British India by a grant of lands to limit their descent in any way it pleases, but a subject has no power to impose upon lands or other property any limitation of descent at variance with the ordinary law applicable—Rajendra v. Rani Baghubans, 45 I.A. 134. Where an absolute estate is granted, but conditions are imposed that the property should not in any case pass to the heirs of the daughters of the grantee, held that the condition is an attempt to alter the legal course of succession to an absolute estate and is void; it does not imply an estate to be determined on the death of the grantee—Sarajubala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179.

(c) Restraint on partition :—A condition in restraint of partition is void. Thus, a provision in a will or gift giving property to some persons, but directing that they shall not divide the property for a certain length of time (e.g., twenty years) is void. The donees may proceed to partition at once—Makoonda v. Ganesh, 1 Cal. 104; Rajendra v. Sham Chand, 6 Cal. 106; Raikishori v. Debendranath, 15 Cal. 409; Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 Cal. 75; Abu Mahammad v. Kaniz Fizza, 28 All. 185. Similarly, an agreement among co-sharers of an estate that their property should remain joint is not enforceable. The right of a co-owner to have partition of his share is an incident of the right of ownership, and an agreement not to partition for an indefinite period would be contrary to that right and therefore invalid—Chandra Sekhar v. Kundan Lal, 31 All. 3 (4); Radhanath v. Taruknath, 3 C.W.N. 126; Ramalinga v. Birupakshi, 7 Bom. 538. But see Rup Singh v. Bhabhuti, 42 All. 30, where it has been held that the members of a joint undivided Hindu family can bind themselves for their own life-time not to claim partition of the joint family property, and a fortiori a similar agreement can be entered into by the remaining members of the family after one member has demanded a partition and separated his share; and what may be effected by an agreement may be effected equally by means of a submission to arbitration followed by an award.

(d) Restraint on alienation for some period :—Where a Hindu widow by a deed of family settlement transferred the properties inherited from her husband to the latter's reversionary heirs, subject to the condition that they should have no right to transfer any immoveable property belonging to the estate during her life-time, held that the condition was void—Chamaru v. Sona, 16 C.W.N. 99 (103), 14 C.L.J. 303, 11 I.C. 301.

(e) Condition as regards residence :—Where an absolute estate is conferred on the grantee, a condition requiring the grantee to reside at a particular place is not of binding effect—Sarajubala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179. Certain lands and a house were given by way of Agrahar gift to a donee and his descendants on condition that he should enjoy the produce of the lands and reside in the house and perform the religious duties, and that in case of the donee abandoning the house or going elsewhere, another person would be substituted in his place. After conforming to the above condition for some time, the donee went to another place and eventually sold the house and lands: Held that the provision as regards residence was not valid and enforceable; and that the sale by the donee was valid—Rukminibai v. Laxmibai, 44 Bom. 304 (313), 22 Bom. L.R. 254, 56 I.C. 361.

(f) A condition postponing enjoyment of the property is void. Where a testator intends to make a present gift of his property to his son (a major) but he intends also that his son should have the ultimate enjoyment of the whole estate in the hands of the trustee after the payment of the legacies, the deprivation of the son of the present enjoyment of the estate and the attempted restriction therein are invalid and must be disregarded—Lloyd v. Webb, 24 Cal. 44 (52). Where an instrument contains recitals that the donor conveyed the property to the donee with power to enjoy the same with all rights, the intention of the donor is to create an absolute estate and any subsequent words which are repugnant to an absolute title must be ignored—Official Receiver v. Samudravijayan, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 509; see also Bhiadus v. Bai Gulab, 49 I.A. 1, 46 Bom. 153 and Saraju Bala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179.

(g) Condition in gift :—Where under a gift deed the donor unconditionally transfers all his rights over certain property to the donee with absolute powers to deal with the same from the date of gift, a subsequent clause in the deed that on the death of the donee the property should not devolve on any of his heirs but would revert to the donor, is repugnant to the absolute estate, and as such is ineffective and wholly void—Subramanian v. Kauni Ammal, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 115.

95A. Postponment of enjoyment :—Where an instrument confers an absolute gift but directs that the property so given shall not be made over to the donee until he has attained a certain age beyond the period of his majority, such direction is inoperative unless the instrument confers an interest in the property upon some person for the intervening period, and the donee is entitled to have the property handed over to him as soon as he attains majority—Mt. Ram Kaur v. Atma Singh, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 404 (407); Husenbhoy v. Ahmedbhoy, 26, Bom. 319; Gosavi v. Rivett-Carnac, 13 Bom. 1463. But where by his will the testator directed that the immediate interest for 13 years in certain properties was not to go to his sons, but was to be dealt with by the trustees in carrying out certain specific trusts, after which period, the properties were to go to the sons absolutely, it was held that the above restraint on the enjoyment of the properties was not bad in law—Prafulla v. Jogendra, 9 C.W.N. 528.

96. Restrictions contained in a decree :—A condition in restraint of alienation of an absolute estate, though it is contained in a decree of the Settlement Court, is void, and such a decree conveys an absolute estate—Lal Sripat v. Bal Basant Singh, 1 O.L.J. 421, 25 I.C. 743.

97. Restrictions which are valid :—Where an intention to make absolute transfer in present of all proprietary right is clear, a condition which derogates from the immediate completeness of the gift is regarded as void. But where the condition may be given effect to without in any way detracting from the immediate completeness of the gift or rather the immediate transfer of the right in the substance of the gift, the condition as well as the gift is valid. Thus, any reservation of the proprietary rights in the corpus would be inconsistent with an intention to make a gift, but the reservation of a right to the usufruct of a portion of the property given would not be inconsistent, if the intention to give the corpus be otherwise manifest—Fakhr Jahan Begam v. Abdul Ghani, 5 O.L.J. 49, 45 I.C. 307. If a man was to give a piece of land to another on condition that the latter should give to the former the whole of the produce of the land in perpetuity, the condition would be bad. But it is otherwise with a gift by A to B subject to the condition that B should pay periodically to A a part of the usufruct of the property; in such a case both the gift and the condition would be invalid. The reason is obvious, for the reservation of an interest by the donor for himself and his heirs does not interfere with the right of property vesting in the transferee by the act of transfer—Lali Jan v. Md. Shafi, 34 All. 478 (480). If a Muhammadan woman gives a property to her son and provides that the donee shall be the absolute owner of half the property with all the powers of an owner, and with regard to the other half he shall also be the owner but must give the income of this portion for the maintenance of the minor grandson of the donor, held that the condition as to the payment of income of one-half of the property for the maintenance of the donor's grandson is valid—Lali Jan v. Md. Shafi, supra.

This section applies where on a transfer of property an interest therein is created absolutely in favour of any person, but it does not apply where a gift is made not of full proprietary right but only of usufruct of land for purposes of maintenance. Thus, where certain land was granted to the donees for maintenance without any power of transfer and the deed authorised the grantees to cultivate the land and to appropriate the usufruct thereof but enjoined that if they wanted to transfer their rights they must do so to the grantor or his descendants : Held that the deed was not a gift of absolute right, but only of usufruct for maintenance, and this section did not apply, and therefore the conditions in restraint of alienation were valid, as they formed an essential part of the grant itself—Jugdeo v. Jwala Prosad, 15 O.C. 345, 15 I.C. 244.

If on a partition between two co-sharers one of them is allotted certain properties subject to the condition that he should only enjoy the income without any power of alienation and that on his death the properties will be taken by his sons and if no sons are born then by the other co-sharer, he gets only a life interest and hence the clause restricting alienation is not bad in law—Sooramma v. Venkataratnam, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 166.

Where a house was conveyed to the transferee subject to a covenant on his part not to use it for any purpose other than a private residence, and the transferee conveyed it to another who converted it into a boarding house, held that the covenant not to use the house for any other purpose was not repugnant to the nature of the estate and might be enforced by an injunction—Hobson v. Tulloch, (1898) 1 Ch. 424.

A clause entitling the lessor to terminate the lease at any time contained in a lease which is described as permanent and under which a fixed rent is payable and the land is stated to be enjoyable from generation to generation, does not offend against the law of perpetuities—Rama Rao v. Timmappa, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 732 (733), 48 M.L.J. 463, 87 I.C. 433.

Where a gift deed provided inter alia that in the event of the subject matter of the gift (site and building) not being required for the purpose stated therein, the property would revert to the donor on the condition of his paying the donee the then estimated value of the building alone : held that the reverter clause was not repugnant to the absolute estate created by the deed, but was if at all, only one of defeasance. It was in fact a covenant between the donor and the donee that the latter should reconvey to the former in a certain contingency. The decision in Sarajubala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179, did not apply nor did the rule against perpetuity which does not apply to agreements—Krishnaraya v. Sarvothama, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 798, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 459.

In a decree for maintenance there was a charge upon certain property for the payment of an amount of maintenance. Upon some arrears falling due the decree-holder transferred a portion of such arrears, but in order to safeguard his rights in regard to the realization of the rest of the arrears he stipulated in the transfer deed that the transferee shall not have the right to bring the charged property to sale : held, the decree-holder was competent to impose such restrictions upon the transferee—Venkatappa v. Sundarajulu, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 431, 1939 M.W.N. 226, 185 I.C. 427.

98. Second para :—The wording of the second para. has been changed, but the law has not been altered.

The Special committee (1927) observes :—"Sections 11 and 40 of the Act refer to affirmative and negative covenants in a transfer. Section 11 refers to rights as between a transferor and transferee, while section 40 relates to the rights to third parties against transferees. The words 'to compel its enjoyment', used in the second paragraph of section 11 and in the first paragraph of section 40, indicate that affirmative covenants for the beneficial enjoyment of one piece of the property of which the other piece has been transferred can in all cases be enforced. This paragraph seems to have been based on the observations of Lord Cottenham in Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Ph. 774, a case decided in 1848. But in later English decisions, such as Haywood v. Burnswich Building Society (8 Q.B.D. 403), the observations in Tulk's case were not approved, and it is now settled that except in certain special cases affirmative covenants cannot be specifically enforced. Thus, in Austerberry, v. Corporation of Oldham, (1885) 29 Ch. D. 750, a covenant to spend money on the land was held as not binding on the purchaser of the land, although he had notice of the same. Indian Courts have followed the same principle (27 Bom. L.R. 73). We propose that the second paragraph of sec. 11 and the first paragraph of sec. 40 should be so amended as to make it clear that, although the affirmative covenant is not by itself invalid as between a transferor and transferee (sec. 11), negative or restrictive covenants only can be specifically enforced against a third person (sec. 40)." See Note 177 under sec. 40.

The most common instance of the rule embodied in this para. is to be found in those cases where a person who owns a house and adjoining land and sells the land, enters into a covenant with the purchaser that the latter shall keep a portion of the land transferred vacant and free from buildings, so as not to obstruct the air and light of the vendor's house. Such a covenant, being one intended for the beneficial enjoyment of the vendor's house, is enforceable as against the purchaser. See Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phill. 774; McLean v. McKay, L.R. 5 P.C. 327. A covenant which is not made for the beneficial enjoyment of the transferor's property, but is merely an arbitrary condition imposed for its own sake is not enforceable against the transferee, and the latter may ignore it; e.g., covenant to use the transferred land as a garden (Tulk v. Moxhay, supra), covenant to build a second storey, covenant to improve the transferred land (Haywood's case, supra), etc. Moreover, these are affirmative covenants which can be rarely enforced against the transferee.

The immoveable property as contemplated by the second paragraph can hardly be said to be an incorporeal right—National Cement Mines Industries Ltd. v. C. I. T., A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 480.

12. Where property transferred is subject to a condition or limitation making any interest therein, reserved or given to or for the benefit of any person, to cease on his becoming insolvent or endeavouring to transfer or dispose of the same, such condition or limitation is void.

Condition making interest determinable on insolvency or attempted alienation.

Nothing in this section applies to a condition in a lease for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him.

Scope :—This section applies not only to leases but to all transfer deeds. Accordingly a condition in a Khorposh grant, which cannot be regarded as a lease, to the effect that the grant will stand cancelled if the property covered by the grant be sold in auction for the debts of the grantee, is wholly void under this section—Shiba Prasad v. Lekhray Shewakaram & Co., A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 162, 23 Pat. 871.

The object of this section is to protect the creditors of the transferee who would otherwise be prevented from having recourse to the property transferred for satisfaction of their debts—ibid.

Sec. 12 refers to the transferee "becoming insolvent", not being adjudicated an insolvent, and consequently it cannot be restricted to conditions which would take effect only on adjudication—ibid.

A provision for forfeiture or re-entry by the landlord is essential in India under the last sentence of sec. 12 to the validity of a covenant in a lease providing that the lessee's interest shall terminate on the property being sold in execution for his debts. This implies that such a covenant is covered by the provisions of this section—ibid.

99. Principle :—This section is an exception to the general principle embodied in secs. 31 and 32 which provide that an interest may be created with the condition superadded that it shall cease to exist on the happening of an uncertain event. The reason is, that it is manifestly unjust that the grantee should enjoy and possess all the indicia of absolute dominion over the property, and yet be deprived of the right of alienation incident to such ownership; and it is equally unjust that creditors who may have made advances on the strength of the property should be deprived of its security on account of a clause in the transfer, which none but the grantor and the grantee may know anything about. Under this section, if the grant is subject to such a condition, it will be void and the property will pass to the Official Assignee in case of insolvency, or to the alienee in case of voluntary alienation.

The assumption of membership of an Association (Shares and Stock Brokers' Association) does not involve the "transfer" of any property on any condition whatever, within the meaning of this section—Official Assignee v. Shroff, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 186.

Where the rules of a provident fund provided that if a member transferred in whatever manner his share or interest therein or part thereof, then and thereby such interest or right would be extinguished, held that the condition was invalid under this section—Re O'Brien, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 701.

100. Lease :—The principle enunciated in this section is made subject to an exception in the case of a lease. Hereditary rent-free tenancies of a perpetual character may exist without any right of alienation attaching to them—Katesar v. Mahomed Amir, 5 O.L.J. 149, 46 I.C. 73.

A lease which was permanent, heritable and transferable contained a covenant to the effect that the tenant would, if he transferred the property, pay to the landlord out of the purchase-money in his hands one-fourth as nazar and would obtain registration of the name of the transferee; the covenant further provided that if this step was not taken the transfer would be invalid and the tenant would continue to be liable for the rent : Held that a restrictive covenant of this description is valid when inserted in a lease between a landlord and his tenant—Saradakripa v. Bepin Chandra, 37 C.L.J. 538, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 679 (680), 74 I.C. 555. Such a covenant is one running with the land—Ibid. Where one of the conditions upon which the owner of certain land granted permission to a person to build on it was that if the house so built was sold, the licensee would pay to the owner of the land one-fourth of the purchase money, it was held that a purchaser with notice of the covenant was bound by it equally with the vendor—Parbhu v. Ramjan, 41 All. 417.

"For the benefit of the Lessor":—For the meaning of these words, see Note 92 under sec. 10.

These words show that if a lease contains a condition that on the lessee becoming insolvent the lease shall determine, the condition is valid. By English law, a clause in a lease is valid which gives a right of re-entry by the landlord in case the term be taken in execution, or in the event of the lessee becoming insolvent or judgment being entered up or feri facias being issued out against him, and the above rule as regards the insolvency of the lessee is expressly adopted by the present section—Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat, 7 Bom. 256 (261). Section 111, clause (g) (3) now contains a provision (recently added by the Amendment Act of 1929) that if the lessee is adjudicated an insolvent and the lease provides that the lessor may re-enter on the happening of that event, the lease is determined by forfeiture. See Note 599A under sec. 111.

13. Where on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created for the benefit of a person not in existence at the date of the transfer subject to a prior interest created by the same transfer, the interest created for the benefit of such person shall not take effect unless it extends to the whole of the remaining interest of the transferor in the property.

Transfer for benefit of unborn person.

Illustration.

A transfers property of which he is the owner to B in trust for A and his intended wife successively for their lives, and, after the death of the survivor for the eldest son of the intended marriage for life, and after his death for A's second son. The interest so created for the benefit of the eldest son does not take effect, because it does not extend to the whole of A's remaining interest in the property.

Analogous Law :—This section may be compared with sec. 113 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

100A. Hindu Law :—Under the Hindu Law, as it stood before the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, XV of 1916 (see App. VII) a gift to a person or persons not in being at the time of distribution was void under the rule in Tagore Case, L.R. I.A. Supp. Vol. 47. See also Javerbai v. Kablibai, 16 Bom. 492; Tarokessur v. Soshi Shikhareswar, 9 Cal. 952 (P.C.); Amrito v. Surnomoni, 25 Cal. 662; Bai Mativahu v. Bai Mamubai, 21 Bom. 709 (P.C.) and Chandi v. Sidheswari, 16 Cal. 71 (P.C.). A Hindu may give property by way of executory gift upon an event which is to happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being and in favour of a person born at the date of the gift, and such a gift over might be a sufficient indication that only a life estate to the first taker was intended. But where the event which is referred to in the grant is an indefinite failure of the male issue of the grantee the attempted gift over itself is void—Saraju Bala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179 (182). See also Bai Mativahu v. Bai Mamubai, supra; Soorjeemoney v. Denobundhoo, 9 M.I.A. 123.

101. Scope :—The rule laid down in this section is applicable to moveable as well as immoveable property—Cowasji v. Rustomji, 20 Bom. 511.

Although a condition subsequent may be inoperative under this section, still it will not invalidate the prior interest; see sec. 30. Thus, in the illustration, the disposition in favour of A's unborn son for life is inoperative, but the trust will take effect.

Principle :—This section was an attempt to import into an adapt for use in India what was used before 1926 to be known in England as the "rule in Whitby v. Mitchell, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 85" or "the rule against double possibilities". The principle is that a person disposing of property to another shall not fetter the free disposition of that property in the hands of more generations than one. The rule is quite distinct from the rule against perpetuities, though their effects sometimes overlap—Ardesbir v. Dadabhoy, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 395.

102. 'Not in existence':—A child en ventre sa mere is considered to be in existence—In re Wilmer's Trusts, [1903] 2 Ch. 411; Elliot v. Joicey (Lord), (1935) A.C. 209. A child adopted after a man's death in pursuance of a power given by him is in contemplation of law begotten by that man—Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (P.C.).

The fact that unborn children of donees share in the properties is immaterial, so long as secs. 13 and 14 are not offended—Geeverges v. Krishnan, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 89.

It is open to a Shia Mahomedan to make a settlement in favour of an unborn person, provided such a settlement follows upon a settlement in favour of a person in existence—Gulamhusein v. Farmahomed, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 185.

Extends :—The word "extends" in this section is directed to the extent of the subject-matter and to the absolute nature of the estate conferred and not to the certainty of its vesting. What is given to the unborn person need not necessarily vest in him at his birth. Vesting must however take place within the limits prescribed by s. 14—Framrose v. Tehmina, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 188, 49 Bom. L.R. 882.

If a gift over to unborn grandchildren of the settlor is to take effect subject to two contingencies, namely, that they must survive certain named persons and that they must attain a certain age, then the gift over is void under this section—Isaac Nissim Silas v. Official Trustee of Bengal, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 118.

14. No transfer of property can operate to create an interest which is to take effect after the life-time of one or more persons living at the date of such transfer, and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period and to whom, if he attains full age, the interest created is to belong.

Rule against perpetuity.

This section may be compared with sec. 114 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, replacing sec. 101 of Act X of 1865. The two illustrations to that section are cited below as elucidating the meaning of the section:—

"Illustration (a):—A fund is bequeathed to A for his life, and after his death to B for his life, and after B's death to such of the sons of B as shall first attain the age of 25. A and B survive the testator. Here the son of B who shall first attain the age of 25 may be a son born after the death of the testator; such son may not attain 25 until more than 18 years have elapsed from the death of the longer liver of A and B; and the vesting of the fund may thus be delayed beyond the life-time of A and B, and the minority of the sons of B. The bequest after B's death is void."

"Illustration (b):—A fund is bequeathed to A for his life, and after his death to B for his life, and after B's death to such of B's sons as shall first attain the age of 25. B dies in the lifetime of the testator, leaving one or more sons. In this case the sons of B are persons living at the time of the testator's decease, and the time when either of them will attain 25 necessarily falls within his own lifetime. The bequest is valid."

104. Perpetuities :—It is the policy of the law to discountenance the creation of perpetuities. Property cannot be tied up longer than for a life in being and twenty-one years (in England) after. This is called the rule against perpetuities—per Jessel, M.R., in In re Ridley, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 645. "The necessity of imposing some restraint on the power of postponing the acquisition of the absolute interest in or dominion over property will be obvious if we consider, for a moment, what would be the state of a community in which a considerable portion of the land and capital was locked up. The free and active circulation of property which is one of the springs as well as the consequences of commerce would be obstructed; the capital of the country withdrawn from trade; and the incentives to exertion in every branch of industry diminished. Indeed such a state of things would be utterly inconsistent with national prosperity; and those restrictions which were intended by the donors to guard the objects of their bounty against the effects of their own improvidence, or originated in more exceptional motives, would be baneful to all"—Jarman on Wills (4th Edn.), pp. 250, 251.

*English and Indian law compared :—*According to the English law, the vesting of property might be postponed for any number of lives in being and an additional term of 21 years afterwards, and for as many months in addition as are equal to the ordinary period of gestation, should gestation exist (Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox. 324); and the additional term of 21 years might be independent of the minority of any person to be entitled (i.e., irrespective of the fact whether such person is a minor or not). Indian law, however, allows the vesting to be delayed beyond the lifetime of persons in being, for the period only of the minority of some person born in their lifetime; the addition of an absolute period of 21 years has not been adopted by this section. So, whereas under the English law the additional period allowed after lives in being is a term of twenty-one years in gross, without reference to the infancy of any person, under the Indian Statutes the term is the period of minority of the person to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong—at 21, if he has a guardian appointed by the Court, at 18 in other cases—Mukhopadhyaya's Law of Perpetuities, p. 99.

*Test to determine whether a transfer falls within the rule :—*In order to determine whether a particular disposition in a sale-deed offends the rule against perpetuity, the test is whether the disposition is such that the vesting of property in the vendee might have been postponed beyond the period laid down in sec. 14. The test is not whether in the particular case the vesting actually took place within the lives in being and 18 years after. If the disposition in the sale-deed was such that the property might have remained in the possession of the vendor for 100 or 200 years, it offended against the rule of perpetuities, and was consequently invalid and unenforceable; and the fact that in the particular case the period within which the property came to the hands of the vendee actually happened to fall within the legal limitation did not take the case out of the mischief of the rule—Ram Newaz v. Nankoo, A.I.R. 1926 All. 283. To test whether a transfer violates the rule against perpetuities, the Court must look not to the particular events which have actually happened but to all possible contingencies—Rajaramji v. Ramnath, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 412; Pan Kuer v. Ram Narain, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 353 (357); Kala Chand v. Jatindra, 56 Cal. 487, 33 C.W.N. 150 (156); Nabin v. Rajani, 25 C.W.N. 901 (904), 63 I.C. 196; Bramamoyi v. Jogesh, 8 B.L.R. 400 (407); Soudaminey v. Jogesh, 2 Cal. 262 (268); Dungannon v. Smith, (1845) 12 Cl. & F. 546; Jee v. Audley, (1787) 1 Cox. 324.

A perpetuity is a branch of law of property and its object is to restrain the creation of future conditional interests in property. It is not concerned with contracts as such or with contractual rights and obligations as such. Thus, a contract to pay money to a person, his heirs or legal representative upon a future contingency, which may happen beyond a life or lives being and 18 years thereafter, would be perfectly valid—Ali Hossain v. Rajkumar, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 417 (F.B.). Where the condition must operate inter vivos, e.g., where the settlement is to stand cancelled only if the property is sold by auction for the debts of the grantee during the lifetime of the grantor, the rule of perpetuities embodied in this section is not offended—Shiba Prasad v. Lekhray Shewakaram & Co., A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 162.

105. Hindu and Mahomedan Law :—The rule contained in this section applies to Hindus; see Krishnamani v. Ananda, 4 B.L.R. (O.C.) 231; Anantha v. Nagamuthu, 14 Mad. 200; Surjeemonee v. Denebundu, 6 M.I.A. 555; Kolathu v. Ranga, 38 Mad. 114; Shookmoy v. Monohurry, 11 Cal. 684 (P.C.). "A Hindu cannot by will or gift divest succession permanently. A private individual who attempts by gift or will to make property inheritable otherwise than the law directs, is assuming to legislate and the gift must fail and the inheritance takes place as the law directs"—Mayne's Hindu Law.

The rule against perpetuity is also applicable to Mahomedans. See Yusufkhan v. Misal Khan, 37 I.C. 99.

106. Scope of section :—The rule against perpetuity laid down in this section relates to any property, whatever be its nature and whether it is moveable or immoveable—Cowasji v. Rustomji, 20 Bom. 511.

The rule of perpetuities applies when there is a transfer of an interest; it cannot apply where only a charge is created which does not amount to transfer of any interest—Matlub Hasan v. Kalawati, A.I.R. 1933 All. 934 (937).

Gifts to charities do not fall within the rule. See sec. 17 (now 18). But a perpetuity cannot be created in favour of an individual under the cloak of an illusory gift to a charity—Mukhopadhyaya's Perpetuities, p. 136.

106A. Application of the section :—Where a particular interest is stated to be in favour of a particular person for generation to generation, it is a perpetuity and as such offends against this section—Wahajuddin v. Ali Ahmad; A.I.R. 1934 All. 983. A direction to the following effect, “my remaining movable property shall be dealt with by my son G.....and when the sons of my son G shall attain the age of 21 years the same shall be divided and duly received by G and his sons in equal shares” confers an absolute gift on G but the gift over is void—Anandrao v. Administrator-General, 20 Cal. 450. A clause ran as follows: “As to my other property.....I give the same to my younger son Mahadeo for his life. He shall have no authority either to mortgage or sell the same. He shall only receive the income and I give the property after his death to his son or his sons in equal shares should there be any. In case he leaves no sons behind him my Mukltiyars shall get a son adopted by his wife and thus perpetuate his name. And they shall give the said property to him on his attaining the age of 21 years.” Held that the gift in favour of a son of Mahadev who might be adopted at any time after Mahadev’s death by a widow who might not have been living at the testator’s decease was void—Kashnath v. Chimanji, 30 Bom. 477. But where on a partition by an award one mouza is given to a co-sharer with a direction to use the income to support a named charity and the award provides that if he neglects to do so other co-sharers may take the property, the provision is not hit by the rule against perpetuity because it is not meant to be acted upon literally—Kamalnarayan v. Ramkishorelal, A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pr. 246.

A power to distribute property conferred in a will which is exercisable “when my grandsons may attain their age” is void under secs. 101 and 102 (corresponding to secs. 14 and 15, T. P. Act) as extending the period beyond the limit allowed by sec. 101, whether the point of time referred to is taken to be the attaining of age by the grandsons in existence at the testator’s death, or such attaining of age by all his grandsons. The rule applicable to such cases in India is that “if the exercise of a power is made contingent on the happening of an event which may, by possibility happen beyond the limits of the rule, the mere fact that the contingency has happened earlier and has rendered the exercise of the power practicable within the prescribed limit does not validate the power”—Sivasankara v. Soobramania, 31 Mad. 517.

An indemnity bond making a certain property permanently liable to a purchaser and his assignee as surety in case the purchaser is deprived of the possession of the property sold to him is unenforceable as violating the rule against perpetuities—Natesa v. Gopalasami, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 894 (896), 51 Mad. 688, 110 I.C. 830.

Where at the time of family partition between two brothers it was agreed that if any coparcener wished to sell his share in the residential house or if his share was sold in any other way, the other coparcener would be entitled to buy it for Rs. 200, such an agreement was enforceable against the son of the parties to it—Ratanlal v. Ramanujdas, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 187.

A sold certain properties to B for Rs. 300. On the same day B executed in favour of A an agreement agreeing to reconvey the properties on A paying, on any day, Rs. 300 with interest : held that the agreement did not offend against the rule of perpetuities—Arjuna v. Lakshmi Ammal, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 265.

An agreement to grant in future whatever land might be selected as a site for a temple where the date of entry was uncertain is bad as offending against the rule against perpetuities—Maharaj Bahadur v. Balchand, 25 C.W.N. 770 (P.C.).

Where by a codicil the testator directed that no devisee of any of his real estates should have a vested interest therein until the attainment of the age of 24 years, it was held that the provisions were void for remoteness—In re Wrightson, (1904) 2 Ch. 95.

107. Personal covenants :—The rule against perpetuity applies when an interest in property is created, and has no application to personal contracts, even though the contract may have reference to land—Ali Hossain v. Rajkumar, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 417 (F.B.). An agreement to sell or resell is not within the mischief of the rule against perpetuities—Rajammal v. Gopalaswami, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 767; Rakhama v. Laxman, A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 105. "It is settled beyond argument that an agreement merely personal not creating any interest in land is not within the rule against perpetuities"—South Eastern Railway v. Associated Portland Cement Manufactures Limited, [1910] 1 Ch. 12 (33). A covenant to do any act (e.g., to pay money) is not void for the reason that the time for the performance of the act does not fall within the period allowed by this rule—Walsh v. Secretary of State, 10 H.L.C. 367. "Whether the rule as to remoteness applies or not depends upon this—does or does not the covenant give an interest in the land? If it is a bare or mere personal covenant, it is of course, not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuity"—per Jessel M.R. in London & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882) 20 Ch. D. 562 (580). A personal contract to convey land is not affected by the rule against perpetuities—Dahya Bhai v. Maharaj Bahadur, 1 P.L.J. 238 (244, 251), 34 I.C. 482. An agreement to sell or reconvey land is an agreement merely personal, not creating an interest in land (see the last para of section 54 of this Act) though it has reference to land. Such an agreement does not offend the rule against perpetuities—Charamudi v. Raghavulu, 39 Mad. 462 (469, 472), Ramasami v. Chinna, 24 Mad. 449 (469); Munusami v. Sagalaguna, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 699; Harikishandas v. Bai Dhanu, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 497. (Moreover such a contract does not amount to a transfer within the meaning of this section read with sec. 5, as there is no conveyance of any property in present or in future—Harikishandas v. Bai Dhanu, supra). An agreement to sell immoveable property by which the vendor agrees to convey the same whenever the vendee pays the purchase-money, is valid and enforceable and not void as offending against the rule of perpetuities—Raja of Karvetnagar v. Velayuda, 18 M.L.T. 83, 29 I.C. 435 (436). A covenant of pre-emption is a purely personal covenant, and does not create any interest in immoveable property. Consequently it cannot offend the rule against perpetuities—Basdeo v. Jhugru, 46 All. 333 (338, 343), A.I.R. 1924 All. 400, 83 I.C. 390, 22 A.L.J. 265; Aulad Ali v. Syed Ali, 49 All. 527 (F.B.), 25 A.L.J. 289, 100 I.C. 683, A.I.R. 1927 All. 170 (overruling Gopi Ram v. Jeot Ram, 45

All. 478, and Balli Singh v. Raghubar, 45 All. 492; Muhammad Jan v. Fazaluddin, 46 All. 514 (per Lindsay J.; Sulaiman J. contra). Moreover, when a contract of pre-emption is entered into there is no 'transfer of any property' at all and sec. 14 cannot in terms apply to it—Basdeo v. Jhugru, 46 All. 333 (341); Aulad Ali v. Syed Ali, (supra).

The objection against perpetuity does not apply to a mere covenant to convey or re-convey property sold by a deed of sale, as the agreement does not create an interest in the land and no objection based on perpetuity will arise when the privilege under the agreement is conferred on the parties to the contract—Chinnakhal v. Chinnathambi, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 703.

A covenant for pre-emption by compromise in respect of land unrestricted in point of time and expressed to be binding on the parties their heirs and successors did not create interest in land and did not offend the rule against perpetuities—Ali Hossain v. Rajkumar, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 417 (F.B.); Sheonandanprasad v. Kanhaiyalal, A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 243. Rule against perpetuities cannot be applied to a covenant for pre-emption even though there is no time limit within which the right of pre-emption has to be exercised—Ram Baran Prasad v. Ram Mohit Hazru, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 744. A bare agreement to sell immovable property in future cannot infringe the rule against perpetuity—Bai Mangu v. Bai Kijli, A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 81.

Covenants running with the land :—From the above cases it is evident that a distinction should be drawn between a personal covenant (which binds only the parties themselves, but not their heirs or assignees) and covenants running with the land (covenants creating an interest in the land) which are binding not only on the parties to the covenant but also on their heirs and assignees. The rule against perpetuity is not obnoxious to the former but invalidates the latter, because, where the covenantor binds not only himself but his heirs and successors, the time for performance of the covenant may extend beyond the statutory limit of time fixed by sec. 14 of the Transfer of Property Act. The leading case on this subject is London and South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882) 20 Ch. D. 562. In this case a railway company had sold land with an agreement by their vendee on behalf of himself as well as "his heirs, assigns and owners for the time being of the land, and all other persons who should or might be interested therein", and the agreement contained an option to the railway company to repurchase at any time. It was held that the covenant for repurchase, creating an interest in the land in perpetuity without any definite limit as to the period of time within which the covenant was to have effect, could not be enforced. A covenant of pre-emption the operation of which is not meant to extend beyond a lifetime, does not violate the rule against perpetuities. Thus, there was a covenant between a mortgagor and mortgagee, who had a right to redeem the property at any time after nine years, to the effect that the mortgagee would have a right of pre-emption in respect of the sale of the mortgaged property, and the language clearly indicated that the covenant was between the mortgagor and the mortgagee only, and there was nothing to suggest that the heirs of the parties were meant to be bound by the covenant: Held that there was no violation of the rule against perpetuity—Matura Subba Rao v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 637. So also, where the grant of an absolute estate is followed by a defeasance clause which provides that if the persons designated as the heirs of the grantee (viz., the grantee's sons and their male descendants and the grantee's daughters) cease to exist, the property will revert to the grantor or his heirs, held that the event which is referred to in the defeasance clause, is an indefinite failure of the male issue of the grantee, and the attempted gift over mentioned in the clause is therefore void—Sarajubala v. Jyotirmoyee, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 179.

A covenant ran as follows :—"If the Sitambari Jain Society shall require any place on Pareshnath hill for erecting mandir or dharamsala, in that case I and my heirs shall give to the Society land, stones, and timber from the hill free of cost for the purpose of making the mandir or dharamsala, and if I and my heirs refuse to give, the Sitambari Jain Society shall take the same of its own power" : Held by the Privy Council that the agreement was one to grant in the future whatever land might be selected as a building site and therefore it created an interest in land, and as the interest created would be one to take effect by entry at a later date and as this date was uncertain, the covenant offended against the rule of perpetuity and could not be given effect to—Maharaj Bahadur v. Balchand, 6 P.L.J. 163 (166), 2 P.L.T. 131, 25 C.W.N. 770 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 165, 61 I.C. 702.

By an agreement between the shebait of a thakur and a family of Chatterjees, the latter were appointed pujaris, and some land was placed in their possession in order that the income might be applied for maintenance of the sheba, and it was stipulated that the Chatterjees should be pujaris from generation to generation but in case they were found guilty of misconduct or negligence they were to forfeit their office of pujaris. Held that as no interest in land was created in favour of the pujaris, the agreement was a personal contract which was not affected by the rule against perpetuities, and that as soon as the pujaris were disqualified for their office by reason of their misconduct, they were disentitled to retain possession of the land—Nafar Chandra v. Kailash Chandra, 25 C.W.N. 201, 62 I.C. 510 (512).

108. Covenant of redemption in mortgage :—The rule against perpetuity applies only to cases where there is a new interest in immoveable property contemplated to be created after the expiry of the period fixed by the rule. In the case of a mortgage, however, there is no such future interest in property contemplated to be created, because it is of the very essence of the mortgage that the equity of redemption is a present interest in property in exercise of which alone the property is sought to be redeemed. Therefore a clause in a mortgage to the effect that "whenever the party likes he has the right to redeem" does not offend the rule against perpetuity—Padmanabha v. Sitaram, 54 M.L.J. 96, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 28 (33), 106 I.C. 158.

Covenants in leases :—The rule does not apply to contracts for perpetual renewal of leases—Mukhopadhyaya's Law of Perpetuities, p. 104. Where in a deed of mining lease for 5 years the lessor covenanted : "I bind myself to give you such leases as you may require from time to time after the expiration of this agreement, on the same condition. Should I fail to do so, I bind myself to pay you all your expenses that you may incur." Held that the clause for renewal did not amount to a transfer, and therefore it did not offend the rule against perpetuity and was not rendered inoperative by this section—Pichu Naidu v. Jefferson, 44 Mad. 230, 60 I.C. 591. But where on the creation of a permanent lease the lessee covenants that if he or his representative intends to transfer the whole or a portion of the leasehold interest, the transfer would be made in favour of the lessor for proper price or to third parties only with the permission of the lessor, and that any transfer in contravention of this covenant would be invalid, held that the covenant is void as offending the rule against perpetuities—Suvarna Kumar v. Prohlad Chandra, 26 C.W.N. 874, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 474 (475), 67 I.C. 719. Where the purchaser of a leasehold agrees to pay annuity to the leaseholder and his descendants in perpetuity making it a charge on the property, the agreement is not hit by the rule against perpetuity as it created no interest in property—Kurunjilkuttia Appu v. Mary, A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 27.

A clause entitling the lessor to terminate the lease at any time is not bad for remoteness. It is open to the lessor to contract with the lessee that the land should be available for him whenever he requires it—A. Rama Rao v. Thimmappa, 48 M.L.J. 463, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 732, 87 I.C. 433; Gonesh Sonar v. Purnendu Narayan Singha, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 201. Where the proprietor of certain lands created a patni lease with a condition that the patnidar should give back to the lessor such lands as might be required by the lessor, held that as no interest in land was created in favour of the lessor by the covenant in the lease, but rights were merely reserved to the lessor, the covenant did not offend against the rule of perpetuities. The rule against perpetuities is directed against the creation of interests in land which will not have effect within a certain period—Jogesh Chandra v. Asaba, 44 C.L.J. 220, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 41, 98 I.C. 46.

109. "Person in existence":—See Note 102, supra.

15. If, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created for the benefit of a class of persons with regard to some of whom such interest fails by reason of any of the rules contained in sections 13 and 14, such interest fails as regards the whole class.

Transfer to a class, some of whom come under sections 13 and 14.

15. If, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created for the benefit of a class of persons with regard to some of whom such interest fails by reason of any of the rules contained in sections 13 and 14, such interest fails in regard to those persons only and not in regard to the whole class.

Transfer to a class, some of whom come under sections 13 and 14.

Amendment:—This section has been amended by sec. 9 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). For reasons, see Note 112 below.

Analogous law:—The terms of this section are similar to those of sec. 102 of the Succession Act, 1865, replaced by sec. 115 of the Succession Act, 1925, which again has been the subject of similar amendment by the Transfer of Property Amendment Supplementary Act XXI of 1929.

110. Principle of old section :—The old section was intended to import into India the English rule in Leake v. Robinson, (1817) 2 Mer. 363. The word “fails” when first used in the unamended section meant “may fail”—Ardesbir v. Dadabhoy, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 395, I.L.R. 1946 Bom. 493. The principle of the old section was that a gift to a class which was void as to any member of that class, by reason of being too remote, must fail altogether. And so Grant M.R. observed in Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 363 (390) : “The bequest in question is not made to individuals but to classes, and what I have to determine is whether the class can take. I must make a new will for the testator if I split into portions his general bequest to a class, and say that because the rule of law forbids his intention from operating in favour of the whole class I will make his bequest what he never intended them to be, namely, a series of particular legacies to particular individuals.” In Pearks v. Moseley, L.R. 5 App. Cas. 714, it is stated :—“The rule is that the vice of remoteness affects the class as a whole, if it affects an unascertained number of the members.”

112. Old section criticised in the light of Hindu law :—The rule in Leake v. Robinson, on which the old section was based, has, except in a few early Calcutta cases, never been followed in India—Ramlal v. Kanailal, 12 Cal. 663 (683). In the case of Hindus, when a gift is made to a class of persons consisting of children or descendants, some of whom cannot take, the testator may be considered to have a primary and a secondary intention. His primary intention is that all members of the class shall take, and his secondary intention is that if all cannot take, those who can shall do so, the true rule being that those members of the class take, who are at the testator's death capable of taking. Where it appeared from the whole of a will executed by a Hindu testator that his primary intention was that all his nephews then born and those who might be born afterwards should take equally under a bequest made by him, and his secondary intention was that his nephews who were in existence should take, though not specifically named, and where the primary intention could not be given effect to because the bequest was bad in respect of those who might be born subsequently, the Court would carry out the secondary intention and give effect to the bequest as regards the nephews who were competent to take—Bhagabati v. Kalicharan, 32 Cal. 992 F.B. (following In re Coleman, 4 Ch. D. 165); affirmed by the Privy Council in 38 Cal. 468 (P.C.); Rodha Prasad v. Ranimoni, 41 Cal. 1007 (P.C.); Khimji v. Morarji, 22 Bom. 533; Ranganadha v. Bhagirathi, 29 Mad. 412; Tribhuvandas v. Rattanji, 18 Bom. 7; Rai Bishen Chand v. Asmaida, 6 All. 560 (P.C.). As a general rule, where there is a gift, to a class, born at the date of the gift or the death of the testator, as the case may be, and where there is no other objection to the gift, it should enure for the benefit of those members of the class who are capable of taking—Ram Lal v. Kanai Lal, 12 Cal. 663 (685). Where the gift by a Mahomedan was to a class some of whom were personally incapable of taking, the remaining donees took the whole of the gift—Advocate-General v. Karamali, 29 Bom. 133 (150). But where an estate was given to the testator's daughters for their lives with remainder for their children on attaining the age of 21, the Privy Council reading the will as a whole came to the conclusion that as at the testator's death it could not be certain that in the case of every child a guardian would necessarily be appointed, the bequest would possibly be delayed beyond the life-time of the daughters and the minority of some of their children (see sec 101 Succession Act & sec. 14 T. P. Act) and hence by virtue of sec. 102 of the Succession Act the whole bequest in favour of all the children was invalid—Soundar Rajan v. Natarajan, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 244 (248).

New section—Object of the amendment :—Traditional Hindu law did not permit a gift in favour of a person who was not in existence at the date of the gift. To remove this disability of a Hindu donor three Acts were passed, namely, (1) Madras Hindu Bequests and Transfers Act, 1914, (2) the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916, and (3) Hindu Transfers and Bequests (city of Madras) Act, 1921. It is declared by these three Acts that a transfer inter vivos or disposition by will of any property shall not be invalid by reason only that the transferee or legatee is unborn at the date of the transfer or the death of the testator as the case may be; and secs. 18 and 14 of the Transfer of Property Act and secs. 100 and 101 (now 113 and 114) of the Indian Succession Act were made applicable to gifts and bequests to unborn persons.

Before the three Acts were passed, a gift to a class of persons some of whom were not in existence at the date of transfer did not fail in regard to the whole class, but these three Acts rendered such a gift void in regard to the whole class. Sec. 15 has been amended to restore the position that existed before the passing of these three Acts. The amended section lays down that the transfer will not fail with regard to the whole class, but only with regard to those who cannot take.

112A. Effect of Act XV of 1916 :—The Hindu Disposition of Property Act XV of 1916, while giving validity to dispositions by Hindus previously invalid by reason of the rule in Tagore case, made such dispositions when inter vivos subject to the limitations of sec. 14 ante. In a case therefore infringing those limitations, the disposition will be covered by the language of this section although it is not expressly mentioned in the Act of 1916, subject to its being shown that there is some rule of Hindu law at variance with that section—Sewdayal v. Official Trustee, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 651 (657).

For the provisions of Act XV of 1916 see App. VII.

No interest can be created in favour of an unborn person; but when the gift is made to a class or series of persons, some of whom are in existence and some are not, it does not fail in its entirety; it is valid with regard to the persons who are in existence at the time of the testator's death and is invalid as to the rest—Raj Bajrang v. Bakhtraj Kuer, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 7; Rabindra v. Sushil, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 427.

112B. "Class":—A gift is said to be to a "class" of persons, when it is to all those who shall come within a certain category or description defined by general or collective formula—per Lord Selborne in Pearks v. Moseley, 5 App. Cas. 714; Kingsbury v. Walter, [1901] A.C. 187. "A number of persons are popularly said to form a class when they can be designated by some general name, as "children", "grandchildren", "nephews"; but in legal language the question whether a gift is one to a class depends not upon these considerations but upon the mode of the gift itself, namely, that it is a gift of an aggregate sum to a body of persons uncertain in number at the time of the gift, to be ascertained at a future time, and who are all to take in equal or in some other definite proportions, the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number of persons."—Jarman on Wills (5th Ed.), Vol. I, p. 232.

A gift to a "class" as distinguished from a gift to individuals implies an intention to benefit those who constitute the class and to exclude all others; but a gift to individuals described by their several names and descriptions, though they may together constitute a class, implies an intention to benefit the individuals named. Important legal consequences flow from this distinction. Thus, the addition or diminution of members does not affect a class, the share of each being dependent upon the ultimate number of persons. Again, in case of death of a member of the class the legacy does not lapse but passes by survivorship to the other members—Jiban v. Jitendra, A.I.R. 1949 F.C. 64.

Ordinarily a class gift means gift to a class of persons who are included or comprehended under some general description and bear a certain relation to the testator. The true test is however the intention of the testator and a gift would rank as a class gift if the testator intended that the donee should take as a class. There are instances again of "composite class" such as when a gift is made to the children of A and the children of B—ibid.

The legal incidents of those gifts are in some respects analogous to the case of a member of an undivided family under the Mitakshara system—ibid. per Mahajan J.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

This section may be compared with section 116 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

113. Principle :—The rule in this section is substantially in consonance with the English law according to which limitations under void limitations are themselves void. In English law, where a devise is void for remoteness, all limitations ulterior or expectant on such remote devise are also void.—Jarman on Wills, 5th Edn., Vol. I, p. 253; Proctor v. Bishop of Bath, 2 H. Bl. 358.

Where there was a gift by will to A for life, and after his death to the first son of A for life, and to the first son of A's first son, and in default of such son to B for life, held that as the gift to A's grandson was void the subsequent gift to B failed—Money Penny v. Derring, 2 DeG. M. & G. 145. A Hindu testator bequeathed as follows :—"My great-grandsons shall, when they attain majority, receive the whole to their satisfaction, and they will divide and take the same in accordance with Hindu law. God forbid it, but should I have no great-grandsons in the male line, then my daughter's sons, when they are of age, shall take the said property from the trust fund and divide it according to the Hindu Sastras in vogue." Held, that the bequest to the daughter's sons was dependent on, and not alternative to, the gift to the great-grandsons, and was therefore void—Brojanath v. Anandamoyi, 8 B.L.R. 208.

One S gave away property to R for life and after her death if there be any male descendants, whether born of son or daughter, to them absolutely. If R would have only daughters they were to have no power of transfer. In the absence of any issue, male or female, living at the time of her death, the gifted property was not in any way to devolve upon her husband or his family, but it was to go to D, father of R. Held that the gift in favour of D was dependent upon the failure of the prior interest in favour of the daughters and the result was that the gift in favour of D also failed—Girjesh v. Data Din, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 35 (39) (F.B.), 9 Luck. 29, 147 I.C. 991.

114. Gift framed in the alternative :—If a gift is capable of being split up into two alternatives, one of which is too remote, and the other can take effect, the Court will disregard the invalid limitations and give effect to that which is legal—Evers v. Challis, 7 H.L.C. 531. Thus, a gift over is made of property in the event of there never being any child of A, or in the event of no child attaining majority. Here the first contingency is valid, but the second is too remote (but the gift over will take effect on the happening of the former event)—Watson v. Young, 28 Ch. D. 436.

114A. Dispositions in trust-deed :—Even where questions may arise under secs. 14, 16 or 17 in connection with certain dispositions in favour of private persons in a trust-deed, nevertheless an attack on the trust-deed on such grounds cannot be made except in a suit for administration of the trust or the assets belonging to the person who made the dedication or created the trust—Raman Chettiar v. Muthuswami, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 188, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 803, 1940 M.W.N. 1180.

18. Where the terms of a transfer of property direct that the income arising from the property shall be accumulated, such direction shall be void, and the property shall be disposed of as if no accumulation had been directed.

Exception.—Where the property is immovable, or where accumulation is directed to be made from the date of the transfer, the direction shall be valid in respect only of the income arising from the property within one year next following such date; and at the end of the year, such property and income shall be disposed of respectively as if the period during which the accumulation has been directed to be made had elapsed.

17. (1) Where the terms of a transfer of property direct that the income arising from the property shall be accumulated either wholly or in part during a period longer than—

(a) the life of the transferor, or

(b) a period of eighteen years from the date of the transfer, such direction shall, save as hereinafter provided, be void to the extent to which the period during which the accumulation is directed exceeds the longer of the aforesaid periods, and at the end of such last-mentioned period the property and the income thereof shall be disposed of as if the period during which the accumulation has been directed to be made had elapsed.

(2) This section shall not affect any directions for accumulation for the purpose of—

(i) the payment of the debts of the transferor or any other person taking any interest under the transfer, or

(ii) the provision of portions for children or remoter issue of the transferor or of any other person taking any interest under the transfer, or

(iii) the preservation or maintenance of the property transferred;

and such direction may be made accordingly.

115. Amendment :—By sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929), the old section 18 has been numbered as section 17, with substantial amendments.

This section may be compared with sec. 117 of the Indian Success-sion Act, 1925.

The provision of law restricting accumulation of income originated from the Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. III, c. 98) which again was the outcome of the decision in the famous case of Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. 227 (affirmed on appeal in 11 Ves. 112), in which the income of the property was directed by the testator to be accumulated for nine lives in succession, and such direction was held to be invalid.

The object of this section is to fix a time-limit for accumulation and thus to prevent the hardship which would have been caused to heirs and descendants if unlimited accumulations were allowed, and also to prevent the property being for ever locked up, which would be a menace to the trade of the country.

116. When by a direction the income is separated from the ownership of the property with a view to creating a separate fund or the enjoyment of the property is postponed the direction is said to be one for accumulation. Before the Thellusson Act income could be accumulated for a period which did not exceed the period of perpetuity. The object of the section is to further restrict the period for the accumulation of income. It is needless to point out that independently of this section a direction for accumulation may be void for infringing the rule against perpetuity.

Period :—The period mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of sub-sec. (1) are in the alternative. A direction for accumulation can validly be given either for the period mentioned in clause (a) or for the period given in clause (b), but the two periods cannot be combined. But a direction may be given in this form : "either during the life time of the transferor or during a period of eighteen years from the date of the transfer, whichever is longer".

If it is directed that the income shall be accumulated for 25 years from the date of the transfer the direction is valid in any case upto 18 years from the date of the transfer. It may be valid for the entire period of 25 years if the transferor dies more than 25 years after the date of the transfer.

If the period exceeds the period permitted by this section the direction for accumulation shall not be altogether void ; it shall be void only to the extent it exceeds the longer of the two periods mentioned in this section.

The three purposes enumerated in sub-sec. (2) scarcely requires any elucidation. Directions for accumulation for the specified purposes are not hit by the rule laid down by sub-sec. (1).

The decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay before the extension of the Transfer of Property Act to the Hindus indicate that the legal position under Hindu law as to accumulation was not materially different from what it is at present under sec. 17 of the T. P. Act. For instance, in Nafar Chandra v. Ratnamala, 15 C.W.N. 66, it was decided by the High Court of Calcutta that a direction for accumulation for the purpose of providing for the marriage expenses of the testor's son was valid. Similarly in Rajendra Lal v. Raj Kumari, 34 Cal. 5, it was held that a direction to accumulate the surplus income until it amounted to Rs. 100000 and then to spend the amount in feeding the poor did not infringe any rule of Hindu law and was valid.

17. The restrictions in sections 14, 15 and 16 shall not apply to property transferred for the benefit of the public in the advancement of religion, knowledge, commerce, health, safety, or any other object beneficial to mankind.

Transfer in perpetuity for benefit of public.

18. The restrictions in sections 14, * * 16 and 17 shall not apply in the case of a transfer of property for the benefit of the public in the advancement of religion, knowledge, commerce, health, safety, or any other object beneficial to mankind.

Transfer in perpetuity for benefit of public.

116A. Amendment:—The old section 17 has been numbered as section 18 and in the latter section the words “and 17” have been added, by section 10 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The object of this amendment is to lay down that “the restrictions contained in sec. 17 as to accumulation should not apply to charities. In India, a direction for accumulation has been held valid in the case of Hindu and Muhammadan religious endowments though it infringed the rule against perpetuities (I.L.R. 34 Cal. 5; 23 C.L.J. 241; 34 Mad. 12)”—Report of the Select Committee (1927).

117. Gifts for public purposes:—The question whether a particular charity is for the benefit of the public or not is a question of fact. The offering of prayer at a tomb is certainly for the benefit of the public if it is subordinate to the main purpose of the dedication to feed poor pilgrims—Raman Chettiar v. Muthuswami, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 188.

The personal law of Hindus and Mahomedans sanctions gifts for the benefit of the public, e.g., for charitable and religious purposes, and such gifts are exempt from the rule against perpetuities—Fatma Bibi v. Advocate-General, 6 Bom. 42; Bhuggobutty v. Gooroo Prosonno, 25 Cal. 112; Sookmoy v. Monohari, 11 Cal. 684; Bikani v. Suklal, 20 Cal. 116; Limji v. Bapuji, 11 Bom. 441.

Under the Mahomedan law the test of whether a deed was or was not valid as a wakf in the cases decided before the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act VI of 1913, was that if the effect of the deed was to give the property substantially to charitable uses, it would be valid; but if the effect of the deed was to give the property in substance to the settlor's family it would be invalid—Ramanandan v. Vava Leval, 44 Mad. 116 (P.C.). The effect of those decisions has been modified by the said Act VI of 1913 and the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, XXXII of 1930.

As regards charitable gift or bequest by a Hindu—see Sarojini v. Gnanendra, 23 C.L.J. 241; Dwarka v. Burroda, 4 Cal. 443; Rajendra v. Rajcoomari, 34 Cal. 5; Amrito v. Surnomoyi, 25 Cal. 662.

The following are religious and charitable gifts :—

(a) Wakf or endowment to charitable and religious uses, e.g., repairs of imambaras, keeping tazias in the month of Mohurram—Biba Jan v.

Kalle Hussain, 31 All. 136; burning lamps in a mosque or reading the Koran in public places—Mazhar Husein v. Abdul, 33 All. 400; performance of ceremonies known as Kadam Sharif—Phul Chand v. Akbar Yar Khan, 19 All. 211.

(b) Gifts of property to temple or idol or for maintenance of priests—Tackersay v. Hurbhum, 8 Bom. 432; Bhuggobutty v. Gooroo Prosono, 25 Cal. 112.

(c) A gift of Sadavart (food given to all who come)—Jamnabai v. Khimji, 14 Bom. 1; Jugal Kishore v. Lakshman Das, 23 Bom. 659; Morarji v. Nenbai, 17 Bom. 351.

(d) Dedication of property to a dharamsala, for feeding travellers and maintaining a Sadavart—Jugal Kishore v. Lakshman, 23 Bom. 650; Raghubar v. Kesho, 11 All. 18.

(e) A bequest for giving feasts to Brahmans—Lakshmi Sankar v. Vajinath, 6 Bom. 24.

(f) Gifts for building a well and awada (a cistern of water for animals to drink)—Jamnabai v. Khimji, 14 Bom. 1.

(g) A devise for the support or erection of a hospital—Fanindra v. Administrator-General, 6 C.W.N. 321; Broughton v. Mercer, 14 B.L.R. 442.

(h) Gifts for maintaining universities or schools of learning—Manorama v. Kalicharan, 31 Cal. 166; Commissioners for Income-tax v. Pemsel, (1891) A.C. 531.

(i) Trusts and bequests of land or money to devote the income thereof in perpetuity for performing Muklad, Baj, Yejushni and other like Zoroastrian ceremonies are valid charitable bequests and as such exempt from the rule of law forbidding perpetuities—Jamshedji v. Soonabai, 33 Bom. 122 (211).

See also the Illustrations to Sec. 118, Indian Succession Act (1925) for instances of religious and charitable gifts.

118. The following are not gifts for public purposes :—

(a) Trusts for purposes of individual benefit, e.g., bequest to the effect "that the income thereof be given to procure masses for the benefit of my soul"—Colgan v. Administrator-General, 15 Mad. 424; an endowment by which the original grantor and grantee and their descendants are alone to be benefited—Sathappayar v. Periasami, 14 Mad. 1; a gift for the performance of ceremonies for the spiritual good of the donor or his family—Trimmer v. Lamb, 25 L.J. Ch. 424; Limji v. Bapuji, 11 Bom. 441; Fatma Bibi v. Advocate-General, 6 Bom. 42.

(b) A gift for the repair of a private tomb or monument—Richhard v. Robson, 31 L.J. Ch. 397; Fowler v. Fowler, 33 Beav. 616.

A bequest to a "dharma" and directing the executors to spend the income of moveable and immoveable property set apart for the purpose, was held void as the word 'dharma' was too vague and indefinite for the Court to enforce the gift—Devshunkur v. Motiram, 18

Bom. 136; Morarji v. Nenbai, 17 Bom. 351; Ranchordas v. Parbati, 23 Bom. 725 (P.C.); Parthasarathy v. Thiruvengada, 30 Mad. 340, but Subramania, J. in this case has been of opinion that Dharma connotes ishta and poorta donations and refers to certain classes of pious gifts and is not a mere vague and uncertain expression.

Trust for spread of Hinduism has been held to be too vague, but that for spread of Sanskrit language is valid—Venkata v. Subba Rao, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 376. As to the nature of charitable objects see North of England Zoological Soc. v. Chester Rural Dist. Council, (1958) 1 W.L.R. 1258.

19. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favour of a person without specifying the time when it is to take effect, or in terms specifying that it is to take effect forthwith or on the happening of an event which must happen, such interest is vested, unless a contrary intention appears from the terms of the transfer.

Vested interest.

A vested interest is not defeated by the death of the transferee before he obtains possession.

Explanation.—An intention that an interest shall not be vested is not to be inferred merely from a provision whereby the enjoyment thereof is postponed, or whereby a prior interest in the same property is given or reserved to some other person, or whereby income arising from the property is directed to be accumulated until the time of enjoyment arrives, or from a provision that if a particular event shall happen the interest shall pass to another person.

This section (with the Explanation) may be compared with section 119 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

Scope :—This section applies in terms to an interest created on a transfer of property. Therefore, where a compromise arrangement did not constitute a transfer of property, but was in the nature of a family arrangement which was binding on the parties and by which no right of transfer was given to any party with regard to certain property until the happening of a certain event, this section did not apply—Damodar v. Madan, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 7.

120. Vested interest and contingent interest :—A person takes a vested interest in property when he acquires a proprietary right in it but the right of enjoyment is only deferred till a future event happens which is certain to happen; but contingent interest is one in which neither any proprietary interest nor a right of enjoyment is given at present, but both depend upon future uncertain events. Thus, if a Hindu widow adopts a son but there is an agreement postponing the son's estate during the life-time of the widow, the interest created in favour of the adopted son is a vested right (see 40 All 692 cited in Note 43 under sec. 6). Similarly, where under a deed of gift a donee is not to take possession of the gifted property until after the death of the donor and his wife, the donee is given a vested interest, subject only to the life-interest of the donor and his wife; and the donee can transfer the property during the life-time of the donor or of his wife (see 21 O.C. 312 cited in Note 43 under sec. 6). So also, where under a compromise decree it was settled that A was to hold an estate till his death after which it was to go B, held that the interest acquired by B under the decree was a vested interest—Sundar Bibi v. Rajendra, A.I.R. 1925 All. 389. But where an estate is bequeathed to A until he shall marry, and after that event to B, B's interest in the bequest is contingent, because it depends upon a condition precedent, viz., the marriage of A, an event which may or may not happen. In a contingent interest, the transfer is not complete until the specified event happens or does not happen. In a vested interest, the interest is complete, but on the happening of a specified event it may be divested—Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare 573; In re Eddel's Trusts, L.R. 11 Eq. 559.

The true criterion is the certainty or uncertainty of the event on the happening of which the gift is to take effect. Where the event is certain though future, and the payment or enjoyment is postponed by reason of the circumstances connected with the estate or for the convenience of the estate, as for instance, where there are prior life or other estate or interests, the ulterior interest to take effect after them will be vested. Thus, under a gift by a testator to A at the decease of the testator's wife, A's interest vests at the testator's death—Subramaniam v. Subramaniam, 4 Mad. 124, following Blamire v. Geldart, 16 Ves. J. 314; Jairam v. Kuberbai, 9 Bom. 491. Where a will provided as follows :—"When I die, my wife named Suraj is owner of that property. And my wife has powers to do in the same way as I have absolute powers to do when I am present, and, in case of my wife's death, my daughter Mahalaxmi is owner of the said property after that death," held, that the gift over to Mahalaxmi was not contingent on her surviving Suraj, but depended upon the death of Suraj which was a certain event, and that Mahalaxmi took a vested interest in the property subject to the life-interest given to Suraj—Lallu v. Jagmohan, 22 Bom. 409 (414).

Where a testator bequeathed his property to two persons for life and the remainder absolutely in favour of a specified class of persons on the termination of the life estates, it was held that the properties became vested in that class and that the mere fact that it was not entitled to immediate possession did not make it a contingent bequest—Sree Chand v. Kashi Chetty, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 885. Where the gift being an entire fund payable to a class of persons equally on their attaining a certain age, a direction to apply the income of the whole fund in the meantime for their maintenance does not create a vested interest in a member of that class who does not attain that age—In re Parker, 16 Ch. D 44.

A settlement was made by which the settlor transferred to the trustees a large amount of property in trust to allow the settlor during his life-time to manage the property, and to have the sole benefit of the income of the properties. The settlement then proceeded to declare certain trusts that should come into operation after his death. These trusts were that as to the property comprised in three schedules the trustees, during the life of the widow and until the youngest son attained the age of 20 were to distribute the income in the manner provided. After the youngest child attained the age of 20, the property was to be sold and the proceeds were to be divided in equal shares between the children then surviving, the issue of any child who was dead was to represent his father's share. As regards the property in the fourth schedule it was not to be distributed until the death of the youngest child, and it was to be divided then amongst the children living at that date. Held by the Privy Council "that the result of this disposition was to create first of all a vested interest in all the children in the income of the property; secondly, it created a contingent interest in all the children in the corpus in respect of all the property until, at any rate, the youngest child reached the age of 20. The children who were alive at that date obtained a vested interest and to have the proceeds distributed among them as to the property in Schedules 1, 2 and 3. As to the property of Schedule 4, all the children took a contingent interest until the death of the youngest child, and as soon as the youngest child died, the children then surviving and of course their issue, obtained a vested right to have the property distributed among them"—Ma Yait v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 17 (18).

Mere direction by the testator that his legacies or gifts are to be given after the debts are discharged would not make the gifts, which are otherwise vested, contingent—Raghunatha v. Mahana Krishna, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 645. Where the interest created in favour of the two sons of the settlor is to take effect after the termination of the trust and the deed of trust provides that the trust will come to an end on the death of the settlor and on the discharge of the debts specified in the deed including the debts to be incurred by the trustee for the discharge of the settlor's debt, the interest in favour of the sons is vested—Rajes Kanta v. Santi Devi, A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 255.

Where a person by his will gives the life-estate in his property to some persons with a remainder to another and gives the power of appointment to the first taker, i.e., persons taking the life-estate, the existence of a power of appointment does not prevent the vesting of the remainder, because where estates are subject to a general power of appointment in the first taker, with remainder over in default of such appointment, the power does not suspend the remainder from vesting—Kali Prasad v. Ram Golam, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 163, 167 I.C. 831.

One G who was the sole surviving co-parcener executed a will by which his wife was to take possession of the properties after his death and maintain herself from the income of the properties. After her death the properties were to go to his two sisters as owners. If however a child was born to the wife, it was to be the owner of the properties: Held, that the two sisters took vested interest in the properties on the death of G, which was liable to be divested by the birth of a child to the widow—Vithalbai v. Shivabhai, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 289, 52 Bom. L.A. 301.

The terms of a compromise decree were as follows : In the event of BR surviving BL he, that is, BR will be the permanent owner with powers of transfer and of transmitting inheritance of the whole of his property. In the event of BR not so surviving, his male descendants according to the rule of lineal primogeniture will be entitled to the said property with powers of transfer and heritability subject to the conditions stated in para. 4 of the compromise. The other male descendants will be entitled to maintenance. Held, that the remainder man's estate in its entirety and absolutely was simultaneously conferred on BR and this was vested interest. The possibility that BR might not be alive at the determination of the prior estate to come into possession of his remainder man's estate cannot convert the same interest into a contingent one—Lal Bahadur v. Rajendra, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 454. For other instances of vested interest see Badra Das v. Sundar Das, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 116; Gosavi v. Rivett-Carnac, 13 Bom. 463; Bilaso v. Munni, 33 All. 556; Jairam v. Kuverbat, 9 Bom. 491; Blackwell v. Blackwell, (1926) Ch. 223; Bhagabat v. Kalicharan, 38 Cal. 408 (P.C.); Lloyd v. Webb, 24 Cal. 44; Chuni Lal v. Bai Muli, 24 Bom. 420; Tara Charan v. Suresh, 17 Cal. 122 (P.C.); U Zoe v. Ma Mya, A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 184; Williams v. Clarke, 4 DeG. & Sm. 472; Abdul v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 439; Saunders v. Vaultier, (1841) Cr. & Ph. 240 and Sundar Bibi v. Lal Rajendra, A.I.R. 1925 All. 389.

It is possible for a Mahomedan to create a definite interest like a vested remainder and such remainder, though liable to be displaced, is not a mere expectancy in succession by survivorship or other merely contingent or possible right or interest. Amongst the Shias the creation of a life-interest is allowed and during the period of the life-interest the deferred interest can be dealt with by way of sale, gift or otherwise, provided that there is no interference with the particular estate—Banoo Begam v. Abed Ali, 32 Bom. 172; Sirij v. Mushaf, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 93. But see Abdul v. Nuran Bibi, 11 Cal. 597 (P.C.) where it was held otherwise.

121. Vesting is not postponed :—(The fact that the estate granted is subject to partial trusts or charges for partial purposes does not postpone the vesting in possession. Thus, where a testator, after directing the payment of some annuities to some persons for their lives, gave the whole of his property to his grandsons to be divided among them only after the annuities have ceased on the death of the annuitants, held that the fact that the estate was subject to partial trusts did not postpone the vesting in possession of the gift to the grandsons—Cally Nath v. Chunder Nath, 8 Cal. 378. So also, a bequest in favour of a person simply (i.e., without any intimation of a desire to suspend or postpone its operation) confers a vested interest, and the appointment of an executor or a guardian to the person while he is a minor, with a direction to make over the property to him on his attaining majority, does not postpone the vesting of interest—Harris v. Brown, 28 Cal. 621 (P.C.). But where the testator directs that the interest shall vest at a particular time or on the donee attaining a particular age, it vests at the time fixed by him—Glanwill v. Glanwill, 2 Mer. 38; Knight v. Cameron, 14 Ves. 389.

If a bequest is to a person for life and after his death to his children, the bequest becomes vested in each child as and when he or she is born and the vesting is not postponed till the death of the life-tenant. The expression "after his death" is taken to indicate merely the time when the gift over becomes reduced to possession and not the time when the right to such possession vests [Halifax v. Wilson, 16 Ves. 168 followed]. But if the bequest has not been merely after the death of the life-tenant, but to such of his children as may survive him or should be alive at his death, then clearly the condition of surviving or being alive at his death would be a condition precedent to the vesting itself, and in such a case no child that does not survive will acquire a vested interest in the bequest—Adams v. Gray, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 599 (602); Rewun v. Mt. Radha, 4 M.I.A. 137.

122. Construction—Intention of donor :—The question whether particular words create a vested or a contingent interest is one of construction—Cally Nath v. Chunder Nath, 8 Cal. 378. No particular words are necessary to the vesting of an interest, and the words of the grantor must be construed in their plain ordinary meaning. Words which have become by accepted usage terms of art in England do not exist in the vernaculars of India where the English mode of creating interests is but of recent origin—Harris v. Brown, 28 Cal. 621; Le Mesurier v. Wajid, 29 Cal. 890. Where the ultimate object of the testator was clearly to make a gift of the property to the donees, who were also executors, but he directed that a sufficient fund from it should be provided during the life-time of his wife to pay her a certain sum monthly, and charged the property with payment of another sum to his other wife, it was held that as the estate was devised to the executors not for, but subject to, a particular purpose, they were not trustees but devisees of an estate subject to a charge. The testator vested the property in the executors, but postponed their beneficial interest in it until his younger wife's death—Subrahmaniam v. Subrahmaniam, 4 Mad. 124; King v. Denison, 1 Ves & B. 272. In Bhagawati v. Kalicharan, 38 Cal. 408 (P.C.), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee approved the decision in Ram Lal v. Kanai Lal, 12 Cal. 683 laying stress on the undesirability of applying rules of construction of English documents in transactions between Hindus "who view most transactions from a different point, think differently and speak differently from Englishmen"—at p. 474.

123. Para. 2—Death of the transferee :—A vested interest is not defeated by the death of the transferee before he obtains possession; and his representative will be entitled to its benefit. This is another point of distinction between a vested interest and a contingent interest. Therefore, where out of two persons in whom an estate vests, one person dies, the whole property does not pass to the other by survivorship but is divisible between the living person and the heir of the deceased—Krishna Aiyar v. Swaminath, 1918 M.W.N. 503, 8 L.W. 140, 47 I.C. 723.

124. Explanation :—Intention :—Having regard to the explanation the burden of proving the contrary intention is on those who asserted it, and the weight of the burden is aggravated by the elimination in the explanation of circumstances which might, apart from the explanation, be thought sufficient to discharge it—Sewdayal v. Official Trustee, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 651 (657), 58 Cal. 768, 134 I.C. 436.

Postponement of enjoyment :—An interest may be a vested one, though its enjoyment may be postponed. Thus, where a Hindu testator made a sufficiently clear gift of his property to his grandsons living at his own decease, but endeavoured to postpone the possessory enjoyment of his grandsons to a certain period after his death, and directed the accumulation of the profits of his estate for a longer period, held that the will contained sufficiently clear words of present gift to the grandsons, and that the other clauses postponing enjoyment and possession and directing accumulation must be rejected as inconsistent with or repugnant to the vested interest—Cally Nath v. Chunder Nath, 8 Cal. 378, following Singleton v. Gilbert, 1 Cox. 68. Where a testator directed that, out of the net income of his estate, his trustees should expend Rs. 500 every year for the maintenance of J (a minor) and that, when J should attain the age of 30 years, the trustees should give to J the net residue of his property remaining at that time, held that the property vested in J on the testator's death, and that the direction for postponement of enjoyment till the age of 30 years must be disregarded, and was inoperative after his majority, and that the income of the property including all income which accrued since his majority, must be paid to J—Gosavi Shivgar v. Rivett-Carnac, 13 Bom. 463.

Prior interest given to some person :—An interest may be vested though the prior interest may be given to some other person. Where the enjoyment is postponed by reason of circumstances connected with the estate or for the convenience of the estate, as it has been termed, for instance, where there are prior life or other estates or interests, the ulterior interest to take effect after them will be vested. Thus, under a gift by a testator to A at the decease of the testator's wife, A's interest vests at the testator's death—Blamire v. Geldart, 16 Ves. J. 314. See also Cally Nath v. Chunder Nath, 8 Cal. 378 cited under Note 121 above.

Direction for accumulation of income :—A gift in terms which import a present vested interest with a postponed time of payment is not made contingent by a direction to accumulate till the time of payment arrives—Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 226. After the interest has vested, the donee is entitled to the income arising therefrom during the period of suspension, provided there is no prior interest, notwithstanding any direction for postponement of enjoyment—Gosavi v. Rivett-Carnac, 13 Bom. 463.

Interest passing to another person on the happening of a particular event :—Where there is a gift to an infant with remainder over in the event of his dying under 21, the infant has a vested interest liable to be divested on his death under that age. See the Indian Succession Act (1925), Sec. 119, Illustration (vi); O'Mahoney v. Burdett, L.R. 7 H.L. 388; Maseyk v. Fergusson, 4 Cal. 304.

125. Right of heir to inherit property :—The right of a son or daughter or other heir of a person to inherit that person's property on his death is not an estate in remainder or in reversion in immoveable property or an estate otherwise deferred in enjoyment. It is neither a vested nor a contingent right. It does not come within the definition of a "vested interest" in this section or of a "contingent interest" in Sec. 21 infra, or Sec. 120 of the Indian Succession Act (1925)—Abdool Goolam, 30 Bom. 304.

20. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created for the benefit of a person not then living, he acquires upon his birth, unless a contrary intention appears from the terms of the transfer, a vested interest, although he may not be entitled to the enjoyment thereof immediately on his birth.

When unborn person acquires vested interest on transfer for his benefit.

126. A bequest to an unborn person is not payable until the birth of the person, and the intermediate income would necessarily accumulate for his benefit—Gibson v. Lord Montfort, 1 Ves. 485. But it would be otherwise if the bequest is contingent—Haughton v. Harrison, 3 Atk. 329; Shaue v. Cudliffe, 4 Br. C.C. 144.

21. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favour of a person to take effect only on the happening of a specified uncertain event, or if a specified uncertain event shall not happen, such person thereby acquires a contingent interest in the property. Such interest becomes a vested interest in the former case, on the happening of the event, in the latter, when the happening of the event becomes impossible.

Contingent interest.

Exception.—Where, under a transfer of property, a person becomes entitled to an interest therein upon attaining a particular age, and the transferor also gives to him absolutely the income to arise from such interest before he reaches that age, or directs the income or so much thereof as may be necessary to be applied for his benefit, such interest is not contingent.

Compare section 120 of the Succession Act, 1925.

As to the difference between a vested interest and a contingent interest, see Note 120 under sec. 19.

127. Contingent interest:—Examples:—A sum of money is bequeathed to A in case he shall attain the age of 18 or when he shall attain the age of 18. A's interest in the legacy is contingent until the condition shall be fulfilled by his attaining that age—Illustration (ii) to sec. 120, Indian Succession Act (1925); In re Francis, (1905) 2 Ch. 295. A devise upon trust of land towards the maintenance of the testator's daughter until she should attain the age of 25, and from and after her attaining that age, then upon trust for his said daughter, creates a contingent interest in favour of the daughter until she attains 25—Doe d Cadogen v. Ewart, 7 Ad. & El. 636. Similarly, when the creation of the interest is subject to a condition precedent to be performed by the donee, the interest is manifestly contingent until the condition is fulfilled—Phipps v. Williams, 5 Sim. 44. Thus, an estate is bequeathed to A if he shall pay Rs. 500 to B. A's interest in the bequest is contingent until he has paid Rs. 500 to B—Illustration (viii) to sec. 120, Indian Succession Act, 1925. Where, under a deed of settlement by a husband in favour of the wife, her interest in the property is dependent upon the event of any disagreement between the husband and the wife, the wife has only a contingent interest—Thayammal v. Adhimovlam, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 304. See also Venkatarama v. Seetharatnamma, (1968) 1 An. W.R. 205 which points out the distinction between a vested and a contingent interest.

A contingent gift or interest has a real existence, capable as much as a vested interest or estate, of being operated upon a condition subsequent and being made to cease or become void—Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H.L.C. 1. Where words of contingency form part of the description of the class of persons to take, as in the case of a gift to those "who shall attain the age of 21", the words must receive their natural construction and no estate vests in any one till he attains the prescribed age. In the case of words of contingency occurring in the description of the class of persons to take, a mere gift over is not sufficient to change their meaning—Ballin v. Ballin, 7 Cal. 218. A Hindu by his will provided: "I bequeath to both of you (the testator's wife and his brother's daughter) the rest of the properties..... You will become entitled to sell or make a gift or heba, etc., in respect of the said properties and hold and enjoy the same.....If, by the will of God, one of you should die before the other, whoever will survive will hold and enjoy the whole of the property as malik": Held that the wife not having predeceased her husband and having survived the period of distribution took an absolute interest—Nistarini v. Behary Lal, 19 C.W.N. 52.

A Hindu will provided: "If both the said daughters shall have issue, they shall divide the said properties equally. Those who have no issue shall, as aforesaid, enjoy the income for their lives, and those who have issue shall enjoy the whole property". It was held that the birth of issue was the event on which the absolute gift of a half share to either daughter was to take effect, and there was no reason for construing the words "have issue" to mean "leave issue". Therefore one of the daughters whose only issue died before her took a heritable share—Gurusami v. Sivakami, 18 Mad. 347 (P.C.). A husband by takshimnama provided: "The property shall devolve upon B or his legal heir and B or his legal heir shall become the absolute owner of my property on the death of my wife." B during the widow's life-time sold the widow's property and died during the life-time of the widow: Held that the interest in favour of B was contingent and came to an end on his death during the widow's life-time—Ram Chandra v. Jagdeshwari Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 247. See Abdul Wahid v. Nuran Bibi, 11 Cal. 597 (P.C.), where also it was held that the title of the sons to succeed was contingent upon their surviving the widow and that no interest passed to their heirs on their deaths in her life-time. As to a contingent interest becoming a vested one see Mt. Murtazi v. Dildar Ali, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 129.

128. Exception :—The principle of the exception is that where the principal is given at a distant epoch and the whole income is given in the meantime, the Court leaning in favour of vesting has said that the whole thing is given; but if there occurs an interval or gap, which separates the gift of the interest from the principal, it is not vested—per Page-Wood, V.C., in Pearson v. Dolman, L.R. 3 Eq. 315 (321). Where interim interest is given, it is presumed that the testator meant an immediate gift—Vaudry v. Geddes, 1 Russ. & M. 208. “I do not know of any case in which the whole income has been absolutely given for maintenance, and yet the legacy has been held not to be vested”—per Jessel, M. R., in Bolding v. Strungell, 45 L.J. Ch. 208. Compare Gosavi v. Rivett-Carnac, 13 Bom. 463, cited in Note 124 under sec. 19.

Where there is no definite ascertained interest “to arise from the fund” the case does not come within the exception—Cowasji v. Ratanbai, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 27, 49 Bom. 167, 52 I.A. 95.

A mere contingent interest though transferable is not attachable—Rajes Kanta Roy v. Shanti Devi, A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 255.

22. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favour of such members only of a class as shall attain a particular age, such interest does not vest in any member of the class who has not attained that age.

This section may be compared with sec. 121 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. So long as the donees are below the specified age, they possess only a contingent interest which will mature into a vested interest as soon as they attain the specified age.

129. Gift to a class :—As to the meaning of ‘class’ see notes under sec. 15. Where a testator gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust for his nephews and nieces, to be paid in certain proportions and at certain times (viz., that the share of each nephew shall be paid to him upon his attaining the age of 21 years, and the share of each niece to be paid to her on her attaining the age of 21 or previously marrying) with benefit of survivorship between them, held that the legatees took vested interests, and that the period of distribution alone was postponed but the bequests were valid—Maseyk v. Fergusson, 4 Cal. 304 following Williams v. Clark, 4 DeG. & S. 472. Similarly, a gift to children when the youngest attains the age of 21, creates a vested interest in favour of every member who attains 21, although he may not live till the youngest attains 21 or the youngest may die under 21—Re Hunter, 1 Aq. 295; Cooper v. Cooper, 29 Beav. 229; Hughes v. Hughes, 3 Br. C.C. 35.

23. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is to accrue to a specified person if a specified uncertain event shall happen, and no time is mentioned for the occurrence of that event, the interest fails unless such event happens before, or at the same time as, the intermediate or precedent interest ceases to exist.

This section may be compared with section 124 of the Indian Succession Act.

130. Principle :—The object of this section is to prevent property from remaining without any owner. At all times property must vest in some particular person or other. It should never be without an owner. See Abiss v. Burney, 17 Ch. D. 211 (at p. 229).

A gift remainder, expectant on the termination of an estate for life, does not fail, but is accelerated by reason of the gift of such prior estate not taking effect—Adjudhia v. Rakhman, 10 Cal. 482 (P.C.).

A Hindu at his death left 3 sons, the eldest of full age and the other two minors. In his will there was the following direction : "My 3 sons shall be entitled to enjoy all the moveable and immoveable properties left by me equally. Any one of the sons dying sonless, the surviving sons shall be entitled to all the properties equally". Held by the Privy Council that these words gave a legacy to the survivors contingently on the happening of a specified uncertain event which had not happened before the period of distribution, that is, the testator's death. Therefore, the legacy to the surviving brothers could not take effect and the original gift to the testator's 3 sons was absolute to each in equal shares and indefeasible on his death. The rule must be applied, wherever it is applicable, without speculating on the intention of the testator—Narendra v. Kamalbasthi, 23 Cal. 563 (P.C.). See also Mt. Bolo v. Mt. Koklan, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 270.

The section is not exhaustive—Indraloke Studio Ltd. v. Santi Debi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 609.

24. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is to accrue to such of certain persons as shall be surviving at some period, but the exact period is not specified, the interest shall go to such of them as shall be alive when the intermediate or precedent interest ceases to exist, unless a contrary intention appears from the terms of the transfer.

Transfer to such of certain persons as survive at some period not specified.

Illustrations.

A transfers property to B for life and after his death to C and D, equally to be divided between them, or to the survivor of them. C dies during the life of B. D survives B. At B's death the property passes to D.

Analogous Law :—Compare sec. 125, Indian Succession Act, 1925.

131. Cases :—A testator directed his trustees and executors to divide his property among his sons when they should attain the age of 21, and there was also a provision in the will that in the event of any such persons dying in the testator's life-time or at any time thereafter prior to division, leaving lawful issue, such issue should take the estate of the deceased parent. One of the legatees who had attained the age of 21 at the testator's death, died some months after, leaving issue; held that at the testator's death the legacy vested in the legatee, but became divested by the legatee's death prior to division, and that the gift over to the issue of the legatee was not void but took effect—Bachman v. Bachman, 6 All. 583.

If an estate is limited to two jointly, the one capable of taking, the other not, he who is capable shall take the whole—Humphrey v. Taylor, 1 Ambler 138, followed in Nandi Singh v. Sitaram, 16 Cal. 677 (P.C.).

If all the legatees predecease the tenant for life, their representatives will take; for the event which was to divest them not having happened, the original gift remains. (Thus in the Illustration to this section, if both C and D die in the life-time of B, the property after B's death will pass to the representatives of C and D). See Henderson's Testamentary Succession, 2nd Ed., p. 116. See also Brown v. Kenyon, 3 Maddock 410; Re Sander's Trusts, 1. Eq. 675; Harrison v. Foreman, 5 Ves. 207.

A Hindu by his will made the following provision: "I have two sons living B and C; they and an infant son by my eldest son, the late D, and my wife E (four persons) shall succeed to the whole of my estate; these four persons will receive equal shares. If any of these four persons happen to die, the survivor of them will receive this estate in equal shares. If there be a son or a grandson surviving as the heir and representative of the party dying, such survivor shall succeed to his estate" etc. and further provided that "so long as my infant grandson shall not have attained his majority, the whole of my estate shall remain undivided." All the persons named survived the testator. Held that they took absolute interests in the shares named; and that the estate became divisible on the infant son attaining majority—Ellokassce v. Durponarain, 5 Cal. 59. As regards the time of distribution generally, the following observations of Sir John Leach, V.C. should be borne in mind: "I consider it, however, to be now settled that if a legacy be given to two or more equally to be divided between them or to the survivor or survivors of them and there be no special intent to be found in the will, the survivor is to be referred to the period of division. If there be no previous interest given in the legacy, then the period of division is the death of the testator and the survivor at his death will get the whole legacy. But if a previous life estate be given, then the period of division is the death of the tenant for life, and the survivor at such death will take the whole legacy"—Cripps v. Wolcott, 4 Mad. 11 (15).

The case of Ram Chandra v. Jagdeshwari Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 247 referred to in Note 127 really comes within the principle of this section.

132. "Surviving at some period":—The words 'surviving at some period' refer to the period when the payment or distribution is to be made—Stevenson v. Gullen, 18 Beav. 590; Howard v. Collins, 5 Eq. 349. Cf. the words of sec. 125, Indian Succession Act, 1925.

25. An interest created on a transfer of property and dependent upon a condition fails if the fulfilment of the condition is impossible, or is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law, or is fraudulent, or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another, or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy.

Conditional transfer.

Illustrations.

(a) A lets a farm to B on condition that he shall walk a hundred miles in an hour. The lease is void.

(b) A gives Rs. 500 to B on condition that he shall marry A's daughter C. At the date of the transfer C was dead. The transfer is void.

(c) A transfers Rs. 500 to B on condition that she shall murder C. The transfer is void.

(d) A transfers Rs. 500 to his niece C if she will desert her husband. The transfer is void.

Analogous Law :—Compare secs. 126 and 127, Indian Succession Act, 1925, and secs. 23 and 36, Indian Contract Act.

"Dependent upon a condition" :—The condition referred to in this section is a condition precedent as distinguished from a condition subsequent.

133. Condition precedent and condition subsequent :—Distinctions :—

(1) A condition precedent is one which must happen before the estate can commence. A condition subsequent is one by the happening of which an existing estate will be defeated.

(2) Where the condition is precedent, the estate is not in the grantee until the condition is performed; but where the condition is subsequent, the estate immediately vests in the grantee and remains in him till the condition is broken—Wynne v. Wynne, 2 M & G. 8 (at p. 14). A clause of forfeiture in case of the devisee not making the mansion house "his usual and common place of abode and residence" is not void for uncertainty—Wynne Fletcher, 24 Beav. 430.

(3) In the case of a condition precedent being or becoming impossible to be performed or being immoral or opposed to public policy, the estate will not arise and the transfer will be void. See this section. But in the case of an impossible or immoral condition subsequent, the estate will be or becomes absolute and the condition will be ignored. Thus, if a gift was made with a condition superadded that the donee should marry a certain person on or before she attained the age of 21, and the person named died before she attained that age, it was held that the fulfilment of the condition subsequent having become impossible, the estate became absolute—Thomas v. Howell, 1 Salk,

170; Jarman on Wills, Vol. II, p. 12. A gift to which an immoral condition is subsequently attached remains a good gift, though the condition is void—Ram Sarup v. Bela, 6 All. 313 (P.C.). There is a clear distinction between an immoral consideration for a gift, and an immoral condition which is subsequently attached to a gift. If the consideration itself is immoral the transfer falls to the ground. On the other hand, if a subsequent condition is tried to be attached to a perfectly valid gift, then the condition, if immoral, is void but the gift remains unaffected—Chumna v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1925 All. 437.

(4) A condition subsequent must be strictly fulfilled (sec. 29), but a condition precedent is fulfilled if it is substantially complied with (sec. 26). See notes under section 26.

134. Fulfilment impossible :—The fulfilment of a condition may become impossible either at the time the interest is created or subsequently, but in either case the transfer will fail. See Jarman on Wills, Vol. II, p. 12. When the fulfilment of a condition becomes impossible by act of God, the condition becomes void, and the transfer fails—Ibid. p. 13. See In re Greenwood, [1903] 1 Ch. 749. But if the performance of the condition becomes impossible by the fraud of a person interested in the non-fulfilment of the condition, the condition shall, as against him, be deemed to have been fulfilled; see section 34 infra. "Mere difficulty in performance is not to be counted as an impossibility"—Shepherd & Brown, 7 Edn., p. 95.

Where there was a bequest made conditional on the re-excavation of a certain tank by the legatee and the condition became impossible of performance by reason of the testator himself re-excavating the tank, the bequest failed. Where the performance of the condition appears to be the motive of the bequest, the impracticability of the performance will be a bar to the claim of the legatee: the bequest in such cases does not take effect discharged of the condition—Rajendra v. Mrinalini, 48 Cal. 1100.

135. Forbidden by law :—The fulfilment of a condition may be forbidden by any law of the land, and it is not necessary that the prohibition should be express—Forster v. Taylor, 5 B. & A. 887.

For instances of conditions forbidden by law, see Secs. 26-30, Contract Act.

136. Immoral or opposed to public policy :—Where the transaction amounts to a voluntary gift, it cannot be set aside; but where the transaction, though completed, was intended to be for consideration, it can be impeached if the consideration is immoral, and it makes no difference whether the transaction is executed or executory—Thasi v. Shunmugavelu, 28 Mad. 413. An agreement which has for its object the getting of divorce by the wife from her husband is against public policy—Bai Valji v. Nansa Nagar, 10 Bom. 152. A transfer by way of bribe (Harrington v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., 3 Q.B.D. 549) or for the purpose of prostitution (Pearce v. Brookes, L.R. 1 Ex. 213) is void. Where the donor made a gift of his property to a man and his wife on condition that he should have physical enjoyment of the woman, held that the condition being immoral, the gift was void—Ghumna v. Ram Chandra, 47 All. 619, 88 I.C. 411, A.I.R. 1925 All. 437. See also Notes 63 and 64 under sec. 6. Where a testatrix by a codicil directed that all interest given by her will to her niece should go over, should she not cease to reside in S (the testatrix's mill) within 18 months of the testatrix's death, it was held to be a condition which would require the niece to omit her duty to her husband and as such it was void—Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, L.R. 12 Eq. 604. But if a testator bequeaths a certain portion of his property to a female legatee imposing a condition that she would be divested of the bequest if she marries within the life-time of her father or if she lives an unchaste life, such a condition is not void—Cohen v. Cohen, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 350.

26. Where the terms of a transfer of property impose a condition to be fulfilled before a person can take an interest in the property, the condition shall be deemed to have been fulfilled if it has been substantially complied with.

Fulfilment of condition precedent.

Illustrations.

(a) A transfers Rs. 5,000 to B on condition that he shall marry with the consent of C, D and E. E dies. B marries with the consent of C and D. B is deemed to have fulfilled the condition.

(b) A transfers Rs. 5,000 to B on condition that he shall marry with the consent of C, D and E. B marries without the consent of C, D and E, but obtains their consent after the marriage. B has not fulfilled the condition.

Compare sec. 128 of the Indian Succession Act, 1921.

Principle :—This section is based upon the principle of favouring the early vesting of estates. See Scott v. Tyler, 2 W. & T.L.C. 146. This section and the next lay down the doctrine of cy pres with reference to the fulfilment of a condition precedent. It is sufficient if a condition precedent is performed cy pres, i.e., so performed as to substantially fulfil the testator's intention. See Williams on Executors, 11th Edn., p. 1013.

137. Substantial compliance :—A condition precedent is fulfilled if it is substantially complied with; but a condition subsequent must be strictly fulfilled (sec. 29).

Conditions subsequent that go in defeasance shall be taken strictly, for they are odious, and hence it is that unless they are strictly fulfilled, the ulterior disposition shall not take effect. But in the case of a condition precedent, as the estate cannot commence until the condition is performed, the condition is beneficial as creating an estate and ought to be construed favourably—Scott v. Tyler, 2 W. & T.L.C. p. 146. The law is always in favour of vesting of estates (Taylor v. Graham, 3 App. Cas. 1287) and a condition precedent should be construed in favour of the devisee.

Where a testator bequeathed a legacy on condition that the legatee should "humbly apply for subsistence", but the legatee instead of "humbly applying" claimed as of right and claimed twelve times the amount of the bequest as maintenance "suitable to his rank and position," the bequest failed as there was no substantial compliance with the condition—Veerabhadra v. Chiranjivi, 28 Mad. 173 (P.C.).

Where a house is given on condition of residence therein but no manner or period of residence is prescribed, the occasional use of the house and keeping an establishment therein with the intention of using it again as residence, is a sufficient compliance with the condition—In re the Tagore case, 1 I.A. 387, 22 W.R. 377. Where a testator bequeathed a legacy to his daughter on her attaining twenty-one or marrying with the consent of her guardian or guardians which should first happen; but the daughter married under twenty-one without the consent of any guardian, there being none, it was held that the condition was not complied with and the daughter took no vested interest although the will empowered the trustees during the minority of the daughter to pay the income of their contingent legacies to his wife for her maintenance and education—In re Brown's Will, 18 Ch. D. 61.

A testator devised a property in the country to the use of his son G for life "provided as a sine qua non" that he "within six calendar months after my decease shall enter upon and take actual possession of" the property "as and for his residence and place of abode" and "shall as such tenant for life thereafter during his life continue to reside in or upon the said capital messuage for at least six calendar months (but not necessarily consecutively) in every year". After G's death or his failing to take such possession as aforesaid and to reside in the house the testator devised the same to G's first and other sons tail male. G entered and took possession within six months after the testator's death, but as to residence, during the year following he was in the house for 18 days only and in the year following for not more than 24 days. He had however placed the house in charge of a staff of servants and otherwise occupied the house through them and his son who stayed at the house on every alternate Saturday till Monday. Held that no forfeiture of G's life estate had taken place—Warner v. Moir, 25 Ch. D. 605. See in this connection Shyama Charan v. Sarup Chand, 17 C.W.N. 39.

Where, by an agreement between a female and three male persons, it was agreed that a certain property should not be transferred by the female without the consent of the other party constituted by the three male persons, held that it was not a substantial compliance with this section if the consent of only one of the three was obtained (the other two being dead at the time). Broadly speaking, till the majority or at least one half of the people whose consent is necessary give it, it cannot be said that there has been a substantial compliance with the condition—Benichand v. Ekram Ahmed, A.I.R. 1926 All. 181, 90 I.C. 887. Cf. Illustration (a).

Ignorance of condition :—The mere fact that a person to whom a grant is made is ignorant of the condition to be performed is no excuse for not fulfilling it—In re Hodge's Legacy, 16 Eq. 92; Astley v. Earl of Essex, 18 Eq. 290. A person who takes under an instrument cannot plead want of knowledge of its contents as an excuse for non-compliance—Porter v. Fry, 1 Vent. 199.

27. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created in favour of one person, and by the same transaction an ulterior disposition of the same interest is made in favour of another, if the prior disposition under the transfer shall fail, the ulterior disposition shall take effect upon the failure of the prior disposition, although the failure may not have occurred in the manner contemplated by the transferor.

But, where the intention of the parties to the transaction is that the ulterior disposition shall take effect only in the event of the prior disposition failing in a particular manner, the ulterior disposition shall not take effect unless the prior disposition fails in that manner.

Illustrations.

(a) A transfers Rs. 500 to B on condition that he shall execute a certain lease within 3 months after A's death, and if he should neglect to do so, to C, B dies in A's life-time. The disposition in favour of C takes effect.

(b) A transfers property to his wife; but, in case she should die in his life-time, transfers to B that which he had transferred to her. A and his wife perish together under circumstances which make it impossible to prove that she died before him. The disposition in favour of B does not take effect.

Compare sections 129 and 130, Indian Succession Act, 1925. The illustration (b) has been taken from Underwood v. Wing, 4 DeG. M. & G. 633.

The rule in this section applies both to moveable and immoveable properties—Evastoff v. Austin, 19 Beav. 591; Jull v. Jacobs, 3 Ch. D. 703.

Scope :—The failure contemplated by this section is the failure of a valid gift. When the gift is ab initio void, the subsequent gifts must also fail as provided in sec. 16—Ismail v. Umar, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 155 (158), 44 Bom. L.R. 256.

138. Acceleration :—This section enunciates the doctrine of acceleration. Thus, where there is a gift in remainder, expectant on the termination of an estate for life, and the prior life estate becomes void, the gift does not fail but is accelerated—Adjudhia v. Rukhman, 10 Cal. 482 (P.C.). Where in a series of successive limitations, a particular estate is void ab initio, the remainder, which is immediately expectant upon such estates, accelerates. Thus, where there was a gift to the testator's daughter of real and personal estate "during her lifetime, and, after her decease, the property to be equally divided between her children on their becoming of age" and the gift to the daughter was void on account of her having attested the will, it was held that the gift to the children was accelerated and took effect immediately—Jull v. Jacobs, 3 Ch. D. 703. So also, where the prior estate is revoked by the donor and thus fail, the remainder immediately expectant upon it accelerates—Fell v. Biddulph, L.R. 10 C.P. 701.

Where there is a gift to a legatee, with a gift over to another if the legatee neglects to perform a condition, the gift over takes effect if the legatee never comes into existence or dies before the testator or if the gift to the legatee is itself void, so that the legatee is never able to perform the condition and thus the prior disposition fails—Scatterwood v. Edge, 1 Salk. 229; Avelyn v. Ward, 1 Ves. 420; Re Green's Estate, 1 Dr. & S. 68. Where a testator made a gift to a son to be adopted by his widow, and, on the death of such adopted son without issue in the widow's lifetime, to his (testator's) daughters, and the power of adoption given to the widow was invalid, held that the executory gift to the daughters took effect as the prior gift failed ab initio by reason of its object never coming into existence—Radha Prosad v. Rani Monee, 33 Cal. 947. A devise was made by X to his child en ventre sa mere (under the misapprehension that his wife was enciente) and if such child died before a certain age, then a gift to another. When it was found that the wife was not enciente, the ulterior estate became accelerated and did not become void—Wing v. Angrave, 8 H.L.C. 183; Hall v. Warren, 9 H.L.C. 420; Jones v. Westcomb, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 245.

An award of an arbitrator provided that the managership of certain endowed property should devolve on the next successor after it had been held by the previous one for 21 years. The manager who had been appointed for a term of 21 years died before the expiry of the full period. Held that the effect of the failure of the prior interest was to accelerate the subsequent interest even though the failure did not take place in the precise manner laid down in the award. The intention of the arbitrator was clearly that the ulterior disposition was to take effect on the failure of the prior one, and not that the ulterior disposition was to be ineffectual unless the previous manager completed his full term of 21 years—Debi Shankar v. Nand Kishore, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 161 (163). Where a testator directed that if his pregnant wife should bring forth a son, his property should go to the son, and, if a daughter, she should only have a right of maintenance, and that if the son born should die before attaining age, the property should go over to the testator's brother N, and the wife gave birth to a daughter, held that the gift over in favour of N took effect on failure of the gift to the son, even though such failure was not in precise manner expressed in the terms of the gift—Okhoymoney v. Nilmony, 15 Cal. 282, following Jones v. Westcomb (supra).

The mere fact that the testator contemplated that if his son died a minor and the widow survived him, she would acquire the property before the two daughters and that event did not take effect in that order because the widow predeceased the son, did not deprive the daughters of the benefit of the legacy given to them—Durga Prosad v. Raghumandan, 19 C.W.N. 439.

Para 2 :—A Hindu will provided : “I give and bequeath the whole of the residuary estate to my grandson or grandsons who may be born to my son K within ten years after my death : if there shall be no such grandson to be born as aforesaid, the whole of my residuary estate is to be divided equally between my said grand daughters after the death of my said wife.” There was a proviso that the distribution of the residuary estate among the grand daughters should take place after the death of the testator’s wife, daughters-in-law and son. A grandson was born within ten years of the testator’s death; held, that the bequest in favour of the grandson being a bequest to a person not in existence at the death of the testator was invalid (as the law then stood; now see Hindu Disposition of Property Act XV of 1916). But as the grandson was in existence, bequest in favour of the grand daughters could not take effect and there was complete intestacy. Therefore, the grandson took the whole estate as heir-at-law—Official Assignee v. Vedavalli, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 936, 51 M.L.J. 182, 97 I.C. 163.

28. On a transfer of property an interest therein may be created to accrue to any person with the condition superadded that in case a specified uncertain event shall happen such interest shall pass to another person, or that in case a specified uncertain event shall not happen such interest shall pass to another person. In each case the dispositions are subject to the rules contained in sections 10, 12, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 27.

Ulterior transfer conditional on happening or not happening of specified event.

This section may be compared with sec. 131, Indian Succession Act, 1925, from which the following Illustrations may be quoted :—

“*Illustration (i) :—*A sum of money is bequeathed to A, to be paid to him at the age of 18, if he shall die before he attains that age, to B. A takes a vested interest in the legacy, subject to be divested and to go to B, in case A shall die under 18.”

“*Illustration (ii) :—*A sum of money is bequeathed to A for life, and after his death to B, but if B shall then be dead leaving a son, such son is to stand in the place of B. B takes a vested interest in the legacy subject to be divested if he dies leaving a son during A’s life-time.”

138A. Scope :—The distinction between a repugnant provision and a defeasance provision is sometimes subtle, but the general principle of law is that where the intention of the transferor is to maintain the absolute estate conferred on the transferee, but he simply adds some restrictions in derogation of the incidents of such absolute ownership, such restrictive clauses would be repugnant to the absolute estate and therefore void. But where the grant of an absolute estate is expressly or impliedly made subject to defeasance on the happening of a contingency and where the effect of such defeasance would not be a violation of any rule of law, the original estate is curtailed and the gift over must be taken to be valid and operative. Hence an absolute gift to a wife by the husband subject to the condition that if she dies without issue, the property would pass to other persons living at the date of gift, is valid in favour of a third person on the fulfilment of the condition. The gift over being valid any disposition by the wife during her life would not prevent the vesting of the property or divest the third persons—Gavindaraju v. Mangalam, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 80, 36 M.L.W. 733, 139 I.C. 867.

The direction in a will that "my remaining moveable property shall be dealt with by my son G according as he may think fit, and when the sons of my son G shall attain the age of 21 years the same shall be divided and duly received by G and his sons in equal shares" confers an absolute gift to G and the gift over is void—Anandrao v. Administrator-General, 20 Bom. 450. A Hindu testator appointed his wife as her executrix. A clause in the will vested in her whatever might remain after the payment of debts and expenses, absolutely and with complete power of alienation. Other clauses provided for the adoption of sons and in case of there being no adopted son or no son or wife of the adopted son at the time of the widow's death, the heir according to the Hindu Shastras who should be alive at the time, should get properties which should remain after disposal by the widow. The following rules were laid down by Mookerjee, J. :—(a) that the testator gave an absolute interest in his estate to his widow and the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her was void; (b) if an estate is given in terms which confer an absolute estate to a named donee, and then further interests are given merely after or on the termination of that donee's interest, and not in defeasance of it, his absolute interest is not cut down and the further interests fail; and (c) when an absolute interest has been given to the first taker followed by a gift over of what may not be required by him, the gift over, though concluded in the most direct and precise words, is void for uncertainty—Suresh v. Lalit, 20 C.W. N. 463, 31 I.C. 405, followed in Mohan Lal v. Niranjana, 3 Lah. 175. See also Gooroo Das v. Sarat, 29 Cal. 699. A clause of defeasance in order to be operative must contain express words or words of necessary implication of a gift over to a definite person—Amulya v. Kalidas, 32 Cal. 861.

139. Condition superadded :—It means 'condition subsequent'.

Examples :—(a) The death of the donee without leaving a son or son's son—Soorjeemoney v. Denobundhoo, 9 M.L.A. 123. Thus, a father may make a gift of his property absolutely to his daughter with a condition superadded that if she does not beget any male issue, the property shall revert to the family of the donor (father)—Hira Moni v. Anmol, 26 A.L.J. 944. A.I.R. 1928 All. 699 (702).

(b) The donee marrying or not marrying a particular person or class of persons named—Page v. Haywood, 2 Salk. 570; Parvathi Bhavani v. Velayudhan Govindan, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 167.

(c) The death of the donee before attaining a certain age—Doe d. Hunt v. Moore, 14 East 604; Maseyk v. Fergusson, 4 Cal. 304; Parvathi Bhavani v. Velayudhan Govindan, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 167.

(d) Change of religion—Seymour v. Vernon, 33 L.J. Ch. 690; Bid-dulph v. Lees, 28 L.J.Q.B. 211.

29. An ulterior disposition of the kind contemplated by the last preceding section cannot take effect unless the condition is strictly fulfilled.

Fulfilment of condition subsequent.

Illustration.

A transfers Rs. 500 to B, to be paid to him on his attaining his majority or marrying, with a proviso that, if B dies a minor or marries without C's consent, the said Rs. 500 shall go to D. B marries when only 17 years of age, without C's consent. The transfer to D takes effect.

Compare sec. 132 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

140. Strictly fulfilled :—A condition subsequent must be strictly fulfilled, whereas a condition precedent is deemed to be fulfilled if it is substantially complied with (see sec. 26). Conditions subsequent that go in defeasance of a vested interest shall be taken strictly, for they are odious; and hence it is that unless they are strictly fulfilled the ulterior disposition cannot take effect—Scott v. Tyler, 2 W. & T. L. C. 146 (189); Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H.L.C. 1; Clavering v. Ellison, 3 Drew 451; E. Enasu v. E. K. Antony, A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 207.

A condition subsequent which is impossible of performance is ignored as non-existent, and does not defeat the vested interest—In re Brown's Will, 18 Ch. D. 61. Thus, where there was a clause in a gift to the donor's daughter that she should marry his nephew at or before she attained the age of 21, and the nephew died before she attained that age, it was held that the condition subsequent, having become impossible of performance by the act of God, must be ignored—Thomas v. Hewell, 1 Salk. 170; Graydon v. Hicks, 2 Atk. 16. (But the effect would be otherwise in the case of a condition precedent, see Note 133 to sec. 25).

Where only a portion of the condition is impossible, the non-performance of the impossible portion may be excused—Collett v. Collett, 35 Beav. 312.

So also, a breach of a condition subsequent on account of duress does not result in forfeiture of the interest. Thus, a testator directed that if any of the female members of his family should wilfully leave the family dwelling house and live in any other place they should forfeit their rights under the will. The plaintiff, a widowed and minor daughter-in-law of the testator was taken away from the house by her maternal relations with the aid of the police, and she resided with her mother. Held that there was a plain case of duress on the girl, and the absence of the girl, although in contravention of the direction of the testator, ought not to be treated as working a forfeiture—Tincouri v. Krishna Bhabini, 20 Cal. 15.

Prior disposition not affected by invalidity of ulterior disposition.

30. If the ulterior disposition is not valid, the prior disposition is not affected by it.

Illustration.

A transfers a farm to B for her life, and, if she does not desert her husband, to C. B is entitled to the farm during her life as if no condition has been inserted.

Compare section 133 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

141. The principle of this section is that specific trusts or specific estates good in themselves are not invalidated by a subsequent illegal disposition of the residue or remainder—Krishnaramani v. Ananda, 4 B.L.R. O.C. 231; Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (P.C.); Khetter v. Gunganarain, 4 C.W.N. 671 (Footnote).

For an application of the principle of this section, see the Privy Council decision in Narsing Rao v. Mahalakshmi, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 156, where "their Lordships are of opinion that the provisions in the unborn son's favour amount to a condition subsequent and it is a well-settled principle of law, which has now been embodied in secs. 28 and 30, T. P. Act, 1882, that in such a case if the ulterior disposition is not valid the prior disposition is not affected by it."—A.I.R. 1928 P.C. at pp. 161-62. See also Ring v. Hardwick, 2 Beav. 352; Bai Dhan Laxmi v. Hariprasad, 45 Bom. 1038 and Shyama Charan v. Sarup Chand, 17 C.W.N. 39.

31. Subject to provisions of section 12, on a transfer of property an interest therein may be created with the condition superadded that it shall cease to exist in case a specified uncertain event shall happen, or in case a specified uncertain event shall not happen.

Condition that transfer shall cease to have effect in case specified uncertain event happens or does not happen.

Illustrations.

(a) A transfers a farm to B for his life, with a proviso that, in case B cuts down a certain wood, the transfer shall cease to have any effect. B cuts down the wood. He loses his life-interest in the farm.

(b) A transfers a farm to B, provided that, if B shall not go to England within three years after the date of transfer, his interest in the farm shall cease. B does not go to England within the term prescribed. His interest in the farm ceases.

Compare sec. 134 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

142. Condition of defeasance :—In Indian law a gift over corresponds to the terms of this section and is a condition superadded to a transfer of property that the interest should cease in case a specified uncertain event shall not happen. Where there has been no defeasance the gift over cannot come into operation, and there can be no defeasance unless some event arises which makes it impossible for the absolute title to continue—Mahammad Ali v. Nisar Ali, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 67 (73). Where a will purports to give an absolute interest with a condition that the devisee should have an interest so long as he resided in the house of the testator, the condition is valid—Ambika v. Sasitara, 22 C.L.J. 61; Shyama Charan v. Sarup Chand, 17 C.W.N. 39. But where a testator granted a monthly allowance to his wife on her living permanently in his family dwelling house, but the family dwelling house was never built by the testator or his executors as contemplated in the will, the widow was entitled to the allowance if she lived elsewhere—Satish Chandra v. Sarat Sundari, 38 I.C. 103.

Where a transfer deed provides that the property shall go to the transferee and pass to his heirs in the ordinary course of inheritance, a clause providing that in the event of the transferor's return all the properties shall revert to him is legal and enforceable equally upon the transferee and his heirs—Venkataramma v. Aiyasami, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 67. But a condition divesting the interest of a devisee or a legatee, if he enters into the naval or military services of the country is void—Beard v. Hall, (1908) 1 Ch. 383.

A Hindu testator devised some property in favour of his wives but there was a direction that they should live in the house, and that any one acting contrary to the terms of the will should be deprived of her interest which should thereupon devolve on the other heirs. The younger widow did not live in the house; held that she forfeited her interest in the property, and the next reversionary heir was entitled to take under the gift over—Bhabotarini v. Pearylal, 24 Cal. 646. Even though the estate given be an absolute estate, a condition may be superadded that the estate would be divested on the happening of a particular contingency. Such a condition is not invalid, either under the law in England or India—Ahmad Azim v. Shafi Jan, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 561 (574).

A condition subsequent by way of defeasance, mentioned in this section, is in the nature of a penalty : consequently, the Court does not enforce it in every case. (Cf. Note 140 under sec. 29). The Court will generally pass a decree for damages for non-performance of the condition—Munshi Lal v. Ahmad Mirza, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 291 (294), following Popham v. Bamfield, 23 E.R. 325.

There is nothing, however, in this section, which merely declares that a limitation upon a condition subsequent is a lawful method of grant, to exclude the right of the Court to give relief to the purchaser who fails to make payment of the price or part thereof by the date agreed upon in the contract of sale—Devendra v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 24.

32. In order that a condition that an interest shall cease to exist may be valid, it is necessary, that the event to which it relates be one which could legally constitute the condition of the creation of an interest.

Such condition must not be invalid.

This section may be compared with sec. 135 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. For invalid conditions see sec. 25.

33. Where, on a transfer of property, an interest therein is created subject to a condition that the person taking it shall perform a certain act, but no time is specified for the performance of the act, the condition is broken when he renders impossible, permanently or for an indefinite period, the performance of the act.

Transfer conditional on performance of act, no time being specified for performance.

This section may be compared with sec. 136 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, from which the following illustrations may be cited :—

*“Illustration (i) :—*A bequest is made to A with a proviso that unless he enters the army, the legacy shall go over to B. A takes holy orders and thereby renders it impossible that he should fulfil the condition. B is entitled to receive the legacy.”

*“Illustration (ii) :—*A bequest is made to A, with a proviso that it shall cease to have any effect if he does not marry B's daughter. A marries a stranger, and thereby indefinitely postpones the fulfilment of the condition. The bequest ceases to have effect”.

Also compare sec. 34 of the Contract Act.

34. Where an act is to be performed by a person either as a condition to be fulfilled before an interest created on a transfer of property is enjoyed by him, or as a condition on the non-fulfilment of which the interest is to pass from him to another person, and a time is specified for the performance of the act, if such performance within the specified time is prevented by the fraud of a person who would be directly benefited by non-fulfilment of the condition, such further time shall as against him be allowed for performing the act as shall be requisite to make up for the delay caused by such fraud. But if no time is specified for the performance of the act, then if its performance is by the fraud of a person interested in the non-fulfilment of the condition rendered impossible or indefinitely postponed, the condition shall as against him be deemed to have been fulfilled.

Transfer conditional on performance of act, time being specified.

This section may be compared with sec. 137 of the Indian Succession Act, with the exception that while the present section speaks of the fraud of a person “who would be directly benefited by the fulfilment of the condition” there are no corresponding words in the Succession Act.

This section may also be compared with sec. 18, Limitation Act.

144. Principle :—This section is based on the broad principle that no man is allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, and that relief is given to the party to whose interest it is that the condition should be fulfilled. See Edwards v. Aberayron Mutual Insurance Society, 1 Q.B.D. 563. Where the performance of a condition is rendered impossible by the fraud of a person, equity considers that as done which would have been done, and the person guilty of fraud is precluded from taking advantage of it—Rooper v. Lane, 6 H.L.C. 443. This rule is based on the principle of estoppel. The principle laid down in this section has, however, no application where the transaction is still incomplete, for it presupposes an actual transfer for consideration—Jamsetji v. Kashinath, 26 Bom. 326.

Where a testator by his will directed that if any of the female members of his family either from misunderstanding or any other cause, should live in any other than a holy place for more than three months except for pilgrimage, they should forfeit their rights under the will. A minor widowed daughter-in-law of the testator was removed from the house by her maternal relations and brother with the aid of the police and she resided for more than three months with her mother; held that as the girl was not a free agent, her absence did not work a forfeiture. Mere minority was, however, no excuse—Tin Cowrie v. Krishna Bhabini, 20 Cal. 15.

Fraud :—For definition of fraud, see sec. 17, Contract Act. Fraud, like any other charge of a criminal offence, whether made in civil or criminal proceedings, must be established beyond reasonable doubt. A finding as to fraud cannot be based on suspicion and conjecture—Narayanan v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 93, 196 I.C. 404 (P.C.).

Election.

35. Where a person professes to transfer property which he has no right to transfer, and as part of the same transaction confers any benefit on the owner of the property, such owner must elect either to confirm such transfer or to dissent from it; and in the latter case he shall relinquish the benefit so conferred, and the benefit so relinquished shall revert to the transferor or his representative as if it had not been disposed of,

subject nevertheless,

Where the transfer is gratuitous, and the transferor has, before the election, died or otherwise become incapable of making a fresh transfer, and in all cases where the transfer is for consideration, to the charge of making good to the disappointed transferee the amount or value of the property attempted to be transferred to him.

Illustrations.

The farm of Sultanpur is the property of C and worth Rs. 800. A by an instrument of gift professes to transfer it to B, giving by the same instrument Rs. 1,000 to C. C elects to retain the farm. He forfeits the gift of Rs. 1,000

In the same case, A dies before the election. His representative must out of the Rs. 1,000 pay Rs. 800 to B.

The rule in the first paragraph of the section applies whether the transferor does or does not believe that which he professes to transfer to be his own.

A person taking no benefit directly under a transaction, but deriving a benefit under it indirectly, need not elect.

A person who in his one capacity takes a benefit under the transaction may in another dissent therefrom.

Exception to the last preceding four rules.—Where a particular benefit is expressed to be conferred on the owner of the property which the transferor professes to transfer, and such benefit is expressed to be in lieu of that property, if such owner claim the property, he must relinquish the particular benefit, but he is not bound to relinquish any other benefit conferred upon him by the same transaction.

Acceptance of the benefit by the person on whom it is conferred constitutes an election by him to confirm the transfer, if he is aware of his duty to elect and of those circumstances which would influence the judgment of a reasonable man in making an election, or if he waives enquiry into the circumstances.

Such knowledge or waiver shall, in absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed, if the person on whom the benefit has been conferred has enjoyed it for two years without doing any act to express dissent.

Such knowledge or waiver may be inferred from any act of his which renders it impossible to place the persons interested in the property professed to be transferred in the same condition as if such act had not been done.

Illustration.

A transfers to B an estate to which C is entitled, and as part of the same transaction gives C a coal-mine. C takes possession of the mine and exhausts it. He has thereby confirmed the transfer of the estate to B.

If he does not within one year after the date of the transfer signify to the transferor or his representatives his intention to confirm or to dissent from the transfer, the transferor or his representatives may, upon the expiration of that period, require him to make his election; and, if he does not comply with such requisition within a reasonable time after he has received it, he shall be deemed to have elected to confirm the transfer.

In case of disability, the election shall be postponed until the disability ceases, or until the election is made by some competent authority.

This section may be compared with secs. 180-182 and 184-190 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

145. Doctrine of Election :—The principle of election is this : He who accepts a benefit under a deed or will, must adopt the whole contents of the instrument conforming to all its provisions and renouncing every right inconsistent with them—Streatfield v. Streatfield, 1 W. & T.L.C. 397; Williams on Executors, 11th Ed., Vol. 2, page 1182. If a testator gives property, by design or by mistake, which is not in his power to give, and gives at the same time to the real owner of it other property, such real owner cannot take both—Per James, V.C., in Wollaston v. King, 8 Eq. 165 (at p. 178).

The foundation of the doctrine of election is that the person taking a benefit under an instrument must also bear the burden—Codrington v. Lindsey, L.R. 8 Ch. 598; Pickersgill v. Rodger, 5 Ch. D. 163. A person cannot take under and against one and the same instrument—Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swan. 359. A legatee cannot take a legacy without submitting to the onerous condition of the will. Thus, if his property (a house) has been wrongly devised to another and the testator has made a devise of a sum of money in his favour, then if he wishes to receive the legacy, he must acquiesce in the devise of his house to another. If, however, he chooses to retain the house, he is not entitled to the legacy under the will—Venkataramayya v. Patchamma, 78 I.C. 274, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 164 (166).

This section confines the doctrine of election to a case where a person professes to transfer property which he has no right to transfer and as part of the same transaction confers any benefit on the owner of the property. In England, no case of election arises if the property which the testator professes to dispose of does not belong to the legatee. The word "owner" is used in a very wide sense and includes persons who have vested or contingent rights and reversioners, and remote as well as immediate interest; but a chance of being elected is not an interest in property—Mohammad Ali v. Nisar Ali, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 67 (82), 109 I.C. 835.

145A. Rule of election :—It is an essential condition for the application of the doctrine, that the person sought to be estopped or his predecessor-in-interest must have obtained possession of the property under the deed. It is also plain that the party estopped did not have or did not profess to have any title to the property other than the title derived from the deed—Venkatarayadu v. Narayana, (1941) 1 M.L.J. 349, 1941 M.W.N. 208, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 430 (431).

146. Application of rule :—The doctrine of election is a rule of practice in equity—Spread v. Morgan, 11 H.L.C. 588; and being founded on the highest principle of equity, it applies equally to Hindus and to persons governed by other personal laws. The principle is not peculiar to English law alone but is common to all law and based on the rules of justice, and has therefore been often applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council to the consideration of Indian cases—Forbes v. Ameeroonissa, 10 M.I.A. 340; Shah Makhan Lal v. Baboo Kishen Singh, 12 M.I.A. 186; see also Mangaldas v. Ranchoddas, 14 Bom. 438; Bai Mamubai v. Dossa Morrarji, 15 Bom. 443; Tribhuvandas v. Smith, 20 Bom. 316; and Rajamannar v. Venkata, 25 Mad. 361 in which the doctrine has been held applicable to Hindus.

Thus, D, a Hindu widow died making a will in respect of property which she had inherited from her husband; she bequeathed Rs. 2,000 as a legacy to the plaintiff and the immoveable property to K. Both the plaintiff and K were the heirs of her husband. The plaintiff sued for the legacy under the will as well as for half the immoveable property as heir. Held that the plaintiff must be put to his election either to take the legacy under the will or half the property as heir—Mangaldas v. Ranchoddas, 14 Bom. 438.

In the case of a surrender by a Hindu widow to her immediate reversioners, there is however no scope for application of the doctrine of election or estoppel; for it does not amount to a conveyance by her of property to the surrenderees. The fiction of civil death is assumed when such a surrender takes place and when the reversioners come in, they come in their own right as heirs of the last owner and not as transferees from the widow. The principle is not displaced by a reasonable provision being made out of the estate for the maintenance of the widow—Venkatarayaudu v. Narayana, supra.

No question of election arises when one of the courses open to the person is not a legal or lawful one. If the result of electing one of the remedies is to put a person to the necessity of choosing a course which is opposed to law, this doctrine should not be invoked. It cannot be resorted to in order to cure an illegality—Sulaiman v. Kader, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 161, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 104.

The doctrine of election applies to all kinds of property and persons. There is no distinction for the purposes of election, between personal estate and real estate, between specific and residuary legatees, or between legatees and the next-of-kin of an estate—per Jones, L.J., in Cooper v. Cooper, L.R. 6 Ch. 15.

It is applicable to moveable and immoveable properties alike—Cooper v. Cooper, L.R. 6 Ch. 15 (19).

The doctrine is applicable as well to vested as to contingent interests, to reversionary and remote as well as to the immediate interests—Wilson v. Lord Townshend, 2 Ves. J. 693 (697). The fact that the alienation as such is void is no bar to the applicability of the doctrine of election—K. Shanmugham Pillai v. S. Shanmugham Pillai, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 207.

Where the party disputing the validity of a bequest does not claim as his own any property that the testator has disposed of, no question of election arises—Kamal Kumari v. Narendra Nath, 9 C.L.J. 19. See also Md. Afzal v. Ghulam Kasim, 30 Cal. 843 (P.C.). Where it was impossible for some of the testator's children to render a property subject to the trust created by the testator's will, they were not put to their election between that property and the benefits conferred upon them by the will—Brown v. Gregson, (1920) A.C. 860. See also Parker v. Sowerby, 4 DeG M & G. 321.

D, a Hindu widow, died making a will in respect of property which she had inherited from her husband. She bequeathed Rs. 2,000 as a legacy to the plaintiff and the immoveable property to K, the defendant's father. The plaintiff and K were the heirs of her husband. The plaintiff sued for the legacy under the will and for half the immoveable property as heir : held, that the plaintiff should be put to his election whether to take the legacy under the will, or half the property as heir of the testator's husband—Mangaldas v. Ranchhoddas, 14 Bom. 438. See also Atchama v. Ramandha, 4 M.I.A. 1 (103) and Wollaston v. King, L.R. 8 Eq. 165. For a case of election made by the Court for a child, see Blunt v. Lack, 26 L.J. Ch. 148.

Compensation :—A testator by his will gave a sum of colonial stock to M and all his shares in a company A to several persons in varying proportions. The gift to M failed, held, that the legatees of the shares of company A could not take the benefit of their legacies without compensating M in respect of her legacy of the stock, and that such compensation was a charge on their legacies in an amount equal to the value of the stock at the death of the testator—Macfarlane v. Macartney, (1918) 1 Ch. 300. But see Cavendish v. Dacre, 31 Ch. D. 466, where under the circumstances of the case it was held that the legatee was not bound to make any compensation.

147. Donor's intention to give property not his own :—In order to raise a case of election it is necessary that the intention of the testator to dispose of the property which is not his own should be clear—Rancliffe v. Parkins, 6 Dow. 179. The doctrine of election does not apply where the testator has some present interest in the estate disposed of by him, though it is not entirely his own. In such a case, unless there is an intention clearly manifested in the will or a necessary implication on his part to dispose of the whole of the estate including the interest of third persons, he will be presumed to dispose of that which he might lawfully dispose of and no more—Grissell v. Swinhoe, L.R. 7 Eq. 291; Wilkinson v. Dent, 6 Ch. 339.

The intention must appear on the face of the will itself, for parol evidence will not be admissible for the purpose of showing it—Stratton v. Best, 1 Ves. 185; Doe v. Chichester, 4 Dow. 65; Clementson v. Gandy, 1 Keen. 309.

148. "Same transaction" :—No case for election arises where the two gifts are not made in the same transaction. Thus, a Hindu widow made a gift in excess of her powers and subsequently left a will in the following terms : "Excluding the properties which I have already given away, I will make the following disposition". Held that the plaintiff taking under the will of the widow is not precluded from disputing the prior gift. A person accepting a benefit under a will is not precluded by the doctrine of election from disputing some separate transaction in which the testator was engaged long before his death and which is not the subject of the will at all—Ramayyar v. Mahalakshmi, 42 M.L.J. 583, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 357 (358), 64 I.C. 481.

149. Different nature of the two properties is no bar to election :—A, who was managing the properties inherited by the daughter of his deceased brother, died leaving a will whereby he bequeathed a portion of these properties to B, and a sum of Rs. 800 to his niece. In a suit brought by the niece to recover the properties inherited by her and bequeathed to B, and also the legacy of Rs. 800, held that the doctrine of election applied, notwithstanding that the niece would get an absolute right in the sum bequeathed to her, while B would take only her life interest in the properties bequeathed to him—Ammalu v. Ponnammal, 36 M.L.J. 507, 49 I.C. 527. Where there were two nuptial settlements of even date, one of realty and the other of personality, they were one settlement for the purpose of election by a person whose property was affected by one and who claimed a benefit under the other; the circumstance that the property so affected was a remainder in tail which the settlor might have barred, was unsuccessfully relied upon in favour of a contrary view—Bacon v. Cosby, 4 DeG. & S. 261.

150. The benefit shall revert to the transferor :—If the transferee does not take according to the instrument, he must relinquish the benefit conferred upon him, and the benefit so relinquished shall revert to the transferor on the principle that it is impossible to ascertain what the testator would have done, if he were aware of the defect in his instrument. And the Court cannot speculate what would have been the transferor's intention under the circumstances—Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. 370; In re Brookshank, 34 Ch. D. 163. But the disappointed donee is entitled to take out of the benefit the value of the property attempted to be transferred to him.

There is a distinction between the English and the Indian Law as to the disposal of the balance after satisfying the disappointed donee. Under the English Law the balance goes to the refractory donee; whereas under the Indian law the balance goes to the transferor or his representatives. Thus, in the first illustration to this section, if C elects to retain the farm of Sultanpur, he forfeits the gift of Rs. 1,000, but B is entitled to get Rs. 800, the value of the property attempted to be transferred to him. The remaining Rs. 200 will go, according to Indian Law, to A or his representatives; but according to English Law, it will go to C. See Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swan. 394. Under the English Law, the refractory donee by electing against the instrument does not incur a forfeiture of the whole benefit conferred on him, but is merely bound to make compensation out of it to the disappointed transferee, and after making compensation, takes the balance himself. In other words, compensation and not forfeiture is the principle on which the doctrine of election proceeds, under the English law. Williams on Executors, (11th Edn.), Vol. II, pp. 1188, 1189.

Another point of difference between the English and the Indian Law is that when the donee does not take according to the instrument and relinquishes the benefit, the benefit under the Indian Law reverts to the transferor or his representatives, and the compensation to be paid to the disappointed transferee is a charge upon the transferor or his representatives; but under the English Law, the benefit relinquished by the donee does not revert to the transferor but remains in the hands of the donee, subject to the giving of a compensation to the disappointed transferee; in other words, the compensation to be given to the disappointed transferee is a charge upon the refractory donee. See Pickersgill v. Rodgers, 5 Ch. D. 163.

151. Clause (2) :—“Whether the transferor does or does not believe” :—The transferor’s belief is immaterial. It is not necessary to prove that the transferor was aware that the subject of disposition was not his own—Coutts v. Acworth, 9 Eq. 519. The obligation of making an election will be equally imposed on the transferee, although the transferor proceeded on an erroneous supposition that both the subjects of transfer were absolutely at his own disposal. Williams on Executors, Vol. II, p. 1182. The Court will not speculate on what the transferor would have done if he had known that the property was not his—Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. 367.

Clause (3) :—Person taking benefit indirectly need not elect :—No case of election arises when a benefit is given indirectly. For a devisee or donee who claims derivatively through another does not take under the deed, and is not bound by the equity attaching thereto. Thus, “the lands of Sultanpur are settled upon C for life, and after his death upon D, his only child. A bequeaths the lands of Sultanpur to B and Rs. 1,000 to C. C dies intestate shortly after the testator, and without having made any election. D takes out administration to C, and as administrator elects on behalf of C’s estate to take under the will. In that capacity he receives the legacy of Rs. 1,000 and accounts to B for the rents of the lands of Sultanpur which accrued after the death of the testator, and before the death of C. In his individual character he retains the lands of Sultanpur in opposition to the will”—Illustration to sec. 184, the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

152. Clause (4) :—Person acting in different capacities :—Compare sec. 185 of the Indian Succession Act :—“A person who in his individual capacity takes a benefit under the will, may in another character elect to take in opposition to the will.”

“Illustration.”—The estate of Sultanpur is settled upon A for life, and after his death upon B. A leaves the estate of Sultanpur to D, and Rs. 2,000 to B, and Rs. 1,000 to C, who is B’s only child. B dies intestate shortly after the testator without having made an election. C takes out administration to B and, as administrator elects to keep the estate of Sultanpur in opposition to the will, and to relinquish the legacy of Rs. 2,000. C may do this and yet claim his legacy of Rs. 1,000 under the will.”

Where a person takes a benefit in a capacity different from that in which he asserts his rights, no question of election can arise merely because owing to certain circumstances the two capacities have temporarily merged in him—Deputy Commissioner v. Ram Sarup, 20 O.C. 243, 42 I.C. 18.

A testator being entitled under a settlement, subject to a life-interest, to a moiety of a fund by will, after reciting erroneously that he was under the settlement “subject to the trusts therein contained” entitled to the whole, purported to bequeath the whole and to give one moiety to the husband of the lady who was really entitled under the settlement to a moiety of the fund : held, that the husband, who had become his wife’s administrator, was not bound to elect between the legacy and his wife’s moiety—Grissell v. Swinhoe, L.R. 7 Eq.

291. As to creditors not bound to elect, see Kidney v. Cowsmaker, 12 Ves. 136.

153. Exception :—Such benefit is expressed to be in lieu of that property :—Where a Hindu testator in bequeathing all his property, included therein the share of his brother's widow, but made a suitable provision for her maintenance, and the widow at first sued for and obtained the allowance for maintenance but subsequently sued for her share in her husband's property, held that the second suit would be precluded with regard to the doctrine of election, as the widow must have known that the maintenance was provided for in lieu of her husband's property—Promoda Dasi v. Lakhi Narain, 12 Cal. 60.

154. Clause (5) :—Acceptance of the benefit amounts to election :—Acceptance of the benefit by the donee amounts to election. But in order to presume an election from the acts or conduct of any person, he must be shown (i) to have been aware of his right to elect, (ii) to have intended to exercise such right, and (iii) to have had full knowledge of such matters as the value of the different properties and his own rights in respect of them, unless he has waived the inquiry which would have resulted in such knowledge. Shepherd and Brown, 7th Edn., p. 110; Briscoe v. Briscoe, 1 Jo. & Lat. 334; Wilson v. Thornbury, L.R. 10 Ch. 239. Worthington v. Wiginton, 20 Beav. 67; Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. 359. Hence it follows that if a person acts through ignorance or mistake, the doctrine gives way. Thus, a holder of a mere life-estate granted a perpetual lease (which he had no right to grant), and the reversioner (plaintiff) accepted rent from the lessee for three years after the lessor's death. Held under sec. 35 that the mere acceptance of rent by the plaintiff did not constitute an election by him to confirm the lease, when there was nothing to show that he was aware of the circumstances under which the lease was granted or of the terms on which it was held by the person paying the rent. There can be no election when the person receiving the rent is not aware of his duty to elect or of the fact that a perpetual lease had been granted by the intermediate holder, which it was in his power to repudiate or confirm. Under these circumstances, the acceptance of rent even for three years could not operate as an estoppel or waiver by the plaintiff of his right to avoid the lease—Gopi Koeri v. Raj Roop, 78 I.C. 191, A.I.R. 1925 All. 190 (192). But see Madhu Sudan v. Rooke, 25 Cal. 1 (P.C.) where a widow in possession of her widow's estate made a grant of putni tenure and in the suit brought by the reversioner on her death for setting aside the grant it was held by the Privy Council that the plaintiff had elected to treat the grant as valid as he had accepted rent.

Where under a will of her husband a purdanashin widow was to get certain benefits and the will also contained terms disadvantageous to her, and she took unconsciously the benefit granted to her by the will, it was held that she was not bound by the disadvantageous terms in the absence of evidence that the will had been explained to her—Indubala v. Manmatha, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 724, 41 C.L.J. 258, 87 I.C.

178; Triguna v. Radharani, 37 C.L.J. 20; Sopwith v. Maughan, 30 Beav. 235.

An election made under a misconception of the extent of the claims on the fund elected, may be revoked—Kidney v. Coussmaker, 17 Ves. 136; Worthington v. Wiginton, (supra); Tribhovandas v. Smith, 20 Bom. 316.

155. Clause (6) :—Two years' enjoyment :—Acceptance of a benefit may be presumed from two years' enjoyment of the benefit. Thus, where a donee on her mother's death entered on the land and from that time continued in possession for two years, received the rents, made no application to the trustees to sell nor brought a bill against them to sell, though she had a right to apply to them to sell and as cestui que trust might have contracted for selling, held that such action raised a presumption of acceptance—Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 680. But, if a person acts in ignorance of his right, no presumption will be made in favour of acceptance even though the possession be for 2 years or more. Thus, where a person on whom a benefit has been conferred had been in receipt of the same for 16 years, being ignorant of his right to elect, held that he was not estopped from acting the other way—Sopwith v. Monghan, 30 Beav. 235.

If one or both of the two properties are reversionary, the period of two years will not begin to run before both fall into possession, for until then they cannot be enjoyed—Padbury v. Clark, 2 Mac. & G. 298.

Clause (7) :—Election when parties cannot be placed the status quo :—Election will be presumed when the donee has acted in respect of the property gifted to him in such a manner as to make it impossible for him to return it to the true owner in the same position in which it has remained before. See the illustration. This is based on the principle of English law that a contract cannot be avoided where it has become impossible for the parties to be placed in the same position as if it never had been made—Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., p. 110.

156. Clause (8) :—Time for election :—The Indian law specifies a time within which an election must be made. In England, no such time is fixed by law, but if a time is limited by the instrument itself, the donee must elect within that period, and if he fails to do so he will be deemed to have renounced the benefit under the instrument—Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swan. 385.

157. Clause (9) :—Disability :—The last para. of this section corresponds to section 190 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

In the case of a minor the period of election will be postponed during the minority, unless the minor is represented by a qualified guardian, in which case he can elect.

Where a minor member of the mortgagee family is not a party to the deed of mortgage creating a usufructuary mortgage but enjoys the mortgaged properties along with the adult members of the family for forty years, he must be deemed to have affirmed the mortgage and the mortgagor can redeem his, that is, the minor's share in the mortgage—Beepathuma v. Velasari Shankaranarayana, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 241.

Apportionment.

36. In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, all rents, annuities, pension, dividends and other periodical payments in the nature of income shall, upon the transfer of the interest of the person entitled to receive such payments, be deemed, as between the transferor and the transferee, to accrue due from day to day, and to be apportionable accordingly, but to be payable on the days appointed for the payment thereof.

Apportionment of periodical payments on determination of interest of person entitled.

This section may be compared with secs. 338-40 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. The English law on the subject is embodied in the Apportionment Act of 1870 (33 & 34 Vict., c. 34).

158. Scope of section :—This section is applicable only as between the transferor and the transferee of the benefit of the payment, and not as between the person liable for and the person entitled to the payment—Rangappaya v. Shiva, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 699 (700). Thus, this section has no application as between landlord and tenant—Janki Bai v. Bayabai, 16 C.P.L.R. 55. Therefore, if a landlord dispossesses his tenant in the middle of the year, he does not thereby in all cases forfeit his right to rents which have already accrued due. Whether he does or not must depend upon the circumstances, e.g., if it be an agricultural tenure, the question would be whether the raiyat has enjoyed all the year's profit or has been prevented from enjoying any by the landlord's act of interference—Bunsee Dhur v. Bheem Lal, 24 W.R. 219.

Again, the apportionment which this section contemplates is one following upon the transfer of the interest of the person entitled to receive the rent and not upon the transfer of the interest of the person bound to pay it—Satyendra v. Nilkantha, 21 Cal. 383 (386).

This section applies only in the absence of a contract to the contrary. Where the contract shows that the whole rent for the year accrues on a fixed date in the year, it cannot be said that the rent accrues from day to day; consequently, it is a contract to the contrary of what is enacted in this section which cannot apply to the case—Subbaraju v. Seetharamaraju, 39 Mad. 283 (287), 28 I.C. 232. But the Allahabad High Court holds that sec. 36 applies even though under a special custom the rents or profits become due on a particular day of the year and not from day to day, because section 36 speaks of a proportionate division of the profits, and does not affect the date when they become due from the tenants. That date remains as of before. Section 36 expressly lays down that on a transfer of an interest the rents, etc., shall as between the transferor and the transferee accrue from day to day and be apportionable accordingly but shall be payable on the days appointed for the payment thereof—Lala Ganga Ram v. Mewa Ram Singh, A.I.R. 1922 All. 275. "Suppose, a house fetching monthly rent is sold on 10th May. The seller would, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled to the rent of 9 days, and the vendee to the rent of 22 days. But the tenant holds under a monthly contract, and he cannot be made to pay the rent of 9 days to the seller on the 10th of May. He will pay the rent as usual on the 1st of June. But he will pay in the proportion indicated"—Mukherji's Law of Transfer of Property, 2nd Edn., p. 48.

Moreover, this section is confined to transfers by act of parties, and does not apply to transfers by operation of law, e.g., execution sales—Satyendra v. Nilkantha, 21 Cal. 383 (386); Subbaraju v. Seetharamaraju, 39 Mad. 283 (286). This section does not even apply to transfers by operation of customary law. Thus, where according to custom the eldest son having succeeded to the Raj estate, the second son (plaintiff) became hikim entitled to certain customary property, and claimed refund of rent for 55 days up to the end of fasli year from the first defendant who as mortgagee in possession of certain mouzas held under the plaintiff's predecessor had personally collected from the tenants of the mouzas the entire rent for the fasli year, held that having regard to sec. 2 (which prohibits the Transfer of Property Act from applying to transfers by operation of law), this section did not apply to the case, and that the claim was not maintainable—Mathewson v. Shyam Sundar, 33 Cal. 786. But in Madras the principle of this section (though not the section itself) has been applied to a transfer by execution sale, on the ground of equity and good conscience—Lakshminaranappa v. Melothraman, 26 Mad. 540. In this case, certain lands had been leased out at yearly rent, payable in two half-yearly instalments, by the person having a life-interest therein. The interest of the lessor in the lands was sold in execution of a decree, and purchased by the plaintiff at Court sale. The lessor died on the 26th of the month at the end of which the first half-yearly rent was payable. The plaintiff now sued to recover as much of the rent as was due up to the date of the death of the lessor. Held that he was entitled to recover. In other Madras cases also it has been held that as this section embodies a rule of justice, equity and good conscience it should be applied in cases of apportionment of rent between the original lessor and the purchaser of his interest in execution at a Court sale—Rangiyah Chetty v. Vajravelu, 41 Mad. 370, 33 M.L.J. 618, 43 I.C. 78; Sendatilaka v. Sangili, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 195. In an Allahabad case, the principle of this section has been applied to the case of a suit for profits brought by a co-sharer against the lambardar; and it has been held that the date fixed for the payment of the profits does not imply that the right to a share in the income does not vest till the arrival of the date, but the profits accrue from day to day and become vested in the co-sharers, although the time of payment is postponed for the sake of convenience till the date fixed—Mohammad Abdul Jalil v. Mohammad Abdus Salam, A.I.R. 1932 All. 178 (181). Recently, the Calcutta High Court has also held that having regard to sec. 2 (d) though this section in its terms does not apply to a case of apportionment of rents collected by the successor of an impartible estate as between him and the heir of the last holder, it should be applied in such a case as the section embodies a rule of equity. And the higher doctrine of equity which is the foundation of Lord Hardwick's dictum in Paget v. Gee, [(1873) Amb. 138], should be applied to a case not between persons standing in the relation of lessor and lessee or persons bound by covenants relating to payment of rent at stated intervals. Section 2 (d) does not accept the application of this doctrine—per Mukherji and S. K. Ghose, JJ., in Sivaprasad v. Prayagkumari, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 39 (58-59).

Though according to cl. (d) of s. 2 ante the Act does not apply to execution sales, yet the principle of sec. 36, which embodies a rule of justice, equity and good conscience, can be applied and rent can be apportioned from day to day as between the lessor and the purchaser of his right in execution in the course of a year of the lease—David v. Rangaraju, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 568, (1944) 2 M.L.J. 51.

Apportionment :—The expression 'apportionment' is used in two senses—(1) to denote distribution of a common fund among the several claimants; and (2) to denote the contribution made by several persons having distinct rights to discharge a common burden—Story's Equity Jurisprudence (2nd Edn.), p. 305. It is in the first sense that the word is used in this section.

159. Rents :—Under this section, in the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, all rents shall, upon the transfer of the interest of the person entitled to collect them, be deemed as between the transferor and transferee to accrue due from day to day, and to be apportionable accordingly though they are payable on the days appointed for the payment thereof. Thus, where a transfer of property took place on the 24th Falgun 1322, the transferee would be entitled to the rents accruing after, and not before, that date, although the rents from Magh to 24th Falgun, being included in the Chait Kist, would be payable in Chait. The Chait Kist must be deemed to accrue from day to day and to be apportionable accordingly—Aparna Devi v. Shiva Prasad, 3 Pat. 367 (371). Similarly, where the plaintiff purchased the property on the 20th February 1919, and the question arose as to who should get the Rabi rent falling due on the 1st May, 1919, held that the rights of the transferor and the transferee should be determined on the basis of the total Rabi rent and the number of days in the Rabi season, the transferor being given credit for a proportion of the Rabi rent based on the number of days which fell within the period of his lawful possession, and the transferee being credited with a share of the Rabi rent based on the number of days between the date of his purchase and the date on which the Rabi rent fell due—Nand Kishore v. Ram Sarup, A.I.R. 1927 All. 569. The Rangoon High Court has expressed an opinion that agricultural rents are not apportionable, for they accrue once and for all at the time the crops are reaped and do not accrue from day to day, and hence there can be no question of apportionment—Ma Hawa v. Sein Kho, 5 Rang. 803, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 67 (68), 109 I.C. 191. See also Ram v. Harihar, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 237 (238, 239).

In a case where the petitioner purchased certain agricultural land by private sale, the land being under a lease with a yearly rent at the time of the sale, the year expiring a month after the sale, if a different intention is not expressed or necessarily implied, the transferor would be entitled to the rents and profits thereof accruing before the transfer as stated clearly in s. 55 (4) (a) and the transferee would be entitled to the rents and profits accruing after the transfer as stated in secs. 8 and 55 (6) (a). Such rents and profits should be apportioned under sec. 36 which applies to agricultural rents. Even if it does not apply in terms, the rule will apply as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience. Hence petitioner in this case was only entitled to one month's rent which alone accrued after the transfer—Poongavanom v. Subramanya, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 601.

The Receiver appointed in a mortgage suit leased the property and the lessee was in possession. The property was sold in execution of the decree on 18-12-1941. Under the terms of the lease granted by the Receiver rent was payable on 31-12-1941. The auction purchaser claimed a right to receive the entire rent as it was payable on a date subsequent to the purchase. The trial Court apportioned the rent as between the auction-purchaser and the Receiver representing the estate : Held that the trial Court was right—David v. Rangaraju, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 568.

An assignee of a lease from a lessee can claim as against the lessor an apportionment of rent accruing due after the date of the assignment to him according to the period before and after the assignment, and the rent can be deemed accruing from day to day as between him and the lessor—Kunhisou v. Mulloli, 38 Mad. 86 (89).

Where an assignee from a tenant of his interest subsequently gets an assignment of the interest of the landlord, the assignor of the landlord's interest is entitled to the rents accrued up to the date of the assignment, from the assignee, on the principle of this section—Bikram Kumar v. Mahit Krishna, 64 I.C. 178 (Cal.).

An apportionment of rent due in respect of several villages should not be on the basis of the assets of the different villages at the time of the creation of the original tenure, but on the basis of the present assets of the different portions of the tenure which by division have passed into different hands—Hari Kishan v. Tilukdhari, 7 C.W.N. 453 (454).

The provisions as to apportionment do not apply to disputes as to rent of land between an auction-purchaser and the original landlord by reason of the saving clause (d) of sec. 2—U Kyau v. Ah Doe, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 365.

One of the joint landlords cannot, as a matter of right, claim from the tenants what he estimated to be his proportionate share of the rent, before the rent was actually apportioned—Satyesh v. Jillar Rahaman, 27 C.L.J. 438 ; Reshwa Prasad v. Mathura Kuar, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 608. This section has no application to cases of partition—Mammad Kunhi v. Ibrayani Haji, A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 208.

159A. Royalty :—Where a contract states that royalty at a known rate is to be payable on coal, in the absence of any direction as to when it is payable, the Court is bound to hold that it becomes payable within a reasonable time of its extraction—Byomkesh v. Madhabji, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 609, 21 P.L.T. 442, 188 I.C. 411. Royalty cannot be regarded as due at the end of some given period, as it is difficult to treat royalty on the same footing as rent, because the amount cannot possibly be ascertained until the raisings of coal have been weighed and checked etc. Three months have been held to be a reasonable time—Ibid.

160. Dividends :—According to the definition given in the English Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict., c. 35), the word 'dividend' includes all payments made by the name of dividend, bonus, or otherwise, out of the revenue of trading or other public companies, divisible between all or any of the members of such respective companies, whether such payments shall be usually made or declared at any fixed time or otherwise; but this does not include payment in the nature of a return or reimbursement of capital. Such payments would be excluded by this section also, because they are not "periodical payments in the nature of income." The moneys distributed as interim dividend have been held to be not apportionable under the Act—Jowitt v. Keeling, (1922) 2 Ch. 442.

A share of profits is properly called a dividend when declared in respect of shares taken in a trading concern—In re Cox's Trusts, 9 Ch. D. 159 (163).

The term 'dividend' includes occasional bonuses or surplus profits of shareholders—Carr v. Griffith, 12 Ch. D. 655. Dividends out of profits from time to time declared by a commercial company are apportionable—Hartley v. Allen, 27 L.J. Ch. 621.

161. Other periodical payments :—The expression "other periodical payments" can only refer to payments eiusdem generis with rents, annuities, pensions and dividends—Gobind Rao v. Bhagirathi, 14 C.P.L.R. 84. They must be payments which are made periodically, recurring at fixed times not at variable periods, nor in the exercise of the discretion of one or more individuals, but from some antecedent obligation; and further, they must be in the nature of income, that is, coming in from some kind of investment—Jones v. Ogle, L.R. 8 Ch. 192, 198. It has been held that the profits of a private partnership regulated by a deed under which the accounts are made up in January of each year and the profits are divisible among the partners by four instalments, are not periodical payments in the nature of an income, but are in reality payments of a different nature, in as much as those profits only accrue after the adjustment of the account, and cannot be presumed to be made from day to day—Jones v. Ogle, 42 L.J. Ch. 334.

The profits derived from a share in a village are not apportionable in the manner indicated by this section. There is one very obvious reason why such profits cannot be apportioned. The accounts for the year might show a deficit to which each co-sharer would be liable to contribute, and as no portion of the loss could be recovered from a co-sharer who had assigned his share before the end of the agricultural year, the result of applying the rule of apportionment directly would contravene the maxim that he who derives the advantage ought also to sustain the burden—Gobind Rao v. Bhagirathi, 14 C.P.L.R. 84 (86).

The profits of a newspaper bequeathed to trustees upon trust are neither "rents, annuities, dividends or other periodical payments within the meaning of the English Apportionment Act, 1870—In re Cox's Trusts," 9 Ch. D. 159. Under a deed of settlement executed in 1913 the question arose whether income derived from rents and shares was apportionable de die in diem, (1) between the estate of the deceased settlor (who had retained a life-interest) and persons beneficially entitled for a period of thirteen months after his death and (2) between those persons and persons beneficially entitled after that period: held that the income was not so apportionable since an intention to that effect was not expressed clearly and unambiguously in the deed—Pherozshaw v. Bai Goolbai, 50 I.A. 276.

Wherever there are periodical payments accruing when the event calling for apportionment occurs, the Act is at once brought into operation and must be applied and when, subsequently, the accruing payments become due and payable, they must be distributed in accordance with the Act—Muirhead v. Hill, (1916) 2 Ch. 181.

162. Accrue from day to day :—The general principle of apportionment which is one of equity is that all rents, annuity, dividends and other periodical payments in the nature of income shall be deemed to accrue from day to day—Md. Askkar v. Md. Abdul, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 605, 101 I.C. 91. In Bengal rent is not ordinarily regarded as accruing from day to day but as falling due at stated periods according to the contract of the tenancy, or, in the absence of such contract, according to the general law as laid down in sec. 53 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Satyendra Nath v. Nilkantha, 21 Cal. 383 (385); Satya Bhupal v. Rajnandini, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1069.

In Madras, it has been held that rent should be deemed to accrue from day to day. "In England the law of apportionment has been regulated by statutes, and all rents, like interest on money lent, are considered as accruing from day to day and apportionable in respect of time accordingly. In India, there is no reason for not applying to rent the principle adopted in England in the case of interest"—Kunhisou v. Mulloli, 38 Mad. 86 (91).

In its origin the right of a widow for maintenance is one which accrues from day to day during her life-time—Rangiappa v. Shiva, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 699.

37. When, in consequence of a transfer, property is divided and held in several shares, and thereupon the benefit of any obligation relating to the property as a whole passes from one to several owners of the property, the corresponding duty shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary amongst the owners, be performed in favour of each of such owners in proportion to the value of his share in the property, provided that the duty can be severed and that the severance does not substantially increase the burden of the obligation; but if the duty cannot be severed, or if the severance would substantially increase the burden of the obligation, the duty shall be performed med for the benefit of such one of the several owners as they shall jointly designate for that purpose :

Apportionment of benefit of obligation on severance.

Provided that no person on whom the burden of the obligation lies shall be answerable for failure to discharge it in manner provided by this section, unless and until he has reasonable notice of the severance.

Nothing in this section applies to leases for agricultural purposes unless and until the "State Government" by notification in the Official Gazette so directs.

(a) A sells to B, C and D a house situate in a village and leased to E at an annual rent of Rs. 30 and delivery of one of fat sheep, B having provided half the purchase money and C and D one quarter each. E, having notice of this, must pay Rs. 15 to B, Rs. 7½ to C, and Rs. 7½ to D, and must deliver the sheep according to the joint direction of B, C and D.

(b) In the same case, each house in the village being bound to provide ten day's labour each year on a dyke to prevent inundation, E had agreed as a term of his lease to perform this work for A ; B, C and D severally require E to perform the ten day's work due on account of the house of each. E is not bound to do more than ten days' work in all, according to such direction as B, C and D may join in giving.

Compare section 30 of the Easements Act (V of 1882).

Amendment :— The words "Provincial Government" in the last para. of this section was substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. Then they were replaced by "State Government" by A.L.O. 1950.

164. Rent :—Where in consideration of a patni tenure granted by the landlords, the patnidar has undertaken to pay year by year into the Collectorate a certain sum to be credited to the Government revenue payable by the landlords, the yearly sum is one payable in consideration of the patnidar's use and occupation of the land, and though payable into the hands of the Collector, is agreed to be paid on account and to the credit of the landlords ; and therefore it is rent paid to the landlords, and it can be apportioned as between the several landlords—Gour Gopal v. Gosta Behari, 21 C.W.N. 214 (216). 34 I.C. 409.

When the plaintiffs, joint landlords, have in suits separately instituted asked for apportionment of rent and for recovery of rents due on such apportionment and all the parties interested have been made parties, the rent can be apportioned and the apportionment may take place in respect of arrears alleged to be due as well as future rents—Rajnarain v. Ekadasi, 27 Cal. 479. Upon the death of the obligee of a money bond each of his heirs cannot maintain a separate suit for recovery of his share of the money due under the bond—Kandhiya v. Chandar, 7 All. 313 (F.B.).

Where as a result of the partition of a village with two mahals the occupancy holding of a tenant fell into one mahal owned by one co-sharer, whilst a house as appurtenant to the occupancy holding fell into the other mahal owned by the other co-sharer, the partition effected no change in the position of the tenant. So long as he continued in possession of the occupancy holding he could not be ejected from his house nor could he be required to pay rent therefor—Saddu v. Behari, 30 All. 282.

165. Notice :—The proviso lays down that the person on whom the burden of obligation lies is saved from liability until he had reasonable notice of the severance. Compare sec. 50 as well as sec. 109 which applies the principle embodied in secs. 37 and 50 to leases. The notice here mentioned may be given either by the assignor or by the assignee, and not necessarily by the assignor. It is immaterial whether the notice of the assignment was received by the tenant from the assignor or from the assignee. When a tenant pleads payment to the assignor, the Court has to consider upon all the circumstances of the case, whether the payment alleged to have been made by him was bona fide. If he has made the payment with notice, actual or constructive, of the assignment, he cannot escape liability merely by proof that the notice received was from the assignee and not from the assignor—Peary Lal v. Madhoji, 17 C.L.J. 372, 19 I.C. 865 (868). The tenant cannot successfully plead that he has paid the rent bona fide to the assignor, if he has received notice of the assignment from the assignee; see Pope v. Biggs, (1829) 9 B. & C. 245, 32 R.R. 665; Rogers v. Humphreys, (1835) 4 A. & B. 299, 43 R.R. 340.

166. Where section does not apply :—This section does not apply where the indivisible character of the property is kept up on a transfer (by inheritance). Thus, on the death of a creditor, his numerous heirs are only jointly entitled to enforce the right which the deceased creditor, if alive, could singly enforce, and no question of apportionment can arise—Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Khader, 25 Mad. 26 (33). The English Law in this respect is the same. "The authorities all agree that whatever be the number of parceners, they all constitute one heir. They are connected together by unity of interest and unity of title; and one of them cannot distrain without joining the others in the avowry. If they cannot distrain separately, how can they separately claim a portion of the rent? In as much as there has been no division of those rents, nor any agreement by the defendant to hold one-third of them separately for the plaintiff, he has no right separately to sue the defendant"—per Tindal, C.J., in Decharms v. Horwood, 10 Bing. 526, cited in 25 Mad. 26 (34). It has been held by the Andhra High Court in Damodram Chetti v. Rukmaniamma, (1967) 2 An. W.R. 200 that under the Andhra Pradesh Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1960 one of two joint landlords can file a petition for eviction impleading the unwilling landlord as a respondent. This decision is opposed to the principle that there cannot be eviction from a part of the tenancy.

167. Agricultural leases :—Agricultural leases have been exempted from the operation of this section for it would otherwise cause great hardship to agriculturists.

The Madras High Court has held that though secs. 37 and 109 may not directly apply to agricultural leases in the Madras Presidency, the principles embodied in these sections ought to be followed by Indian Courts, and that under the principles of law embodied in those sections, the tenant is bound to pay to each of the owners his proportionate share of the rent, where in consequence of a transfer the property is held in separate shares—Sri Raja Simhadri Appa Rao v. P. Ramayya, 29 Mad. 29 (36). See also Badri Prasad v. Shyam Lal Jaiswal, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 85.

(B).—Transfer of Immoveable Property.

38. Where any person, authorised only under circumstances in their nature variable to dispose of immoveable property, transfers such property for consideration, alleging the existence of such circumstances, they shall, as between the transferee on the one part and the transferor and other persons (if any) affected by the transfer on the other part, be deemed to have existed, if the transferee, after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence of such circumstances, has acted in good faith.

Transfer by person authorized only under certain circumstances to transfer.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu widow, whose husband has left collateral heirs, alleging that the property held by her as such is insufficient for her maintenance, agrees, for purposes neither religious nor charitable, to sell a field, part of such property, to B. B satisfies himself by reasonable enquiry that the income of the property is insufficient for A's maintenance and that the sale of the field is necessary, and, acting in good faith, buys the field from A. As between B on the one part and A and the collateral heirs on the other part, a necessity for the sale shall be deemed to have existed.

168. Application of section :—This section embodies the principle deducible from the cases decided with reference to Hindu Law, especially the case of Hunooman Persaud Pandey v. Babooee Munraj Konweree, 6 M.I.A. 393; and the rule enacted in this section has long been recognised in this country. This section is intended to apply to Hindus, as the illustration shows—Dalibai v. Gopibai, 26 Bom. 433; Shri Beharilalji v. Bai Rajbai, 23 Bom. 342; Ramanadhan v. Rangammal, 12 Mad. 260 (F.B.); Soorja Koer v. Nath Baksh, 11 Cal. 102; Ram Kumwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326.

This section presupposes an actual transfer for consideration and has no application where the transaction is still incomplete—Jamsetji v. Kasinath, 26 Bom. 326; Jugmohan v. Pallonjee, 22 Bom. 1 (10).

It is only in the case of immoveable property and in the case of person having only a restricted right to transfer such immoveable property that any considerations as to reasonable inquiries, etc., on the part of the purchaser are at all relevant and material under this section. In the case of moveable property, provided the vendor has got the power to give a good title and the vendee pays consideration, the vendor has absolute power to give such title to the purchaser. The fact that the vendor professes to exercise that right and power reciting false state of facts, cannot affect the vendee—Subramania v. Krishna, 39 M.L.J. 590, 60 I.C. 77 (80).

169. “Persons authorised under circumstances variable”:—The expression “circumstances variable” includes such circumstances as constitute legal necessity, and which vary according to the status of the person and other surrounding circumstances. The persons meant by the expression are persons having a limited power to transfer; thus, the Karta or manager of a Hindu joint family [Niamat v. Din Dayal, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 121], the father of a Mitakshara son [Giridhari Lal v. Kantoo Lal, 1 I.A. 321; Shahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, 39 All. 437 (P.C.); Saheb Singh v. Giridhari Lal, A.I.R. 1924 All. 24], the Shebait of a Hindu idol or mutt [Niladri v. Chatturbhuj, A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 112], a woman holding a Hindu widow’s estate [Banga Chandra v. Jugal Kishore, 44 Cal. 186 (P.C.); Janhabi v. Bulbhadra, 15 C.W.N. 793; Uday v. Ashutosh, 21 Cal. 190, Ravaneshwar v. Chandi, 38 Cal. 721 affirmed in 43 Cal. 417 (P.C.); Brij Lal v. Indra Kunwar, 37 All. 187 (P.C.); Bhagwat v. Debi Dayal, 35 Cal. 420 (P.C.)], or other limited owner [Venkata v. Kanienayani, 35 Mad. 108], mother and other natural or de facto guardian [Hunooman Persad v. Mt. Babooi Munraj Koonwaree, 6 M.I.A. 393; Balappa v. Chanbasappa, 17 Bom. L.R. 1134; Dalibai v. Gopibai, 26 Bom. 433] are “persons authorized to dispose of immoveable property only under circumstances in their nature variable”. The first marriage of a member of a Hindu joint family is a lawful family necessity and sometimes a second marriage also may be such for which alienation of family property will be justified—Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 All. 575; Sundrabai v. Shivnarayan, 32 Bom. 81; Debi v. Nand, 1 Pat. 266.

The law in this respect has been laid down by the Privy Council in the following words : “The power of the Manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own is, under the Hindu law, a limited and a qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded. But of course, if that danger arises or has arisen from any misconduct to which the lender is or has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong, to support a charge in his own favour against the heir, grounded on a necessity which his wrong has helped to cause Their Lordships think that the lender is bound to inquire into the necessities for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the Manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. But they think that if he does so inquire, and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably-credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and they do not think that, under such circumstances, he is bound to see to the application of the money..... Their Lordships do not think that a bona fide creditor should suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived"—Hunooman Persad v. Mt. Babooi Munraj Koonwaree, 6 M.I.A. 393 at pp. 423-24. See also Uday v. Ashutosh, 21 Cal. 190.

The validity of the alienation by a guardian of a minor should be judged on the circumstances obtaining on the date of the transaction and not on events which subsequently happened, such as steep rise in prices consequent on world war which could not have been even thought of at the time of the transaction. In dealing with the property of a ward, considerable latitude should be allowed for the exercise of the guardian's discretion, though if the act was of a speculative character, it cannot be supported by the Court—Nagammal v. Varada, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 606, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 505. It is also not necessary to prove that the creditors were actually making demands, before it could be found that there was a pressure on the estate. So where, at the time of the alienation, debts existed that were binding on the minor which could not be discharged from the surplus income of the property, the alienation was binding on the minor, ibid.

170. Inquiry into circumstances necessitating transfer :—When a transferee takes a transfer from a person who is entitled to transfer property only under "circumstances in their nature variable," that is, whose power of transfer is limited and qualified, it is the duty of the transferee to ascertain by inquiry whether the circumstances necessitating the transfer do exist. Thus, where a creditor is endeavouring to establish a claim under a hypothecation bond given by a Hindu father having a limited interest, against his son, the Courts will require proof on the part of the creditor, that before he entered into the transaction he at least made reasonable inquiries as would satisfy a prudent lender that the money was required to pay off an antecedent debt, or for the legal necessity of the family—Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 All. 508. Where a person claims title under a conveyance from a Hindu woman who is a limited owner, and seeks to enforce his right against the reversioner, he must prove that the conveyance was genuine, that the lady had full knowledge, and that the alienation was for necessity or that he was satisfied of the necessity upon reasonable inquiry—Bhagwat v. Debi Dayal, 35 Cal. 420 (P.C.).

Where a guardian (in this case a Hindu mother) transfers immovable property of the minor, what has to be shown is not merely that a large portion of the consideration money was utilized for proper purposes, but also that the alienation was itself justified. The burden to show the danger to be averted or the pressure of circumstances was such as to leave no other alternative but to effect a sale is on the alienee—Tulsiram v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 69. The contention that the sale of a minor's property, effected by his natural guardian, being only voidable, cannot be allowed to be avoided by him except in a suit instituted for that purpose, is not maintainable. A minor can raise the plea in defence that such a transfer is void and not binding on him, ibid.

Inquiry should be made from the creditors mentioned in the sale-deed; an inquiry merely from the widow herself is not sufficient—Janhabai v. Bulbhadra, 15 C.W.N. 793. This section is deemed to enact a rule as to reasonable inquiry in respect of what is required by the Privy Council in Hunooman Persad's case, supra; Venkata v. Kanienayani, 35 Mad. 108.

Onus and proof :—The burden of proof in such cases is on the purchaser—Bhagwat v. Debi Dayal, supra; Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 Cal. 186 (P.C.); Chandra Deo v. Mata Prasad, 31 All. 176 (F.B.); Balappa v. Chanbasappa, 17 Bom. L.R. 1134; Brij Lal v. Inda, 36 All. 187 (P.C.). Lapse of time does not affect the question of onus regarding legal necessity, except in so far as it might give rise to a presumption of acquiescence or save the alienee from adverse inferences arising from the scanty proof which might be offered. In order to justify legal necessity it must be shown that the expenses could not have been met from the income of the property in the widow's hands and that they were reasonable—Ravaneshwar v. Chandi, 38 Cal. 721, affirmed in 43 Cal. 417 (P.C.). Representations by the borrower are evidence of the existence of such necessity but are not generally in themselves sufficient to discharge the burden which rests upon the creditor of showing a reasonable inquiry as to the binding nature of the purpose for which the loan was contracted. In particular circumstances, however, they may suffice to shift the burden of proof to the person impeaching the debt or alienation—Venkata v. Kanienayani, supra. Sometimes consent of the next reversioners may afford a presumptive proof which, if not rebutted, will validate the transaction—Rangasami v. Nadrippa, 42 Mad. 523 (P.C.).

Not only should the consideration for a transfer of a minor's property by his guardian be a necessary one, but also that there should be a necessity for the transfer itself. The burden in all such cases is on the transferee to justify the transfer—Amroo v. Babarao, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 403. So, where there was a considerable property belonging to a minor in possession of his guardian-mother who derived considerable income therefrom, no necessity existed for the transfer of a field for payment of Rs. 475 towards the arrears of a monthly pay of an agent engaged by her to look after her litigation—ibid.

Recitals :—Recitals in deed cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain. They can only be evidence as between the parties to the conveyance and those who claim under it. After a long period however having elapsed between the alienation and the suit to set it aside, when all those who could have given evidence have grown old or passed away, recital consistent with possibilities and circumstances of the case assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside. The recital is clear evidence of the representation, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an inquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual inquiry has become impossible, the recital, coupled with such circumstances would be sufficient evidence to support the deed—Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 Cal. 186 (P.C.); Md. Nuh v. Brij Behari, A.I.R. 1924 All. 939. But ordinarily recitals as to the existence of legal necessity are not of themselves evidence of such necessity without substantiation aliunde—Brij Lal v. Indra Kumwar, 36 All. 187 (P.C.); Amroo v. Babaroo, supra.

This section lays down that if the transferee has taken reasonable care to ascertain the existence of the circumstances alleged by the transferor as necessitating transfer, those circumstances shall be presumed to exist. In other words, "the actual existence of the circumstances is not a condition precedent to the validity of the alienation. It is enough if the alienee, being a purchaser for value, has taken reasonable care and has honestly satisfied himself of their existence"—Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., p. 116. If a purchaser, before embarking on transactions with a Hindu widow has made reasonable and bona fide inquiries and has satisfied himself to the best of his knowledge and belief that legal necessity exists, the real existence of such legal necessity in point of fact is not a condition precedent to the success of the purchaser. This principle is laid down in sec. 38, T. P. Act—Shankar Rao v. Pandurang, 9 N.L.J. 22, 92 I.C. 646 A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 65 (66).

171. Limits of the inquiry :—It has been stated by the Judicial Committee in Hunooman Persaud Pandey's case (6 M.I.A. 393 at pp. 419, 420) that the creditor (i.e., the mortgagee) may rely on the representations made by the borrower (mortgagor), and that the representations made by the borrower are not merely evidence of the existence of circumstances necessitating the loan, but are sufficient to discharge the burden which rests upon the creditor of showing a reasonable inquiry as to the binding nature of the purpose for which the loan is contracted. But this section seems to require something more; it requires a reasonable care on the part of the transferee in ascertaining the existence of the circumstances alleged by the transferor of immoveable property. However, it may be laid down that the inquiry required from lender should be limited to the representations of the borrower. Something more than the mere representation of the borrower is necessary to constitute reasonable inquiry on the part of the lender—Maharaja of Bobbili v. Zamindar of Chundi, 35 Mad. 108 (112). Thus, where the purchaser of immoveable properties from a Hindu widow did not enquire from the creditors mentioned in the sale-deed (who were to be paid off out of the consideration money) as to the necessities of the transaction, but satisfied himself with an enquiry merely from the widow herself, and it was found that the statement regarding the payment to the alleged creditors was false, held that the purchaser had not made the necessary inquiry and the sale could not be supported—Janhabi v. Balbhadra, 15 C.W.N. 793 (795), 10 I.C. 350. This section directs the transferee from a limited owner of property to act with reasonable care and good faith and to satisfy himself by an inquiry as to the existence of the legal necessities of the transfer, and that the transfer was in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. If he does so, he is safe; but he is not bound to see to the application of the money—Hunooman Persaud v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Uday Chundur v. Ashutosh, 21 Cal. 190; Dalibai v. Gopibai, 26 Bom. 433; Ghansham v. Badiya, 24 All. 547 (548). See in this connection Monahar v. Brajamohan, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 239. Nor is it necessary that the lender should ascertain that every pice of the money advanced by him is required for legal necessity—Ghansham v. Badiya, supra.

The question whether a manager or a limited owner of property should borrow money or sell property to obtain money to enable him to meet his necessity, is for the borrower to decide, and a transferee is not to show that what that person did was the only proper course which he could take. For, without entering on the management of the estate, a transferee would not know whether one course was preferable to another—Mahagu v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 60.

Inquiry when unnecessary :—If the sole person who has title or interest to challenge the validity of the transfer has made representations, or induced a belief by his conduct in the purchaser that the transaction was unobjectionable, the inquiry may be dispensed with—Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 20 Cal. 296.

39. Where a third person has a right to receive maintenance, or a provision for advancement or marriage, from the profits of immoveable property, and such property is transferred with the intention of defeating such right, the right may be enforced against the transferee if he has notice of such intention, or if the transfer is gratuitous; but not against a transferee for consideration and without notice of the right, nor against such property in his hands.

Transfer where third person is entitled to maintenance.

39. Where a third person has a right to receive maintenance, or a provision for advancement or marriage from the profits of immoveable property, and such property is transferred * * * the right may be enforced against the transferee, if he has notice thereof or if the transfer is gratuitous; but not against a transferee for consideration and without notice of the right, nor against such property in his hands.

Illustrations.

A, a Hindu, transfers Sultanpur to his sister-in-law B in lieu of her claim against him for maintenance in virtue of his having become entitled to her deceased husband's property, and agrees with her that, if she is dispossessed of Sultanpur, A will transfer to her an equal area out of such of several other specified villages in his possession as she may elect. A sells the specified villages to C, who buys in good faith without notice of the agreement. B is dispossessed of Sultanpur. She has no claim on the villages transferred to C.

(Omitted).

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 11 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The words "with the intention of defeating such right" have been omitted; the words "of such intention" have been substituted by the word "thereof"; and the illustration has been omitted. This amendment has been made in accordance with the opinion expressed by Beaman J. in Yamnabai v. Nanabhai, 12 Bom. L.R. 1075, 8 I.C. 1057.

172. Amendment retrospective :—The amendment made in this section in 1929 is retrospective with the result that the widow is not to prove the intention of defeating the right of her maintenance, but only that the purchaser had notice of that right—Ismail v. Umar, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 187, 45 Bom. L.R. 259.

173. Object and scope of section :—The object of this section, so far as it relates to maintenance, is to declare in what cases a right of maintenance may be enforced against transferees of the property from which the maintenance is recoverable—Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 526 (328). Where the right to maintenance is available against a person in his individual capacity and not in virtue of his holding any property this section does not come into play—Sheodeni Kuer v. Umashankar, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 74.

This section does not deal with charges, but with a right which falls short of a charge. The charge does not arise until it is fixed by a decree or any agreement or by operation of law—Ghasiram v. Kundanbai, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 163 (165), 1940 N.L.J. 1. This section does not apply to a charge created by a decree—Mahesh v. Mt. Mundar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 141 (F.B.), 1951 A.L.J. 39.

The right protected by this section is a right of maintenance; but the claim of a Hindu widow to reside in the family house stands much on the same footing as a claim for maintenance and can be claimed against a purchaser with notice of the claim for residence—Yamnabai v. Nanabhai, 12 Bom. L.R. 1075, 8 I.C. 1057 (1058); but not where the property is sold to pay off her husband's debt. See Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamalu, 27 Mad. 45 (51).

Where a person is only entitled to receive part of his maintenance from the profits of a particular village, the case is governed by this section and such right cannot be enforced against a transferee for consideration and without notice of the right nor against such property in his hands—Kesho Prasad v. Upper India Bank, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 76, 141 I.C. 474.

174. Essentials of the section :—Under the old law, in order that the right of maintenance might be enforced against the transferee, two things were necessary, viz., (1) the transfer must have been made with the intention of defeating the maintenance-holder's right, and (2) the transferee had notice of the intention, or the transfer was gratuitous. Under the present law, all reference to the transferor's intention has been omitted, and it is sufficient if the transferee has notice of the maintenance-holder's right, or if the transfer is gratuitous.

Old Law :—Intention to defeat the maintenance-holder's right :—

Under the old section, an essential condition for the enforcement of the right of maintenance against a transferee was that the transfer must have been made with the intention of defeating the right; that is, the transferor must have acted in fraud of the person entitled to the right. This right could not be equitably enforced against a transferee for value unless the transfer was made in fraud of the right of maintenance—Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326 (328); Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 All. 160 (163); Mohini Debi v. Purna Sashi, 36 C.W.N. 153 (157). Where a transfer was made with the intention of defeating the right of the person entitled to maintenance, and the transferee had notice of it, he could not defeat that right although he might be a transferee for valuable consideration—Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326 (328); Abu Mahomed v. Saraswati, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1068, 43 C.L.J. 604, 97 I.C. 194.

If the parties knew that there was not sufficient property then left in the hands of the vendor from the profits of which the maintenance could be realised, the conveyance was clearly made with the intention of defeating the right of maintenance—Digambari v. Dhankumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074 (1080); Abu Mahomed v. Saraswati, 43 C.L.J. 604, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1068, 97 I.C. 194. The intention to defeat the right of maintenance could be gathered from the fact that all the properties available for satisfying the maintenance claim had been transferred to the purchaser—Dan Kuer v. Sarla Devi, A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 8, 51 C.W.N. 81, 73 I.A. 208, I.L.R. 1946 All. 756. But where there was ample estate out of which to provide for the widow, so that she might still get her claim fixed and secured, no imputation of bad faith or of abetting it could be made against the purchaser of a portion of the joint property—Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 Bom. 494; Digambari v. Dhankumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074 (1078).

Old Law :—Notice of fraudulent intention :—The mere circumstance that the purchaser had notice of the claim for maintenance was not sufficient under the old section to bind the property in his hands—Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 Bom. 494; Ramanandan v. Ranganmal, 12 Mad. 260 (F.B.); it had further to be established that the purchaser had notice of the intention of the transferor to defeat the maintenance-holder's claim—Abu Mahomed v. Saraswati, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1068; Mohini Debi v. Purna Sashi, 36 C.W.N. 153 (157). Where the heir sought to defraud the widow and the purchaser was acting with notice not merely for her claim but of this fraud which was being practised upon her claim, the claim could be enforced against the estate in the hands of the purchaser. As West, J., observed : "What was honestly purchased is free from her (widow's) claim for ever. What was purchased in furtherance of a fraud upon her or with knowledge of a right which would thus be prejudiced, is liable to her claim from the first"—Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 Bom. 494 (500). If a fraudulent intention on the part of the transferor was found to exist in the case, there could be no question that the transferee, if he had notice of such intention, could not take the property except as subject to the liability of making good the maintenance out of the property in his hands—Digambari v. Dhankumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074 (1079). Where a large part of the property was sold with the object of defeating the widow's claim to maintenance, the purchaser having knowledge of the fraud, the widow's right to recover maintenance attached to the property in the hands of the purchaser, although there might be other property from which the widow's claim could be satisfied—Sri Beharilalji v. Bai Rajbai, 23 Bom. 342.

Present Law :—The Amendment of sec. 39 has made a considerable alteration in the law. Under the old section the persons who had the right to maintenance were only protected against a transfer provided it was with the intention of defeating that right. Such intention is no longer necessary under the amended section, but sec. 39 as amended does not create any new right in favour of any person—Pranlal v. Chapsey, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 34. Consequently, where a property was alienated before the amendment but the suit by the claimant to maintenance to enforce his right against the transferee was brought after the amendment, sec. 39 as amended would apply and therefore the claimant had not to prove the intention on the part of the transferor to defeat the right of maintenance, but only that the purchaser had notice of that right—Dan Kuer v. Sarala Devi, A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 8, 756; Ramamurthi v. Kanakaratanam, infra; Chandramma v. Maniam, A.I.R. 1958 Andhra Pr. 396. See also Lali Jan v. Md. Shafi, 31 All. 478 (480) where it was held that if the transferee had notice of the condition regarding the payment of maintenance, he was bound by it, although he was a transferee for valuable consideration. See also Ramaswami Gounder v. Baghvammal, A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 457.

The amendment to this section was not intended to create a charge where none existed previously. The rule of Hindu law that though a Hindu widow has a right to be maintained out of the family estate, she has no charge in respect of such right over any portion of the estate till one is created by agreement or by a decree of Court, is not intended to be affected by the amendment of this section, so that any alienation made for purposes which would have precedence over the widow's claim for maintenance would, in the absence of any charge created as indicated above, bind the widow, and her right to have her maintenance charge upon an appropriate portion of the family estate can be enforced only subject to such alienation—Ramamurthi v. Kanakaratanam, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 208.

Notice of right of maintenance :—Under the old section, it was held that where a transfer was not made with the object of defeating the right of maintenance, the right could not be enforced against the transferee although he had notice of such right—Ram Kumwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326 (328); Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 All. 160 (163); Digambari v. Dhan Kumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074 (1079). These rulings are no longer good law. It was further held that if the purchaser had notice of the widow's existence and of her claim for maintenance and yet purchased with the rational and honest opinion that the transaction was one originating in an honest desire to pay off debts or satisfy claims for which the estate was justly liable, the purchaser would acquire a title free from the widow's claim—2 Bom. 494 (524). This decision is no longer correct.

Where the transfer is for consideration and the transferee has no notice of the right of maintenance, it cannot be enforced against him, even though the transfer was made with the intention of defeating the right—Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326; Ramamurthi v. Kanakarathnam, supra. Given a right to recover maintenance from the profits of immoveable property, and given a transfer made with the object of defeating that right, the only transferee who can defeat the right is a transferee for value without notice of the right—Ibid (at p. 328).

A married daughter has ordinarily no right of maintenance out of the property left by her father, and it is not therefore a circumstance which would ordinarily be enquired into by a prudent transferee—Renuka Bala v. Nagendra Nath, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 655 (656), 43 C.W.N. 666, 184 I.C. 518.

Gratuitous transfer :—If the transfer is gratuitous, the transferee can in no case defeat the right—Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326 (328).

174A. Provision for advancement :—Advancement “is a payment to persons who are presumably entitled to, or have a vested or a contingent interest in an estate or legacy before the time fixed by the will for their obtaining the absolute interest in a portion or the whole of that to which they would be entitled”—per Cotton, L.J., in Re Aldrige, 55 L.T. 554. It is a word applicable to an early period of life, and is a sum paid out of capital to secure a permanent benefit or advantage in life for the person advanced—Simpson's Law of Infants, 4th Edn., p. 216.

The principle of English law that when a property is purchased or a deposit is made in the name of a wife or child, it would be presumed that the purchase or deposit was intended for her or its advancement does not hold good in India—Paul v. Gopal Nath, A.I.R. 1931 All. 596; following Suri Lakshmiah v. Kothandaramma, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 181. See also Kerwick v. Kerwick, A.I.R. 1821 P.C. 56; Guran Ditta v. Ram Ditta, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 172; Dharwar Bank v. Md. Hayat, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 269; Copee Krist v. Gunga Pershad, 6 M.I.A. 53; Jhonstone v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 419; Panchanan v. Balak Ram, A.I.R. 1930 All. 374; Shambhu Nath v. Pushkar Nath, A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 10; Jeevon v. Mehtab, A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 77. But in the cases of persons of European nationality there may be presumption of such advancement—Paschaud v. Nixon, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 441.

Where a sale is by the husband to the wife, the presumption that the purchase is made by the husband with his own funds for the benefit of his wife and children arises only in the absence of evidence to the contrary—Achuthan v. Parameswara, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 195. In benami transactions all subsequent proceedings and conduct are always consistent with the original intention of the purchaser and the subordinate parts are notoriously fitted in to correspond with the benami arrangement. No doubt the burden is upon him who alleges that the property belongs to another, but this onus is easily discharged when the motive or the reason with which the property was purchased, is given—Jeecon v. Mehtab, supra.

174B. Provision for marriage :—According to Hindu law a marriage is a "Sanskara" and as such is a lawful necessity—Sundrabai v. Shivanarayana, 32 Bom. 81; Debi v. Nand, 1 Pat. 266. Even a marriage for the second time may be such a necessity—Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 All. 575.

175. Maintenance—charge—decree :—This section deals with personal rights, and has no application to cases where such rights arise out of a specific charge on immoveable property—Razia Begam v. Ishrat, 6 O.W.N. 493, 117 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 316 (318); Fateh Ali v. Gobardhan, 5 Luck. 172, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 316 (318); Shyam Narain v. Khubla Mahato, A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 238.

The maintenance of a Hindu widow is not by itself a charge upon the estate of her deceased husband unless it is fixed and charged upon the estate by a decree or by an agreement—Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 All. 160 (163); Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326 (327); Yannabai v. Nanabhai, 12 Bom. L.R. 1075, 8 I.C. 1057; Gajadhar v. Khula Kunwar, 12 O.C. 37, 1 I.C. 690; Brij Raj v. Ram Dayal, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 40 (42); Sowbagia v. Manika, 33 M.L.J. 601, 42 I.C. 975; Daulat v. Champa, 55 I.C. 28 (Lah.); Lakshman v. Satyabhambai, 2 Bom. 494; Mahesh v. Mt. Mundar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 141 (F.B.), 1951 A.L.J. 39; Mt. Jogi v. Smt. Raikumar Saheba, A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 138; Pirdhadas Parsumal v. Hajrabai Mahomad, 9 Guz. L.R. 24. If the right to maintenance is charged upon a property, the purchaser having taken the conveyance subject to such charge would be bound to pay the maintenance—Digambari v. Dhan Kumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074 (1077). Where a charge is created, it would bind the immoveable property even in the hands of a transferee for consideration and without notice. Section 39 would not apply to such a case—Razia Begam v. Ishrat, supra; Fateh Ali v. Gobardhan, supra. Where the maintenance has been specifically charged on the property transferred, it would be liable, although it be shown that there is other property in the hands of the transferor or his heirs sufficient to meet the claim—Sham Lal v. Banna, 4 All. 296. It should be noted that an agreement, in order to create a charge on the property, must be such as to make the property security for the payment of maintenance; if no particular or specific property is mentioned as liable for the claim for the maintenance, the agreement cannot create a charge on any property—Mohini v. Purna Sashi, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 451. If the contract creating the right to receive maintenance out of the profits of a village is unregistered, there can be no charge on the property and right to receive maintenance cannot be enforced against a subsequent transferee for value without notice—Kesho Prasad v. Bank of Upper India, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 76. But if a Hindu widow by virtue of an agreement with the members of the family is in possession of a portion of the joint family property in lieu of maintenance, she is entitled to hold that property against a purchaser. The right of the widow in such a case is distinguishable from either a mere claim for maintenance or a charge—Ram Kunwar v. Amar Nath, 54 All. 472.

Upon proper construction of this section a Hindu widow's maintenance is payable, in the first instance, from the profits of the whole of the husband's immovable property, and so if a purchaser has notice of the existence of the widow, then he is to see that her claims are discharged before he purchases the property—Dattatraya v. Tulsabai, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 412, 45 Bom. L.R. 802. But see Pavayammal v. Samiappa, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 376, (1947) 1 M.L.J. 329, where it has been held that in the case of a Hindu wife and unmarried daughter it cannot be said that they have a right to receive maintenance "from the profits of immovable property" within the meaning of sec. 39, and mere knowledge on the part of the transferee of the legal right of the wife and the daughter is not enough. What the section contemplates is a claim based on the right to receive maintenance and notice of such claim.

The purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree buying the mortgaged property free from encumbrances gets the title both of the mortgagee and those interested in the equity of redemption. He is not a mere successor-in-interest of the owner of the equity of redemption at the date of the sale. Hence the interest of the purchaser is not liable upon the death of the mortgagor to be burdened with the maintenance of the mortgagor's widow or daughter—Jadunath v. Parameshwar, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 11 (14, 15).

If the right to maintenance has been merged in a decree and the decree directs that certain property is charged with the maintenance, a transferee of such property for consideration and even without notice is not entitled to protection, because the decree declaring the charge operates as a notice of the claim to the transferee. In such a case, sec. 39 would have no operation—Kuloda v. Jageshar, 27 Cal. 194; Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 All. 326 (327); Maina v. Bachchi, 28 All. 655 (657). See also Sathurulu v. Narra, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 824, 54 Mad. 132, 127 I.C. 809. So long as a person has a mere right of maintenance, sec. 39 applies; but as soon as she gets in lieu of her right of maintenance a decree fixing a definite sum and charging a specific property with payment thereof, what was previously a mere right of maintenance becomes a right of a quite different nature, and sec. 39 no longer applies. The right created by the decree is enforceable against bona fide transferees for value without notice—Maina v. Bachchi, supra; and the property charged can be sold in execution of the decree, no separate suit being necessary—Rai Sital Sahai v. Shampoti Kuer, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 2. But a mere money-decree (which creates no charge upon the property) will not have this effect—Beer Chunder v. Nobodeep, 9 Cal. 535; Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 Bom. 494; Adhiranee v. Shona Malee, 1 Cal. 365.

When the decree provides for the payment of future maintenance and makes provision expressly or impliedly for its own execution, it does not put an end to the suit and consequently whether the matter be placed on the ground of lis pendens or on that of estoppel by record, the result is the same. But when the decree is merely declaratory and unexecutable, the suit qua suit is at an end then those rules do not apply and the decree qua decree does not operate as notice of charge —Ghasiram v. Kundanbai, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 163 (172), 1940 N.L.J. 1. A written agreement for maintenance can be varied without the necessity of instituting a suit. But when the rate of maintenance is fixed in a decree, its alteration or variation can only be obtained by a separate suit properly framed for the purpose—Ibid, at p. 173; see also Trimbak v. Mt. Bhagubai, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 249.

Where properties are specified in the decree and it is stated that the future maintenance is to be recovered from those properties by selling them without attachment, the decree makes the future maintenance a charge on the properties—Abdul v. Seethalakshmi, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 120 (121).

A person who purchases a portion of a property which is subject to charge with notice of the charge, is liable to pay the whole amount of the charge. The chargeholder is entitled to enforce payment against the whole or any portion of the property charged. If the purchaser is made to pay the whole amount, his remedy will be in a suit for contribution against persons in possession of other portions of the property—Sharif v. Hunter, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 420 (423), 167 I.C. 52. Enhanced maintenance too can be claimed from the purchaser—Vedabati Williams v. Rama Bai, A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 265.

176. Sale of property for necessity :—If a property is sold for purposes which authorise the sale, (e.g., for legal necessity) the purchaser takes a good title free from the widow's claim for maintenance—Gur Dayal v. Kaunsilla, 5 All. 367; Soorjo Koer v. Nath Buksh, 11 Cal. 102 (105); Yamnabai v. Nanabhai, 12 Bom. L.R. 1075, 8 I.C. 1057 (1058); Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 Bom. 494. The property in the hands of the purchaser will not be liable for maintenance, if the transfer was made to satisfy a claim for which the ancestral property is liable by Hindu law, and which under that law takes precedence over that of maintenance—Sham Lal v. Banna, 4 All. 296. In the absence of any specific charge on the family estate as to the future maintenance of a widow, the sale of ancestral property by the heir in possession for discharging the valid debts of the widow's late husband (or of her husband's father or grandfather) is valid, and the bona fide purchaser for value is not affected although he may have had notice of her claim of maintenance. The principle is that under Hindu law the binding debts of the deceased owner take precedence even over the claim for maintenance of the widow—Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 Bom. 494; Gur Dayal v. Kaunsilla, 5 All. 367; Somasundaram v. Unnamalai, 43 Mad. 800 (801); Brij Raj v. Ram Dayal, 7 Luck. 411, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 40 (43), 135 I.C. 369; Jamnabhai v. Balakrishna, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1092. But this rule of Hindu law applies only so long as the two obligations are both not made charges on the property. If either of them assumes that shape, (e.g., if the maintenance is charged on the property), then it would take precedence over the other—Somasundaram v. Unnamalai, 43 Mad. 800 (802), 12 L.W. 163, 59 I.C. 398. A Hindu widow's right of maintenance is not a charge on the estate of the deceased husband; hence it is liable to be defeated by a transfer of the husband's property to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the widow's right—Laxmi v. Krishna Bhatta, A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 288.

40. Where, for the more beneficial enjoyment of his own immovable property, a third person has, independently of any interest in the immovable property of another or of any easement thereon, a right to restrain the enjoyment of the latter property, or to compel enjoyment in a particular manner, or

Burden of obligation imposing restriction on use of land.

40. Where, for the more beneficial enjoyment of his own immovable property, a third person has, independently of any interest in the immovable property of another or of any easement thereon, a right to restrain the enjoyment * * in a particular manner of the latter property, or where a third person is entitled to the benefit of an obligation arising out of contract and annexed to the ownership of immovable property, but not amounting to an interest therein or easement thereon, or of obligation annexed to ownership, but not amounting to interest or easement.

such right or obligation may be enforced against a transferee with notice thereof or a gratuitous transferee of the property affected thereby, but not against a transferee for consideration and without notice of the right or obligation, nor against such property in his hands.

Amendment :—The first para has been amended by seq. 12 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). See Note 177 below.

177. Para 1 :—Restrictive covenants :—The first para has been amended by omitting the words "compel its enjoyment." These words refer to affirmative covenants and by the omission of these words the Legislature has confined the operation of the first para of this section to restrictive or negative covenants only. In Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phill. 774, the plaintiff, the owner of a vacant piece of land and of houses surrounding it, had sold the vacant piece of ground to a person who covenanted that he would keep the same in its then form in an open state uncovered with buildings, and the defendant bought the land from that person with notice of the covenant; held that the covenant was enforceable against the defendant who had notice thereof, and therefore he was not entitled to build on the land. It should be noted that the covenant, though affirmative in terms, was really of a negative character (viz., not to build upon the land), and in this view the decision was correct. But the language used by Lord Cottenham seemed to lay down that both affirmative and negative covenants were enforceable against the purchaser's transferee. This case was therefore questioned in the Court of Appeal in Haywood v. Brunswick Building Society, 8 Q.B.D. 463, where it was held that covenants of a negative character only could be enforced on the principle of Tulk v. Moxhay. The present section has been amended in the light of Haywood's case. See the remarks of the Special Committee cited in Note 98 under sec. 11.

The doctrine of Tulk v. Moxhay, supra applies only to restrictive or negative covenants. It cannot be extended to affirmative covenants, such as a covenant compelling a man to lay out money or to do any other act of an active character. The covenant must be one restricting or affecting the user of the land and the remedy is not a remedy at law by way of specific performance under a species of implied privity, but a remedy in equity by injunction against the violation of the covenant—Jagdish v. Md. Bakhtiyar, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 409. See also Ganges Manufacturing Co. v. Radharani, infra. In deciding whether a covenant in a lease is an affirmative or negative covenant, the Court must look to the substance and not to the form—Ganges Manufacturing Co. v. Radharani, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 89, 49 C.W.N. 63. A covenant in the head lease implying an obligation on the part of the lessee to pay a specified rent, being a positive or affirmative covenant, cannot be enforced against the sub-lessee, there being neither privity of contract nor privity of estate between the sub-lessee and the original lessor—ibid.

The Court will not enforce against an assignee of a covenantor an affirmative covenant involving expenditure of money on land, whether such assignee takes with or without notice—Chaturbhuj v. Mansukhlram, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 183, 27 Bom. L.R. 73, 86 I.C. 19.

The first para of this section deals with what are called restrictive covenants which are enforced in equity in England on the ground that the person entitled to the right has an equitable interest in the land or a right in the nature of an equitable easement—Basdeo v. Jhagru, 46 All. 333 (336).

A restrictive covenant is one which would entitle a third person to interfere with the free use which the transferee may choose to make of the property which is the subject matter of the contract—Pemsel and Wilson v. Tucker, [1907] 2 Ch. 191. A covenant which runs with the land is a restrictive covenant because it is something which restricts the user of the land. A positive covenant never runs with the land either in law or in equity—Jogesh Chandra v. Asaba, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 41 (43), 98 I.C. 46. If there is a restrictive covenant and the purchaser takes with notice of it, the person in whose favour the covenant is made can restrain the purchaser from acting contrary thereto—Mohini Mohan v. Ramdas, 28 C.W.N. 271, 80 I.C. 210, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 487 (488). A covenant granting a right of way over plot P for the beneficial enjoyment of plot Q, can be enforced by the lessee of Q against the lessee of P taking P with notice of the covenant—Rajpur Colliery Co. v. Pursottam Gohil, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 463. A covenant by a vendor not to build a beer-house or tavern on the plots of land remaining unsold is a restrictive covenant, and enforceable against the purchaser—Richards v.

Revitt, L.R. 7 Ch. D. 224. M was allowed by the zemindar of certain lands to build houses on the lands on condition that if M sold any of the houses so built, he should pay one-fourth of the purchase money (haq-i-chaharum) to the zamindar. M sold one of the houses to one R who had notice of the covenant in favour of zemindar, who thereupon sued R (as well as M) to recover one-fourth of the purchase-money: Held that the covenant was a restrictive covenant, binding M not to transfer his interest without the zemindar receiving his one-fourth share of the purchase-money; the covenant was therefore enforceable against R as much as against M (jointly and severally)—Prabhu Narain v. Ramzan, 41 All. 417 (419, 420), 17 A.L.J. 469, 49 I.C. 865. This case has been dissented from in Haji Abdul v. Nandlal, 1931 A.L.J. 429, 133 I.C. 543, A.I.R. 1931 All. 552, which lays down that a contract to pay a certain sum of money (e.g., a haq-i-chaharum) on the happening of a certain event cannot be held to be a restrictive covenant. But in Kumar v. Narendra, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 357 (360), 57 Cal. 953, B. B. Ghose and S. K. Ghose, JJ., held that a covenant binding a tenant, his heirs or successors-in-interest to pay a certain share of purchase money to the landlord on the sale of the tenure, as a condition precedent to the landlord recognizing the sale as valid and binding on him, is a covenant running with the land and makes the purchaser liable for the same. Absence of a negative form of expression in a covenant is immaterial when from the substance of the agreement a negative agreement can be seen to be implied. A covenant in a putni lease that the putnidar shall submit duly, year after year in the landlord's office, the Jama-wasil-baki and lawazima papers, runs with the land and therefore bind the assignees from the parties—Hooghly Bank v. Mahendra, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 195, 54 C.W.N. 327.

Where some of the co-sharer landlords reduced the jama for their share and concealed the fact of reduction when they sold their interest, and it was admitted that the other co-sharers had not reduced the jama, the transferee was not bound by the reduction—Tark Nath v. Raghu Nandan, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 22, 28 Pat. 844.

In India a lessor granting a lease in perpetuity or for a long term, such as 499 years, still retains the reversion, and if for the benefit of the reversion a covenant (in this case against the working of a coal mine in a certain way) is entered into, then the essential of a restrictive covenant that the covenantee must retain some interest in the land is satisfied. It is not necessary that the property for the benefit of which the restrictive covenant is entered into must be independent of and outside the demised premises—Mati Lal v. Radha Damadar Jew, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 727 (736), 41 C.W.N. 263, 64 C.L.J. 308. See also Dyson v. Forster, (1909) A.C. 98. If in a deed of lease there is an express covenant that the assignee shall be liable to pay to the lessor the chouth money in respect of selami the covenant does not run with the land and hence the lessor cannot recover the chouth money from the assignee—Rambriksh Prasad v. Shyamsunder Prasad, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 193.

178. Para 2 :—Obligation arising out of a contract :—This para may be compared with sec. 91 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) which lays down that "where a person acquires property with notice that another person has entered into an existing contract affecting that property, of which specific performance could be enforced, the former must hold the property for the benefit of the latter to the extent necessary to give effect to the contract." Thus, where a mortgagee at the time of his mortgage is aware of circumstances which ought to have put him on enquiry and such enquiry, if made, would have revealed the existence of an agreement by the mortgagor to mortgage the property to a third party, the mortgagee's rights will on the principles of this section and sec. 91, Trusts Act, be postponed to the rights of the third party—Kameswaramma v. Sitaramanuja, 29 Mad. 177. Similarly in the case of an agreement to sell, the title of the subsequent purchaser with notice of the prior agreement in favour of another is subject to the obligation under sec. 91, Trusts Act. He holds the property for the benefit of this latter to the extent necessary to give effect to the contract—Appa Rao v. Veeramma, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 409, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 166. See in this connection Ali Hossain v. Rajkumar, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 417 (F.B.).

The rights described in this para arise out of a contract between the person entitled to the right and the owner of the property transferred. They involve an obligation on the latter but do not presuppose the possession of any property by the former. This para deals with contractual obligations relating to land but falling far short of any interest therein.

The right of reconveyance of an easement granted in perpetuity is a positive covenant arising out of contract and can be completely dissociated from the land itself. This condition cannot be fastened on the land itself, so as to make it a covenant running with the land; it is a personal covenant independent of the land—Zal Rustomji v. Anjuman Mofidal Islam, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 4.

A mere contract of sale, though it does not confer an interest in the subject-matter of the contract, still creates an obligation annexed to the ownership of the property which can be enforced by the promisee under the contract against a transferee with notice—Rebala Venkata v. Yellappa, 5 L.W. 234, 38 I.C. 107 (108); Puthenpurayil v. Kondiyal, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 31, 34 I.C. 906 (908); Gangaram v. Laxman, 40 Bom. 498 (502). Thus where subsequent to a contract to sell certain property, it is attached in execution of a decree, the attachment does not prevail over the pre-existing contract to sell even though the attaching creditor has no notice of the contract to sell—Athinarayana v. Subramania, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 67, see also Diravyam v. Veeraman, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 702, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 853 (1939) 2 M.L.J. 822.

A contract giving rise to a right of pre-emption falls under the second para of this section. The promisee in such a contract is clearly entitled to the benefit of the obligation entered into by the promisor, namely that when he proposes to sell the land, he will give the promisee the first offer. Such a contract is binding on the representatives of the parties to the contract, as well as on transferees with notice and gratuitous transferees—Basdeo v. Jhagru, 46 All. 333 (336, 346), A.I.R. 1924 All. 400; see also Jagamaya v. Tulsa, A.I.R. 1926 All. 70; Muhammad Jan v. Fazluddin, A.I.R. 1924 All. 657. It has been held by the Lahore High Court that in such cases the covenant to indemnify the vendee either by cash compensation or by delivery of other property of the vendor is not enforceable at the instance of the pre-emptor, as such a covenant does not run with the land—Mt. Banti v. Mandu, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 357, (358), 9 Lah. 659, 110 I.C. 425. The Allahabad High Court has however taken a contrary view in Hampant v. Chandi, A.I.R. 1929 All. 293 (295), 51 All. 651, 119 I.C. 243.

Where P enters into an agreement with D by which D agrees to a restriction of the ordinary user of his property, it is merely a restrictive covenant which binds D's transferee with notice of the covenant. No interest in D's property or easement thereon is created by the agreement—Gordhandas v. Mohanlal, 45 Bom. 170 (173).

Annexed to the land :—A covenant between a lessor and a lessee is primarily binding on these two but upon an assignment either of the reversion or of the terms, it may also be binding on the grantee of the reversion or the assignee of the terms. Similarly the benefit of a covenant may pass to these parties respectively. If the covenant is for the benefit of the lessee and directly concerns the land it runs with the land in favour of the assignee. An option to renew the lease runs with the land and so both the lessor's and the lessee's successors in title are bound—Radha Kamal v. Puri Municipality, A.I.R. 1954 Or. 110.

In order that the second para of this section may apply, the covenant must be annexed to the land. Thus, an undertaking by a vendor that he would pay any revenue that might be assessed on the land was not held to be a covenant falling under this section but was merely a personal covenant—Ramadhin v. Sheoratan, 6 O.C. 184; Pachan Singh v. Jangjit Singh, 39 All. 166 (170). Where on a partition between the brothers, a mortgage-debt due by the family is apportioned and there is a covenant by which a defaulting member's share will be liable for any excess amount paid by another member, such a covenant is a restrictive covenant in the nature of an obligation annexed to the ownership of immovable property; and a member making the excess payment is entitled to enforce the covenant against a purchaser of the defaulting member's property with notice (actual or constructive) of the covenant—Abdul Razak v. Abdul Rahman, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 715.

In an agreement between the Raja of Paresh Nath Hills and the Setambari Jain Society, the former stipulated: "If the Society shall require any place on the hill and below thereof at Madhuban for erecting Mandir and Dharmasala and for doing repairs and making bricks for the said purpose, in that case I and my heirs shall give for making Mandir, Dharmasala and bricks, land, stones from the hills and timber free of costs and if I and my heirs refuse to give in that case the Setambari Jain Society shall take the same of its own power." The Society was resisted by the defendants who subsequently to the agreement had acquired lease-hold interests in the land on which the Society sought to erect a temple: Held by the Privy Council that the agreement did not create in the Society some present estate or interest which would prevent the owner from making a grant to the defendants and the covenant not being one running with the land could not be enforced against the assignees from the Raja—Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand, 25 C.W.N. 770 (P.C.).

The terms "annexed to the ownership" must not be understood to mean 'creating any interest or charge in the land' but simply 'relating to the ownership or by virtue of the right of proprietorship'. A contract of pre-emption entered into by the proprietors in a village, though a personal one in the sense that it creates no interest in the land, is also entered into by virtue of their position as proprietors and is entered into in respect of their property, and must from its very nature be deemed to have been annexed to the ownership of the property—Basdeo v. Jhagru, A.I.R. 1924 All. 400; followed in Jagamaya v. Tulsa, A.I.R. 1926 All. 70.

Where an ekranama provided that in the event of the executant not paying the allowance fixed for maintenance the obligee was to have liberty to proceed against the properties relinquished by her, and in case she was unable to realise the arrears from those properties she might have recourse to the other properties of the obligor, no particular or specific property having been mentioned as liable for the claim, the deed could not be construed as creating any charge but only an obligation arising out of a contract, annexed to the ownership of immoveable property within the meaning of this section—Mohini v. Purna Sashi, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 451. Unless the obligation creates an interest in or charge on the property, it cannot be enforced against a bona fide purchaser without notice—Ibid. But an obligation to pay zar-i-chaharum (one-fourth of the sale price, payable by the tenant to the landlord, in case the former sold his interest in the land) is merely a personal obligation to pay a certain sum of money to a third party, arising out of a contract, and is not an obligation annexed to the ownership of land—Haji Abdul v. Nandlal, A.I.R. 1931 All. 552 (553).

179. Transferee with notice :—It is essential that an assignee of the original covenantor must have notice of the restrictive covenant, if he is to be bound by it. A purchaser is not guilty of negligence in not asking for the title deeds of an adjoining property which prima facie he has no right whatever to ask his vendor to produce. As between the vendor and the purchaser, it is the vendor who is to disclose to the purchaser any covenant restricting the enjoyment of the property sold—Chaturbhuj v. Mansukhram, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 183 (184). The rights or obligations under this section may be enforced against a transferee with notice thereof, on the equitable doctrine that a person who takes with notice of a covenant is bound by it—Rogers v. Hosegood, [1900] 2 Ch. D. 383. The transferee's liability rests on the ground that in justice he ought not to evade the discharge of the obligation which was incumbent on his transferor. On his taking as a purchaser with notice of the obligation there is no reason why his position should be better than that of his vendor, for presumably the existence of the obligation has been taken into account in fixing the price—Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., pp. 124-125.

A person who purchases property knowing that it is encumbered with a debt is liable under this section to discharge the debt—Mahadeo v. Sant Baksh, 28 O.C. 118, 57 I.C. 513 (516).

The notice referred to in this section must be a clear unequivocal notice. Vague references are of no effect—Nur Mahomed v. Dinshaw, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 393 (396).

The notice may be actual or constructive. Where a vendee had constructive notice of the covenant of pre-emption embodied in a registered deed of lease, the covenant was enforceable against the vendee—Jagamaya v. Talsa, A.I.R. 1926 All. 70. Thus, when a mortgagee is aware of circumstances which ought to have put him on inquiry, and when by such inquiry he would have known of the existence of a previous agreement by the mortgagor to mortgage the same property to a third person, he must be deemed to have had constructive notice of the agreement, and in accordance with the provisions of this section his mortgage-rights must be postponed to those of the party in whose favour there has been a previous agreement—Kameswaramma v. Sitaramanuja, 29 Mad. 177. Where a mortgagee in possession entered into an agreement to purchase the mortgaged property, he can bring a suit to enforce the contract as against a subsequent purchaser. As the subsequent purchaser knew that the property was in the possession of the mortgagee, he ought to have enquired of the mortgagee as to the nature and extent of his interest (i.e., whether he was in possession as mortgagee or by virtue of any other right) and as he abstained from making any inquiries of him, he must be deemed to have had notice of the agreement to sell in favour of the mortgagee, and cannot therefore resist his suit—Punthenpurayil v. Kondiyal, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 31, 34 I.C. 906 (908).

If the contract is contained in the wajib-ul-arz of the village in which the property is situated, it is sufficient notice, and the transferee by purchase cannot be allowed to plead want of notice—Basdeo v. Jhagru, A.I.R. 1924 All. 400.

The right or obligation can be enforced under this section against a transferee with notice, even though he has purchased under a registered deed. A party who purchases under a registered deed, with notice of a prior agreement for sale, shall not be allowed to retain the property, as against the person claiming under the prior agreement—Chundernath v. Bhoyrub, 10 Cal. 250; Gangaram v. Laxman, 40 Bom. 498 (502); Desaibhai v. Ishwar, 44 Bom. 586 (588). A registered purchaser of land, who buys with notice of a prior unregistered contract by his vendor to sell the same land to the plaintiff, cannot resist a suit for specific performance on the plea of registration—Kavar v. Ismail, 9 Mad. 119. Where a bona fide contract, whether oral or written, is made for the sale of property, and another party afterwards buys the property with notice of the contract, the title of the party claiming under the contract prevails against the subsequent purchaser, although the latter's purchase may have been registered and he has obtained possession under his purchase—Chunder Kanta v. Krishna Sunder, 10 Cal. 710. See also Cooverji v. Bhimji, 6 Bom. 528; Puchha Lal v. Kunj Behari, 18 C.W.N.

445, 19 C.L.J. 213, 20 I.C. 803; Krishna v. Gangaram, 13 All. 28; Chand Mohammad v. Murtuzakhan, A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 194.

180. Obligation created by decree :—This section deals with personal rights in cases where such rights do not arise out of a specific charge on immoveable property. But where such a charge (e.g., obligation to pay money out of certain property) is created by a decree, it would bind the immoveable property even in the hands of a transferee for consideration and without notice; the purchaser cannot avoid a specific charge created by the decree on the property of the vendor on the ground of his being a bona fide purchaser without notice—Razia Begam v. Ishrat, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 316 (318, 319).

There is no difference in principle between a charge created by a contract and one created by a decree. In either case the charge is not a transfer of an interest in the property. Thus where a particular right is charged on specific immoveable property, such right cannot be enforced against a subsequent transferee for valuable consideration and without notice of the charge—Rustomalli v. Aftabhusain, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 414.

Gratuitous transferee :—The right will be enforced against a gratuitous transferee. On taking the property as a gift there is no reason why he should be in a better position than his transferor or why the right of the third person should be defeated by the transfer. Moreover, in the case of a gratuitous transfer, the notice must be presumed to have been conveyed to the transferee.

181. Execution sale :—Although the word 'transferee' in this section refers to a transferee under a private alienation, still the rule of this section may apply to a purchaser at Court-auction—Rebala Venkata v. Mangadu Yellappa, 5 L.W. 234, 38 I.C. 107 (108). Therefore, where a creditor attaches a property which is subject to a particular obligation arising out of a contract, he is not able to override that obligation but can sell the property only subject to such obligation. Thus, where B entered into a contract to sell his property to A, and subsequently C, B's creditor, attached the property in execution of a decree he had obtained against B, held that A was entitled to the property as against execution-purchaser—Rebala Venkata v. Mangadu Yellappa, 5 L.W. 234, 38 I.C. 107 (108, 109). In Nur Mahomed v. Dinshaw, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 393 (396), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee applied the principle of this section to a Court-sale.

41. Where, with the consent, express or implied of the Transfer by ostensible owner. persons interested in immoveable property, a person is the ostensible owner of such property and transfers the same for consideration, the transfer shall not be voidable on the ground that the transferor was not authorized to make it : provided that the transferee, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer, has acted in good faith.

182. Principle :—"This section is based on the principle that where one of two innocent persons must suffer from the fraud of a third party, the loss should fall on him who has created or could have prevented the opportunity for the fraud, and that in such cases hardship is caused by the strict enforcement of the general rule that no one can confer a higher right on property than he himself possesses." (Per Sir Courtney Ilbert)—Gazette of India, 1884, Supplement, p. 182. The principle is that of the two innocent persons or equally guilty persons if the law has to make its choice as whom to penalize, the law will choose the person whose indiscretion has enabled the fraud and favours him who is in possession—Mt. Ghulam Fatima v. Mt. Gopal Devi, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 269. See also Henderson & Co. v. Williams, (1895) 1 Q.B. 521; Palaniveluppa v. Nachappa, A.I.R. 1919 Mad. 247 and Mewa Ram v. Ram Gopal, A.I.R. 1926 All. 591 (601). This section forms an exception to the general rule that no one can convey a better title than he himself has in the property—Kanthu Lal v. Palu Sahu, 5 P.L.J. 521 (535), 57 I.C. 353; Nainsukhdas v. Gowardhandas, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 110, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 510. Where a Court sees that the rights of one of two innocent parties must be sacrificed, it is entitled to consider whether anything in the conduct of the party who comes into Court and seeks relief has debarred him from asserting his right—Thakuri v. Kundan, 17 All. 280 (281).

The rule in this section is based upon the doctrine of estoppel. "It is a principle of natural equity, which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate, and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing that either he (the purchaser) had a direct notice, or something which amounted to constructive notice of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an inquiry which, if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it"—Ram Coomār v. McQueen, 18 W.R. 166, 11 B.L.R. 46 (P.C.); Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Muhammad Ibrahim, 26 All. 490; Baidya Nath v. Alef Jan Bibi, 36 C.L.J. 9; Raja of Karvetnagar v. Saravana, 4 L.W. 200, 35 I.C. 893 (898); Maung Po v. Ma Myit, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 361 (362); Lal Singh v. Paras Ram, A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 226. A person shall not be permitted to represent a state of facts at one time, and afterwards when such representation has induced another to change his position, seek to show that as such his representation was erroneous—per Lord Halsbury, L.C. in Colonial Bank v. Cady, 15 App. Cas. 267. "Strangers can only look to the acts of the parties and to the external indicia of property, and not to the private communications which may pass between a principal and his banker, and if a person authorises another to assume the apparent right of disposing of property in the ordinary course of trade, it must be presumed that the apparent authority is the real authority"—per Lord Ellenborough in Pickering v. Busk, 15 East 38 (43).

This section is another species of estoppel when the representation is not made directly to the representee but when it consists in enabling the ostensible owners to mislead those with whom they are dealing on account of the special position of vantage in which they were placed by the conduct, express or implied, of the real owners—Satyanarayana-murthi v. Pydayya, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 459. See also Kapura v. Madso-dan, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 168; Lal Singh v. Guru Granth Sahib, A.I.R. 1951 Pepsu. 101. If the property was vested in an idol no estoppel could operate against it, unless perhaps it was guilty through its recognized agent of some laches and thereby induced a purchaser to believe in the ownership of a stranger. But human representative of the idol cannot defeat the claims of the idol merely by setting himself up as the owner of the property. If the property was vested in the trustee there could be no person against whom any estoppel could operate—Ratan v. Suraj, A.I.R. 1944 All. 1, I.L.R. 1944 All. 20.

As to the conditions which the section requires for its application see the following cases: Baidyanath v. Alef Jan, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 240; Gholam Siddique v. Jogendra Nath, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 916; Sahar Banu v. Raj Bahadur, 1934 Oudh 233; Krishna Kishore v. Sarat Kumar, 41 C.W.N. 797; Catholic M. P. Convent v. Subbanna, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 320.

This section being an exception to the general rule that a person cannot convey a better title than what he himself has in the property, the conditions laid down in the section must be strictly fulfilled before its benefit can be available to the transferee—Khushalchand v. Trimbak, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 49, I.L.R. 1946 Bom. 984.

183. Scope of section :—This section does not apply to a transfer of a decree of foreclosure, because such a transfer is not a transfer of immoveable property—Mahomed v. Mu O, 9 Bur. L.T. 121, 36 I.C. 426.

But the principle of this section applies to mortgages—Mt. Ghulam Fatima v. Mt. Gopal Devi, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 269. See also D. A. V. College v. Umrao Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 410; Arur Singh v. Santi, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 405. Where a Mahomedan, his wife and son had executed a mortgage of two houses and the mortgage deed had been registered as executed by the husband alone, the wife allowing the husband to represent himself as the ostensible owner of one of the houses belonging to her, this case was covered by the provision of this section—Jai Singh v. Wali Mohammad, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 252. See however Parvati v. Angamuthu, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 730, where it has been held that sec. 41 does not apply to the case of a mortgage. The fact that the assignee of a mortgage is a bona fide holder for consideration, cannot prevent the mortgagor or his successors successfully pleading that the mortgage bond in suit was not supported by consideration. If on the death of the mortgagee the entire mortgage security is released by one of the co-heirs, such release is not binding on the other co-heirs, because the co-sharer so releasing cannot be regarded as an ostensible owner—Hajarkhan v. Kesarkhan, A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 229.

The word 'transfer' in this section includes a payment in redemption of a mortgage. The payment redeeming a mortgage and thereby extinguishing the rights transferred by the mortgage is a transfer under this section, inasmuch as the rights created by the mortgage in favour of the mortgagee are re-transferred to the mortgagor—Ganpat v. Budhmal, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 86.

This section does not apply to the case of a purchase of the equity of redemption. A person who purchases the equity of redemption cannot repudiate his liability under the mortgage even if he purchases without notice of the mortgage, because there is no law which requires a mortgagee to give notice of his mortgage to the world—Narayan v. Purushottam, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 144 (145).

A person making a purchase at an auction sale is not a transferee from a transferor who was in possession of the property with the consent, express or implied of another. In an auction sale the transfer is not by act of parties but by operation of law to which the judgment-debtor is no consenting party. The only remedy the law gives an auction purchaser is the refund of the purchase money in case the judgment-debtor is found to have no saleable interest at all. This section cannot, therefore, be applied in favour of an auction purchaser—Mt. Shahar Bano v. Raj Bahadur, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 233 (235); Mangat v. Ghasi, (1930) A.L.J. 481; Puran Mal v. Siva Pal, (1934) 32 A.L.J. 1260; Nand Lal v. Sunder Lal, A.I.R. 1944 All. 17, I.L.R. 1943 All. 892; Lalit Mohan v. Lachmi Raj, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 213. However, the principle of natural equity on which the provisions of this section as well as those in sec. 115, Evidence Act are based, apply to a Court-sale—Sheikh Hussein v. Phoolchand, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 64.

It is not necessary to enter into any question under sec. 41 in order to decide whether a purchaser pendente lite is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. An estoppel arising under this section cannot override the imperative provision of sec. 52—Gendmal v. Laxman, A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 86.

This section applies only to a voluntary transfer, and does not apply to a transfer made in invitum (auction sale) by an order of the Court under which the judgment-debtor himself does not join in the actual transfer—Vaman v. Tikaram, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 368. See also Ram Chandra v. Kondoo Jonga, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 7, and Dwarika Halwai v. Sitla Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 All. 256. But the Madras High Court has stated in a short judgment that although this Act applies only to transfers by act of parties, still the principle of this section applies in favour of an auction-purchaser in a court-sale—Naraprath v. Paramboli, 34 I.C. 494 (Mad.); and the Allahabad High Court in an earlier case applied the principle of this section to a case of auction-purchase—Rasulan v. Nand Lal, A.I.R. 1930 All. 521.

This section is not applicable to a transferee from a limited holder like a widow, either under the Hindu law or under the customary law, because the widow holds the limited rights in the property in her capacity as a widow and not as an ostensible owner—Kapura v. Madsudan, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 168, 45 P.L.R. 183. A transferee from a Hindu widow, who takes the property from her before the reversioner's right has accrued, cannot successfully plead the bar of this section, although he was a bona fide transferee for value who had taken the property after due inquiry—Shib Deo v. Ram Prasad, A.I.R. 1925 All. 79 (84); Panchanan v. Balak Ram, A.I.R. 1930 All. 374 (375); Shambhu v. Muhadeo, A.I.R. 1933 All. 493 (494). In cases where a person, who has allowed another to occupy the position of an ostensible owner, has a limited estate, the rule of this section applies only during the life-time of a limited owner and is not available to protect transferees against the claim of the reversioners—Phool Kuer v. Prem Kuer, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 207.

Not only is it necessary that the transferee should have acted in good faith, but also that the transfer should have been made by the ostensible owner with the consent, express or implied, of the person interested. Payment of the consideration has also to be proved—Nand Lal v. Karam Bibi, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 258 (259), 146 I.C. 210; U Po v. Edward, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 139, 150 I.C. 898. In the absence of a finding that the transferee after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer had acted in good faith, this section does not apply—Nainsukhdas v. Govardhandas, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 110, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 510. If the co-sharer entrusted with the management of the entire property transfers the entire property, the other co-sharers are not precluded from asserting their title simply because the revenue records mention the name of the transferor alone—Suraj Rattan Thirani v. Azamabad Tea Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 295.

This section has no application to a case where the document executed earlier had been presented for registration without undue delay but after the document executed later had already been registered. Section 41 should not be read in such a way as to come into conflict with sec. 47 of the Registration Act—Mathura v. Ambika, 12 A.L.J. 993. See also Bindeshri v. Somnath, 14 A.L.J. 382.

This section extends to subsequent purchasers as well, and "it may safely be maintained that even if one of such purchasers had some sort of constructive notice, the defendant who is the last purchaser cannot be dislodged from his position as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, without proof of circumstances bringing such notice home to him"—per Surhwardy, J. in Gholam Siddique v. Jogendra Nath, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 916 (918).

If the first transferee from the benamidar is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice he acquires good title and any transferee from him with or without notice of the real title would in equity acquire a good title. If the first transferee is either a volunteer or a transferee for value but with notice, a bona fide transferee from him for value without notice would in equity be still protected on that principle—Per R. C. Mitter and Roxburgh, JJ. in Purnendu v. Hanut Mull, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 565.

In terms this section does not apply to the Punjab; but the principle underlying it applies—Shamsher Chand v. Mehr Chand, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 147 (F.B.), Kanhiya Lal v. Deep Chand, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 199.

184. Consent :—This section does not require that the transaction to be binding on the real owner must have been entered into with his consent—Satyanarayanamurthi v. Pydayya, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 459, (1943) 1 M.L.J. 219; Parvati v. Angamuthu, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 730.

For the application of this section it is essential that the consent of the true owner to the possession of the ostensible owner must continue up to the date of the transfer; but it is not necessary that the transfer itself should be with the consent of the owner. If it is proved that transfer was made with the consent of the rightful owner, the case would fall within the purview of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act and the other conditions of sec. 41 of the present Act need not be satisfied. Such consent will estop the owner even though the transferee made no inquiries to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer—a condition which is essential for the application of sec. 41—Fazal v. Md. Kazim, A.I.R. 1934 All. 193; Jesa Ram v. Ghulamam, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 816.

The mere fact that an entry is made in the survey register in favour of the transferor is not evidence of consent of the owner within the meaning of this section—Perumal v. Subramania, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 299.

Where a woman allowed her husband to retain possession of title deeds of a property gifted to her by her father-in-law in lieu of dower, it was held that she impliedly consented to the husband holding himself out as the owner of the property and that a mortgagee from him was protected by this section—Bhagat v. Fatima, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 58. But this section cannot be applied to the case of the widow of a separated member of a Hindu joint family when nothing has been done by her by which her consent can be implied in allowing other members of the family executing a mortgage including therein the property left by her husband to pose as the ostensible owners in respect of that property—Mt. Komal v. Gur Charan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 242.

The consent referred to in this section must be an intelligent consent and not one brought about by misrepresentation on the part of the person making it as to his legal rights—Dungaria v. Nand Lal, 3 A.L.J. 534.

Consent may be express or implied, i.e., consent need not always be by word, it may be by act or conduct, e.g., by acquiescence. Acquiescence does not mean simply an active intelligent consent, but may be implied if a person is content not to oppose irregular acts which he knows are being done—Duke of Leeds v. Earl of Amherst, 2 Ph. 117; Evans v. Smallcombe, L.R. 3 H.L. 249; Cowell v. Watts, 2 Ht. & Tw. 224; Ananda v. Parbati, 4 C.L.J. 198 (207); Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I.A. 203, 20 Cal. 296 (311); Bhimappa v. Basawa, 29 Bom. 400 (403).

"If, whatever a man's real intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would believe that he was assenting to the terms proposed by other party and upon that belief enters into the contract with him, the man thus conducting himself would be equally bound as if he had intended to agree to the other party's terms"—per Blackburn, L.J., in Smith v. Hughes, 6 Q.B. 607; Sukhimoni v. Mohendra, 4 B.L.R. 16 (P.C.); Dungaria v. Nandlal, 3 A.L.J. 534.

It is of the essence of this section that the conduct of the real owner must induce a belief in the transferee that his transferor had power to make the transfer—Md. Sujat v. Chandbi, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 41.

The transferee must prove two things : (1) that he made bona fide enquiry, and (2) that the transferor was the ostensible owner with the consent of the real owner—Motimul Sowcar v. Visalakshi Ammal, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 432; Asrafi Devi v. Trilok Chand, A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 140.

Express or implied consent to ostensible ownership imports that the real owner is in some manner, privy to the creation of the ostensible ownership—Catholic M. P. Convent v. Subbanna, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 320, (1948). The words "consent express or implied" refer only to the transferor holding the property as ostensible owner and not also to the transfer sought to be protected under the section, ibid. The real owner's inaction or silence at a time when he was not conscious even of his own rights would not debar him from urging his own claim against a transferee even if he be one for valuable consideration—Shamsher v. Mehr Chand, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 147 (F.B.).

Acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from facts found—Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal, 21 All. 496 (P.C.). It cannot be inferred from a mere absence of protest, especially where the party dealing with the property knew or could have known that the property he was dealing with belonged to another—Fatehyab v. Muhammad, 9 All. 434; Uda Begam v. Immamuddin, 1 All. 82; Basauntappa v. Ranu, 9 Bom. 86; Chintaman v. Dareppa, 14 Bom. 506. But it can be inferred from absence of acts of ownership for a long time. Thus, where for a long term of years no act of ownership was exercised by the plaintiff over the house in dispute, but, on the contrary, she allowed her husband's cousin to deal with the house apparently as the ostensible owner thereof, and in consequence of such conduct the defendant had been induced to purchase the same, it was held that the plaintiff could not successfully sue for recovering her share in the house—Thakuri v. Kundan, 17 All. 280 (281, 282).

If A applies to get his name entered in the Revenue papers, and B (the real owner) opposes the application for the entry, but in spite of the opposition A gets his name entered, A cannot be said to hold as an ostensible owner with the consent of the real owner—Pateshri v. Nageshar, 8 A.L.J. 358, 10 I.C. 961 (962); affirmed on appeal, Nageshar v. Raja Galeshri, 20 C.W.N. 265 (P.C.), 34 I.C. 673 (675), A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 103. Where a revenue sale in favour of the Government is void, a vendee from the Government cannot invoke the aid of sec. 41 against the defaulter—Ramrao Jankiram v. State of Bombay, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 827.

Disclaimer by real owner :—A person who has disclaimed a title cannot be allowed to set it up afterwards to the prejudice of the parties who have purchased the disclaimed property from the ostensible owner in good faith and for value—Fakhir Jahan v. Abdul Ghani, 5 O.L.J. 49, 45 I.C. 307.

Transfer by ostensible owner after suit by real owner :—Although a person may hold himself out as the ostensible owner of a property with the consent (express or implied) of the real owner, still if the real owner brings a suit against the ostensible owner for the possession of the property, and then the latter transfers the property after the institution of the suit, the previous consent must be deemed to be revoked by the act of filing the suit. Moreover, the estoppel arising under sec. 41 cannot override the imperative provision of lis pendens laid down in sec. 52. Further, it is immaterial that the ostensible owner, at the time of transferring the property, did not know that the real owner had filed a suit against him; for the pendency of the suit would by itself operate as a constructive notice of the revocation of the previous consent—Shafiqullah v. Samiullah, A.I.R. 1929 All. 943 (945).

Minors :—Where the alienation is made by the ostensible owner of a minor's property it is impossible for the latter to give his assent, either expressly or by implication; hence this section does not apply—Kanhiya Lal v. Deep Chand, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 199; Satyanarayanamurthi v. Pydayya, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 459; Pooran Chand v. Radha Raman, A.I.R. 1943 All. 197. In such a case the consent of the guardian is not sufficient—Sadiq Hussain v. Co-operative Central Bank, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 106. Suit by a deity to set aside a mortgage by the sebaite is not hit by sec. 41—Sri Thakur Krishna Chandramajiu v. Kanhayalal, A.I.R. 1961 All. 206.

185. Person interested :—Under this section alienors must act as ostensible owners with the consent express or implied of "persons interested"—D. A. V. College v. Umrao Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 410, 157 I.C. 92. A guardian is not a person personally interested in the minor owner's property and therefore cannot give consent to a third party to hold himself out to the world as the owner of the infant's property so as to enable a transferee from such party to claim the benefit of this section—Dambar Singh v. Jawitri, 29 All. 292 (294). And a minor will not be bound by the consent given by his guardian in possession—Ram Charan v. Joy Ram, 17 C.W.N. 10, 16 I.C. 825 (828).

Similarly, religious endowments do not fall under this section, as the property is vested in the shrine and no particular person can give consent express or implied—Ghulam Haidar v. Manager, 73 I.C. 711.

186. Ostensible owner :—The expression 'ostensible owner' excludes such persons who hold possession of property professedly as agents, guardians or in any other fiduciary character—Dambar Singh v. Jawitri, 29 All. 292 (294); Abdulla v. Bundi, 34 All. 22 (24); Maung Bya v. Maung San, 4 Bur. L.T. 74, 10 I.C. 778; Chandra Kanta v. Bhagjur, 1 I.C. 525 (527); Sadiq Hussein v. Co-operative Central Bank, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 106. A guardian cannot be said to be the ostensible owner with the consent, express or implied, of the minor—Abdulla v. Bundi, 34 All. 22 (24). As between members of a joint Hindu family the fact that the name of one member is used in acquisition of the property does not amount to the holding out of that member as the ostensible owner, and a person dealing with one such member can hardly say that he was misled, unless he proves that he had made full inquiries and could not ascertain his title—Mt. Jasodar v. Mt. Sukurmani, A.I.R. 1937

Pat. 353, 170 I.C. 1005. If a manager of a joint Hindu family consisting of minors alienates property, the alienee cannot be called an ostensible owner, with the consent of the real owners, because the minors cannot give their consent, express or implied, to the alienee appearing as the ostensible owner. Consequently, if the alienee transfers the property to some other person, that person cannot plead sec. 41, in a suit by the minors to recover possession. In such a case, the question whether such person made reasonable inquiries or acted in good faith is immaterial—Shankar v. Daooji, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 118. The principle that the alienee of the interest of a Hindu coparcener is entitled to enforce his claim against the share to which the alienor was entitled at the time of the alienation unaffected by any birth or death subsequent to the date of alienation, applies to the case of the transferee who is protected under this section. The title of the alienee has to be considered with reference to the date of the transfer which could not be avoided by him or his legal representatives, if the other conditions of this section are found to have been complied with—Satyannarayanamurthi v. Pydayya, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 459.

Where a vendee does not assert his right and the vendor is allowed to carry on the management, the latter may be an ostensible owner—D. A. V. College v. Umrao Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 410, 157 I.C. 92. Where a Burmese husband allowed his wife and children to hold themselves out as the sole owners of the properties and the wife and children mortgaged the property to a person who acted in good faith, it was held that the husband could not impugn the mortgage—Maung Po. v. Maung Myit, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 361, 146 I.C. 1063. Where during the husband's absence on the pilgrimage the wife sold a piece of land which had before the husband's departure been mortgaged by her and the purchaser paid off the mortgage having by proper inquiries satisfied himself that the wife was the true owner, the husband was not allowed to recover the land, nor to redeem the mortgage—Niras v. Mt. Tetri, 20 C.W.N. 106. Where some of the co-sharers are shown as owners in the revenue records for a number of years, the other co-sharers cannot challenge a sale by the former—Udho Das v. Meher Baksh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 262, 144 I.C. 340. Where one partner has permitted another partner to deal with partnership property as an ostensible owner and such property is mortgaged by the latter to a bank, knowledge on the part of one member of the investigating committee of the bank in his personal capacity that the property belongs to the partnership is not itself sufficient to justify an inference as to knowledge on the part of the bank—Punjab & Sind Bank v. Rustomji, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 821 (822).

Where the sons held the property as ostensible owners with the consent of the widow and the transferees had made sufficient inquiries, the widow was bound by the transfer made by the sons—Mt. Shamsunnissa v. Ali Ashghar, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 87. A person entered only as eldest son in property register is not ostensible owner—Siddappa v. Vishvanathsa, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 419. A charge holder under an award, recorded as proprietor in the D Register which refers to the award is not an ostensible owner and a transferee from him cannot assert title under this section—South Bihar Sugar Mills v. Maharaj Prasad, A.I.R.

1966 Pat. 75. Where a trustee allowed a person to hold himself out as owner in the sale of trust properties, the provisions of this section were attracted in the purchaser's favour—Mulchand v. Hussomal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 177.

Where P permitted D to hold the shares in suit as exclusive owner, D became ostensible owner of the property with the implied consent of P.—Chandi v. Anant, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 398. See also Karamshi v. Ratanshi, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 55.

The material date for considering whether a particular person is the ostensible owner is no doubt the date of alienation; but inferences showing consent of the real owner can be made from previous as well as from subsequent conduct—Karamshi v. Ratanshi, supra.

The words "person interested in immoveable property" mean the full owner, and an 'ostensible owner' is a person who is apparently a full or unqualified owner, not a person who is only a qualified owner, such as a mortgagee—Jogendra v. Salamat, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 92, (per Mitter J., Jack J. contra); Sita Ram v. Raj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 283 (285), 150 I.C. 145. A person cannot be said to be an ostensible owner when he had himself admitted in a previous transaction that he was no more than a mortgagee of the property in dispute; the fact that 30 years ago his name was recorded in the revenue papers as owner is immaterial—Mohammad Shafi v. Mohammad Said, A.I.R. 1930 All. 847 (848).

Where a charge was created by a decree on the property in the possession of the judgment-debtor, having the effect of reducing his full ownership into a limited ownership, held that he was not an ostensible owner of the property with the consent of the decree-holder, and he cannot give a good title to a transferee for value without notice—Kallappa v. Balwant, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 443.

Where A was permitted to live on B's land on condition that A's wife should cook in B's house, it cannot be said that B held out A as the owner of the land—Chooni Lal v. Nilmadhav, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1034.

Where a Muhammadan husband transferred his property to his wife as Mahr, and in spite of it he continued in possession of the property and it stood in his name, held that he was the ostensible owner of the property with the implied consent of his wife—Makkama v. Masabai, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 299. Where A, a lessee of Government land, transferred the lease to B by registered deed, but B did not apply to get his name registered in the rolls as transferee, and did not also take steps to obtain possession of the land, and further allowed the document of lease to remain in the possession of A, held that A was the "ostensible owner" of the property—Chettyar Firm v. Mg. Kyaing, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 333 (335).

The purchaser from one of the members of a joint family some property owned by the joint family is not an ostensible owner even though the vendor dealt with the property sold as his exclusive property—Rangaswami v. Sundarapandia, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 635 (636); Ladhibai v. Ravji Nagshi, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 34. The female members of a Mahomedan family being pardanashin ladies naturally leave the management of the property to their male relations; so where a mortgagee from the male members makes no inquiries, and there is nothing to show that he is misled by the female members by word or conduct that they have no proprietary interest in the property, the mortgage cannot be enforced against the interests of the female members—Azima v. Shama-lanand, 40 Cal. 378 (P.C.).

Where the manager got his name entered in the municipal house-tax register, during the prolonged absence of the owner, held that the entry was only made for the purpose of assessment and collection of house tax and was not intended for registering title. Such an entry was not enough to induce anybody to think that the manager had a right to sell the property—Mahomed Sulaiman v. Sakina Bibi, A.I.R. 1922 All. 392. The mere fact that a certain person's name appears in the mutation register is not sufficient to make him the ostensible owner, when the mutation proceedings disclose the fact that other persons claimed ownership in the property—Amir Jahan v. Khadim Husain, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 253 (255).

The question as to whether a person is an ostensible owner with the consent of the real owner is a question of fact—Jamna Das v. Uma Shankar; Siddappa v. Vishwanathsa, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 419. If A after obtaining possession under a decree for possession inducts tenants and thereafter the decree is set aside on appeal the tenants cannot say that A being an ostensible owner they cannot be evicted on an application under sec. 144 C.P.C.—Manickchand v. Gangadhar, A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 288.

Reversioner :—Since a Hindu female cannot transfer any property without legal necessity, it follows that if she orally transfers a portion of the property to a reversioner and puts him in possession, such reversioner cannot be called an ostensible owner with the consent of the female or of the other reversioners—Shambhu v. Mahadeo, A.I.R. 1933 All. 493 (494).

Benamidar :—The benami system in this country has long been a common practice. The benamidar, though he has no beneficial interest in the property or business standing in his name, represents in fact that real owner, and is, so far as their relative legal position is concerned, a mere trustee for him—Gur Narayan v. Sheolal, 46 Cal. 566 (P.C.); Bilas v. Desraj, 37 All. 557, 42 I.A. 242. Where the real owner of immoveable property had permitted the benami owner to hold himself out as the real owner, and a third person had purchased from such benami owner for value, held that the real owner could not recover unless he could prove that the purchaser had direct or constructive notice of the real title or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him on an inquiry which, if prosecuted, would have led to the discovery of the real title—Jokhu v. Mehdi, 1881 A.W.N. 67. So if property is purchased in the name of a benamidar and the indicia of ownership are placed in his hands, the true owner can only get rid of the effect of an alienation by showing that it was made without his acquiescence and that the purchaser took with notice of that fact—Bhugwan v. Upooch,

10 W.R. 185. See also Fakruddin v. Ramayya, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 299; Souriyar v. Raman, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.Coch. 479. Where the owner of a property, being hard pressed by creditors executes a benami sale-deed, but continues in possession of the property, and the benamidar sells the property to a third person who has knowledge of the benami nature of the transaction which amounts to fraud, and the purchaser brings a suit to recover possession, the Court will neither assist the purchaser nor the real owner—Lakshman v. Vasudeo, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 227 (229). Where R after purchasing benami for C at a court sale executes a release disclosing the real position, C's son, in a suit for declaration of title and possession, which is not hit by sec. 66, C.P.C., is entitled to get a decree on the basis of the deed of release, which is sufficient to validate the pre-existing title of C without any formal conveyance—Rangaswami v. Krishnan, (1968) 81 Mad. L.W. 301. Where a husband purchased property in the name of his wife, representing that the purchase money was her stridhan; the wife took possession of the property and the husband was never in possession, and the husband, in all his acts both private and public, during his life-time, represented that the property was his wife's; and then the wife sold the property after her husband's death, held that the heirs of the husband could not recover the property from the purchaser—Luchman Chunder v. Kalli Charan, 19 W.R. 292 (P.C.) See also Satyanarayanamurthi v. Pydayya, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 459. The plaintiff executed a sale deed in favour of defendant No. 2 for screening the properties in the deed of sale against his creditors. Defendant No. 1 purchased the properties from defendant No. 2. The actual possession of the properties was with the plaintiff, but such possession was not inconsistent with the title of defendant No. 2. Held, the plaintiff could not avoid the sale—Arta Rout v. Bhagavat Baral, A.I.R. 1957 Orissa 157. Similarly where a husband purchased property in the name of his wife, and the kabuliya, towjis and counterfoil rent-receipts all stood in the wife's name, and the husband had never himself held title to the property in his own name, held that a person taking a mortgage from her was protected by this section—Annada Mohan v. Nilphamari Loan Office, 26 C.W.N. 436 (439), 65 I.C. 245. Where the names of the grandsons of a Mahomedan were entered in the revenue papers as being the owners of the property mortgaged by them, the co-sharers of the grandsons had no claim as against the mortgagees except as owners of the equity of redemption—Mubarkaunnessa v. Md. Raza, A.I.R. 1924 All. 324. But where the transferee from a benamidar made no attempt to call for the title-deeds of the property which had been with the real owner, he would be deprived of the protection given under this section—Ram Charan v. Joyram, 17 C.W.N. 10. Where one of the judgment-debtors paid the decree-holder and got the decree transferred in his benamidar's name and the decree was bought from such benamidar by another for valuable consideration and in good faith and he took out execution against the judgment-debtor: held that the principle of this section applied and the judgment-debtor was liable; held further that even assuming that the benami was justifiable, the principle that whenever one of two innocent persons had to suffer by the act of a third person, the person who enabled the third person to occasion the loss must sustain it, was applicable—Swaminatha v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 28.

Proof :—The transferee is to prove that his transferor was the ostensible owner on the date of the transfer, and not at some date in the past—Sadiq Hussein v. Co-operative Central Bank, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 106. Dealing by the person claiming ostensible ownership must be such as to fix those dealing with such person with notice that he was exercising acts of ownership over the property—Sanker v. Naranji, A.I.R. 1951 Kutch 85.

186A. Voidable :—This section does not say that a purchaser from the ostensible owner who purchases with notice of the real title acquires no title. He acquires a title which is voidable at the instance of the real owner, and until his purchase is avoided, he can deal with the property—Purnendu v. Hanut Mull, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 565.

187. When purchaser will be protected :—The first step which the transferee is expected to take is to search the registration office to ascertain what transfers, if any, have been made by the transferor. Where the transferee fails to do so, he cannot claim the benefit of this section—Mt. Fatima v. Shib Singh, A.I.R. 1933 All. 917 (918).

Where the subsequent purchaser while making search in the Registry Office in the ordinary way could not discover a mortgage owing primarily to the negligence of the mortgagee in giving proper description of the properties and consequent failure to make proper index, the subsequent purchaser was preferred to the mortgagee—Galliera v. U Thet, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 117.

The usual search is for a period of twelve years, and when there are no circumstances whatever to indicate that the search of the registration office should be made for a longer period the transferee need not make such a search—Mazhar v. Mukhtar, A.I.R. 1938 All. 64.

188. Proviso : Reasonable care or inquiry :—The Proviso to this section requires that the transferee, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer, should act in good faith. Whether a particular transferee has acted so, must depend on the circumstances of each case—Abdul Gafur v. Nawab Ali, A.I.R. 1949 Ass. 17; Satyanarayanamurthi v. Pydayya, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 459; Chandi v. Anant, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 398; Parvati v. Angamuthu, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 730; Catholic M. P. Convent v. Subbanna, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 320; Khushalchand v. Trimbak, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 49. This question is a question of law and requires careful consideration. Some circumstances would prima facie arouse suspicion and would call for detailed inquiry, while other circumstances would make only a nominal inquiry sufficient—Chandi v. Gadadhar, A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 666. See also Catholic M. P. Convent v. Subbanna, supra. But see Nainsukhdas v. Gowardhandas, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 110, where it has been held that this question is a question of fact.

A purchaser from the ostensible owner cannot resist the real owner's title unless he can show that he took reasonable care to ascertain that the transferring ostensible owner had power to make the transfer and that he (the purchaser) acted in good faith—Pateshri v. Nageshar, 8 A.L.J. 358, 10 I.C. 961 (962); Mohammad Shafi v. Mohammad Said, A.I.R. 1930 All. 847 (848); Rahiman v. Khathoon, 4 L.W. 193, 35 I.C. 569; Thungavelu v. Mangathaye, (1913) M.W.N. 674, 21 I.C. 21 (22); Kanhu Lal v. Palu Sahu, 5 P.L.J. 521 (534, 536); Sheo Gobind v. Anwar Ali, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 305 (306); Ram Charan v. Joy Ram, 16 I.C. 825 (829), 17 C.W.N. 10; Kasturi Bibi v. Balliram, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 15. It is necessary under this section to prove not merely consideration but also good faith and due inquiry—Lakshman v. Vasudeo, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 227; U Po v. Edward, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 139. See also Jadam Jampur Bai v. Janki Siddappa, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 237.

Where there are certain avenues of inquiry open to the purchaser and the purchaser refuses or omits to make such inquiries, he cannot be allowed to take advantage of this section—Sheotahal v. Ram Narain, A.I.R. 1930 All. 422, 124 I.C. 413. But where had the transferee made inquiries he would have found that the transferor, who was in possession, had prior to the issue of the lease to him by the Government been in possession of the property under an earlier lease and that she had actually remained in possession of the document evidencing that earlier lease until the issue of a new lease, the transferee was not guilty of any default such as would deprive him of the benefit of sec. 41—Chettyar Firm v. Maung Kyaing, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 333.

Where however it appeared that in the conveyance it was recited that the purchase was being made by the vendee, a woman with her stridhan money and in which her husband was an attesting witness and it was subsequently claimed that the purchase was made benami by the husband, it was held that the person purchasing from the woman, though he purchased from an ostensible owner, did not take reasonable care and make necessary inquiries as a prudent man—Krishna Kishore v. Sarat Kumari, 41 C.W.N. 787.

Only those persons are entitled to claim protection under this section who, in spite of necessary enquiry, have not been able to discover who the real owner of the property is, and who have, in full belief that the person making a transfer in their favour is the person really entitled to that property, taken the transfer from him—Jagmohan v. Indar, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 160 (162); Jamsedji v. Dorabji, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 1; Shahar Banu v. Raj Bahadur, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 233; Ram Charan v. Joy Ram, 17 C.W.N. 10; Sadha v. Mangal, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 166. No purchaser can protect himself against the claim of a real owner merely by saying that he had no notice of the real owner's title. When he has taken reasonable care to ascertain his vendor's title, then no doubt if there is an equitable interest of which he could by such reasonable care discover no trace, the doctrine of purchase for value without notice holds good—Zungabai Bhawani v. Appaji, 9 Bom. L.R. 388. Anybody purchasing a property has to make a reasonable inquiry as to the title of his vendor; much more in a case where he sets up a title of the ostensible owner as against the title of the real owner—Sheogobind v. Anwar Ali, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 305 (307). Where a person takes transfer of a property, though informed of the existence of a registered sale deed in favour of another without probing further to see whether the transferor had in law the power to make the transfer he cannot get the benefit of sec. 41—Raghnath Lala v. Mansa Amrit, 64 Punj. L.R. 230.

Reasonable care is to be expected from every one who claims to have purchased free from a really existing right, equitable or legal, and when the purchaser has failed to exercise it, he cannot claim that the real owner should be called on to prove his good faith and innocence instead—Zungabai Bhawani v. Appaji, 9 Bom. L.R. 388.

What is to be deemed “reasonable care” is a question of fact (Jamma Das v. Uma Shankar, 36 All. 308 at p. 312) and depends upon the circumstances of each case—Gopala v. Arasappa, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 523. It is one that is expected of an ordinary prudent man of business—Kanhu Lal v. Palu Sahu, 5 P.L.J. 521 (534), 57 I.C. 353; Partap v. Saiyida, 23 All. 442 (447); Macneil & Co. v. Saroda, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 83 (86); Gholam Shiddique v. Jogendra, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 916; Cheetiyar Firm v. Kallamma, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 423; D. A. V. College v. Umrao Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 410 (412). The ordinary standard of diligence required for ascertaining whether the transferor has power to transfer is calling for the title under which he claims and inspecting the title-deeds. If in the document itself that was produced as the title-deed there was any indication with regard to the existence of some other document then the matter might conceivably be otherwise. It is possible, even in such a case, to hold that if after inspecting the other document a person should come to the conclusion that his transferor had power to transfer and obtains a transfer, such a case may also be covered by sec. 41—Sethumadhava v. Bacha Bibi, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 778 (780, 781).

This section requires reasonable care, not generally, not with regard to every aspect of the transaction, but merely for the purpose of ascertaining that the transferor had the power to make the transfer—Sethu Madhava v. Bacha Bibi (supra).

A purchaser who wilfully departs from an inquiry in order to avoid acquiring a knowledge of this vendor's title is not allowed to derive any advantage from his wilful ignorance of defects which would have come to his knowledge if he had transacted the business in the ordinary way. The words ‘reasonable care’ in this section are to be understood in the above sense—Manji v. Hoorbai, 35 Bom. 342 (348), following Bailey v. Barnes, [1894] 1 Ch. 25 (35). A transferee cannot claim the protection of this section if it appears that if he had acted diligently and prudently and pushed his inquiries further afield, he could have discovered the true position of his transferor (viz., that he was not the owner but a mere mortgagee) —Mohammad Shafi v. Mohammad Said, A.I.R. 1930 All. 847 (848). A transferee cannot be allowed the benefit of the principle contained in this section when the slightest inquiry would have sufficed to acquaint him with the fact that land stood in the real owner's name in the revenue maps and registers—Maung Hmwe v. Ma Lun, 4 Bur. L.T. 186, 11 I.C. 855; or when the mortgagee could have ascertained on the slightest inquiry that the property belonged not to the mortgagor alone but to him as well as his other brothers—Maung Than v. Ma On, 4 Bur. L.T. 143, 12 I.C. 858. A purchaser of land at the time of his purchase knew that the property had been previously mortgaged by his vendor and his father, and that the father lived in a house on the land. Held that the purchaser was by reason of the mortgage put upon inquiry as to the father's interest in the land and could not therefore claim to be a bona fide purchaser for value from the ostensible owner (the son) in whose name the property stood in the revenue registers—Mahomed Ebrahim v. Maung Ba, 7 Bur. L.T. 69, 24 I.C. 482 (483). A person who takes a mortgage from one whom he knows to be a sister's son of the last owner ought to take reasonable care to enquire and ascertain as to whether there are any collaterals in existence of the owner—Ballu Mal v. Ram Kishan, 43 All. 263 (265). A man who chooses to act upon a Collector's certificate in Madras as evidence of title does so at his own risk, and cannot be said to act with reasonable care and good faith—Thungavelu v. Mangathaye, 1913 M.W.N. 674, 21 I.C. 21 (23). Where a person purchased property from one of the four members of a joint family, and it appeared that though the property stood in the vendor's name, a little enquiry on the part of the purchaser would have put him on notice that it really belonged to the joint family, held that, the purchaser was not protected by this section—Rajani Kanta v. Bashiram, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 636 (638), 121 I.C. 409. The mere fact that certain property is found entered in the record of rights in the name of one person only who happens to be the Karta of the family and that the junior members have allowed the entry to stand, does not justify a transferee, who takes a mortgage from the recorded owner alone, in making no further inquiry. He must inquire as to whether and how far the other members are interested in it. His refusal to inquire into the title-deeds and resting content with the entry in the record-of-rights gives him no protection against the other members—Kanhu v. Palu Sahu, 5 P.L.J. 521 (533), 1 P.L.T. 546, 57 I.C. 353. The mere entry of one's name as owner of a property either in the Government records or in private papers does not relieve the purchaser from such owner from the duty of making an enquiry into the title of that owner—Sheo Gobind v. Anwar, Ali, 10 P.L.T. 254, 116 I.C. 779, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 305 (306). A Government official acquired some zemindary property in the district in which he was employed, and he caused that property to be recorded in the Revenue papers in his sons' names. The sons sold the property. It was held that as there were other circumstances which rendered it incumbent on the transferees not to rest satisfied with merely seeing that the names of the transferors were entered in the revenue records, the transferees did not use reasonable care—Pratap Chand v. Saidiya, 23 All. 442 (447). Where a purchaser is told that the vendor derives his title under a registered deed and the purchaser does not ask for the production of the original deed he must be deemed to have constructive notice of the contents of the deed—Yew Sit v. Maung Dawood, 1 L.B.R. 196. A purchaser who merely relies on mutation of names does not act with reasonable care, for mutation of names by itself creates no proprietary title (Chokhey Singh v. Jote Singh, 31 All. 73 P.C.). Mutation is merely a statement of the facts which existed as to possession of the property. Consequently, neither the mutation entry nor the entry in the Record of Rights or revenue papers can supply the place of a title-deed; and a purchaser who acts upon such an entry as evidence of title does so at his own risk—Md. Sujat v. Chandbi, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 41 (42); Hargovind v. Ambika, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 165; Ram Chalitra v. Shivanandan, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 67.

But where during the husband's absence on a pilgrimage, the wife sold a piece of land which had before the husband's departure been mortgaged by her with the husband's consent, and the purchaser who paid off the mortgage satisfied himself by proper inquiries that the wife's name was entered in the Raja sereshita as owner, held that the husband could not recover the land nor redeem the mortgage—Niras Purbe v. Tetri Pasin, 20 C.W.N. 103 (104), 32 I.C. 82. A Hindu husband purchased property in the name of his wife, and held her out as the owner of the property. After her husband's death the wife mortgaged the property, and the mortgagee made enquiries in the village, looked at the kabala and other papers, viz., kabuliats, toujis and counter-foil rent-receipts, and found that they all were given in the wife's name. Held that the mortgagee was protected by this section—Annada Mohan v. Nilphamari Loan Office, 26 C.W.N. 436 (439), 65 I.C. 245. Where the defendant before purchasing a mahal from the farzidar of the plaintiff, made inquiries in the Registration Office and from the rayats of the village, which satisfied him that the farzidar was the real owner of the mahal, and he also consulted his Mukhtar who got for him copies of the documents wherein the beneficial owner admitted the title of the ostensible owner, held that the defendant being a bona fide purchaser for value from the ostensible owner, the plaintiff was estopped under this section from setting up his title to the mahal—Ram Sundar v. Ram Narain, 48 I.C. 936. Where the purchaser made inquiries from other transferees of the transferor and was told that except the transferor there was no other person who had any interest in the property, and the purchaser further inspected the Municipal Records and made inquiries in the Registration Office, but found nothing which might have put him on further inquiry, held that the purchaser had taken reasonable care and was protected by this section—Md. Shakur Khan v. Shahjahan, 63 I.C. 125 (126) (All.).

189. Nature of the inquiry:—It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to the nature of the inquiry which the intending purchaser should make. It must depend upon the circumstances of each case—Zungabai v. Appaji, 9 Bom. L.R. 388 (391); Manji v. Hoorbai, 35 Bom. 342, 12 Bom. L.R. 1044. But without laying down any general rule, it may be said that the inquiries must be of such a specific character that the Court can place its finger upon them and say that upon such facts some particular inquiry ought to have been made. Some specific circumstance should be pointed out as the starting point of an inquiry which might be expected to lead to some result. Ram Coomar v. McQueen, 11 B.L.R. 46 (54), 18 W.R. 166 (P.C.); Macneil & Co. v. Saroda Sundari, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 83 (86); Baidya Nath v. Alef Jan, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 423; Chettyar Firm v. Kaliamma, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 423, 161 I.C. 221; Mt. Jasodar v. Mt. Sukurmani, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 353; Natabar v. Nimai, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 75. Thus, a vendee should not be content with the paper title disclosed by the sale-deed but should also make inquiries of the person in actual possession as to his title—Vyan-kappa v. Yamnasami, 35 Bom. 269 (271), 10 I.C. 817. It is obvious that the first step which the transferee is expected to take is to search the registration office to ascertain what transfers, if any, had been made by the transferor. Where the transferee fails to do so, he cannot claim the benefit of this section—Khatun Fatima v. Shib Singh, 1933 A.L.J. 1036, A.I.R. 1933 All. 917 (918). Where the property sold is house property in a town, the benefit of this section cannot be allowed to any transferee who takes a transfer without first undertaking a scrutiny of the relevant registers in the registration office—Kanhaiya Lal v. Deep Chand, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 199, 48 P.L.R. 454.

Extent of inquiry :—It cannot be laid down, as a general rule, that where the transferor was in sole possession for a considerable length of time and was the sole recorded owner, the transferee, who otherwise acts in good faith, is entitled to the protection of this section, if he satisfied himself by inspecting the revenue records. The only test that can be laid down is that the transferee should show that he acted like a reasonable man of business and with ordinary prudence. Such a person would not be satisfied by merely inspecting the revenue records, but would inquire as to how his vendor acquired the property. If the source of his vendor's title appears to be a transfer, he should call for the title deeds; if it appears to be by inheritance, he would naturally inquire as to who were the heirs of the deceased owner, and if he is satisfied that his vendor was the only heir he is entitled to the protection of sec. 41, though it may subsequently turn out that there were other heirs as well—Fazal v. Md. Kazim, A.I.R. 1934 All. 193. There can be no inquiry when there is nothing to inquire about. Therefore, further inquiry becomes supererogatory when the transfer is proposed, encouraged or acquiesced in by the very person whose title or interest it was to challenge the transfer—Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 20 Cal. 296 (308) (P.C.). Where a person is found in possession of property, is recorded as owner, and holds title-deeds of the property, and deals with a third party in respect of it, there is nothing to suggest a want of good faith in such third party in dealing with him in respect of the property and nothing to suggest a want of care in examining the title by reason of the fact that he made no further inquiries as to title—Khawaja Muhammad Khan v. Muhammad Ibrahim, 26 All. 490; Gholam Siddique v. Jogendra, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 916. Where the real owners by their conduct or omission allowed the ostensible owners to get their names recorded in the revenue papers to exclusion of the former, which entries remained unchallenged by the true owners throughout, and the transferees from the ostensible owners examined the entries in the revenue papers which contained a detailed description of the property, held that the transferees had acted in good faith—Mubarakunnissa v. Mahommed Raza, A.I.R. 1924 All. 384. Where the property stood in the name of the vendor (ostensible owner) in the revenue records, and there was really nothing to put the purchaser on an inquiry, held that the purchaser need not have made any further inquiry as to the vendor's interest in the property—Mathura Prasad v. Anandi Kunwar, 21 A.L.J. 498, A.I.R. 1924 All. 63, 74 I.C. 911. One H and his sister R inherited the property of their mother, but the name of H alone was recorded in the revenue papers and he dealt with the whole of the property as his own. In 1896 he alone mortgaged the property, and afterwards redeemed the mortgage. R had not taken any exception to that mortgage. Twenty years afterwards, he again mortgaged the property to the same mortgagee who satisfied himself that H's name was still in the revenue papers as the recognised owner of the property. R then sued to annul the mortgage so far as her share of the property was concerned and to recover her share. Held that the mortgagee was protected by this section—Mulraj v. Fazal Imam, A.I.R. 1913 All. 583. Where under a registered anomalous mortgage the mortgagee is entitled to possession after a specified period, he can recover possession from the transferee of the mortgagor even if the mortgage is not entered in the revenue records—Hira Singh v. Afzal Khan, A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 59; see also Narayan v. Purushottam, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 144.

A mere inspection of the revenue records is not a sufficient inquiry, and the transferee who acts on an entry in the village record of rights as evidence of title of his transferor cannot be said to have acted in good faith within the meaning of this section—Sadiq Hussein v. Co-operative Central Bank, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 106; Har Narain v. Ashiq Husain, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 313. Where there are registered deeds of sale, it is not sufficient for a person merely to look at the revenue records—Dwarkan Das v. Rangi Lal, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 289 following the dissentient judgment of Mahajan J in Shamsher v. Mehr Chand, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 147 (F.B.). It may be that in certain circumstances an examination of the revenue records coupled with the fact of possession of the transferor would amount to a sufficient inquiry, but it does not dispense with the duty to make an inquiry in the Sub-Registrar's office which has been imposed upon every one taking a transfer of immoveable property, by Explanation (1) of sec. 3 ante—Khushalchand v. Trimbak, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 49.

If the title of the transferors is based upon prior transfers, and they have the custody of the title-deeds showing them as apparent purchasers of property, a transferee from them can rely upon those deeds, and will thereby be protected by this section. If, however, the title of the transferors was by inheritance from their father, it is incumbent on the transferee to use reasonable care in ascertaining whether the transferors were the only persons on whom the inheritance devolved or there were other co-heirs. If the transferors are Mahomedans, that fact ought to put the purchaser on inquiry as to whether there was a female heir in addition to the transferors—Md. Sujat v. Chandbi, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 41 (42). See also Ballu Mal v. Ram Kishen, 43 All. 263 cited in Note 188. In case of Mahomedans, the inspection of the Khewat alone is not sufficient; because in most cases coming from Mahomedan families the names of mother and sisters (who are also heirs of a deceased Mahomedan) are never entered in the Khewat. The purchaser must take further precautions and make a better inquiry into the title of the transferors—Rasulan v. Nand Lal, A.I.R. 1930 All. 521 (522).

190. Good faith:—The purchaser must not only show that he was a purchaser for value, he must also prove his good faith—Mulji v. Macleod, 5 Bom. L.R. 991. A transferee who is aware of the fact that the transferor could not be the real owner of the properties is not protected under this section—Mollaya v. Krishnaswami, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 95 (101); Gurbaksh Singh v. Nikka Singh, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1917. A mortgagee who lived in the same locality as the mortgagor and had been lending money to the mortgagor's family for a long time and was apparently acquainted with all the circumstances of the family, cannot claim to be a transferee for good faith without notice of the absence of title of the transferor—Pateshri v. Nageshar, 8 A.L.J. 358, 10 I.C. 961 (962); affirmed on appeal, A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 103. A purchaser who was intimately connected with the affairs of the transferor, for about 14 years, and who prepared the sale-deed with the assistance of persons who knew everything that ought to be known about the estate of the transferor and knew that the latter had no power of alienation cannot claim the benefit of the provisions of this section—Hanuman v. Abbas, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 193 (202). In the case of a transfer by the uncle to his nephew, the parties must be presumed to have known the real nature of the transaction; therefore the nephew cannot be considered to be a transferee without notice, under this section—Mengha Ram v. Makhna, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 416. A person who purchases property from another, knowing that with respect to it a suit had been filed by a third party against the vendor, cannot be said to have acted in good faith—Ragho v. Dwarka Das, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 738. But when the transferee, however minute his inquiries might have been, would not have found any reason to believe that the transferor was not fully empowered to make the transfer, and in fact no clue existed to suggest that a third person laid any claim to the property, it cannot be said that the transferee was not acting in good faith—Maung Po v. Bank of Chetland, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 139. If P purchases from T a property which has been in possession of D ever since the execution of the deed of sale in favour of T, it cannot be said that P has acted in good faith—Ramsaran Mahton v. Harihar Prasad, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 314. Where a person purchases without any enquiry from a Muslim co-owner on the latter's vague claim to possessory title and the true-owner of the share does not consent to the transfer expressly or impliedly, the transferee is not entitled to protection under this section—Haji Gulam Ahmed v. K. T. A. Basheer Ahmed, A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 399.

One S was the landlord of one R, the Mahant of a temple, and shown in the revenue records as the occupancy tenant. R released the occupancy right in favour of S who transferred the land to one T. T made no inquiries as to the title of S. All that he did was to rely on the word of S and R; so was not proved to have acted in good faith—Narshingdas v. Sohan Lal, A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 289. See in this connection Anjuman Islamia v. Latafat Ali, A.I.R. 1950 All. 109, (a case of waqf). See also Karamshi v. Ratanshi, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 55.

Where an ostensible owner transfers a property, to give a valid title to the purchaser as against the real owner, he must establish that he made reasonable inquiries, consideration and good faith alone are not sufficient, nor is an entry in the revenue papers sufficient—Khwaja Afzal v. Mohamed Saheb, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 214. A purchaser or a mortgagee cannot be said to have acted in good faith and with reasonable care simply because he entrusted the inquiry into title to a solicitor whom he trusted and only completed the transaction after he was told by his solicitor that everything was right—Purnendu v. Haunt Mull, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 565.

A finding of the absence of negligence is not the same thing as a finding of good faith—Hakeman v. Badrunnissa, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 658. A finding that the transferee did not act in good faith is a finding of fact and must be accepted in second appeal—Ambabai v. Dani, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 367. Whether a transferee took reasonable care to ascertain whether the transferor had power to make transfer is a mixed question of law and fact—Sarju Kairi v. Panchananda Sharma, A.I.R. 1959 Assam 15.

191. Extent of the interest transferred :—If the vendor professes to transfer and the purchaser in good faith purchases an absolute interest, he acquires absolute ownership, notwithstanding that his vendor had a lesser interest—Sethu Madhava v. Bacha Bibi, A.I.R. 1298 Mad. 778. But in an Allahabad case, the following opinion has been expressed by Niamatullah, J. :—“It is open to question whether, if the vendor possessed lesser interest than what he sold, the vendee's position would be better only because he was ignorant of the real state of his vendor's title. It is likewise open to question whether sec. 41, T. P. Act in terms applies to a case of this kind”—Sahodra v. Badri Prasad, A.I.R. 1929 All. 737 (789).

192. Burden of proof :—For the application of sec. 41 to a transfer the alienee must show in the first instance that the owner has held out some other person as the ostensible owner of the property. It is only then that the owner has to show that the alienee had some notice of his true title—Jadam Jampur Bai v. Janki Siddappa, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 237; Sunder Kuer v. Udey Ram, A.I.R. 1944 All. 42. Where one man allows another to hold himself out as the real owner of a land, and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner, the burden of proving that the third person had actual or constructive notice of the real title is on the person (the real owner) who so allowed the other to hold himself out as the real owner. The fact that the person so held out (i.e., the ostensible owner) was more than a mere benamidar and had a lien on the property for payments made by him does not make any difference in the principle of law above enunciated—Raja of Karvetnagar v. Saravana, 4 L.W. 200, 35 I.C. 893 (898) following Ram Coomar v. McQueen, 18 W.R. 166 (P.C.). It is not enough for the real owner to say that proper inquiry was not made by the transferee; it must be shown that there was something to call attention and invoke an inquiry; it must be shown that there were means of answering the inquiry; it must be shown what the inquiry would have revealed. If this onus is discharged by the real owner, then the burden will lie on the transferee to show that he took reasonable care within the meaning of this section—Rajani Kanto v. Bashiram, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 636 (638). The transferee must prove not only bona fide enquiry but also that the transferor was the ostensible owner with consent of real owner—A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 432.

Where a person has made a gift of land to another person and the latter transfers it to some other person for consideration, the burden lies on the person challenging the transfer to show that the transferee had notice, either actual or constructive, that he was repudiating the gift made by the donor to the transferor—M. P. A. K. Firm v. Ma Mya Then, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 184. A Hindu husband purchased certain property with his own money in the name of his wife who after his death alienated it. After the widow's death the reversioner put forth his claim to the property : held, the purchaser could invoke the provisions of this section to his aid, but the onus was on him to show that he was a purchaser in good faith without knowledge of the real state of affairs—Chapalabala v. Sanat Kumari, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 318 relying on Annada Mohan v. Nilphamari Loan Office, Ltd., 26 C.W.N. 436, 65 I.C. 245.

The transferee cannot be said to have discharged the onus by merely raking out the old records of the Municipality or that of the Police Department—Kartar Singh v. Mehr Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 885. Where the transferee does not go into the witness box and does not adduce any evidence to show that he obtained the transfer on the faith of the entry of the transferor's name in the Khewat, he cannot obtain protection of section 41—Amir Jahan v. Khadim, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 253.

The question whether sec. 41 applies to a given set of facts is not a question of fact, but a question of law—Sadiq Husein v. Co-operative Central Bank, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 106.

Pleading :—Where no case of estoppel under this section is set up in the written statement, the case should not be allowed to be put forward at the hearing—Lal Mohan v. Govind Sahu, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 620, 188 I.C. 417.

Distinction between this section and section 115, Evidence Act. See Chathar v. Kutti Sankaran Nair, (1957) 2 M.L.J. 603; Ramjanam v. Beyas, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 537.

42. Where a person transfers any immoveable property, reserving power to revoke the transfer, and subsequently transfers the property for consideration to another transferee, such transfer operates in favour of such transferee (subject to any condition attached to the exercise of the power) as a revocation of the former transfer to the extent of the power.

Transfer by person having authority to revoke former transfer.

Illustration.

A lets a house to B, and reserves power to revoke the lease if, in the opinion of a specified surveyor, B should make a use of it detrimental to its value. Afterwards A, thinking that such a use has been made, lets the house to C. This operates as a revocation of B's lease subject to the opinion of the surveyor as to B's use of the house having been detrimental to its value.

192A. Principle :—Where a person, who has made a voluntary gift or settlement of an estate, sells the same to another for value, the conveyance operates as a conveyance of the estate which the settlor had before the voluntary gift or settlement, the Statute 27 Elizabeth, c. 4 putting the settlement out of the way, so that it shall not affect the conveyance which is made to the purchaser. Words showing an intention on the part of the person who made the voluntary gift to convey to the purchaser all the interest or estate that he had are sufficient to avoid such gift—Judah v. Abdool, 22 W.R. 60.

43. Where a person fraudulently or erroneously represents that he is authorized to transfer certain immoveable property and professes to transfer such property for consideration, such transfer shall, at the option of the transferee, operate on any interest which the transferor may acquire in such property at any time during which the contract of transfer subsists.

Transfer by unauthorised person who subsequently acquires interest in property transferred.

Nothing in this section shall impair the right of transferees in good faith for consideration without notice of the existence of the said option.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu, who has separated from his father B, sells to C three fields, X, Y and Z, representing that A is authorized to transfer the same. Of these fields Z does not belong to A, it having been retained by B on the partition; but, on B's dying, A as heir, obtains Z. C, not having rescinded the contract of sale, may require A to deliver Z to him.

Amendment :—The words “fraudulently or” have been added by Sec. 13 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). See Note 196 below.

Analogous law :—This section may be compared with sec. 13 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963, which lays down :—“Where a person contracts to sell or let certain immovable property, having.....only an imperfect title, the purchaser or lessee....., has the following rights, namely :—(a) if the vendor or lessor has subsequently to the contract acquired any interest in the property, the purchaser or lessee may compel him to make good the contract out of such interest.....”

193. Principle—“Feeding the estoppel” :—In cases falling under this section, the estoppel rests on the representation made by a transferor that he is authorised to transfer, which representation subsequently turns out to be erroneous. But where the truth of the matter is known to both parties there can be no estoppel, as held in Mohori Bibi v. Dharmadas, 30 Cal. 539, 30 I.A. 114—Dwarka Prasad v. Nisar Ahmad, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 16 (18); Sitaram v. Tulsiram, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 241; Ganeshdas v. Kandabai, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 29; Deoman v. Atmaram, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 122. By the English law of estoppel which is referred to in the case of Rajapaksi v. Fernando, (1920) A.C. 892, “where a grantor has purported to grant an interest in land which he did not at the time possess but subsequently acquires, the benefit of his subsequent acquisition goes automatically to the earlier grantee or, as it is usually expressed, feeds the estoppel.” By this doctrine the estoppel is derived from the recitals of title contained in the conveyance, and it is these recitals and these only which the grantor has to make good, so that if he subsequently acquires the ownership of the property by some other title, the subsequently acquired interest does not feed the estoppel so as to make the original conveyance effective against a third party—Fernando v. Gunatilaka, (1921) 2 A.C. 357 (P.C.); see also Villa v. Petlay, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 51. If a man who has no title whatever to property grants it by conveyance which in form would carry the legal estate, and he subsequently acquires an interest sufficient to satisfy the grant, the estate instantly passes—Tilakdhari v. Khedan Lal, 48 Cal. 1 (P.C.). No party who has made a transfer to another is entitled to say that the transferee has no right to the property. This principle has been stretched so that where a person without owning a property purports to transfer it, he would be bound to make good the transfer if later he acquires that property. This principle is enunciated in sec. 43, Transfer of Property Act—Shyam Lal v. Sohan Lal, 50 All. 290, 25 A.L.J. 777, A.I.R. 1928 All. 3 (8), 106 I.C. 255.

The principle of this section is an extension of the doctrine of estoppel—Kali Sahu v. Girdhari, 50 I.C. 778 (Pat.). This section is based on the doctrine that subsequently acquired interest feeds the estoppel—Krishna Chandra v. Rasik Lal, 21 C.W.N. 218, 23 C.L.J. 501, 33 I.C. 568 (573). The conveyance of a non-existent property, though inoperative as a conveyance, is operative as an executory agreement which would attach to the property the moment it is acquired by the vendor—Rustom Ali v. Abdul Jabbar, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 535, 76 I.C. 499.

194. Scope :—On the principle of this section where a transferor subsequently acquires a lesser interest than he purported to transfer, e.g., merely a charge on the property, the covenants of the deed of transfer will also attach to this acquired interest—Mohan Singh v. Sewa Ram, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 209, 75 I.C. 579. The vendee is not required to make any inquiries in a case to which this section applies, and mere notice of encumbrance on the part of the vendee would not make the transaction of sale any the less a sale free from encumbrances, when the document says so—Madirazu v. Bommadēvara, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 107, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 478.

By virtue of sec. 2 (d), the rule enunciated in this section has no application to a case of compulsory sale, i.e., a sale in execution of a decree—Alukmonee v. Banee Madhub, 4 Cal. 677; Prasanna Kumar v. Sreekanta, 40 Cal. 173. Therefore, where the judgment-debtor had no transferable right on the date when the execution sale took place, but acquired such right after the sale, held that the auction-purchaser took nothing by the purchase—Purna Chandra v. Soudamini, 28 C.L.J. 283, 48 I.C. 335; Nanak v. Gandu, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 360, Puran Mal v. Shiva Lal, A.I.R. 1935 All. 234. See also Mangat Lal v. Ghasi Khan, A.I.R. 1929 All. 800.

This section did not apply to a case where the heir of the grantor of a khorphosh grant was free to exercise his predecessor's option to resume the grant—Choto Baheru v. Purna, 19 C.W.N. 1272.

The principle of this section does not apply to auction-sale as the judgment-debtor cannot be deemed to have guaranteed any title in himself when his property is sold in execution of a decree—Kamta Rai v. Nand

Kishore, A.I.R. 1952 All. 287. This section applies only when a party in possession of special knowledge makes an incorrect representation to the other party to the contract, whereby the latter is induced to enter into the contract and the person making the representation gets the benefit of it—Adhilakshmi v. Nallasivam, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 530.

The principle of this section applies to Hindu as well as Mahomedan conveyances—Krishna Chandra v. Rasik, 21 C.W.N. 218, 33 I.C. 568; Viraya v. Manumanta, 14 Mad. 459; Azizuddin v. Sheikh Budan, 18 Mad. 492. In an earlier case (Dooli Chand v. Brij Bhukun, 6 C.L.R. 528), however, the Privy Council refused to apply the doctrine of estoppel to conveyances of Hindus. But see this case commented on in Krishna v. Rasik, 21 C.W.N. 218, 33 I.C. 568 (573). A Hindu lending money on mortgage to a Hindu widow must be supposed to know the elementary principle of Hindu law that a Hindu widow gets a life estate in the property inherited by her from her husband, and such a transferee cannot, therefore, claim the benefit of this section—Jagernath v. Mt. Dhanpari, A.I.R. 1934 All. 969.

Minor:—This section can have no application to the case, where a minor has made a mortgage of his property during his minority and a suit is brought to enforce the mortgage against him after he has attained majority. The section is based on the principle of estoppel which cannot be pleaded against a statute (sec. 11, Contract Act), so as to prejudice a minor who enjoys the protection of the law (see Mohori Bibi v. Dharmadas, 30 Cal. 539, 30 I.A. 114)—Ajudhia Prasad v. Chandan Lal, A.I.R. 1937 All. 610, (F.B.).

'For consideration':—This section does not apply where the transferor transfers without consideration—Jagannath v. Dibbo, 31 All. 53. A gift of property in which a transferor has no interest will not be protected under this section if the transferor acquires title to the property after the gift. But if a reversioner who has given his consent to a gift made by a Hindu widow of a part of her husband's property cannot claim that property on the death of the widow though by being a party to the deed of gift he purports to be merely one of the donors. He cannot claim the property, not because of anything contained in section 43 but because his action amounts to an actual election to hold the deed good—Ganga Bakhsh Singh v. Madho Singh, A.I.R. 1955 All. 288 (F.B.).

The transferee can repudiate the contract or may elect to ask for damages under the general law. The relief provided in the first para of this section is additional and it enables him to get at the property itself provided the contract subsists on that date—Ganeshdas v. Kamlabai, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 29. This section creates two equities. The first equity is between the transferor and his privies on the one hand and the transferee on the other hand. The other equity is in favour of a bona fide purchaser for consideration without notice of the equity in favour of the first transferee. If there is no subsisting equity in favour of the first transferee in the shape of the option mentioned in the first para., resort to the second para. becomes unnecessary—ibid. The subsequent transferee must be deemed to have notice of the option, if he had knowledge of the previous transaction—Girija v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1952 All. 301.

Any interest which the transferor may acquire:—This section applies if the transferor subsequently acquires any interest in the property sold. If, as a matter of fact, the property never subsequently comes into the hands of the transferor, this section cannot apply—Ramakrishna v. Anasuyabai, 26 Bom. L.R. 173, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 300, 86 I.C. 265.

195. Sections 41 and 43 compared:—Section 43 protects a purchaser for value without notice, and there is no such provision in it as is found in section 41, requiring the transferee to take reasonable care to ascertain the power of his transferor to give a clear title—Maung Ba v. Maung Po, 14 Bur.L.R. 329 ; Ganga Prasad v. Mt. Raghubansa, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 127, 165 I.C. 793. Under sec. 43, the transferee's mere belief in an acting upon a representation made by the transferor may be sufficient to pass the subsequently acquired interest, while under sec. 41 mere belief is not sufficient—Pandari Bangaram v. Karumooray Subba Raju, 34 Mad. 159 (160), 8 I.C. 388 ; B. V. Sundariah v. B. R. Ramasastry, A.I.R. 1955 Mys. 8.

195A. Section 43, T. P. Act and section 115, Evidence Act compared:—The vital difference between the representation referred to in sec. 43 T. P. Act and the representation mentioned in sec. 115, Evidence Act is that while the representation under sec. 43, T. P. Act, is a term of the contract or the transfer, the same is not necessarily so in the case of representation mentioned in sec. 115, Evidence Act.—Parmanand v. Champa Lal, A.I.R. 1956 All. 225 (F.B.).

196. Fraudulent or erroneous representation:—The old section spoke of erroneous representation only, and no mention was made of fraudulent representation. Under the present section, the representation may be either fraudulent or erroneous.

A representation is not required to be in any particular form. It can be by word of mouth or by document. A statement in a sale deed that the vendor has not transferred the property to anybody in any manner whatsoever nor has anybody any rights, interest or share therein, is quite enough to show that there was a fraudulent representation, when in fact the vendor had sold it already to a third party—Ganeshdas v. Kamtabai, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 29. Where a person transfers property representing that he has a present interest therein, whereas he has, in fact, only a spes successionis the transferee is entitled to the benefit of sec. 43 if he has taken the transfer on the faith of the representation and for consideration—Jumma Masjid, Mercara v. Kodimaniandra Deviah, A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 847.

It is not necessary that the erroneous representation must mislead the transferee. The conduct of the transferor alone is to be considered—Jainur Ali v. Chafina Bibi, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 20, I.L.R. (1950) 2 Ass. 1, per Ram Labaya J. Transferor need not be aware of the erroneousness of the representation made by him—Jagat Narain v. Laljee, A.I.R. 1965 All 504.

In order that sec. 43 can apply it is necessary that there should be misrepresentation, fraudulent or erroneous, about the right to transfer the property—Madirazan v. Bommadevara, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 107. Where the surrender by a Hindu widow in favour of the presumptive reversioners was found invalid as a surrender, but good as an alienation, and there was no erroneous representation by the reversioners to the transferees who were cognizant of the fact if not of law, this section did not apply. In such a case sec. 6, cl. (a) would not bar the operation of sec. 43, if it was otherwise applicable—Ram Bharosey v. Bhagwandin, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 196. See also Madirazan v. Bommadevara, supra.

Where a transaction is void ab initio, e.g., a mortgage in Oudh by the manager of a Hindu joint family without legal necessity and not in lieu of antecedent debts and where the possibility of such deed being liable to be assailed is clearly indicated in the deed itself, the transferee cannot say that there was fraudulent or erroneous representation on the part of the transferor and the principle of this section does not therefore apply to such a case—Bijleshari v. Gajadhar, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 123, see also Jaganath v. Mt. Dhanapati, A.I.R. 1934 All. 969 ; Shambhoo v. Dhanèshar, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 177.

It is not required that the representation should be erroneous and also fraudulent, for fraud is not a necessary ingredient of the law of estoppel. It is sufficient if the representation be simply erroneous—Bhagwati v. Chaoli, 55 I.C. 698 (Lah.). It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act or omission has induced another to act, should have been fraudulent. The main question is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation—Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 20 Cal. 296 (310) (P.C.). Erroneous representation includes all misrepresentation whether tainted or untainted with fraud—Radheylal v. Mahèsh Prasad, 7 All. 864 ; Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 20 Cal. 296 (P.C.) (overruling Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh, 2 All. 809 and Vishnu v. Krishnan, 7 Mad. 3 ; Cairncross v. Lorimer, L.R. 2 H.L. 829 ; Pickard v. Sears, 6 A. & E. 469 ; Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 654.

If the representation is neither fraudulent nor erroneous, this section has no application—Nurul Hosein v. Sheo Sahai, 20 Cal. 1 (7) (P.C.).

Whether the representation was erroneous or not is a question of fact—Saradamoyi v. Atul Chandra, 68 I.C. 203 (Cal.).

Where no representation is made, there is no room for the operation of this section—Krishna Pramada v. Dhirendra, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 50.

Under this section, mere erroneous representation will suffice, and the representation need not be intentionally false—Hattikudur Narain v. Andar Sayad Abbas, 28 M.L.J. 44, 27 I.C. 785 (786).

The transferee is entitled to the benefit of this section, if he believed in the representation made by the vendor, and was not aware of the true interest of the vendor with reference to the property—Sundar Lal v. Ghissa, 1929 A.L.J. 1087, A.I.R. 1929 All. 589 (591), 118 I.C. 705. The benefit of this section cannot be claimed by the transferee if he did not believe in or act upon the representation made by the transferor but was aware of the true interest of the transferor—Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju, 34 Mad. 159 (260) ; Mulraj v. Indar, 48 All. 150, 92 I.C. 471, A.I.R. 1026 All. 102. Thus, where A, who was entitled only to one-third of the family property, mortgaged one-half of the property to C, who knew that A was entitled only to one-third and did not bargain and pay for half a share, and subsequently after the death of A's father, A became entitled to a half share held that C could enforce his mortgage only against the one-third share—Pandiri v. Karumoory, 34 Mad. 159. Although this section says nothing about the belief of the transferee in the erroneous representation, still a transferee desiring to take advantage of this section should allege and prove that he took the transfer in good faith believing in and being misled by the erroneous representation made by the transferor—Hattikudur Narain v. Andar Sayad Abbas, 28 M.L.J. 44, 27 I.C. 785 (788) (following 34 Mad. 159); Krishnamachariar v. Thiruvengkatachariar, 12 L.W. 149, 59 I.C. 275 (276); Ladu Narain v. Goberdhan, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 470. The case of 34 Mad. 159 has also been followed in Kodi Sankara v. Moiden, 35 M.L.J. 120, 49 I.C. 147; Venkata Lakshmi Narasayya v. Meenakshi, 10 L.W. 221, 52 I.C. 992; and Chakrapani v. Gayamani, 48 I.C. 228 (Pat.). A mortgagee of a Deshgat Vatan knew that the property mortgaged to him was the life-interest of the mortgagor in his hereditary office. Subsequent to the mortgage the mortgagor became entitled to an enlarged estate. Held that as the mortgagee knew at the time of the transaction that the land was inalienable beyond the life-time of the mortgagor, its subsequent enlargement enabling the Vatarand to alienate it permanently would not enlarge the mortgagee's interest so as to enure beyond the mortgagor's life-time—Gangabai v. Baswant, 34 Bom. 175 (182). But the Oudh Court has dissented from this view and holds that there is nothing in this section to the effect that it is necessary for the transferee to show that he believed in and acted upon the representation made by the transferor—Jag Mohun v. Sita Ram, 20 O.C. 72, 39 I.C. 186 (188) (dissenting from 34 Mad. 159). A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held as follows in 1956 : "S. 43, T. P. Act, does not require that the transferee who can take advantage of it should be one to whom not only a fraudulent or erroneous representation about the transferor's authority to transfer the property is made but should also be one who did not have knowledge of the true factual position and had merely acted on the belief of the erroneous or fraudulent representation made to him by the transferor. If, however, both the transferor and transferee knew of the true position, and colluded to enter into a transaction which is invalid in law, the state of knowledge of the transferee becomes material and S. 43 cannot be availed of by him."—Parma Nand v. Champa Lal, A.I.R. 1956 All. 225 (F.B.). The Andhra High Court has followed this decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Vutla Veeraswami v. Ivaturi Durga Venkata Subbarao, 1956 Andhra W.R. 1115.

If the truth is known to both parties, no question of estoppel can arise. Thus, where there being no legal necessity a mother contracted to sell immoveable property belonging to her infant son, not in her personal capacity but as the mother and guardian of the latter, and subsequently on the infant's death inherited the property, held that there could be no decree against her for specific performance of the contract for sale—Rashmoni v. Surya Kanta, 32 Cal. 382. See also Bhagwan v. Md. Yunus, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 112. Where a Hindu reversioner transfers his reversionary interest expectant on the death of a Hindu widow, and the present interest of the reversioner (which is a non-entity till the widow's death) is known to both parties, there cannot be said to have been an erroneous representation, and this section is inapplicable—Jagannath v. Dibbo, 31 All. 53. The transfer is also void under sec. 6.

If the transferee was quite sure that his transferor was fully entitled to the estate as absolute owner under the documents and he believes it to be true and acts upon it, he is entitled to protection even though if he had been more careful he might have found out that that was not a true representation—Gopi Nath v. Rup Ram, A.I.R. 1930 All. 786 (790).

Where a Mahomedan husband makes his wife accept certain property in lieu of dower on the understanding that his father has permitted him to transfer it and the wife is not aware that the property does not belong to her husband, the wife is under this section entitled to enforce her claim against her husband when on the death of his father he becomes the owner—Mt. Umatul v. Mangal Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 103. See also Jumma Masjid, Mercara v. Kodimaniandra Deviah, A.I.R. 1925 S.C. 847.

For the application of this section it is not essential that there should be a clear finding that the transferee has believed in and acted upon the erroneous representation—Waliuddin v. Ram Rakhan, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 313, 162 I.C. 451.

197. Application of the rule to sale :—Where a person having a partial interest in certain property transfers a larger interest and subsequently acquires that interest, this section applies and the transferee is entitled to the interest so acquired—Abdul Kabir v. Jamela Khatoon, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 315 ; Jan Mohammad v. Karm Chand, A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 99 ; Shiv Baran v. State of U.P. 1968 All. W.R. (H.C.) 301. A, holding a certain mahal as a ghatwal, mortgaged it to B by way of a Zuripeshgi lease for twenty-one years. Shortly after the granting of the lease, the Zamindar got a decree against A, by which A's ghatwali right was extinguished. In execution of that decree, the Zamindar ousted A and took khas possession of the mahal. Some years afterwards, the Zamindar granted to A, a perpetual mokarari lease of the same mahal. Held that A must, out of his present estate in the mahal, make good the Zuripeshgi—Loot Narain v. Showkee Lal, 2 C.L.R. 382. Where a person, who had merely a ghatwali interest in certain land, mortgaged it on the representation that it was his jagir, and he subsequently got a mokarari title to it, held that on a decree for sale upon the mortgage, the mokarari interest of the mortgagor passed to the mortgagee—Mokhada v. Umesh Chandra, 7 C.L.J. 381. A Hindu father of a joint family consisting of himself and two minor sons, sold the entire property, representing that it was his self-acquired property. The purchaser sued for possession, and during the pendency of the suit one of the minor sons died. It was found that the sale was not binding on the sons. Held that this section applied, and the purchaser was entitled to a half-share of the property, although at the date of the sale he was entitled to the father's share which was at that time one-third—Muthuswami v. Sandana, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 649. K sold the property of his brother D, who had disappeared for some time before the sale, under the representation that K was the owner of the property. Then D died leaving K his sole heir. Held that the purchaser was entitled to the aid of this section—Sunder Lal v. Ghissa, A.I.R. 1929 All. 589 (591). Where at the time of the sale the vendors had no under-proprietary right, but subsequently they acquired an under-proprietary right, and it was found that the vendors had at the time of sale erroneously but honestly represented that they had authority to transfer the holding, held that this section applied, and the under-proprietary right passed to the purchaser—Balbhadar v. Kusehar, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 344 (346). The plaintiff purchased the undivided share of A whose family consisted of A, B and C, and A's share at the time of sale was therefore one-third of the property. Subsequently, by the death of B pending the suit A's share became one-half. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a moiety of the property—Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 Mad. 459. A vendee purchased specific lands from a coparcener of an undivided Hindu family, but in consequence of a partition suit in the family the vendor (coparcener) was allotted lands other than those which he had sold to the vendee. Held that the vendee was entitled to whatever was substituted by the decree for partition for the land which he had bought from the coparcener—Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 Mad. 684; Sabapathi v. Thandavaroya, 43 Mad. 309; Dhandha Sahib v. Md. Sultan, 44 Mad. 167 (168); Ram Piari v. Ram Nath, A.I.R. 1963 All 599. A piece of land was allotted to S under the Punjab Government Tenants Act. S induced his brother J to come and help him to reclaim the land, and promised to give J one-half of whatever he might obtain. J came to his brother S and settled in the land and shared all the expenses and labour of reclaiming the soil. Subsequently, the Government conferred proprietary rights on S. Thereupon J claimed half share of the land. Held that J's claim should be allowed—Nathu v. Allah Ditta, A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 287. Where a partner in a firm sells the property of the firm in his own right and not on behalf of the other partners or the firm and subsequently after dissolution of the partnership the same property is allotted to him, the case falls within the purview of this section and the vendee's title remains intact—Peyare Lal v. Mt. Misri, A.I.R. 1940 All. 453.

Sale by Official Receiver:—A sale by the official receiver is void when no vesting order has been passed, but the subsequent vesting order makes the previous sale valid—Muthia v. Doraiswami, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1091; Basava v. Narasimhulu, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1 (F.B.); Sankaran v. Narasimhulu, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1, (affirming 47 M.L.J. 749).

Exchange:—This section applies to exchanges. Thus, A obtained a certain property from B in exchange. B at the time of the exchange had only a half share in that property, but he subsequently purchased the other half. Held that as soon as the title of B to the whole property was perfected, the benefit thereof accrued to A—Bhairab v. Jiban, 33 C.L.J. 184, 60 I.C. 819.

198. Rule applicable to mortgages:—The section applies to mortgages. Thus, it has been held that any enlargement of the mortgagor's interest in the mortgaged premises usually enures for the benefit of the mortgagee—Behari Lal v. Indra Narayan, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 665 (668); Zollikofar & Co. v. Official Assignee A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 100; Beni v. Natabar, 33 I.C. 975. Therefore it is open to a mortgagee to enforce his charge on any interest which his mortgagor might subsequently acquire in the property which the latter had professed to mortgage, notwithstanding that he had no right in it at the time of such mortgage—Kamala Prasad v. Nathuni Narayan, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 347 (348); Babu Lal v. Nur Mahammad, A.I.R. 1934 All. 731; Abdul Ahad v. Brij Narain, A.I.R. 1935 All. 269, Hemamoyee v. Akbar Ali, 41 C.W.N. 1125. But where a mortgage deed conveys some property not then owned by the mortgagor and known as such to the mortgagee, but both of them had reason to believe that such property would shortly be owned by the mortgagor and he actually owns it subsequently, sec. 43 does not apply and the transaction qua such property does not amount to a mortgage, but creates a charge on the property subsequently acquired—Kabul Chand v. Badri Das, A.I.R. 1938 All. 22, where an undertenure holder mortgages the undertenure after it has been purchased by the tenure holder at a certificate sale and the undertenure is subsequently released, on such release the undertenure cannot be burdened with the mortgage—Baidyanath Rai v. Sm. Jay Kumari, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 706.

Where a person with a defective title purports and intends to mortgage a property, any interest subsequently acquired by him in that property is available in equity to make the mortgage effectual, even though the defect in the title was apparent on the face of the document—Bhagwati v. Chaoli, 55 I.C. 698 (Lah.). Where a person, who had a proprietary interest in another share of the property during the life-time of his brother's widow, mortgaged the whole property under the representation that he was authorised to mortgage the latter share also, and after the death of the widow, became the owner of that share, held that the mortgage operated on that share under the provisions of this section—Sarju Prasad v. Bindeshari, 33 All. 382 (384). Where on the death of the deceased his daughter became the sole life holder of his estate and the grandsons of the deceased, fraudulently representing that they were in possession of the estate and were entitled to mortgage the same, mortgaged it to a certain person, and the daughter brought a suit for setting aside the sale held in execution of the mortgage decree, but died during pendency of the suit and the mortgagors succeeded to the estate, it was held that the mortgage and sale to the extent of their share were good under this section—Ram Japan v. Mt. Jagesara, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 116. Where at the date of a mortgage, the mortgagor had only a non-transferable interest in the property mortgaged, but subsequently acquired transferable interest in it and sold a portion of the mortgaged property to a third party, held that the mortgage operated as a valid charge in favour of the mortgagee on the whole property including the portion sold to the third party—Surendra v. Rajendra, 27 C.L.J. 289, 43 I.C. 740. See also Kumcar Bahadur v. Gilsher Khan, A.I.R. 1937 All. 287. An undischarged insolvent is not "authorised to transfer" any property; consequently a mortgage executed by him is voidable at the option of the Receiver or the Court; but when the property reverts in him after discharge, the mortgage can be enforced against him by the mortgagee by sale of the property—Rup Narain v. Har Gopal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 449 (451). Where, after a mortgage, a portion of the mortgaged property was sold by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and such property was resold by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, the mortgagee would have an equitable right to proceed against the whole property, including the portion sold to him and resold by him to the mortgagor. So long as the mortgagor had a less extent in his possession, the security was reduced to that extent; but when he subsequently became entitled to the full extent to which he had contracted to give the mortgage, the mortgagee became entitled to proceed against the security to such extent—Deoli Chand v. Nirban Singh, 5 Cal. 253. The whole of a certain house was mortgaged, the mortgagor having at the time an interest in only a fractional share in it. The mortgagee sued, and obtained a decree for the sale of the whole house. After that decree was passed and partially executed, the mortgagor, in virtue of a partition, acquired the remaining interest in the house. Held that this section applied and that the decree-holder was competent to continue execution of his decree against the mortgagor's after-acquired interest—Durga Das v. Muhammad, 1908 A.W.N. 155. A Mahomedan first transferred his property as dower to his wife. He then mortgaged it by way of conditional sale which was subsequently foreclosed. The wife died one year afterwards and the Mahomedan succeeded to the property as heir to his wife. It was held that sec. 43 applied to the case and that the mortgagee was entitled to the property—Sinclair v. Sitab Khan, 3 C.P.L.R. 72. Where the plaintiff in a pre-emptive suit, in order to procure funds for the prosecution of his suit, executed a mortgage comprising certain lands of which he was owner and also the property which was the subject-matter of the suit for pre-emption, and the suit was successful, it was held that the mortgage took effect as regards the property which was the subject of the pre-emption suit, from the time when the plaintiff-mortgagor obtained possession by virtue of his decree in the suit—Gayadin v. Kashi Gir, 29 All. 163; Bansidhar v. Sant Lal, 10 All. 133. Where a person representing himself to be the absolute owner of certain property (to which at that time he had a chance of succeeding) mortgaged it, and subsequently acquired a title to such property by inheritance, held that the mortgage was enforceable against the mortgagor. Such a transfer was not a transfer of spes successionis forbidden by section 6, because what was purported to be transferred was an estate in praesenti and not a mere chance of succession—Alamanaya Kunigari v. Murukuti, 29 M.L.J. 733, 29 I.C. 439 (441). See Note 202, infra. A Hindu woman executed a mortgage 5 years after the disappearance of her husband, and subsequently he was deemed as dead (after the lapse of 7 years—see sec. 108, Evidence Act) at the date of the suit brought on the mortgage. Held that the mortgage was a valid mortgage at the date of suit by operation of this section, although it was not so when it was executed—Mahadeo v. Har Bukhsh, 4 O.W.N. 1077, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 13 (14), 106 I.C. 489. Where a husband executed a mortgage on behalf of his wife under a power of attorney given to him by his wife, but the power of attorney was invalid, and afterwards the husband succeeded to a one-fourth share of the property of his wife on her death, held that the power of attorney being invalid the mortgagee could not proceed against the property of the wife. but under sec. 43 T. P. Act he could enforce his mortgage against the one-fourth share which came into the possession of the husband—Aisha Bibi v. Mahfuzummissa Bibi, 46 All. 310 (315), 22 A.L.J. 205, 78 I.C. 180, A.I.R. 1924 All. 362. The actual decision in this case is correct, but quaere, whether sec. 43 is applicable, there being no erroneous representation in the case. If C mortgages his house to B during the pendency of a suit on a promissory note by A against C and during the subsistence of an attachment before judgment of the house and there is a settlement between B and C that B shall give half share of the house to A free from the mortgage, the purchaser of the house in execution of the mortgage decree obtained by B is bound by the settlement—Devathi Subbarayudu v. Puvvadi Chinna, A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 592.

Where on the death of a person a share of his estate devolves on an undischarged insolvent, a mortgage of that share by the latter is invalid; but when after his discharge the property re-vests in him the principle of this section applies and the mortgagee would be entitled to enforce the mortgage—Diwan Chand v. Manak Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 809, 36 P.L.R. 185; Rup Narain v. Har Gopal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 449, 55 All. 503, 143 I.C. 836. If a person entitled to $\frac{1}{3}$ share mortgages $\frac{2}{3}$ share but becomes entitled to the additional $\frac{1}{3}$ after the mortgage decree but before the sale of the mortgaged property, the auction purchaser is entitled to $\frac{2}{3}$ share both under sec. 115 Evidence Act as well as under this section—Arulayi Nadache v. Jagadeesiah Nadar, A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 122.

Where the undivided share of one co-sharer was mortgaged and by subsequent partition the mortgaged property was allotted to another co-sharer, and there was a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, and the partition was effected after the mortgage-decree but before actual sale, the mortgaged share could not be sold under the decree as it had ceased to be the property of the mortgagor and had been allotted to another—Bhup Singh v. Chedda Singh, 42 All. 596 (599); also Hem Chunder v. Thakomoni, 20 Cal. 533; Amolak v. Chandan, 24 All. 483; Pullamma v. Pradosham, 18 Mad. 316; Lakshman v. Gopal, 23 Bom. 385. See also Note 392 under sec. 65. A mortgage by a manager of a Mitakshara family of the whole or a share of the joint family property is void and inoperative and gives the mortgagee no right even against the mortgagor's undivided share. But where the mortgagor's interest has subsequently been separated from that of the other members of the family by partition, his share may become available as security for the mortgage-debt—Amar Dayal v. Har Prasad, 5 P.L.J. 605, 58 I.C. 72; Ram Ratan v. Ganga, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 265 (270).

Charge :—The rule of English law as stated in Holroyd v. Marshall, (1861) 10 H.L.C. 191 and Collyer v. Isaacs, (1881) 19 Ch. D. 342 applies to India. Hence a charge on future property operates upon such property as soon as it comes into existence—Fatechand v. Parashram, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 101. But if any money is paid as earnest for the purchase of a property not belonging to the vendor, the vendee cannot claim any charge on the said property for the return of the earnest after the subsequent acquisition of ownership by the vendor—Panchanan Pal v. Nirode Kumar Biswas, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 12.

199. Rule applicable to leases :—The rule in this section applies also to leases; Hatti Kudur v. Andar, 28 M.L.J. 44, 27 I.C. 785. Therefore where a lessor, who, at the time he granted the (Zuripeshgi) lease, had an infirm title subsequently got into possession by a valid title, he could be compelled to carry out the contract, having attained a position in which he became able to do the same—Lootnarain v. Showkee Lal, 2 C.L.R. 382.

If a person erroneously representing himself as authorised to grant a lease of property grants a lease and subsequently acquires the property, the lessee is entitled to have that property—Protab Chandra v. Judisthir, 19 C.W.N. 143, 23 I.C. 69. Thus, where the gaontia of a village granted a lease of bhogra land which purported to be permanent and heritable, and the gaontia was subsequently declared to have proprietary rights in that village, held that this section applied so as to create in the lessee a permanent transferable interest, and the descendants of the lessor were not entitled to eject the lessees—Aditya Prasad v. Paramananda, 4 P.L.J. 505 (510), 53 I.C. 96. A, B and C were owners of certain property in equal shares. A and C granted a lease of the entire property to E as if B had no interest therein and they themselves were entitled to it to his exclusion. Subsequently B died, making a will under which he left one half of his one-third share to A and the other half to C. Held that the provision of this section applied, and the share of B, when it vested in A and C, became available to perfect their title and consequently the title of E in the entire property—Sulin Mohan v. Raj Krishna, 25 C.W.N. 420 (422), 60 I.C. 826 (828), 33 C.L.J. 193.

A son granted a permanent tenure at a fixed rate even though his father was alive and undertook not to disturb the grant after his father's death. After his father's death, the son brought a suit for enhancement of rent; held that under this section the son was bound by his representation and that the mention of his father was mere emphasis that the former had implied authority to make the grant—Jyoti Prasad v. Chandra Kanta, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 469.

200. "Time during which the contract subsists." :—The option of the transferee can be exercised in respect of an interest acquired by him, only during the time the contract subsists, but not afterwards. If, in case of a sale, the purchaser has repudiated the transaction and recovered the purchase money, or in case of a mortgage, the mortgaged properties have been sold in execution of the mortgage-decree (Jadu Bans v. Sheojit, 10 I.C. 443), the relation of transferor and transferee has ceased to exist, and the contract is no longer subsisting. In such a case no claim in respect of property acquired subsequent to the cessation of the contract can be made by the transferee.

The contract can be said to subsist so long as the decree obtained in a suit to enforce a transfer has not been fully satisfied, and until then the transferee is entitled to claim the benefit of any subsequent acquisition of interest in the property by the transferor. The words "at any time during which the contract subsists" are wide enough to cover a case in which the contract (e.g., mortgage) has merged in a decree; the contract must be held to subsist all the same, till the mortgage is satisfied. Therefore, where the interest of the mortgagor came to be enlarged after the date of the decree on the mortgage, and before the decree was satisfied, held that the contract had not ceased to subsist, and the mortgagee was entitled to have the added interest sold—Azizuddin v. Sheikh Budan, 18 Mad. 492 (495).

The option of the transferee must be enforced immediately on the acquisition of the transferable interest by the transferor—Surendra v

Rajendra, 27 C.L.J. 289, 43 I.C. 740. It is enough if the transferee exercises his option to take the subsequent interest; the consent of the transferor is not necessary; no further conveyance is necessary—Ramaswamy v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1962 Ker. 313 (F.B.).

201. Liability, when attaches and to whom :—The liability imposed by this section on the transferor is not a mere personal liability but is one which can be enforced against all persons claiming under the transferor otherwise than for value without notice—Chota Bahira v. Purna Chunder, 19 C.W.N. 1272, 21 C.L.J. 144, 27 I.C. 982 (1987); Radhey Lal v. Mohesh, 7 All. 864. This section applies not only as between the original transferor and the original transferee but also binds the privies of the original transferor and can be taken advantage of by the privies of the original transferee. Unless a statute expressly or by necessary implication precludes the application of provisions of law awarding to or imposing civil liabilities on the privies of the person to whom the rights are given or in whom the liabilities are imposed, the privies are entitled or bound as the case may be to the extent to which the original parties are so entitled or bound—Hatti Kudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas, 28 M.L.J. 44, 27 I.C. 785 (1986). The right of the transferee to the after-acquired interest may also be enforced against the gratuitous transferees—Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 20 Cal. 296 (P.C.).

202. Transfers forbidden by law :—The Court cannot, under the guise of sec. 43, uphold a transfer of property, the transfer of which is forbidden by law—Balbhaddar v. Kusehar, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 344 (347); Kusehar v. Balbhaddar, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 153 (154); Sadhu Saran v. Sheo Prasad, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 278. This section does not apply where there is a statutory prohibition to transfer the property on grounds of public policy. In such a case the principle of this section cannot be invoked to compel a person to transfer the property in fraud of the statute. Thus, the interest of a Hindu reversioner is an interest expectant on the death of a qualified owner; it is not a vested interest, but a spes successionis or a mere chance of succession, and as such inalienable under sec. 6 (a) of this Act. If, therefore, a reversioner conveys such interest and afterwards acquires the property on the death of the qualified owner, this section will not operate to give effect to the transfer—Annada Mohan v. Gour Mohan, 48 Cal. 536 (545, 551), on appeal 50 Cal. 929, 50 I.A. 239. Section 43 should not be so construed as to nullify section 6 (a) by validating a transfer initially void under sec. 6 (a)—Ramasami v. Ramasami, 30 Mad. 255 (262); Official Assignee v. Sampath, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 795 (797); Dwarka v. Nasir Ahmad, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 16 (18); Bindeshwari v. Har Narain, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 185 (187). In Official Assignee v. Sampath, supra, it was further observed that the illustration to sec. 43 is repugnant to the provisions of sec. 6 (a). But a distinction should be drawn between (1) a transfer which is professedly one of a mere right, i.e., a transaction which on the face of it purports to transfer a right of reversion or of expectancy, and (2) a transfer of a specific property which the transferor erroneously represents he is authorised to transfer though he may for the time being have merely a reversionary right therein. Transfers of the former class would obviously fall within the purview of sec. 6 (a) and would be void ab initio, while those of the latter class would be governed by sec. 43. Unless this distinction is recognized, sec. 43 and its illustrations would be valueless—Syed Bismilla v. Manulal, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 51 (52). See also Bansidhar v. Ajudhia, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 120 (124). Reviewing the above authorities a very recent Full Bench of the Madras Court has held that where the transferor in fact purports to transfer an expectancy or property, which he had no right to transfer, without making any representation that he had authority to transfer, sec. 43 will not help. Similarly, if both the transferor and transferee knew the truth, the section cannot be invoked by the transferee. The section proceeds on the fundamental assumption that the erroneous or fraudulent representation induced the transferee to part with the consideration without knowing the true facts. A transfer which was made on an erroneous representation may in fact and in effect be transfer of expectancy which is prohibited by statute. That does not prevent the section from operating. It is not concerned with the ultimate effect of the transfer when it was made. It is concerned only with the erroneous representation by the transferor of his authority to transfer when in fact he had none. If it was the intention of the legislature that in all cases of transfer, whether the transfer was made disclosing the true facts or was made with an erroneous representation regarding the authority, no effect should be given to the transfer where the transfer is prohibited under cl. (a) of sec. 6, it would have stated so and created an exception to sec. 43. On the other hand the illustration to the section indicates a contrary intention. Where therefore the transferee from a reversioner was not aware of the truth at the time of the transfer that which was being transferred was only a spes successionis, sec. 43 would apply—Jumma Majid Mercara v. Devaiah, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 637 (F.B.) overruling—Official Assignee v. Sampath, supra.

Section 43 applies even to cases of heirs who profess to transfer the property itself and not only their right of succession. It is impossible to hold that the illustration to sec. 43 is repugnant to the provisions of sec. 6 and is really wrong. Where an erroneous representation is made by the transferor to the transferee that he is the full owner of the property transferred and is authorized to transfer it and the property transferred is not a mere chance of succession, but immoveable property itself, and the transferee acts upon such erroneous representation then, if the transferor happens later, before the contract of transfer comes to an end, to acquire an interest in that property, no matter whether by private purchase, gift, legacy or by inheritance or otherwise, the previous transfer can at the option of the transferee operate on the interest which has been subsequently acquired, although it did not exist at the time of the transfer. The illustration to sec. 43 is directly applicable to such a case—Shyam Narain v. Mangal Prasad, A.I.R. 1935 All. 244, (Sulaiman, C. J. & Rachhpal Singh, J.) followed by the Bombay High Court in Vittabai v. Malhar Shankar, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 228. See also Vellayammal v. Palaneyandi, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 856; Jagat Narain v. Laljee, A.I.R. 1965 All. 504.

A contract which is void ab initio cannot be validated by the provisions of this section. If the contract purports to transfer property which is inalienable according to law, that contract cannot be given effect to with respect to another property which the transferor may subsequently acquire—Mohan Singh v. Sewa Ram, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh-209 (216). A disqualified proprietor under the Jhansi Encumbered Estates Act (who is incompetent to transfer any property as long as the 'disqualification' lasts) mortgaged his property when his disqualification had not ceased. After the disqualification had ceased, the mortgagee brought a suit for foreclosure relying on the provisions of this section. Held that such a mortgage being forbidden by the provisions of the law, this section could not protect a transfer which if permitted would defeat the provisions of the Jhansi Encumbered Estates Act—Radha Bai v. Kamod Singh, 30 All 38. Similarly, a purchaser of inam land from the holder of a service inam who was prohibited by sec. 5 of Madras Act VI of 1895 from alienating the property, cannot claim a valid title to it on the ground that it was subsequently enfranchised and a patta for the land was granted to the alienor—Narahari v. Siva Korithan, 24 M.L.J. 462, 19 I.C. 881. A mortgage of village service inam lands in a proprietary estate is invalid and inoperative under the Madras Village Service Act (II of 1894) and a subsequent notification of enfranchisement under sec. 17 of that Act would not enure for the benefit of the transferee. No equities can arise out of a transaction which is prohibited by law, and section 43 of the T. P. Act has no application to such a case—Sannamma v. Radhabhaiji, 41 Mad. 418 (F.B.); Batchu Ramayya v. Dara Satchi, 25 M.L.J. 635, 21 I.C. 600; Gopala Dasu v. Rami, 44 Mad. 946 (948); Ramayya v. Jagannadham, 39 Mad. 930. A judgment-debtor to whom sec. 325A, C. P. Code, 1882 (Sch. III, para. 11 of the Code of 1908) applies is a person 'disqualified' within the meaning of section 11 of the Contract Act, to the extent stated in sec. 325A, and any transaction entered into by him in contravention of that section is a nullity, incapable of subsequent ratification or of enforcement in equity, and sec. 43, T. P. Act has no application—Sahu Bai v. Bajat Khan, 13 N.L.R. 130, 42 I.C. 200. [Contra—Magniram v. Bakubai, 36 Bom. 510. In this case it was held that after the disability has been removed by the Code, the judgment-debtor is bound to make good the conveyance which he had made during his disability.]

There is no statutory prohibition against the sale of property by an insolvent after insolvency proceedings have been initiated. As far as the parties to the transaction are concerned, they are binding on them—Peraya v. Kondayya, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 430.

203. Bona fide purchaser without notice of the option :—The second paragraph of the section protects the rights of transferees in good faith for consideration who had no notice of the existence of the option to which the first paragraph of the section relates—Durga Das v. Muhammad, 1908 A.W.N. 155.

44. Where one of two or more co-owners of immoveable property legally competent in that behalf transfers his share of such property or any interest therein, the transferee acquires, as to such share or interest, and so far as is necessary to give effect to the transfer, the transferor's right to joint possession or other common or part-enjoyment of the property, and to enforce a partition of the same, but subject to the conditions and liabilities affecting, at the date of the transfer, the share or interest so transferred.

Where the transferee of a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family is not a member of the family, nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle him to joint possession or other common or part-enjoyment of the house.

Scope of section :—This section which confers on the transferee the right of joint possession or partition to the extent enjoyed by the transferor, would apply to transferees of all kinds, including mortgagees and lessees—Muhammad Jafar Khan v. Mazhar-ul-Hasan, 3 A.L.J. 474. Thus, the lessee of an undivided share in a house acquires in respect of the share leased out to him the rights and liabilities of his lessor as provided by this section, and can maintain a suit for partition, if partition be necessary to give effect to the transfer—Ibid ; Ramasami v. Alagirisami, 27 Mad. 361 (367). Where one of the co-owners of an estate under management of a common manager appointed under sec. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mortgaged his share which in execution of a decree on the mortgage was purchased by the mortgagee, he thereby became a co-owner under the manager—Amar v. Shashi, 31 Cal. 305 (P.C.).

Although this section does not in terms apply to involuntary sales, e.g., sales in execution of decrees, by virtue of cl. (d) of sec. 2, the principle hereof applies thereto as a rule of justice, equity, and good conscience. Hence where a stranger purchases at a court-sale the share of one of the coparceners in a tank enjoyed as part of a dwelling house owned by the joint family, a suit by such a purchaser for joint possession against the other coparceners is not maintainable—Jagatbandhu v. Iswar Chandra, A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 61 ; Puddipeddi Laxminarasamma v. Godi Ranganayakemma, A.I.R. 1962 Orissa 147.

204. Right of transferee from co-owner :—If a co-sharer is in exclusive possession of any portion of an undivided piece of land not exceeding his own share, he cannot be disturbed in his possession until partition. If instead of remaining himself in possession he transfers the portion of his joint Khata, his transferee will also have same rights and cannot be disposed by the other co-sharers until partition—Chanan Singh v. Santa Singh, A.I.R. 1950 Pepsu. 5.

Under this section a usufructuary mortgagee of a share in immovable property acquires his mortgagor's right to joint possession or common or part enjoyment of the property so long as the mortgage subsists. If the mortgagor attempts to exercise any joint possession or common enjoyment of the property, he will be liable to a suit for ejectment at the instance of his mortgagee—Harnandan v. Md. Kalim, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 341.

A person purchasing a share in the tenancy rights is not entitled to a declaration of title to and khash possession of a specified plot of land forming part of the tenancy, where there is no allegation or proof that there was any binding partition between the co-sharers—Boloram v. Dandiram, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 1. A tenant holding under a lease granted by one co-sharer without the concurrence of the others cannot, when the land is allotted to another co-sharer at a partition made without taking the tenancy into account, resist a claim for khash possession by the latter on the ground that he has acquired a right of occupancy in the land—Debendra v. Umesh, 46 C.W.N. 904. In such a case the right of occupancy is transferred by operation of law to those other lands within the allotment of his lessor of which a new holding is created for the tenant in substitution for the old one, ibid. The transferee from one of the co-owners can obtain a decree for recovery of possession of the entire property in the possession of a trespasser—Karuppan v. Ponnarasu, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 389.

Where a co-sharer with the consent express or implied of the other co-sharers erects a building on a part of the joint land, there is an implied contract that he shall be allowed to occupy that particular piece of land to the exclusion of the other co-sharers, so long as the property is joint. He is allowed to that extent part enjoyment—Unrao Singh v. Kacheru Singh, A.I.R. 1939 All. 415. The provisions of sec. 118, U. P. Land Revenue Act do not affect in any way the provisions of the T. P. Act about the transfer of co-sharers' interest in land with all that is attached to it—ibid. If two decree holders out of three in a suit for possession against their tenants transfer their share to the tenants (judgment-debtors) the latter would be entitled to joint possession with the remaining decree holder or his transferee—Jogindra Singh v. Baldev, A.I.R. 1965 J. and K. 2.

204A. Right to partition :—The words "subject to the conditions... so transferred" in this section save the principle established by Mitakshara law that the right of an alienee is only to institute a suit for partition to work out his equities subject to the charges and encumbrances affecting the coparcenary property or the interest of the alienor at the time of the transfer. These principles are not in any manner and to any extent affected or altered by sec. 3 of the T. P. Amendment Act, 1929 or by sec. 2 of the principal Act—Pēramanayakam v. Sivaraman, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 419 (F.B.).

The right of partition exists when two parties are in joint possession of land under permanent titles, although their titles may not be identical—Bhagwat v. Bepin, 37 Cal. 918 (P.C.). There is no fixed rule of law that a property held in temporary right cannot be partitioned; the only ground on which partition may be allowed or refused is convenience. Thus where the tenancy, although a monthly one was old and the land was in occupation of the tenants for fifty years, the landlords were numerous and scattered and there was little likelihood of their combining to eject the tenant, the mere fact that technically the holding was monthly tenancy should not debar the parties from their lawful right to partition—Rajani v. Sambhu, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 710. A lessee is entitled to have partition, though he is only a lessee for a term of years, and though that partition can only last for the period of his lease—Ramasami v. Alagirisami, supra.

The mere fact of the parties owning interests which are not co-ordinate in degree, ought not to be a bar to partition. The Court must in each case determine whether the balance of convenience is in favour of allowing partition. In the absence of inconvenience, there can be a partition between a superior landlord and a subordinate tenure-holder—Hemadri v. Ramani Kanta, 24 Cal. 557 (580) (F.B.). In the absence of proof of inconvenience to other co-sharers, a patnidar whose right extends over only a fraction share of one of many mouzahs in the Zemindary, is entitled to maintain a suit for partition—Uma Sundari v. Benode Lal, 34 Cal. 1026 (1028), following Radha Kanta v. Bipro Das, 1 C.L.J. 40.

This section cannot override the provisions of Hindu Law. Under the Hindu Law, a co-parcener cannot bring a suit for partial partition against the other members of the family for the ascertainment and allotment to him of his portion alone of the family property; he must bring a suit for partition of the whole family property. Section 44 gives to the purchaser of a co-parcener's share the "transferor's right to enforce partition of the same," which means a right to bring a suit for the partition of the whole family property (as is allowed by Hindu law) and not a right to sue for partial partition for allotment of his portion alone—Venkatarama v. Meera Labai, 13 Mad. 275; Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 Mad. 684. He can take the share when partitioned subject to all the liabilities on it in the hands of his vendor—Kodura v. Magunta, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 471 (F.B.), 50 Mad. 535, 100 I.C. 1018.

"Legally competent in that behalf":—This qualification has been provided for the reason that in some provinces, in a joint Mitakshara family, a co-parcener cannot transfer his undivided interest in the joint family property.

"So far as is necessary":—Under this section not only a transferee of a share but also of any interest therein can sue for partition and the section imposes a limitation, namely, it must be necessary to give effect to the transfer—Hariharayyar v. Ahammadunni, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 491, 1940 M.W.N. 59, 191 I.C. 57 relying on Md. Jafar Khan v. Mazharul Hasan, 3 A.L.J. 474 and Ramasami v. Alagirisami, 27 Mad. 361. Where the mortgage is not usufructuary and the mortgagee is not entitled to possession he is not entitled to sue for partition. Even if the mortgage-deed confers a right on the mortgagee to sue for partition, that would not entitle him to sue for partition if in law he is not entitled to it—Ibid.

205. Second Para :—The principle of the second para is deducible from the judgment of Westropp, C. J. :—"We deem it a far safer practice and less likely to lead to serious breaches of peace, to leave a purchaser to a suit for partition, than to place him by force in joint possession with the members of a Hindu family, who may be not only of a different caste from his own, but also different in race and religion."—Balaji v. Ganes'h, 5 Bom. 499 (504). See sec. 4 of the Partition Act IV of 1893 which supplements the provisions of the second para above and is in similar terms. Where the plaintiff, who was not a member of the family, purchased an undivided two-third share in huts used as residence by a joint Hindu family, held that he could not be given a decree for joint possession, regard being had to the second para of this section. The proper course is either to direct delivery of possession by partition in execution proceedings or to leave the purchaser to his remedy by a separate suit for partition—Girija Kant v. Mohim, 20 C.W.N. 675 (678), 35 I.C. 294. The object of both sec. 4 (1), Partition Act and the present section is to keep off strangers who may purchase the undivided share of some co-owner of an immovable property and as far as dwelling houses are concerned, to make it possible for the co-sharer, who has not sold his share, to buy up the stranger purchaser. The whole object therefore is to provide for peaceable enjoyment of the property and to secure privacy—Dulal Chandra v. Gcsthabehari A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 259, per Chakravarti, C. J. and G. N. Das, J. The mere grant of a tenancy of the ordinary kind (not a permanent lease) cannot possibly have the effect of making a house, which is otherwise a residential house of the members of the undivided family owning it, cease to be a dwelling house—ibid.

The provisions of para. 2 are of a negative character. On proof of a sufficient defence the Court will not forcibly put a stranger transferee in joint possession with the members of the joint family. This does not create a positive right in favour of the members of the joint family. Hence a suit by a member who has still an interest in the dwelling house impleading only the stranger transferee for permanently restraining the latter from taking joint possession is not maintainable—Jogendra v. Adhar, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 412; Lal Behari v. Gourhari, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 253. A purchaser of an undivided share of a dwelling house has certainly a title to a portion of the house, but his remedy lies in a suit for partition unless of course he is pre-empted under sec. 4 of the Partition Act—Lal Behari v. Gourhari, supra. The fact that certain co-sharers did not exercise the right under this section on a previous occasion, will not debar them from exercising that right on a subsequent occasion upon a new transfer under a deed of a share of the dwelling house, ibid.

The expression "dwelling house" embraces "not merely the structure or building, but includes also the adjacent buildings, curtilages, garden, courtyard, orchard and all that is necessary for the convenient occupation of the house, It includes the land on which the structure of the dwelling house stands, and whether a particular plot of land is or is not necessary to the enjoyment of a house is to be determined on the evidence"—per Mukherjee, J. in Nilkamal v. Kamakshya, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 539 (542). See also Khirode v. Saroda, 12 C.L.J. 525, 7 I.C. 436 and Pran Krishna v. Surath, 45 Cal. 873. Section 4 of the Partition Act, 1893, applies even to a house a portion of which is already separated owing to one member selling his interest in it—Masitulla v. Umrao, A.I.R. 1929 All. 414. Even when the major portion of the house is let out to a tenant, the house may be regarded as the dwelling house of an undivided family—Satyendu Kundu v. Amarnath Ghosh, A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 52.

The words "dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family" do not imply that all the members of the family should actually live in the house. The requirements of this para are satisfied if the house is an undivided house and the members of the family occasionally reside in the house; it is not necessary for the application of this para, that the members should have constantly resided in the house nor is it necessary that they should be joint in mess. Thus, where a house belongs to two sisters A and B (who had inherited it from their father) of whom A lives away in her husband's house, and the other sister B sells her undivided share to a stranger, the purchaser is not entitled to joint possession of the house with A, but is bound to make a partition—Pakija v. Adhar Chandra, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 231 (233).

The expression "share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family" is used in para 2 and seem to have been adopted from there in sec. 4 of the Partition Act. IV of 1893 which takes up the law from where the former section leaves it. The expression therefore has the same meaning in the two Acts—Boto Krishna v. Akhoy Kumar, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 41.

"Undivided family" means simply a family not divided qua the dwelling house and has not divided it. It does not mean Hindu joint family or even joint family. The members need not be joint in mess. The members of the family may have partitioned all their other joint properties and may have separated in mess and worship, but they would still be an undivided family in relation to the dwelling house so long as they have not divided it amongst themselves, ibid. This character of the house will remain so long as the house is not completely alienated to strangers or the house is not divided, ibid.

The words "undivided family" are not restricted to mean a family joint in status but include a family divided in status but undivided qua the property in question—Sivaramayya v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 561. The word "family" ought to be given a liberal and comprehensive meaning and it includes a group of persons related in blood who live in one house under one head or management. It is not restricted to a body of persons who can trace their descent from their common ancestor, and it is not necessary that they should constantly reside in the dwelling house, nor is it necessary that they should be joint in mess. It is sufficient if the members are undivided qua the dwelling house which they own; and it is the ownership of the dwelling house and not its actual occupation which brings the operation of the section into play; and the object of the section is to prevent the transferee of a member of a family who is an outsider from forcing his way into a dwelling house in which other members of his transferor's family have a right to live—Nilkamal v. Kamakshya, supra at p. 541. For other cases on the point see this case. As the second para of this section is in terms similar to sec. 4 of the Partition Act, 1893, the decision on these points under the said Act are applicable to the second para of sec. 44—see Masitulla v. Umrao, supra.

The words "undivided family" in the second para are of general application; they are not restricted to Hindus but apply to Muhammadans also—Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad, 30 All. 324 (327); Masitulla v. Umrao, supra.

A stranger purchased a share of a family dwelling house and being unable to obtain possession thereof instituted a suit for khash possession and obtained an ex parte decree, and thereafter his successor-in-interest obtained an order under Or. 21, r. 97, C. P. Code. Thereupon the other co-sharers of the dwelling house instituted a suit for a declaration of their title and for an injunction restraining the purchaser from obtaining kash possession by executing the decree, and invoked the principle of this section: Held, assuming that the principle of sec. 44 was applicable in the case of a sale in execution of a decree, the proper stage for applying for an order of that nature was reached when the purchaser sued for khash possession, and the plaintiffs not having taken any step at the time, they were estopped from obtaining an injunction—Rajani Kanta v. Sita Kumari, 46 C.W.N. 407. Upon a transfer to a stranger of an undivided share of a family dwelling house by a co-sharer, the other co-sharer or co-sharers can maintain a suit for injunction restraining the stranger transferee from exercising any act of joint possession in respect of the share transferred—Paresh Nath v. Kamal Krishna, 61 C.W.N. 776. If such a transferee gets into possession he is liable to be evicted—Udaynath Sahu v. Ratnakar Bai, A.I.R. 1967 Orissa 139. Possession of one co-sharer enures for the benefit of all the co-sharers—Khetrabasi Parida v. Chaturbhuj Parida, A.I.R. 1968 Orissa 236.

45. Where immovable property is transferred for consideration to two or more persons, and such consideration is paid out of a fund belonging to them in common, they are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, respectively entitled to interests in such property identical, as nearly as may be, with the interests to which they were respectively entitled in the fund; and, where such consideration is paid out of separate funds belonging to them respectively, they are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, respectively entitled to interests in such property in proportion to the shares of the consideration which they respectively advanced.

In the absence of evidence as to the interests in the fund to which they were respectively entitled or as to the shares which they respectively advanced, such persons shall be presumed to be equally interested in the property.

206. Scope of section :—This section defines only the quantum and not the quality of the interest of the joint transferees. It is silent on the question whether the transferee would take as joint tenants or as tenants-in-common.

This section applies to transfers for consideration, and its principle is inapplicable to gifts—Gabriel v. Inas, 34 Mad. 80.

There is nothing in this section to suggest that it ought to be limited to voluntary transfers. The section applies to involuntary transfers also—Reazaddi v. Ya Kub, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 416.

207. Property acquired by common fund :—If a property is acquired out of a common fund by three brothers, they would be entitled to hold it in shares in proportion to their interests in the common fund—Parshotam v. Janki, 29 All. 354 (364), 4 A.L.J. 257. The same rule would apply to a property acquired by the partnership. If any partner of a partnership alleges a specific agreement that the shares were to be unequal, the burden lies upon him to prove his allegation—Jadobram v. Bulloram, 26 Cal. 281. As to co-mortgagees see Pertab v. Nehal, A.I.R. 1926 All. 676, 96 I.C. 134. Though S. 45 T. P. Act does not in terms apply to involuntary sales, the principle underlying the section applies to such transfers. Thus, where at a rent sale two of the co-sharer landlords purchased an occupancy raiyati holding, the respective interests acquired by them in the holding would be in proportion to their respective contributions in purchase money and not in proportion to their shares in the superior right—A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 58.

Joint tenancy:—"The principle of joint tenancy", as observed by the Judicial Committee, "appears to be unknown to Hindu law except in the case of a co-parcenary between the members of an undivided family."—Jogeshwar v. Ram Chandra, 23 Cal. 670 (679) (P.C.) ; Gopi v. Mt. Jaldhara, 33 All. 41 ; Mt. Jio v. Mt. Rukuram, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 126 (127). Joint tenancy is wholly unknown to India. Hence when two persons jointly purchase a property, they must be deemed to acquire a tenancy-in-common. Merely because their shares are not specified in the sale deed, they cannot be regarded as holding the property or claiming title thereto as joint tenants in the sense in which that expression is understood in English law—Nanak v. Ahmad, A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 399 (F.B.). Even according to English law a conveyance or an agreement to convey his personal interest by one of the joint tenants operates as a severance—Jageshwar v. Ram Chandra, supra at p. 679. The mere fact that two brothers lived together and acquired the property by a joint sale-deed will not prove such jointness as would result in the application of law of survivorship, unless it is also proved that they had thrown their acquisitions into the joint-stock so as to constitute a joint Hindu family—Gouri v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1934 All. 701.

In India the Court strongly leans against holding any particular grant as a joint grant. The presumption must always be in favour of a tenancy-in-common rather than a joint tenancy. But the Court can come to a contrary conclusion if the presumption is displaced by clear and cogent language to the contrary. Thus where a Mahomedan mother and a daughter purchased certain immovable property each contributing towards the purchase money, and the habendum clause in the sale deed clearly provided that the purchasers were to hold the property as joint tenants and not as tenants-in-common: Held that the terms of the grant made it perfectly plain that the intention of the purchasers was to hold the property as joint tenants and were sufficient to displace the ordinary presumption in favour of tenancy-in-common—Md. Jusale v. Fatmabai, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 53, 49 Bom. L.R. 505.

208. Para. 2:—In the absence of any specification in the sale-deed of the shares purchased by two persons, it must be held that both purchased equal shares—Abdullah v. Ahmad, A.I.R. 1926 All. 817 (818), Nanak v. Ahmad, supra. See also Lal Singh v. Mt. Chotey, A.I.R. 1933 All. 854. If a property is purchased in the name of two brothers, one of whom pays the consideration in full it will be the exclusive property of the brother paying the price in full—Syed Tufel Ahmad v. Syed Abrar Ahemd, 1960 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 204. Para 2 may be illustrated by the following case: An estate was divided into several shares and one of them was left as the ijmali kalam, and for others separate accounts had been opened with the Collector, and the owners of the ijmali kalam having failed to pay their share of the revenue it was put up to sale but could not fetch a price sufficient to cover the sum in arrears and each of the co-sharers paid the entire amount of arrears separately, and the Collector issued a certificate of sale jointly to them: Held that the different shares should be entitled to equal shares in the purchased estate irrespective of their shares in the parent estate. If there is no evidence upon the record to show how the amount was made up by the Collector from the funds which the parties respectively advanced, the presumption ought to be that each of the parties is equally interested in the property purchased—Debi Pershad v. Aklio, 4 C.W.N. 465.

The second para applies in the absence of evidence as to the interest, etc. If there is no absence of evidence, e.g., if the evidence is available but has not been produced by the parties, the presumption under the second para cannot be made—Ram Pher v. Ajudhia, 12 O.L.J. 66, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 369, 87 I.C. 17. If necessary attempt had been made to prove the different shares of the vendees, and the vendees failed to declare them, then it might have been possible to apply this para.—Ibid. Where a property is acquired by a co-parcenar partly with the aid of joint family fund and partly with his own money it cannot be said that the portion of the property which corresponds to the self acquired portion of the fund should be taken as self acquired property—Mangal Singh v. Harkesh, A.I.R. 1958 All 42.

46. Where immoveable property is transferred for consideration by persons having distinct interests therein, the transferors are in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to share in the consideration equally, where their interests in the property were of equal value, and, where such interests were of unequal value, proportionately to the value of their respective interests.

(a) A, owning a moiety, and B and C each a quarter share, of mouza Sultanpur, exchange an eighth share of that mouza for a quarter share of mouza Lalpura. There being no agreement to the contrary, A is entitled to an eighth share in Lalpura, and B and C each to a sixteenth share in that mouza.

(b) A, being entitled to a life-interest in mouza Atrali, and B and C to the reversion, sell the mouza for Rs. 1,000. A's life interest is ascertained to be worth Rs. 600, the reversion Rs. 400. A is entitled to receive Rs. 600 out of the purchase-money, B and C to receive Rs. 400.

209. This section is the reverse of sec. 45 which lays down a similar rule of proportion.

Where two persons mortgaged equal shares jointly, most of the consideration being left with the mortgagees as "dehanid" for payment of certain prior unequal debts incurred by them, and the consideration for the mortgage in question was made equal by their taking unequal shares: held that each of the mortgagors was responsible for one-half of the liability under each of the debts for which money was made "dehanid"—Hamid v. Alimulla, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 138.

Where property belonging to a joint family of father and four sons was hypothecated and the hypothecatee brought a suit against the sons after the father's death and the suit was decreed ex parte against one son, it being withdrawn against the other three, it was held that the decree-holder got one-fifth share of the judgment-debtor in addition to the one-fourth of the one-fifth share of the father. He did not get one-fifth share of the judgment-debtor and one-fifth share of the father—Bore Gowda v. Ramegowda, A.I.R. 1954 Mys. 16.

Distinct interests :—The estate of co-widows in Hindu law taking their husband's property by inheritance is one estate subject to the right of survivorship, their interest in the estate is not distinct but joint, and they are in law co-parceners—Bhugwandeem v. Myna Bibee, 11 M.L.A. 487; Gajapathi Nilmani v. Gajapathi Radhamani, 1 Mad. 290 (P.C.); Ram Piyari v. Mulchand, 7 All. 114.

47. Where several co-owners of immoveable property transfer a share therein without specifying that the transfer is to take effect on any particular share or shares of the transferors, the transfer, as among such transferors, takes effect on such shares equally where the shares were equal, and, where they were unequal, proportionately to the extent of such shares.

Transfer by co-owners of share in common property.

Illustration.

A, the owner of an eight-anna share, and B and C, each the owner of a four-anna share, in mouza Sultanpur, transfer a two-anna share in the mouza to D, without specifying from which of their several shares the transfer is made. To give effect to the transfer one-anna share is taken from the share of A, and half-anna share from each of the shares of B and C.

Note :—In the case of transfers falling under this section, the transfer takes effect not according to the quantum of consideration received by each co-owner but according to the extent of the share of each co-owner. This rule was probably enacted to guard against the complications which the former course would entail. For the value of two shares otherwise equal may considerably vary, and if inquiries have to be made as to the value of each share, much unnecessary inconvenience and delay would become inevitable—Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Edn.), Vol. I, p. 509.

210. Enlargement of transferor's share after the date of transfer :—Since a transfer falling under this section takes effect not according to the quantum of consideration taken by each transferor, but according to the extent of the share of each transferor, it follows that if during the time the contract of transfer subsists, the share of a transferor becomes enlarged, the transferee is entitled to the enlarged share on the analogy of the principle enunciated in sec. 43. Thus, where the plaintiff purchased certain property belonging to the family consisting of the transferor, his adopted son and his uncle, and brought the suit for possession of the property so purchased against the said persons, and the adopted son and the uncle contested the suit on the ground of want of legal necessity for the sale, and the uncle died pending the suit : held that apart from the question of necessity, the transfer operated as to one-half of the property, as the transferor's interest in the property increased from one-third to one-half owing to the death of the uncle—Viraya v. Hasumanta, 14 Mad. 459. Similarly, a mortgage bond was executed by a Mahomedan woman and her eldest son, on account of a debt due by the deceased husband of the former. Three other children of the deceased were also joined as defendants in a suit on the mortgage, but the decree made the mortgage amount payable on the responsibility of the shares of the mortgagors and the suit was otherwise dismissed and no personal decree was passed. Subsequently, before the decree was executed one of the three sons whose shares in the property were exonerated from liability for the debt, died and his share in the mortgaged property devolved upon the co-mortgagors whose shares consequently were increased. It was held that the increased shares of the co-mortgagors were liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree—Ajijuddin v. Sheik Budan, 18 Mad. 492.

48. Where a person purports to create by transfer at different times rights in or over the same immoveable property, and such rights cannot all exist or be exercised to their full extent together, each later created right shall, in the absence of a special contract or reservation binding the earlier transferees, be subject to the rights previously created.

211. Principle:—This section is a statement of the rule expressed in the maxim Qui prior est tempore potior est jure (he who is prior in time is better in law). One who has the advantage in time should also have the advantage in law. When two successive transfers of the same property have been effected by way of mortgage or sale, the later in date must give way to the earlier—Sirbadh Rai v. Raghunath, 7 All. 568 (572); Karamat v. Samiuddin, 8 All. 409; Narayan v. Luxuman, 29 Bom. 42; Motichand v. Sagun, 29 Bom. 46.

Scope:—Ordinarily priority of rights created by different transfers is governed by this section. A mortgagee claiming priority will not lose his right unless his conduct was such as to estop him from asserting it—Khetra Nath v. Harsukdas, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 538 (542). When the prior mortgage is not binding (having been effected without the landlord's consent as required by the Central Provinces Tenancy Act) the subsequent mortgage would operate on the entire interest of the mortgagor as if it has not been burdened with a prior mortgage—Ramkaran v. Kanhaiyalal, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 189.

212. Application of principle:—(1) This section applies when there are completed valid transfers. The word "transfer" in this section contemplates a complete transfer, and does not include a mere contract for sale or a sale by an unregistered sale-deed, the registration of which is compulsory. If a contract of sale to one person is followed by complete sale to another, the case will be governed by sec. 40 and not by this section. A registered deed of sale shall take effect as against (and not subject to) a mere contract of sale or an unregistered conveyance (see secs. 48 and 50 of the Registration Act). See also Waman v. Dhandiba, 4 Bom. 126 (F.B.); Chundernath v. Bhoyrab, 10 Cal. 250; Ram Autar v. Dhanauri, 8 All. 540.

(2) The rule is applicable only when the two transfers are antagonistic and not where legal effect can be given to one without infringement of the other. Compare the words of the section "and such rights cannot all exist or be exercised to their fullest extent together." Thus, in a case where a property is mortgaged to one and subsequently sold to another, this section will not apply, because the purchaser has obtained only the equity of redemption, an interest which can exist side by side with the mortgage—Ramchandra v. Krishna, 9 Mad. 495; Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand, 6 Bom. 193 (208). But where usufructuary mortgages of the same property are created in favour of different persons, the two rights cannot co-exist and the subsequent mortgage will give way and the prior mortgage will prevail—Sirbadh Rai v. Raghunath, 7 All. 568 (572). Generally speaking, the question of priority between a mortgagee and a subsequent purchaser is governed by this section. The purchaser is not protected by sec. 41 when there is no proof of negligence on the part of the mortgagee—Sita Ram v. Raj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 283. Where after the registration of a mortgage the mortgagor sold the property to a third person by a registered deed of sale and subsequently the mortgagee paid the consideration money for the mortgage to the mortgagor, the mortgagee's right prevailed over that of the vendor—Raghunath v. Amir Baksh, I.L.R. 1 Pat. 281. An agreement to sell land was executed in favour of A. Subsequently mortgage of the same land was executed in favour of B. Later on a sale-deed was executed in favour of A. Held, that the mortgage must have its effect as against the subsequent sale, though the agreement to sell was executed before the mortgage—Chouth Mal v. Hiralal, A.I.R. 1950 Aj. 59.

There is no conflict between a validly registered conveyance and an unregistered sale-deed of which registration is compulsory, because the latter is a nullity; and this section need not be invoked to determine their priority.

This section applies in the absence of a special contract or reservation binding the earlier transferees. And so, where a mortgage is executed by a Receiver under an order of Court directing that such mortgage should constitute a first charge, it takes priority over any other mortgage of earlier date—Sripat v. Naresh, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 94; Giridhari v. Dharendra, 34 Cal. 427 (441). To the general rule 'qui prior est tempore potior est jure' there is a notable exception to be found in advances made to save the mortgaged property from loss or destruction. These advances are payable in priority to all other charges of earlier date, and amongst themselves have precedence according to the inverse order of their respective dates—Ibid, following Fisher on Mortgages, 4th Edn., p. 958. A mortgage by the parties after the appointment of a Receiver in a partition suit for management and preservation of the properties is however valid and will have priority over a subsequent mortgage by the Receiver under an order of the Court directing the creation of a first charge, when such an order is without jurisdiction—Bhadrabati v. Jibanmal, 45 C.W.N. 68—per R. C. Mitter and Akram, JJ.

Where co-sharers have been awarded certain sums of money as owelty on a partition decree, they are entitled to priority over the mortgage of a portion of the property purchased—Md. Kazim v. Hills, 35 Cal. 388.

An attaching creditor does not get priority over a mortgage executed after his decree but before attachment of the property in execution thereof—Hérumbo v. Satish, 33 Cal. 1175. So an attachment subsequent to the execution of a mortgage but prior to the registration thereof does not affect the mortgage—Nabadwip v. Lokenath, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 212, 36 C.W.N. 733, 59 Cal. 1475, 141 I.C. 358.

A Crown debt, e.g., a fine imposed on conviction of a person, has priority over other unsecured debts—Pichu v. Secretary of State, 40 Mad. 767. In an English mortgage the ownership passes to the first mortgagee; so the first mortgagee only has the right of priority over the Crown in respect of the immoveable property so mortgaged. But the Crown has priority so far as the moveable properties are concerned—Bank of Upper India v. Administrator-General, 45 Cal. 653. Although rents and profits collected by a Receiver appointed by the Court in a simple mortgage suit can be deemed by the mortgagee in priority to other simple creditors, they cannot be appropriated by the mortgagee in priority over a Crown debt, such as income-tax—Income-tax Officer v. Indian Insurance & Banking Compn., A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 197.

Where a puisne mortgagee obtains a decree without impleading the prior mortgagee and the latter obtains a decree without impleading the puisne mortgagee, both mortgages being simple, and the mortgaged property is sold successively by the mortgagees in execution of their respective decrees, as between the rival purchasers the first purchaser is entitled to hold possession against the subsequent purchasers—Chinnaswami v. Darmalinga, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 566; Nagendra v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 583 (F.B.); Afzar Jehan v. Md. Amir, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 478; Sheo Sahai v. Suraj Baksh, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 33; Swamma v. Surayya, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 585; Guru Prasad v. Tarini, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 634. As between two purchasers of a mortgaged property the title to the outstanding equity of redemption is determined by the priority, not of the respective mortgages, but of the respective sales, and the person who first buys the equity of redemption, whether he be the mortgagee himself or a stranger, would be entitled to redeem all the subsisting mortgages and thus acquire an absolute title—Ramkinkar v. Hareram, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 181; see Gangadhar v. Lakshman, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 221, where it has been held that as between competing auction-purchasers the principles governing priority are the same as those which regulate the claim of priority among mortgagees. In a suit for possession by a usufructuary auction-purchaser he is entitled to possession as against a puisne mortgagee whose mortgage is subsequent to that of the former—Gurmukh v. Sundar Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 153. The puisne mortgagee was, however, allowed to redeem in this suit—Ibid, at p. 156.

The auction-purchaser in execution of a decree obtained on a prior mortgage without impleading the subsequent mortgagee acquires all the rights of the mortgagor including his rights to possession in cases where both the mortgages are simple if either no suit by the subsequent mortgagee is pending or purchase in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree was earlier in point of time. If the first mortgagee is the earlier purchaser the rights of the mortgagor to obtain possession will ultimately vest in him. If the mortgage is not time-barred he can compel the subsequent mortgagee to redeem him, but if it is time-barred he must redeem the subsequent mortgage. Where sale in execution of a decree obtained on the foot of a puisne mortgage takes place during the pendency of the suit on the prior mortgage, apart from the effect of the rule of lis pendens, if the second mortgagee is the earlier purchaser, the purchaser in execution of a decree on prior mortgage will have the right to take possession as plaintiff if a suit on his mortgage is not time-barred. If the purchaser from the second mortgagee redeems him the former will retain the property. If the prior mortgage is time-barred the purchaser from him cannot obtain possession—per Full Bench in Ram Sanahi v. Janki Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 All. 466 (488), (See also Lachmi v. Hirday, A.I.R. 1926 All. 480). But see the dissentient judgment of Mukherjee, J. who has been of opinion that generally it is the first purchaser who gets the property and the question of purchase has nothing to do with the priority or posterity of the mortgage in enforcement of which the property is sold—at p. 488. In this connection see Bansidhar v. Shiv Singh, A.I.R. 1933 All. 908 (910-11). So where a third party purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the subsequent mortgagee's mortgage decree and then the prior mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage and purchased the property in execution thereof, he was not entitled to a decree for possession, subject to the third party's right to redeem. The prior mortgagee on the basis of his purchase could not also claim the equity of redemption as against the third party. He could, no doubt, fall back upon the first mortgage (but he could not recover possession on its strength as that mortgage being a simple mortgage did not give any right to possession) if 12 years had not elapsed from the date when the mortgage money became payable. He could not compel the third party, who had purchased the property in execution of the subsequent mortgagee's decree, to redeem, as redemption is a legal right and not a liability—Jagat v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 139. See in this connection Nathmal v. Nilkanth, 1933 Bom. 25, 34 Bom. L.R. 1519, 141 I.C. 811; Surendra v. Ahmmad, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 912 (913), 60 Cal. 1193, 147 I.C. 808; Niharmala v. Sarojbandhu, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 728 (731).

The rights of persons who have acquired an interest in the mortgaged estate, since the making of the mortgage of which the mortgagee had notice, cannot be defeated or impaired by any subsequent arrangement to which they are not parties—H. V. Low & Co. v. Pulin, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 154.

As between two substituted security rights no question of priority arises, for sec. 48 applies only to successive mortgages in the same property—Krishnaveni v. Subrahmanyam, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 547.

Where an agreement is entered into with the knowledge of a prior agreement, the latter has priority in law over the later agreement. The decisive factor is the priority in date of the agreement and not its terms—Abdullah v. Ahmad, A.I.R. 1929 All. 817.

213. "At different times":—Where two deeds relating to the same property were executed on the same day, it must be proved which was in fact executed first, but if the deeds themselves show an intention either that they shall take effect pari passu or even that the later deed shall take effect in priority to the earlier, then it will be presumed that the deeds were executed in such order as to give effect to that intention—Gartside v. Silkstone & Co., 21 Ch. D. 761; Ramratan v. Bishnu-chand, 11 C.W.N. 732. If a vendor intending to convey immovable properties executes a sale deed and delivers possession of the said properties to the vendee, the mere omission of the plot numbers in the sale deed is immaterial and a subsequent sale deed in favour of another person in respect of any of the said properties is of no avail—P. Rammurty v. A. Kalpo Patra, A.I.R. 1963 Orissa 136.

A deed of sale executed by some out of several vendors at one time and by the rest subsequently, becomes operative as to the share of the vendors first executing the deed, from the date of their execution, if the purchaser elects to treat the sale as complete in regard to their shares. The deed is not altogether void, because some of the vendors executed it subsequently—Lalit Mohan v. Anil Kumar, 43 C.W.N. 1036, per Mukherjee and Roxburgh, JJ.

Where two deeds bearing different dates were registered on different days, priority as between them is ascertained with reference to the dates of the deeds and not with reference to the dates on which they were respectively registered; and this priority is not influenced by the fact that the party having the later deed is in possession of the property—Narayan v. Lakshuman, 29 Mad. 42; Santaya v. Narayan, 8 Bom. 182; Motichand v. Sagun, 29 Bom. 46; Mathura v. Ambika, 12 A.L.J. 993.

This section must be read subject to sec. 48 of the Registration Act—Chhagan Lal v. Chunilal, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 189. So although a document, so long as it remains unregistered, is not valid, yet as soon as it has been registered, it takes effect from the date of its execution—Gopal v. Lachmi, A.I.R. 1926 All. 549. Prima facie and apart from notice the priority of mortgages in India depends upon the respective dates of their creation, the earlier in date having precedence—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22; Imperial Bank v. U Rai Gyaw, etc., Ltd., 51 Cal. 86, 50 I.A. 283, 1 Rang. 637; Webb v. Macpherson, 31 Cal. 57, 30 I.A. 238; Gokul v. Eastern Mortgage & Co., 33 Cal. 410, 10 C.W.N. 276. Where a subsequent mortgagee took a mortgage knowing of a previous but unregistered mortgage under the impression that even if the prior mortgagee was able to obtain registration of his deed that would not take precedence over his mortgage, the subsequent mortgage was postponed—Jowand v. Sawan, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 886. If a person about to take a mortgage finds some person in possession, the fact of such possession is sufficient to put the would-be mortgagee on equity and if such person's title is that of a prior mortgagee under a document not compulsorily registrable, the second mortgagee cannot by getting his mortgage registered obtain priority over the first mortgagee—Bhikhi v. Udit, 25 All. 366. But where a property which was subject to two unregistered mortgages of different dates was sold in execution of a decree on the later mortgage and purchased by the decree-holder who afterwards sold it by an unregistered deed to another person who again sold it by a registered deed: held that after such sale no suit would lie on the prior unregistered mortgage—Ishri Prasad v. Gopi Nath, 34 All. 631. Where the subsequent mortgagee takes the mortgage fully knowing the liabilities created under the first mortgage and undertaking to clear the prior mortgage, even where in a sale by the prior mortgagee the interest had been bought by the mortgagor himself the subsequent mortgagee takes subject to the mortgagor's rights—Amar Chand v. Sardar Singh, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 90 (93).

Mere registration does not render a sale or a mortgage operative from the time of registration, if there is a contract that the operation would be postponed till the actual payment of the full amount of consideration—Makhan Lal v. Hanuman Bux, 2 Pat. L.J. 168. Where a property had been mortgaged before a contingent interest under a prior mortgage had become actually vested, the subsequent mortgagee got priority over the prior mortgage—Mt. Murtazi v. Dildar Ali, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 129.

Where a personal decree obtained under O. 34, r. 6, C. P. C., was sought to be executed against a property in the hand of the mortgagor's widow but it had already been mortgaged to another person by the widow, it was held that the decree could not be executed against that property—Sarojendra v. Binapani, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 468.

An equitable mortgage effected by deposit of title deeds is a mortgage in the sense of the Act, consequently the priority sections apply to that kind of mortgage—Imperial Bank v. U Rai Gyaw, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 211 (216). But an oral charge, though prior in time, does not have priority over subsequent mortgages, without notice of the charge, by registered deed—Chhaganlal v. Chunilal, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 189 (190), 36 Bom. L.R. 277, 152 I.C. 267.

For other cases of priority see secs. 78 and 79 and Notes thereunder.

49. Where immoveable property is transferred for consideration, and such property or any part thereof is at the date of the transfer insured against loss or damage by fire, the transferee, in case of such loss or damage, may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, require any money which the transferor actually receives under the policy, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be applied in reinstating the property.

214. Two questions may arise under this section:—(1) If the house is destroyed after the contract of sale, but before it is completed by payment of purchase-money; (2) If the house is destroyed after the sale is completed by payment of purchase-money.

(1) If the house is destroyed before the transfer is complete by payment of purchase-money, this section has no application, because it speaks of cases 'where immoveable property is transferred', i.e., actually transferred. A mere contract of transfer confers no interest in the property on the purchaser. See sec. 54, post.

(2) After the purchaser has paid the purchase-money, and the ownership has passed to him, he is bound to bear any loss arising from the destruction, injury or decrease in value of the property not caused by the seller. See sec. 55 (5) (c) post. But if the property is insured against loss or damage by fire, and the money payable under the policy is received by the vendor, this section comes in and entitles the purchaser to require the vendor to apply the money in reinstating the property.

215. "Which the transferor actually receives" :—This section does not give the transferee of insured property any direct claim against the insurer, but it provides only for the case where the money payable under the policy has been actually received by the transferor. The vendor is liable for the money actually received by him under the policy. It may well happen that after the vendor has sold the property and received full consideration thereof, he may not care to enforce payment of the insurance money from the insurer. In such a case, the purchaser can neither compel the vendor to enforce his claim against the Insurance Company, nor can the purchaser claim the insurance money directly from the company. It is only when the vendor cares to enforce his claim against the Insurance Company and actually receives the money from the company that the purchaser can claim the benefit of this section. The safest course for the purchaser is to get the policy of insurance assigned over to him at the time of purchase.

Where the owner of a mill insures it against fire, and subsequently mortgages it to a third person, and the mill and the premises are destroyed by fire, the the Insurance Company is not liable to indemnify the mortgagee against the loss. The contract is one to indemnify the insured, and not any other person between whom and the company there was not privity of contract—Chetty Firm v. Motor Union Insurance Co., A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 6. But see Sinnot v. Bowden, (1912) 2 Ch. 414 where the mortgagee was allowed to get the money from the insurance company for rebuilding.

50. No person shall be chargeable with any rents or profits of any immoveable property which he has in good faith paid or delivered to any person of whom he in good faith held such property, notwithstanding it may afterwards appear that the person to whom such payment or delivery was made had no right to receive such rents or profits.

Rent bona fide paid to holder under defective title.

Illustration.

A lets a field to B at a rent of Rs. 50. and then transfers the field to C. B, having no notice of the transfer, in good faith pays the rent to A. B is not chargeable with the rent so paid.

Note :—This section is taken almost word for word from section 1 of the Mesne Profits and Improvements Act (IX of 1855) which has been repealed by this Act.

216. Scope :—The language of this section is general. It even applies to a case where there has been no assignment by the lessor during the tenancy, but the case is merely one of succession and the rent is paid to a person who is the ostensible or de facto owner—Kaveriamma v. Lingappa, 33 Bom. 96 (104). See this case cited in Note 217 below.

But this section has no application to payment of rent made in advance. It is a well-known principle of English law that the payment of rent before it becomes due is not a fulfilment of the obligation imposed by a covenant to pay rent, but is in fact an advance to the lessor with an agreement on his part that when the rent becomes due such advance will be treated as a fulfilment of the obligation to pay the rent—De Nicholls v. Saunders, (1870) L.R. 5 C.P. 589; Cooke v. Guerra, (1871) L.R. 7 C.P. 132; Ketha Bhat v. Chotey Lal, A.I.R. 1960 Raj 19. A payment of rent in advance is in effect a loan to the landlord to be applied thereafter in discharge of the tenant's obligation to pay rent as it accrues due, but it is not in itself a fulfilment of an obligation to pay rent, in as much as the obligation has not arisen at the time of the payment. As against the landlord and his legal personal representatives, a tenant who pays rent in advance is secure, because as the rent becomes due, the previous advance becomes actual payment. But if the landlord should assign his rights, the assignee will, by giving notice to the tenant, before the proper rent-day, to pay rent to him, become entitled to the rent then falling due—Tiloke Chand v. Beattie & Co., A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 204; Ram Lal v. Mahadeo, 3 P.L.T. 128, 63 I.C. 587 (588); Pale Zabaing Rural Co-operative Society v. Maung Thu Daw, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 292; Kiran Chandra v. Dutt & Co., A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 251 (253); Govind v. Gopal Rao, 14 C.P.L.R. 65; Official Assignee v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1928 Sind 95 (96); Rameshwar v. Buttokristo, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 653. If, however, the transferee has notice, actual or constructive, of the agreement between the landlord and tenant under which the tenant paid a large sum as rent in advance, the transferee is not entitled to realise the rent over again from the tenant—Tiloke Chand v. Beattie & Co., A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 270 (273); Kiran Chandra v. Dutt & Co., supra; Nand Kishore v. Anwar, 30 All. 82 (at. p. 83).

But this section applies where the rent is realised in advance from the tenant as a condition of his entering into the premises. Thus, where the mortgagor of certain mortgaged premises let them to a tenant after receiving 5 months' rent in advance as a condition precedent to such letting, and subsequently a Receiver appointed in the mortgage-suit relating to those premises sued for recovery of the said rent: held that the lessee having paid the rent in advance only as a part of his entering into the contract of hiring the premises, could not be compelled to pay it over again to the Receiver—Toon Chan v. P. C. Sen, 7 Bur.L.T. 139, 24 I.C. 693 (694).

In a recent case Harris C. J. and Sinha J. of the Calcutta High Court have held that sec. 50 contemplates payment of rent in good faith for the same tenancy to a wrong person. Thus where a sub-tenant paid rent to the tenant who was his immediate landlord in respect of the sub-tenancy without the knowledge that he had become a statutory tenant directly under the landlord, such payment could not be relied upon by him as a payment to the landlord in respect of the statutory tenancy—Narendra v. Great Eastern Hotel, Ltd., A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 394.

217. Rents paid in good faith :—This section speaks of good faith twice; first with regard to payment actually made, and secondly as to the title of the person to whom it is made. When the purchaser of the landlord's interest gave notice of his title to the tenant after the commencement of his tenancy, payment of rent made by the tenant to the vendor who inducted him on the land was protected by this section—Sattu Lal v. Kritanta Kumar, 42 C.W.N. 378. But where a tenant knew of the dispute between two rival claimants to the title of landlord, but chose one of them and paid rent to him, the payment cannot be said to be bona fide and this section does not cover the case—Gambheriya v. Sakharam, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 237. Similarly where the tenant of a mortgagor has been paying rent to the mortgagee in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed, but subsequently pays rent to a purchaser at the Court sale of the mortgaged property without making any enquiry whether the mortgage has in fact been satisfied and merely relying on the words of the said purchaser that the mortgage has been satisfied, the tenant cannot be said to have acted in good faith within the meaning of this section—Butto Kristo v. Gobindaram, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 540. Where a person continues payment to a person having defective title, after he came to know the title of the real owner, he acts in bad faith and no inference can be made in his favour as to previous payments—Md. Azim v. Pateshwari Prasad, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 105.

Payment made without notice of transfer :—If, after transfer of his right, title and interest in any estate, the proprietor receives rent from a tenant which is due to his transferee, he is liable to account to that person for monies so received, but the law affords protection to the tenant making such a payment by providing that the receipt of the transferor shall afford full indemnity to the tenant making such payment of rent without notice of the transfer—Alimudden v. Heeralal, 23 Cal. 87. 101 (F.B.). Payments made by tenants to a mortgagor after the mortgage but before they have any notice of it, will be valid against the mortgagee—Kiran Chandra v. Dutt & Co., A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 251. If the purchaser omits to give notice of his title to the tenants, and the tenants misled by the want of such information continue to pay their rents to the former proprietor, the purchaser must bear the consequences of his neglect—Collector v. Hursoondery, 1864 W.R. (Act X Rulings) p. 6.

Payment to ostensible owner :—In a suit for mesne profits or rent brought by the real owner of land against a tenant, it is a good defence for the latter to aver that he had, without notice of any adverse claim, paid over the rent or profits to one, of whom he in good faith had held the property, although the latter had really no right to it. Thus, if on the death of the landlord his interest devolves upon his sister but rent is realised by the widow after taking possession of the property and mutuating her name as owner, the sister cannot claim the rent already realised by the widow to whom rent was paid by the tenant in good faith—Kaveriamma v. Lingappa, 33 Bom. 96 (103, 104).

218. Payment made after notice of transfer :—It is immaterial whether the tenant gets notice from the transferor or from the transferee. In either case, he cannot escape liability. Thus, the tenant cannot successfully plead that he has paid the rent bona fide to the assignor, if he has received notice of the assignment from the assignee—Pope v. Biggs, (1829) 9 B. & C. 245 ; Peary Lal v. Madhoji, 17 C.L.J. 372, 19 I.C. 865 (868). Similarly, if the tenant gets notice of the transfer from the transferor (and not from the transferee), any payment of rent made by the tenant to the transferor thereafter is not a valid payment made in good faith, and the transferee is entitled to claim the same from the tenant—Nabin Chandra v. Surendra, 7 C.W.N. 454. Payments made by the tenant either in collusion with his grantor or after receiving notice of the right of a third party are not protected under the section—Moss v. Gallimore, 1 Doug. 279 ; Pope v. Biggs, 9 B. & C. 245 ; Cook v. Guerra, L.R. 7 C.P. 132.

219. Procedure :—Where the tenant alleges that the rent for the year in question has been paid to the previous landlord (the vendor of the plaintiff), the suit for rent can be framed alternatively against the tenant and his previous landlord. Where in such a case the Court finds that the tenant has in fact paid the rent to the previous landlord in good faith, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree against the previous landlord alone for the amount paid to him, the tenant being discharged—Madan Mohan v. Holloway, 12 Cal. 555.

51. When the transferee of immoveable property makes any improvement on the property, believing in good faith that he is absolutely entitled thereto, and he is subsequently evicted therefrom by any person having a better title, the transferee has a right to require the person causing the eviction either to have the value of the improvement estimated and paid or secured to the transferee, or to sell his interest in the property to the transferee at the then market-value thereof, irrespective of the value of such improvement.

The amount to be paid or secured in respect of such improvement shall be the estimated value thereof at the time of the eviction.

When, under the circumstances aforesaid, the transferee has planted or sown on the property crops which are growing when he is evicted therefrom, he is entitled to such crops and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them.

This section is almost the same as sec. 2 of the Mesne Profits and Improvements Act (IX of 1855), which has been repealed by this Act.

In England, similar provisions are to be found in the Improvement of Land Act 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114), and the Settled Land Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38).

This section may be compared with section 82 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) which deals with compensation for raiyat's improvements.

220. Principle :—This section is based upon the principle that he who will have equity must do equity. "A constructive trust may arise where a person, who is only a part owner, acting bona fide, permanently benefits an estate by repairs or improvements; for a lien or trust may arise in his favour in respect of the sum he has expended in such repairs or improvements (Lake v. Gibson, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 290). Although a person expending money by mistake upon the property of another has no equity against the owner who is ignorant of and did not encourage him in his expenditure (Nicholson v. Hooper, 4 My. & Cr. 186) yet if it were necessary for the true owner to proceed in equity he would only be entitled to its assistance according to the ordinary rule by doing equity and making compensation for the expenditure, so far of course, and only so far, as the expenditure was necessary and has proved permanently beneficial. But a person will have no equity who lays out money on the property of another with full knowledge of the state of the title (Rennie v. Young, 2 DeG. J. & S. 136; Ramsden v. Dyson, L.R. 1 H.L. 129; Price v. Neault, 12 App. Cas. 110); or who lays out money unnecessarily or improperly"—Snell's Equity, pp. 148, 149.

Where a person in bona fide belief of his title to the land spends money upon it and makes improvements and the true owner stands by, then he is estopped from asserting his title to the land as against the person making improvements in such bona fide belief. Thus where A, who has purchased a property in his own name for the benefit of B with the mutual understanding that B would repay the purchase money with interest to A, stands by and acquiesces in the improvements made by B in the house and does not conduct himself as a real owner, he is estopped from subsequently asserting his ownership and denying the title of B. Similarly the alienee from A purchasing the property with notice of B's title is also estopped from denying B's title—Venkataswami v. Muniappa, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 53.

The principle of this section is an exception to the maxim "Quicquid inaedificator solo solo cedit". And unless the equitable grounds mentioned in this section are made out, the moment the improvements are made they belong to the owner of the land by operation of law—Dharma Das v. Amulya, 33 Cal. 1119 (1130); Maung Aung v. Ma Nyun, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 141 (142).

221. Application of this section:—This section applies to both Hindus and Mahomedans, since there is no rule of Hindu or Mahomedan law which precludes persons from claiming the benefit of the equitable principle embodied in this section—Durgozi v. Fakeer Sahib, 30 Mad. 197 (199).

This section does not apply to every person who is in possession of property. It does not apply to a trespasser; Topanmal v. Chanchal-mal, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 77. See also Murlidhar v. Parmanand, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 190. A trespasser makes improvements at his own risk. Where however he acts bona fide upon a claim of title and the true owner stands by and allows him to construct the house, he is upon ejectment entitled to remove the materials of the house. This section does not apply and he cannot claim compensation—Krishna Prasad v. Adyanath, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 77. A suit for possession of land by an owner after demolition of certain constructions on the ground that the defendants had, in building a house on his land encroached upon the plaintiff's land is a pure and simple action for ejectment of a trespasser. In such a case, the Court has no power to grant a decree for damages instead of a decree for possession to the owner of the land—Bhillso Pandey v. Mt. Sheoraji, A.I.R. 1950 All. 535.

This section applies to a transferee who has succeeded in proving that he believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property over which he made the improvement—Motichand v. British India Corporation, A.I.R. 1932 All. 210. This section cannot be taken advantage of by a person to whom sec. 52 applies—Ibid. Where in a suit for possession of land and certain rooms it was found that the defendants were near relations of the plaintiff and they were allowed to occupy the premises and land as early as 1893 under an unregistered lease, and subsequently they spent substantial sums of money on improving the building without any protest from the plaintiff and there was nothing to show that they did not do so in good faith, the equitable principle of this section was extended to the case and a conditional decree was passed on payment of the amount, the amount spent by the defendants in improvements—Karam Singh v. Budh Sen, A.I.R. 1938 All. 342. See also Badal v. Debendra, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 612; Sadhu Singh v. Dist. Board Gurudaspur, A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 172.

This section does not apply in terms as between a landlord and a tenant—Shanmugha Desika v. Anantha Krishnaswami, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 247; Subhan v. Madhorao, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 398. But although this section does not apply to a lease but only to transfer of proprietary rights [see Mohammad Ali v. Kanai Lal, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 625; Rajrup v. Gopee, infra] compensation was allowed to a person who entered into possession on a verbal agreement to lease on the analogy of this section—Naina v. Mahanath, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 435, (1938) as indicated in Badal v. Debendra, supra. Where the defendants were not holding the land under a perpetual lease, nor did they claim an absolute title to the lands, then in a suit by the plaintiff to evict the defendants, the latter were not entitled to claim under this section any compensation for improvements made by them on the land—Ponnia v. Ponnia, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 282; Bastacolla Colliery v. Bandhu Beldar, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 344 (F.B.). The lessee can remove his structures and materials—Ibid.

In view of sec. 2 (d), this section cannot apply to a transfer in execution of a decree, and the word 'transferee' does not include an auction-purchaser of the property at Court sale—Nannu Mal v. Ram Chander, A.I.R. 1931 All. 277 (283) (F.B.). As under this section the evictee himself must be the improver, an auction-purchaser, if dispossessed cannot claim compensation for improvement made by the judgment-debtor—Nagendra Bala v. Panchanan, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 290. Where the auction-purchaser himself made the improvements in good faith, he was held to be entitled to the value of the improvement on being evicted from the property owing to some defect or irregularity in the proceeding leading up to the sale although this section was inapplicable in the case of a Court sale—Mothheensa v. Apsa Bibi, 38 Mad. 194, 21 M.L.J. 969, 12 I.C. 444.

Where a Hindu widow grants a permanent lease and the lessee makes improvements on the land although believing that she has a right to grant a permanent lease, he is not entitled to be compensated for the improvements when he is evicted by the reversioner on the widow's death—Rajrup v. Gopi, A.I.R. 1925 All. 261. But where the purchaser from a Hindu widow causes permanent improvements to be made whereby the jama of the property is increased, the increased rent that is properly attributable to the improvements can be set off against the mesne profits, even though it was not actually executed by the person in possession at the moment when the decree for possession was made—Raja Rai v. Ram Ratan, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 91. See also Narayanaswami v. Rama Ayyar, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 297; Kidar Nath v. Muthu Lal, 40 Cal. 555 (P.C.).

This section applies even though the transferor himself is the evictor. The words "the person having a better title" should not be interpreted to mean a person other than the transferor. There is no reason to cut down the operation of the section in this way—Harilal v. Gordhan, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 611 (612).

This section does not apply unless the transferee is evicted by a person having a better title. Therefore where a mortgaged property is sold to the defendant who has no notice of the mortgage, and who makes improvements on the property, and then the mortgagee brings a suit for sale on his mortgage, section 51 does not apply as it cannot be said that the defendant is liable to be evicted by a person having a better title, the mortgagee bringing a suit on his mortgage not being treated as a person having a better title than the defendant. Nor can it be said that the defendant is liable to be evicted from the premises by the institution of the suit, (because the mortgagee can only bring the mortgaged property to sale but cannot evict the defendant), although he may ultimately be evicted at the instance of the auction-purchaser. Section 51 cannot therefore in terms apply to this case, but the rule of equity on which this section is based may be applied, and the Court will order the plaintiff to pay the costs of improvement to the defendant as a condition precedent to his bringing the mortgaged property to sale—Kalyan Das v. Jan Bibi, A.I.R. 1929 All. 12 (14).

Persons entitled to the benefit of this section :—In order to entitle a person to the benefit of this section (i.e., to the improvements made by him or to their value) three things are necessary. These are discussed below in detail :—

222. Firstly, he must be a "transferee" :—The improvements to the property must have been made by a transferee who believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property. Such a belief, even if negligent, would entitle the transferee to compensation provided it is not dishonest. A trespasser is not entitled to the benefit of the section—Sidde Gowda v. Sidda Naika, A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 117; Panchu v. Daniel, A.I.R. 1951 Aj. 18. A trespasser making improvements by way of raising certain construction, upon the land he has encroached, does so at his own risk. He cannot claim compensation under the section, ibid. In India, if a trespasser not being a transferee plants trees or makes improvements over the land of another believing in good faith that he is entitled to do so, then so long as he is not evicted, he must be held to be entitled to enjoy the usufruct of the trees or the improvements, and the owner of the land is not entitled to claim the price thereof. He may no doubt, claim compensation for use and occupation of the land. He may also claim that the trees or other improvements be removed and the land be restored to him in the condition in which it was—Panna Lal v. Gobardhan, A.I.R. 1949 All. 757. An assignee of a plot of land on assignment by the Government is not a transferee under sec. 51—Ijjabba Beary v. Ijjinabha, A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 64.

A mere stranger or a trespasser, or a person having no status in respect of the immoveable property is not entitled to the benefit of this section—Thakoor Chunder v. Ramdhone, 6 W.R. 228; Mudhoo Sudan v. Juddooputty, 9 W.R. 115; Topanmal v. Chanchalmal, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 77. Thus, if a Hindu son (governed by the Dayabhaga School) had made improvements and substantial additions to ancestral buildings standing on ancestral lands belonging to his father, the father would be under no legal obligation to pay for them as a condition precedent to a decree for recovery of possession, and he would be entitled to a decree for ejectment even though the additions and improvements were effected with his knowledge—Dharma Das v. Amulya, 33 Cal. 1119 (1130). No one can, by merely trespassing on another's land and constructing costly buildings on it, claim a right to retain possession or to compel the owner to pay compensation—Ganga Din v. Jagat Tewari, 12 A.L.J. 1026, 25 I.C. 198; Creet v. Gangraj, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 129. So also, an assignee from the trespasser is not protected by this section—Souza v. Gulam Moidin, 13 M.L.J. 214. See also N. 221 supra.

A person claiming title on the basis of an oral will and certain Karamnamas executed in his favour is not a "transferee" within the meaning of this section—Murlidhar v. Parmanand, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 190, 34 Bom. L.R. 1641. But a transfer of immoveable property by oral sale is within this section. The fact that to make such a transfer valid, the property of certain value must be conveyed by a registered instrument in writing does not affect the fact. So a person to whom immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards has been transferred or purported to have been transferred by an oral sale is a transferee and is entitled to the benefit of this section provided he believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property in question—Topanmal v. Chanchalmal, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 77 (79, 81). But see contra Madan Gopal v. Sundaran, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 172.

It is immaterial whether the transfer is valid or not. In either case the transferee can claim compensation for his improvements—Ramanathan v. Ramasami, 30 M.L.J. 1, 32 I.C. 5; Ramanathan v. Ranganathan, 40 Mad. 1184 (in this case the transfer was by an unregistered deed of exchange). Therefore, if a person claiming under a purchase which is invalid under Mahomedan Law and making improvements on the purchased property in the bona fide belief that he is absolutely entitled thereto, is sought to be evicted by a person having a better title, he is entitled, on his being so evicted, to require such person to pay the value of the improvements—Durgozi v. Fakeer Sahib, 30 Mad. 197 (200). Where a person entitled only to a life-estate sold the property absolutely to the vendees, held that although the sale was invalid, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the land on payment of the value of the improvements bona fide effected on the land by the vendees—Nanjamma v. Nacharammal, 17 M.L.J. 622. But see Ram Prosad v. Chhajju, A.I.R. 1964 All. 300 where it has been held that a purchaser of immoveable property valued at more than Rs. 100 under an oral agreement of sale is not a transferee and hence cannot claim the benefit of sec. 51; see also, Sm. Parbati Devi v. Kashmirilal Sarma, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 69.

A mortgagee who has purchased the mortgaged property at a sale held in execution of the decree upon his mortgage, ceases to be a mortgagee and becomes the owner, and cannot claim the value of improvements effected by him after his purchase, from a second mortgagee who brings the property to sale—Rangayya v. Parthasarathi, 20 Mad. 120 (123).

223. Secondly, he must believe himself to be absolutely entitled to the property :—

“For if a stranger builds on my land knowing it to be mine, there is no principle of equity which would prevent my claiming the land with the benefit of all expenditure made on it. There would be nothing in my conduct, active or passive, making it inequitable in me to assert my legal rights. It follows as a corollary from these rules, that if my tenant builds on lands which he holds under me, he does not thereby, in the absence of special circumstances, acquire any right to prevent me from taking possession of the land and buildings when the tenancy has determined. He knew the extent of his interest, and it was his folly to expend money upon a title which he knew would or might soon come to an end”—per Lord Cranwoth, L.C. in Ramsden v. Dyson, (1866) L.R. 1 H.L. 129 (141). “If a tenant, being in possession of land and knowing the nature and extent of his interest, lays out money upon it in the hope or expectation of an extended term or an allowance for expenditure, then if such hope or expectation has not been created or encouraged by the landlord, the tenant has no claim which any Court of law or equity can enforce”—per Lord Kingsdown in Ibid (at p. 171). When both parties are conversant with the true state of facts, it is absurd to refer to the doctrine of estoppel. That is, when the title of the true owner is brought to the knowledge of the persons making the improvements, there is no ground for invoking the doctrine of estoppel and acquiescence—Ranchodlal v. Secy. of State, 35 Bom. 182 (187, 188). Where a husband with his costs constructs a building on his wife's land knowing it to be his wife's the latter is entitled to the building. The husband in such a case does not intend to reserve any right in the structures—K. K. Das v. Amina Khatun, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 356.

The main principle of this section is that a person must show that he believed that he was entitled to the land in such a way that he is not to be disturbed, whether it is a sale or a permanent lease he claims under—

Subba Rao v. Veeranjanyaswami, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 298 (301). Though an alienation by the guardian of a minor is not warranted by law, the alienee may be entitled to the benefit of this section if the circumstances justify that he must have bona fide believed that he was absolutely entitled to the property and made improvements—Kasim Ali v. Ratna Manikka, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 677. But where the lessee had taken a permanent lease by the exercise of undue influence from a widow who was the mother guardian of the minor, the rent reserved was ridiculously inadequate, the terms of the lease were wholly one-sided, the lease also gave no right to the lessor except the right to sue for arrears of rent, and above all the lease conferred no benefit on the minor lessor, on a suit by the lessor on attaining majority for avoidance of the lease, it was held that the lessee could not have believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property leased to him—Sidh Nath v. Har Narain, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 446.

A person who is aware of the imperfection of his title or who knows that his title is terminable some day or other is not entitled to the benefit of this section—Onkar Mal v. Secretary of State, 56 I.C. 813 (Pat.). A person who purchases or takes a permanent lease from a Hindu widow, fully knowing that she is in possession of the property as a Hindu widow having only a life-interest, cannot claim the value of the improvements made by him upon the property—Raj Kishore v. Jaint Singh, 36 All. 387 (395); Gopi v. Mt. Raftroop, A.I.R. 1925 All. 190. See also 44 All. 665 and 47 All. 430 cited in Note 224, infra. A person who plants trees and makes improvements on another's land, knowing that he has no valid title to it, cannot claim the value of the improvements—Munna v. Suklal, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 142 (145). A person who never had any title and was in possession by permission of the real owner cannot believe himself to be absolutely entitled to the property—Murlidhar v. Parmanand, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 190. For, there is no equity in favour of a person who with full knowledge of the state of his title spends money upon the property while he knows that it belongs to another, or who incurs expenditure which is either unnecessary or improper. The test is, whether the person has acted in the bona fide belief that he is entitled to the property—Sitla v. Samiuddin, 4 O.L.J. 514, 42 I.C. 428; Shyam v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 20.

Thus, this section does not give a lessee or a tenant a claim to compensation because the lessee or tenant certainly knows that his lease or tenancy is terminable, and cannot possibly believe in good faith that he is absolutely entitled to the property—Nundo Kumar v. Bonomali, 29 Cal. 871 (884); Narasayya v. Raja of Venkatagiri, 37 Mad. 1 (12); Ismail Khan v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (586); Sheik Husain v. Govardhandas, 20 Bom. 1; Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal, 21 All. 496 (502) (P.C.); Bhubaneshwar v. Lal Bahadur, 51 I.C. 380; Bonomali v. Nihal Singh, 48 I.C. 354 (Nag.); Madan Gopal v. Sundaran—A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 172. Compensation for improvements can be claimed by a lessee under this section only on showing that he believed in good faith that he had a permanent right in the demised premises and in such faith made the improvements—Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52. This view was expressed by way of obiter. The Patna High Court has held that where a monthly tenant, wrongly believing that he was a permanent tenant, constructs structures there is no scope for the application of sec. 51 and this seems to be the correct view—Hiralal Rewani v. Bastocolla Colliery Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 331. Where a tenant knowing that he has no occupancy rights makes improvements in the land without any hope or expectation created or encouraged by the landlord, he cannot claim any compensation on eviction—Narasayya v. Rajah of Venkatagiri, 37 Mad. 1 (14). So also, a tenant who is under a mistaken belief that he has a much longer period of tenure than he actually has, does not come under the protection of this section; he must believe that he is absolutely entitled to the land within the meaning of this section so as to entitle him to compensation for improvements—Jugmohandas v. Pallonjee, 22 Bom. 1. Where an agreement to sell the mortgaged property to the mortgagee is executed by two out of three coparceners, and the mortgagee is aware of the existence of the third brother, the mortgagee cannot be said to have believed in good faith that he was entitled to the whole of the property—Ramappa v. Yellappa, 52 Bom. 307, 30 Bom. L.R. 427, 109 I.C. 532, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 150 (152). But where a person believed in good faith that he has in the property the absolute interest of a permanent tenant and in such faith created a permanent building on the site, he would be entitled to compensation if it should be ultimately held that he had no permanent interest and must surrender the land—Ismail Kani v. Nazarali, 27 Mad. 211 (221); Ismail v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (584); Raja Rudra Partab v. Devi Prasad, 8 O.C. 13. A transfer by a Hindu father and manager of joint family, though without necessity, is a valid transfer, until it is avoided by the son, and so long as it is not avoided, the transferee is absolute owner and may believe himself to be absolutely entitled to the property. It makes no difference that he failed to satisfy himself at the time of the sale that it was necessary for the family. If the transferee makes any improvements during the time the sale is not avoided, he can claim the value of improvements if the son afterwards brings a suit to recover the property—Lachmi Prasad v. Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1928 All. 41 (43).

Similarly, a mortgagee is not entitled to the benefit of this section and cannot claim the crops grown by him on the land of his mortgagor—Ramalinga v. Samippa, 13 Mad. 15 (16). A mortgagee cannot believe himself to be absolutely entitled to the mortgaged property. And therefore a purchaser from the assignees of the original mortgagee is not a person who can delude himself into such belief, and is therefore not entitled to the benefit of his improvements, although he may have a claim for the cost of repairs as distinct from improvements—Parashar v. Ganu, 5 Bom. L.R. 643. Where the properties of a minor were mortgaged by the certificated guardian without obtaining the permission of the District Judge and so the mortgage was voidable at the option of the minor under sec. 30, Guardians and Wards Act, the mortgagee is not, on the mortgage being set aside, entitled to compensation for improvements effected by him, because he could not have believed that he was absolutely entitled to the property: not even under sec. 63 or 72—Bechu v. Bhabhuti, A.I.R. 1931 All. 201 (202). Even sec. 63A will not help him, because it is doubtful whether that section applies to a mortgagee holding under a voidable mortgage. So also, a mortgagor who retains possession of the mortgaged property after the time has expired for payment of the money due on account of the mortgage, is fully acquainted with the imperfection of his title; and on a sale of the property he is not entitled to the emblements raised by him on it—Land Mortgage Bank v. Vishnu, 2 Bom. 670.

A mortgagee by conditional sale cannot acquire a title to the property without going through certain formalities. If, without going through those formalities, he assumed on the expiry of the term of his mortgage that he had become the absolute owner of the property, it cannot be said that he believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property—Gopi Lal v. Abdul Hamid, A.I.R. 1928 All. 381 (384).

But long possession by the occupant may sometimes give rise to the belief that he is absolutely entitled to the property. Thus, equitable relief was given to a person who had been in occupation of the land for a period of 25 years—Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra, 18 Bom. 66 (83). Though under the ordinary law, a mortgagee cannot claim payment for improvements effected without the consent of the mortgagor, yet where the mortgagor did not redeem the mortgage at the end of the term, and the mortgagee (under the mortgage by conditional sale) has for 30 years bona fide believed himself to be the proprietor and dealt with the property as such, not knowing that he should take any steps to convert his mortgage by conditional sale into an absolute sale, held that the mortgagee was entitled to compensation for improvements—Ladha Mal v. Jaganath, 123 P.R. 1888; Ram Kuar v. Partab Singh, 58 P.R. 1919, 51 I.C. 689.

It has been pointed out in an Allahabad case that the language of this section is never meant to apply to the case of a mortgagor and mortgagee. A specific rule of law has been enacted in sec. 63 for the purpose of guidance of the Courts where the mortgagor and mortgagee are concerned. Under that section, when the mortgaged property receives an accession and that accession takes place at the expenses of the mortgagee, certain rights and liabilities follow. Therefore, the question as to compensation to be given at the time of redemption to the mortgagee for improvements effected on the mortgaged property is governed by sec. 63 and not by sec. 51—Gopi Lal v. Abdul Hamid, A.I.R. 1928 All. 381 (383). It should be noted that the new section 63A now makes specific provisions for improvements made by a mortgagee, and reference should be made to sec. 63A rather than to sec. 63.

224. Thirdly, he must believe in 'good faith':—An improvement made by a person not believing bona fide that he is entitled to make it, does not entitle him to compensation—Manohari v. Mahammad, 33 All. 752. To claim compensation for the improvement, honest belief in ownership is necessary—Kari Goundan v. Raghava, 1 L.W. 410, 23 I.C. 520. The foundation of a person's right to compensation for improvements lies in the bona fide belief that he has a title. If he has not such a bona belief, he is a mere trespasser. He spends his money at his own risk and can claim no compensation—Furزند Ali v. Aka Ali, 3 C.L.R. 195; Panchulal v. P. William Sawayer, A.I.R. 1955 Ajmer 23. If a person has made improvements in good faith as a bona fide occupant of the land and in the belief that the land is his own, he may be entitled in equity to recover the value of the improvements—Dharma Das v. Amulya, 33 Cal. 1119 (1129); Natesa Therani v. Dist. Board Tanjore, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 314. Where the grantee of a piece of land under an order of the Tahsildar paid the assessment in respect of the piece and spent money in putting the land in good use without knowing that there was an appeal decreed against him, it was held that the grantee effected his improvements bona fide within this section and was, therefore, entitled to the value thereof—Chennapragada v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 963. But a person holding under a lease of a non-permanent character cannot ask the lessor to pull down the structures built thereon by him on his eviction and pay the price thereof under this section, when the structures were built by the lessee with the full knowledge that he had a lease only for life—Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52, 164, I.C. 837.

Where apart from there being no evidence as to the kind of structures erected, it is not possible to hold that the plaintiffs in good faith believed that they were absolutely entitled to the land, this section has no application—Vithoba v. Sholapur Municipality, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 241. A person deliberately entering into and doing works in the property for his own purposes with a view to start and establish a false claim for title thereto, is not entitled to the value of the improvements—Khanku v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 195. A licensee making constructions over sir land without belief in good faith that he is absolutely entitled to the property, is not entitled to compensation—Pheku v. Harish, A.I.R. 1953 All. 406.

The words "good faith" are defined in the General Clauses Act (1897), sec. 3 (20) as follows: "A thing shall be deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not." This definition does not apply to the Transfer of Property Act, because this Act was enacted prior to the General Clauses Act. In sec. 52 of the Indian Penal Code, good faith has been defined as follows: "Nothing shall be deemed to have been done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention." But if this definition is imported into sec. 51 of the T. P. Act, it will make the section entirely unworkable. For, if a transferee from a Mitakshara father has taken a transfer with due care and attention, he is not at all liable to be evicted at the instance of the son. Therefore, the words "good faith" should have a meaning which is somewhat between the two definitions quoted above; but it is not possible to lay down a general rule in discussing a particular case—Lachmi Prosad v. Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1928 All. 41 (44, 45). See also Monahar v. Brajamohan, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 239. The Calcutta High Court holds that a belief in good faith under this section means not only acting honestly and fairly but includes due inquiry; so, where a person consciously avoids making an inquiry, though he may be said to have a belief in the matter, it would not be a belief in good faith—Abhoy Churn v. Attarmoni, 13 C.W.N. 931 (936), 3 I.C. 415. The belief in good faith includes not only acting honestly, but includes due inquiry—Mt. Subratan v. Shabbir Ali, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 266. What constitutes good faith is a question of fact to be inferred from the circumstances of each case—ibid relying on Narayanaswami v. Rama Ayyar, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 297. An alienee from a Hindu widow knows that she has only a life interest; consequently he has to make enquiries as to whether the widow had any right to make the transfer, and whether there was any necessity for the transfer; and in the absence of such enquiry he cannot be taken to have believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property, in order to claim compensation for improvements under this section—Hans Raj v. Somni, A.I.R. 1922 All. 194; Rajrup v. Gopi, A.I.R. 1925 All. 261; Suleman v. Venkataraju, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 670; Jogeshar v. Jankibai, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 384. The defendant purchased certain property from some Hindu females having a limited power of disposition over it, and made certain improvements on the property. In answer to the claim of the reversioners (plaintiffs), the defendant alleged that the alienation was made for legal necessity, but it was found that there was no necessity and that the defendant was fully aware of the family affairs of the females and of the fact that the females could not sell it under certain circumstances, and that he wilfully abstained from making any inquiries on the subject. Held that the defendant (even though he purchased for consideration) was not entitled to the cost of improvements, as it could not be said that he believed in good faith that the vendors conveyed a good title in respect of the property—Nanjappa v. Peruma, 32 Mad. 530 (531), 4 I.C. 18; Etizad Husain v. Beni Bahadur, 5 O.L.J. 1, 45 I.C. 242. If an alienee from a Hindu widow incurs expenditure on the reconstruction of a house after notice by the next reversioner claiming to be entitled to the house as reversioner, the alienee cannot be said to have acted in good faith—Ramaji Batanji v. Manohar Chintaman, A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 169. But under certain circumstances, the alienee from a Hindu widow may believe himself to be absolutely entitled to the property. Thus, a Hindu widow sold a property in 1906 to G, and in 1910 adopted a son. The adopted son brought a suit in 1912 to challenge an alienation made by the widow, other than the alienation to G. In 1918, G made some improvements on the property. In 1922, the adopted son brought a suit to set aside the sale of 1906. Held that since in 1912 the adopted son had brought a suit to set aside another alienation made by the widow, but had not challenged the sale to G, and even thereafter for several years had taken no steps to set aside the sale, G must have believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property purchased by him, when he made the improvements in 1918. He was therefore entitled to the benefit of sec. 51—Gangadhar v. Rachappa, 31 Bom.L.R. 453, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 246 (248). If the person making the improvement knows that he has no title to the property, he cannot demand payment for the improvement—Maddarappa v. Chandramona, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812. If a property owned by three co-sharers is sold by two of them on the representation that each is entitled to 8 as. share and the purchaser erects structure on the entire property with notice of the title of the remaining co-sharer he cannot demand the value of the improvement from the remaining co-sharer in a suit for partition instituted by the latter—Daya Ram v. Shyama Sundari, A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 1049.

But absence of good faith cannot necessarily be inferred from the mere fact of negligence in investigating the title, for a purchaser may have notice of facts showing a defect in the title of his vendor, and yet purchase the property honestly believing that he was buying good title. To hold otherwise would be to exclude a very large class of cases from a rule which is obviously based on considerations of justice—Nanjappa v. Peruma, 32 Mad. 530 (531). A person who acts honestly can be said to act in good faith, even though he may have been to some extent negligent in inquiring into the seller's authority to sell the property—Harilal v. Gordhan, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 611 (613). Ordinarily, good faith required by this section does not mean anything more than an honest belief in the validity of one's own title—Moitheensa v. Apsa, 36 Mad. 194. Even negligent belief will amount to honest belief for the purpose of this section. Therefore, though the negligence of the buyer from the guardian of a minor in making due and sufficient inquiries affects his title to immoveable property, still it does not follow that the purchaser did not believe in good faith that he was the full owner when he effected the improvements on the property purchased—Narayana v. Sarkaranarayana, 1 L.W. 369, 24 I.C. 940; Harilal v. Gordhan, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 611 (613); Sahabuddin v. Vohidbux, 56 I.C. 492 (Sind). A person who acts under a mistake of law may still act in good faith within the meaning of this section—Durgozi v. Fakeer Sahib, 30 Mad. 197 (199); Sahabuddin v. Vohidbux, 56 I.C. 492. Bona fides is not incompatible with ignorance of law, nor is it incompatible with a certain degree of negligence. The degree of negligence is a matter to be determined according to the circumstances of each case—Rama Aiyar v. Narayanasami, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 609 (613).

The question whether the transferee of immoveable property does or does not believe in good faith that he is absolutely entitled thereto is a question of fact to be inferred from the circumstances of the case—Durgozi v. Fakeer Sahib, 30 Mad. 197 (199); Rama Aiyar v. Narayanasami supra. It is always a question of fact whether a transferee believes or not that he is absolutely entitled to the property. It is not in every case of a transfer by a qualified owner, alleging circumstances which would enable him to give absolute title, that the transferee should be treated as believing that he holds absolutely the property in good faith. On the other hand, a man loses his property because of a defect in it, and yet is supposed to believe in good faith that he is absolute owner of it. It is always a question of fact whether a particular man holds a particular belief—Lachmi Prasad v. Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1928 All. 41 (44). Where in case of a sale by the father of a joint family (acting on behalf of himself and as the guardian of his minor son) alleging legal necessity, it was found that the transferee paid full consideration, and the sale was to some extent supported by necessity; held that the transferee had sufficient justification for holding the belief in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property purchased—Lachmi Prasad, supra. The mere fact that a mortgagee by conditional sale has spent money over the property in making improvements ought not to lead the Court to infer that he acted in good faith and believed himself to be absolutely entitled to the property. "If we were to hold that in every case of mortgage by conditional sale, where the mortgagee spends money on improvements, he must be deemed to have acted in good faith and in the belief that he was the absolute owner of the property, we shall be legislating and not arriving at a finding of fact on which the law has to be applied"—Gopi Lal v. Abdul Hamid, A.I.R. 1928 All. 381 (385). A person who is fraudulently in possession of property cannot be deemed to believe in good faith that he is absolutely entitled to the property. Consequently he cannot be allowed any compensation for the sums spent by him in improving the property—Sadashiv v. Dhakubai, 5 Bom. 450. Where the title is obviously founded on possession which was originally gained by trespass, it can hardly be said that the person entering upon the land as a trespasser can bona fide believe that he is absolutely entitled thereto—Secretary of State v. Dugappa, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 921. A mortgagee who is not entitled to possession but who somehow or other comes into possession of the mortgaged property and makes improvements thereon, cannot claim the benefit of this section—Rangayya v. Parthasarathi, 20 Mad. 120 (124). Where a Hindu widow sold her husband's property at a very low price without any legal necessity, and the purchaser knew of the voidable nature of the transaction, he could not be deemed to have believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property, and consequently he was not protected by this section—Muddusami v. Bhaskara Lakshmi, 29 M.L.J. 357, 30 I.C. 853 (855). But where a person, bona fide thinking that he is the heir of a deceased person, spends money in freeing the estate from debts which if he were the real heir he would be bound to pay before he could secure possession, he is entitled to recover the amount paid by him from the person who is subsequently found to be entitled to the estate—Sitla v. Somiuddin, 4 O.L.J. 514, 42 I.C. 428. A person who purchased a big plot of land was put in possession of a larger area than he purchased. Without knowing of the mistake he made valuable improvements on the excess area, and the vendor took no steps at that time to prevent it. He later sued to eject the vendee from such excess area. Held that sec. 51 applied and the vendee was entitled to compensation—Natesa Thevan v. District Board, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 314. Where the defendant encroached upon the plaintiff's land, believing in good faith that it belonged to him as forming part of his adjoining land, cleared it of jungle and rendered it fit for cultivation at his expense, held that the defendant was entitled to compensation for the improvements before he could be ejected by the plaintiff—Bhupendra v. Peari, 40 I.C. 646. Where the grantee of land under an order of the Tahsildar paid the assessment in respect of the land and spent money in putting the land to good use, without knowing that there had been an appeal from the Tahsildar's order and that on appeal the grant of the land to him had been cancelled, held that the grantee effected his improvements in good faith believing that he was absolutely entitled to the land—Narayanamoorthy v. Secy. of State, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 963. A party to a litigation is not entitled to compensation for improvements made by him pendente lite with full knowledge of the risks he runs in doing so—Velusami v. Bommach, 25 M.L.J. 324, 21 I.C. 219. Where the defendant purchased the property with notice of a prior contract of sale between the vendor and the plaintiff, and without making inquiries from the plaintiff, he was not entitled to the value of the improvements effected by him on the property—Haradhan v. Bhagabati, 41 Cal. 852 (865).

225. Owner's knowledge—Estoppel:—The main point to be remembered in applying the rule of equitable estoppel is that the person making the improvement had an honest belief in his right to do so—Shyam v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 20. If it is shown that the real owner knew that the occupants were spending money upon the improvement of the land, and knew also that they were doing so in the belief that they had a good title, and that nevertheless the real owner stood by and allowed the occupants to proceed with their expenditure, he ought not to be entitled to a decree for ejectment without indemnifying them for their outlay—Nundoo Kumar v. Banomali, 29 Cal. 871 (884); Ismail v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (584); Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra, 18 Bom. 66 (83). If a stranger begins to build on land supposing it to be his own, and the real owner perceiving his mistake abstains from setting him right and leaves him to persevere in his error, a Court of Equity will not afterwards allow the real owner to assert his title to the land—Ramsden v. Dyson, (1864) L.R. 1 H.L. 129. "If a man, under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or under an expectation created or encouraged by the landlord that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord, and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation"—per Lord Kingsdown in Ibid. (at p. 170). Where a person with actual or constructive knowledge of the facts induces another by his words or conduct to believe that he acquiesces in or ratifies a transaction, and that other in reliance on such belief alters his position, such person is estopped from repudiating the transaction to the prejudice of that other—Dharma Das v. Amulya Dhan, 33 Cal. 1119 (1129) following Duke of Leeds v. Earl of Amherst, (1846) 2 Phillips 117. See also Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Secretary of State, 29 Bom. 580 (609, 610). Where the purchaser from a limited owner made improvements on the property and the true owner stood aside and abstained from asserting his rights, an equitable right will arise in favour of the purchaser in respect of those improvements—Etizad Hussain v. Beni Bahadur, 5 O.L.J. 1, 45 I.C. 242. Where a mortgagor who has obtained a decree for redemption does not execute it, but allows the property to remain in the hands of the mortgagee for a considerable time, and the latter during the period makes more improvements, held that the conduct of the mortgagor amounts to estoppel, and the mortgagee's right to the value of the improvements cannot be denied—Krishna v. Srinivasa, 20 Mad. 124 (126).

But if the person making the improvements knows that he is not absolutely entitled to the land, the mere knowledge or silence on the part of the owner will not amount to estoppel. Thus, if a tenant (who knows that he is not absolutely entitled to the land) erects permanent structures upon the land let to him, to the knowledge of and without interference by the lessor, it will not suffice to raise any equitable right in the tenant so as to restrain the landlord from suing in ejectment. The doctrine of estoppel is applicable only where the owner of the land seeing his tenant erecting buildings upon it encourages or acquiesces in the act, and purposely abstains from interference with the view of claiming the building when it is erected—Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal, 21 All. 496 (502, 503) (P.C.); Narasayya v. Rajah of Venkatagiri, 37 Mad. 1 (13). Where the landlord stood by in silence and the tenant spent a large sum of money in the construction of a building and a well in the premises, but there were special circumstances in the case from which the Court was able to draw the inference that the landlord by his conduct afforded hope and encouragement to the tenant that he would be allowed to remain in peaceful possession or at least would not be ejected without a reasonable return for the expenditure incurred by him, held that the landlord had no right to eject the tenant without paying a reasonable compensation for the improvements—Dattatraya v. Shridhar, 17 Bom. 736 (741) (explained in 37 Mad. 1 at p. 13). Where the tenant was not ignorant of his own limited rights and spent money in building the premises under no mistaken belief as to such rights, the mere silence on the part of the landlord could not deprive him of his right to take back his property from his tenant with all the improvements imprudently made by the latter—Naunihal v. Rameshar, 16 All. 328; Shanmugha v. Anantha Krishnaswami, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 247 (249). The principle upon which the doctrine of acquiescence is based is that a man who acts in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up his legal rights will be deprived of those rights. But where his acquiescence or other conduct does not amount to a fraud, actual or constructive, he cannot be deprived of his legal rights—Naunihal v. Rameshar, 16 All. 328.

A fortiori, where the landlord did not even know of the erection of the buildings by the tenant, while they were being constructed and did not even become aware of the existence of the buildings after they had been erected, the plea of acquiescence and estoppel must fail—Ismail v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (585). In order that the tenant might avail himself of the plea of acquiescence and estoppel, it is necessary for the tenant to show that in spending money for the erection of the buildings of a permanent character he was acting in an honest belief that he had a permanent right in the land and that the landlord knowing that he was acting in that belief stood by and allowed him to go on with the construction of the buildings—Razemini v. Manik, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 156.

A railway company partly trespassed upon the Crown lands and partly entered into a license which was to be subsequently turned into a contract for allowing the erection of telegraph poles and the company was under no mistaken belief as to its rights to the Crown lands nor was such mistaken belief known to the Crown who could not be said to have encouraged the construction of the telegraph line : held by the Privy Council that there was nothing on which to ground any estoppel against the Crown—Canadian Pacific Ry. Co. v. King, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 108.

A person who makes improvements on property belonging to a religious trust in the belief that he has a permanent tenancy, cannot claim compensation under this section, nor can any conduct on the part of the trustee operate so as to create any equitable estoppel against the trust—Shanmugha v. Anantha Krishna, supra. Transferee lis pendens cannot claim any compensation for improvements he might have made on the property—Shanu Ram v. Basheshar Bath, (1966) 68 Punj. L.R. 44.

226. Improvements :—For a definition of “improvement” see section 76 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the absence of statutory law relating to fixtures, the question has to be decided upon general principles of equity, justice and good conscience. The English law, so far as it is applicable to the conditions of this country, supply the said rules—Waghela v. Masludin, 11 Bom. 551 (P.C.) at p. 561; Panna Lal v. Gobardhan, A.I.R. 1949 All. 757. The rules of English law relating to fixtures, however, do not apply in India as not being suitable to the conditions of this country—Chunder Paramanick v. Ramdhone, 6 W.R. 228 (F.B.); Ismail v. Nazar Ali, 27 Mad. 211; Mofiz v. Rasik, 37 Cal. 815.

The making of constructions over sir land cannot be said to be an improvement of the land as sir land, the constructions being of no use to the proprietor of the land who would presumably use it for the purpose of cultivation—Pheku v. Harish, A.I.R. 1953 All. 406.

Spending small sums every year for the usual levelling and manuring of the lands for the purpose of husbandman-like cultivation thereof is not an improvement within the meaning of this section—Sudala Muthu v. Sankara Narayana, 1 L.W. 371, 24 I.C. 879.

Expenditure incurred for the repair and up-keep of a house is not expenditure incurred for the purpose of improvements—Meenatchi v. Manicka, 1 L.W. 360, 24 I.C. 918 (1920). Thus, putting up a staircase in an old house is nothing more than an ordinary repair, and is not an improvement, so as to entitle the alienee to recover the cost of it—Sidramappa v. Shidappa, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 230.

A plaintiff who seeks the benefit of the improvements made by the transferee must pay Court-fee on the value of the improvements—Sir Madhaorao v. Keshao Gajanan, A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 304.

227. Relief of the person making the improvements :—Under the terms of this section, the transferee has a right to require the persons seeking his eviction either to have the present value of the improvements estimated and paid or secured to him or to sell their interest in the property to him at the market value irrespective of the value of such improvements. The option to decide which of these two courses they will adopt rests with the persons seeking the eviction—Ramanathan v. Ranganathan, 40 Mad. 1134 (1144, 1160); Rama Aiyar v. Narayanasami, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 609 (614); Narayana v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 599; Moti Chand v. British India Corporation, A.I.R. 1932 All. 210; Coller v. Baron, 2 N.L.R. 34. Where it is found that the owner's circumstances are too poor to permit him to pay for the value of the improvements, the Court is justified in requiring him to sell his interest in the property to the transferee, without giving him the option of recovering the property by payment of the value of the improvements—Lachmi Prasad v. Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1928 All. 41 (45).

Two persons exchanged lands and an application for mutation of names was dismissed owing to the absence of one of the parties. Such party believing in good faith to be the owner of the land erected a building thereon. The other party executed a sale deed in favour of the party who had built. Thereupon a collateral of the vendor applied for pre-emption: held, that he was entitled to do so on payment of the full sale value of the land and the cost of the building—Quim v. Ghulam Din, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 540.

In some cases, the transferee has not been allowed the cost of his improvements, but has been allowed merely to remove the materials of the building he has erected. Thus, in a Madras case, where a permanent lease was granted by the trustee of a religious trust, the lease was held to be invalid, and the lessee who had built a house on the leased land was not entitled to any compensation before his eviction, but was merely allowed to remove the materials of his house—Venkatappier v. Ramaswami, 1919 M.W.N. 548, 52 I.C. 517 (519). A Hindu widow mortgaged a property with possession, without any legal necessity, and the mortgagee proceeded to build a house on the land. The mortgagor died, and her co-widow, on whom the land devolved by survivorship, sued for possession. Held that the mortgagee was not entitled to claim the cost of the improvements (see Note 244), but he was allowed to remove the materials of the house—Hans Raj v. Sonni, 44 All. 665 (668). This case has been criticised by the Rangoon High Court on the ground that if a person, who has not been allowed to claim the benefit of sec. 51, is nevertheless permitted to remove the materials of the house built by him, it would make the provisions of sec. 51 nugatory, for he will practically get the benefit which he has been declared not to be entitled to—Maung Aung v. Ma Nyun, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 141 (142). But this is not so, for the materials of the house are worth much less than the house itself, and all the expenses of building the house are lost to him. The rule in Ramsden v. Dyson, (1865) 1 H.L. 129 is subject in India to the exception that a party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building. The right does not, of course, exist when the action is mala fide and tortious. But when there is acquiescence and a bona fide belief on the part of the person building that he had title, then if it should appear that the person building has no title and was misled by the acquiescence, he is entitled to remove what he has built so long as he substantially returns the land in the state it was—Abdul Razak v. Seth Nandlal, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 506 (511).

The person making the improvements has no lien on the land for the value of the improvements. Even if it is assumed that he has a lien on the land, still he is not entitled to remain on the land until he is reimbursed; and the owner of the land is entitled to a decree for ejectment—Dharma Das v. Amulya Dhon, 33 Cal. 1119 (1130).

228. Compensation for improvements :—The real issue in assessing the value of improvements for the purpose of payment of compensation is whether the improvements have or have not enhanced the value of the property in the market, and if there is an enhancement the extent of such enhancement. The amount of expenditure made has occasionally very little to do with that issue—Sidde Gowda v. Sidda Naika, A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 117. A party is entitled to compensation for improvements in proportion to the extent to which the value of the estate has been permanently increased—Kunhi v. Kunkan, 19 Mad. 384. Compensation can be claimed only for such improvements as are in the land in a reasonably good condition—Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Sch. & Lef. 225; Krishna v. Srinivasa, 20 Mad. 124 (128). The real question in such a case is, have the improvements enhanced the market value of the property?—Kidar Nath v. Mathu Lal, 40 Cal. 555 (P.C.).

Where a person claimed compensation for improvements effected by him but did not produce any accounts of the income he derived from the property during the period of his possession and there was nothing on record to show the present value of the improvements, held that under such circumstances he was not entitled to any compensation—Asu Ram v. Bulaki Das, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 500.

Who can claim compensation:—The value of improvements can be claimed under this section by the transferee who makes the improvements or by his heir. But if the improvements are made by the transferor, the transferee or his heir cannot claim compensation as against a person who seeks to recover the property as a reversioner of the transferor—Meenatchi v. Manicka, 1 L.W. 360, 24 I.C. 918 (920).

Where trees were planted on the land by the donees, the collaterals of the donees were not entitled to claim compensation—Harnaman v. Dasandhi, 1 Lah. 210, 56 I.C. 733, 112 P.L.R. 1920.

229. Value of improvements :—In estimating the value of the improvements a good deal must necessarily be left to conjecture. In all valuations, judicial or otherwise, there must be room for inferences and inclinations of opinion which being more or less conjectural are difficult to reduce to exact reasoning or to explain to others. In such cases, there is more than ordinary room for guess-work ; and it would be very unfair to require an exact exposition of reasons for the conclusions arrived at—Secretary of State v. Charlesworth, 26 Bom. 1 (21) (P.C.). In awarding compensation, the Court has to consider how far the property has been improved in market value, and not merely consider the amount expended—Gangadhar v. Rachappa, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 246 (249) ; Sardar Mahomed Tahir v. Mian Pirbux, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 42 (46). The value at the date of eviction has to be awarded—Ramji Batanji v. Manohar Chintaman, A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 169.

In the case of trees, the improvements for which compensation is payable is not the capitalized value of the produce of trees for the period of the life of those trees, but the work of planting, protecting and maintaining the trees—Kunhi v. Kunkan, 19 Mad. 384 ; Shangunni v. Veerappa, 18 Mad. 407.

Under this section, the compensation should be estimated with reference to the market value at the time of eviction. In a decree for redemption, however, the final adjustment of the amount of compensation must be made with reference to the state of things at the time of actual redemption—Krishna v. Srinivasa, 20 Mad. 124 (126). This view has been approved by the Supreme Court in Narayan Rao v. Basavarayappa A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 727. There in a suit for redemption the defendant was a bonafide purchaser for value without notice of the mortgage. A preliminary decree was passed by the trial court on 30.6.45, directing the plaintiff either to pay to the defendant the cost of improvement and take possession of the property or to sell the property to the defendant. Plaintiff elected on 25.7.45 to take possession on payment of cost of improvement. The form of the decree was approved by the Supreme Court. The dispute before the Supreme Court related to the amount to be paid by the plaintiff for the improvement. The trial court valued the improvement at Rs. 7,986, being the cost of the improvement or 30.6.45 the date of the preliminary decree. The Supreme Court valued it at Rs. 19,000 being the sale price of the improvement on the date of dispossession, namely 1.7.48. The Supreme Court held that a Court "should assess the valuation of the improvement as at a date as near as possible to the date of actual eviction rather than the date of election". The Supreme Court further observed, "In cases of this kind it is not the actual cost of improvement which concludes the matter. The principle...is what is the worth of the improvement...as a vendible subject." Even after a redemption-decree has been passed, the mortgagee can in execution-proceedings claim a revaluation if he can show that since the passing of the decree the value of the improvements has increased—Ramuni v. Shanku, 10 Mad. 367. So also, the mortgagor would be entitled to obtain a reduction of the amount mentioned in the decree, if he can prove that any part of the improvements assessed therein has, since the passing of the decree, ceased to exist—Krishna v. Srinivasa, 20 Mad. 124 (126).

230. Para 3 :—Growing crops :—Where the mortgagor has deposited in Court the whole money due on his mortgage, the decree should not be subjected to the condition that the defendant (usufructuary mortgagee) is not to be evicted till the crops he had sown are cut; but he is entitled to the crops sown by him and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them—Deo Dat v. Ram Autar, 8 All 502.

As to the meaning of the "growing crops" see Note 18.

52. During the active prosecution in any Court having authority in British India, or established beyond the limits of British India by the Governor-General in Council, of a contentious suit or proceeding in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court, and on such terms as it may impose.

52. During the pendency in any Court having authority "within the limits of India excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir" "or established beyond such limits" by the Central Government of any * * suit or proceeding which is not collusive and in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court and on such terms as it may impose.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, the pendency of a suit or proceeding shall be deemed to commence from the date of the presentation of the plaint or the institution of the proceeding in a Court of competent jurisdiction, and to continue until the suit or proceeding has been disposed of by a final decree or order and complete satisfaction or discharge of such decree or order has been obtained, or has become unobtainable by reason of the expiration of any period of limitation prescribed for the execution thereof by any law for the time being in force.

Amendment :—The following amendments have been made by sec. 14 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929):—

- (a) For the words "active prosecution" the word "pendency" has been substituted; see Note 231.
- (b) For the words "a contentious suit or proceeding" the words "any suit or proceeding which is not collusive" have been substituted; see Note 242.
- (c) The Explanation has been added; see Notes 237 and 238.

By the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, which came into operation on the 1st April, 1937, the expression "the Central Government or the Crown Representative" was substituted for "the Governor-General in Council". Then by A.L.O. 1948 the words "or the Crown Representative" were omitted. Then the words "within the limits of India excluding the States of Jammu and Kashmir" have been substituted for other words by the Part B States (Laws) Act III of 1951 read with A.L.O. 1948 and A.L.O. 1950.

231. The reasons for the amendment of 1929 is to obviate the difficulties created by the words 'active prosecution' and 'contentious'.

As to the contentious nature of a suit and its active prosecution before amendment see Madhoram v. Kirtya Nand, A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 96.

231A. Amended section, whether retrospective :—It was held by the Nagpur High Court that the amended section 52 had no retrospective effect—Harlal v. Lala Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 138, 133 I.C. 395. But it is to be noted that this section is not among those sections which have been specifically provided in sec. 63 of the Amending Act XX of 1929 as not to have retrospective effect. So by the terms of the said sec. 63 anything already done before 1st April 1930 in any proceeding pending in a Court on that date is only saved. Otherwise the amended section, it is submitted with respect, has a retrospective effect. In a recent case the Bombay High Court has held that sec. 52 is retrospective in its operation—Leelachand v. Veshnu Ganesh, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 409, 47 Bom.L.R. 330. The Privy Council has however held that when the mortgage came into existence before the amendment of 1929 came into force the doctrine of lis pendens applicable to the case is that enacted in sec. 52 before the amendment—Madho Ram v. Kritya Nand, A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 96, 49 C.W.N. 75, (1944) 2 M.L.J. 343. For a general discussion of this question see Note 1A.

232. Principle of section :—The principle of this section will be found in the judgment of Lord Justice Turner in the leading case of Bellamy v. Sabine, 1 DeG. & J. 566. The doctrine is intended to prevent one party to a suit making an assignment inconsistent with the rights which may be established in the suit and which might require a further party to be impleaded in order to make effectual the Court's decree—Tilake Chand v. Beattie & Co., 29 C.W.N. 953, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 204 (211), 94 I.C. 538. See also Faiz Hussain v. Prag Narain, 34 I.A. 102 (105), 29 All. 339, 11 C.W.N. 561, 5 C.L.J. 563; Achut v. Shivajirao, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 244 (252-253), 39 Bom.L.R. 224, 170 I.C. 172; see also Krishnabai v. Savalram, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 93 (95), 51 Bom. 37, 100 I.C. 582. The basis of the doctrine of lis pendens is that the parties to a suit cannot be allowed to shorten the arms of the Court in dealing with the suit by transfers to a third party—Gangubai v. Pagubai, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 403, 41 Bom.L.R. 815, 185 I.C. 81. The broad purpose of this section is to maintain the status quo unaffected by the act of any party to the litigation pending its determination. The applicability of the section does not depend on matters of proof or strength or weakness of the case of one side or the other in bona fide proceedings. The Court is in error where it lays stress on the fact that the agreement on which the suit is based has not been registered—Gouri Dutt v. Sukur Mohammad, A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 147, 75 I.A. 175, 52 C.W.N. 840.

Doctrines of equity, not provided for in the Act, should not be imported into its construction—Gendmal v. Laxman, A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 86, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 852.

The doctrine upon which the section is based is that it would plainly be impossible that any action or suit could be brought to a successful termination if alienation pendente lite were permitted to prevail. During a litigation nothing new should be introduced—pendente lite nihil innovetur. The correct mode of stating the doctrine is that "pendente lite neither party to the litigation can alienate the property in dispute so as to affect his opponent"—Hiranya Bhusan v. Gouri Dutt, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 227, 76 C.L.J. 191.

To a certain extent the principle underlying this section has been embodied in Or. 21, r. 102, C. P. Code, and it is not permissible to travel beyond that provision and rely upon the analogy of sec. 52, T. P. Act—Kanagasabai v. Poornathammal, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 458, (1947) 2 M.L.J. 97.

Where a person intermeddles with outstanding disputes, he does so at his peril, and if he chooses to stand by and let his right slide, he cannot afterwards claim to be given the benefit of his laches and placed in a better position than his transferor to the detriment of others who have acquired rights in pending proceedings—Jaharmal v. Ramdas, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 161, 168 I.C. 1003.

The doctrine of lis pendens cannot prevail over the rule of res judicata in case the latter rule applies—Official Assignee v. Jagabandhu, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 552, 38 C.W.N. 492, 61 Cal. 494, 150 I.C. 321; Digambarrao v. Rangrao, A.I.R. 1949 Bom. 367. Once a judgment is duly pronounced by Court of competent jurisdiction in a suit in which the doctrine of lis pendens applies, that decision is res judicata and binds not only the parties thereto but also the transferees pendente lite from them, ibid.

This section for the purposes of Indian Courts contains the entire law on the subject of lis pendens—Shyam Lal v. Sohan Lal, A.I.R. 1928 All. 3 (9), 50 All. 290, 106 I.C. 255.

Section 52 is not intended for the protection of transferors. So far as they themselves are concerned they are bound by their own transfers—Ibid. The effect of s. 52 is not to wipe out a sale pendente lite altogether but to subordinate it to the rights based on the decree in the suit. As between the parties to the transaction it is perfectly valid—Nagubai v. B. Shamu Rao, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593. A transfer pendente lite can be recognised for the purpose of a consolidation proceeding—Barjor v. Dy. Director of Consolidation, Kanpur, 1968 All. L.J. 177; see also Subramania Iyer v. T. D. Ramaswami Pillai, A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 225.

Essentials of this section :—

- (i) There must be pendency of a suit or proceeding.
- (ii) The litigation must be pending in a competent Court.
- (iii) The suit or proceeding must not be collusive.
- (iv) A right to immoveable property must be in dispute.
- (v) A right to immoveable property must be directly and specifically in question.
- (vi) The property in dispute must be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the litigation.
- (vii) The alienation must affect the rights of the other party.

See Krishnappa v. Shivappa, 31 Bom. 393, and Hiranya v. Gouri A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 227, 76 C.L.J. 191.

232A. Application of the section :—A receiver in insolvency is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens unless he is made a party to the suit—Mokshagunam v. Ramakrishna, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 335, 42 M.L.J. 426, 70 I.C. 357. The Official Receiver is not the legal representative of the insolvent. The devolution in favour of the Official Receiver under sec. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act being a devolution by law, the present section has no application—Official Receiver v. Sait Jessa-singh, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 687, (1951) 1 M.L.J. 200. But a sale of the insolvent's property by the Official Receiver is a private sale and not a sale by operation of law and therefore is governed by sec. 52—Kulandaivelu v. Soubhagayammal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 350, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 261. This section does not apply to an assignment by a person who is not a party to the suit at the time of the assignment—Ammayya v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 487, 86 I.C. 187. As to the scope of this section see Lakshmanan v. Kamal, A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 67.

A pendente lite transferee is no doubt bound by the decree so far as it goes against his transferor, but it is quite a different thing to say that such a transferee should be treated for all purposes as if he was a party to the suit—Shyam Lal v. Sohan Lal, A.I.R. 1928 All. 3 (5), 50 All. 290, 106 I.C. 255.

Where during the pendency of a mortgage suit or a proceeding consequential upon a decree passed in such suit, the mortgagor in the ordinary course of management of his property grants a lease of the mortgaged property in whole or in part for any adequate rent, the lease is not obnoxious to the provisions of this section. The lessee holds the property subject to the rights of the mortgagee-decree-holder—Ram Dayal v. Ashgar, A.I.R. 1930 All. 289, 126 I.C. 28. See the new sec. 65A. Similarly, the mortgagee in possession has a right under sec. 76, cl. (a) to lease the mortgaged lands in the ordinary raiyati right during the period of his possession even after the institution of a suit for redemption. Such rights are not taken away by sec. 52 and such leases are not affected by this section—Pramatha v. Sashi Bhusan, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 763, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 181. Where the mortgagee leases out the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, who creates a sub-lease after the passing of the final decree in the mortgage suit by the mortgagee, the sub-lease is not hit by lis pendens because the sub-lessee's possession must be regarded as the tenant's possession—Amritlal v. Chintaman, 1959 M.P.C. 317. Where after executing a security bond in favour of the Court, the property given as security is alienated, the rule of lis pendens operates, and the transferee becomes bound by the judgment or decree passed in the case—Jugannatha v. Ram Chandra, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 589.

The doctrine of lis pendens does affect the proceedings in earlier instituted suits. If they are affected or rendered ineffective by subsequent proceedings, the reason must be not lis pendens but something else. Consequently, a sale in execution of a mortgage-decree pending a subsequent suit challenging the validity of that decree is not hit by the doctrine of lis pendens—Annappurna v. Sarat Chandra, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 394, 46 C.W.N. 355.

A bona fide purchaser of property from a husband during the pendency of a collusive maintenance suit against the latter by his wife is not affected by the charge subsequently created in favour of the wife on such property—Earamma v. Nathegowda, A.I.R. 1954 Mys. 26.

A transfer pendente lite is not absolutely prohibited, i.e., it is not void or illegal—Gobardhan v. Sukhamoy, infra.

The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to movables—Official Receiver v. Lalchand, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 94, 1942 M.W.N. 470.

Principles underlying this section applied to Travancore-Cochin, though the Act did not, Narayanan v. Sankaran, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch 187.

233. Application of section to execution and revenue sales :—Reading the plain language of this section with that of section 2, (d) it is quite clear that the Legislature did not intend that any sale in execution of a decree or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction should be affected by the provisions of this section. But still it is now settled law that the doctrine of lis pendens as laid down in this section (though not the section itself) applies as well to involuntary as to voluntary transfers; and therefore a purchaser of a property at an execution sale during the pendency of a suit in respect of the same property is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. See Parvati v. Kishan Singh, 6 Bom. 567; Byramji v. Chunilal, 27 Bom. 266; Bhaskar v. Shankar, 26 Bom. L.R. 418, 80 I.C. 453, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 467; Sukhdeo v. Jamna, 23 All. 60; Jharoo v. Chintamani, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 111, 13 Cut. L.T. 49; Subba Rao v. Venkateshacharlu, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 207, (1948) 2 M.L.J. 128; Gobardhan v. Sukhamay, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 481, I.L.R. (1949) 2 Cal. 378; Md. Saddiq v. Ghasi Ram, A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 322 (F.B.), 48 P.L.R. 505; Thakurai Bhup Narain Singh v. Nawab Singh, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 729; Samarendra Nath Sinha v. Krishan Kumar Nag, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1440; Kedarnath v. Ganeshram, 1969 S.C. 787. A court sale in execution of a money decree held subsequent to the institution of a mortgage suit is hit by lis pendens—People's Co-operative Bank Ltd. v. Parvathy Ayyana Pillai, A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 133.

But the principle on which the doctrine of lis pendens rests is applicable as between the opponents with regard to alienations made by one of them during the pendency of the suit. The doctrine cannot be applied as between parties to a suit who are arrayed upon the same side and between whom there is no dispute to be adjudicated. The auction-purchaser in a mortgage suit is a representative of the decree-holder and for purposes of the doctrine is arrayed in the same camp with the decree-holder and the purchase by him is not affected by another decree obtained by the decree-holder in a suit which was pending at the time of the purchase—Rajkishore v. Sultan Jehan, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 58.

This section embodies a general rule of lis pendens to avoid multiplicity of suits and the principle applies to execution proceedings, whether the section itself applies or not—Velayadha v. Co-operative Rural Society, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 40, 57 Mad. 426, 148 I.C. 1098. So, where in proceedings under Rule 14 of the Rules framed under the Co-operative Societies Act II of 1912 the award is passed and such award is put before the Civil Court for execution and the Court directs sale of the mortgaged property, any purchase during such proceedings falls under the rule of lis pendens—Ibid.

The proceedings before a revenue Court may also operate as lis pendens—Jairam v. Maifujali, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 283, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 324; Nata Padhan v. Banchha Baral, A.I.R. 1968 Orissa, 36. The auction-purchaser of a share of an estate sold for arrears of revenue under sec. 13 of the Bengal Revenue Sale Act (XI of 1859) may be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens if he makes the purchase during the pendency of a litigation to enforce a mortgage upon that property—Bhawani Koer v. Mathura Prosad, 7 C.L.J. 1. Where a sale takes place during the pendency of a suit on a mortgage, the purchaser is bound by the result of the suit under the doctrine of lis pendens. The purchaser under the revenue sale is therefore bound by the sale in the mortgage suit and cannot resist such a purchaser's claim to possession of the property under sec. 162 U. P. Land Revenue Act III of 1901, the revenue sale of the defaulter's immovable property would concern only the right, title and interest of the defaulter—Ram. Narain v. Salig Ram, A.I.R. 1952 All. 298. The principle of lis pendens applies to a case where a person purchases a share of an estate sold for arrears of revenue, at a time when execution proceedings in a suit to enforce an existing mortgage on the property are pending. In such a case, the purchaser at revenue sale will be deemed to have purchased the mortgagor's equity of redemption, and if he fails to redeem the mortgage before the mortgage-sale is confirmed, his right to redemption of the property as well as title to the property is lost—Har Shankar v. Sheo Gobind, 26 Cal. 966; Mahomed Tayeb v. Hem Chandra, 10 C.L.J. 590, 4 I.C. 334; Prem Chand v. Purnima, 15 Cal. 546; Mathura v. Dasai, 1 Pat. 287. But the doctrine of lis pendens cannot be extended so as to affect a revenue sale proper—Kesavan v. Raman, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 230; Raman v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 96. A sale held for arrears of revenue is valid and will extinguish prior encumbrances. Pending suits or decree based on mortgages or other charges created by a landholder would not, in any way, affect a revenue sale—Krishan v. Kumaraswami, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 61; Neelakantaru v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 122. The doctrine of lis pendens does not affect sales under the Revenue Recovery Act—Jayaram Mudaliar v. Ayyaswami Mudaliar, (1969) 2 M.L.J. 209. Pending a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of immoveable property, the property cannot be sold in execution so as to defeat the plaintiff's claim—Bhaskar v. Shankar, 26 Bom. L.R. 418, 80 I.C. 453, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 467. During the pendency of a mortgagee's suit for sale of the mortgaged property, a third person obtained a money decree against the mortgagor and had the mortgaged property sold. Held that in the absence of fraud, the sale in execution under the money decree was a sale pendente lite as regards the mortgage-suit, and as the auction-purchaser bought only the equity of redemption, his title to the land would be subject to the rights of the mortgagee—Abdul Majid v. Abdul Majid, 4 Bur. L.T. 44, 9 I.C. 772; Tinoodhan v. Tirulokya, 17 C.W.N. 413, 18 I.C. 177; Chaman Lal v. Kamaruddin, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 655, 3 F.L.T. 757, 67 I.C. 262; Qudratulla v. Gulgandi, 29 O.C. 37, 89 I.C. 570, 12 O.L.J. 346, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 496. Where the first mortgagee obtained a decree for sale on the foot of his mortgage without impleading the second mortgagee, and after the decree but before the sale the second mortgagee sued and obtained a decree for sale and then brought the property to sale, held that the sale under the first mortgagee's decree being pending the second mortgagee's suit, the rights of the purchaser under that sale are subject to the rights obtained under the second mortgagee's decree and sale thereunder—Venkatasubbarayudu v. Nagamma, 59 M.L.J. 39, 31 L.W. 520, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 570 (572), 127 I.C. 228. So also, where the property was sold for arrears of income-tax under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act during the pendency of execution proceedings on a mortgage-decree passed in respect of the same property, held that the doctrine of lis pendens applied, and the purchaser at the revenue sale acquired only the equity of redemption in respect of the defaulter's share in the mortgaged property. If therefore he did not take steps to prevent the subsequent sale held under the mortgage-decree, his right to redeem the property was extinguished—Kadir Mohideen v. Muthu Krishna, 26 Mad. 230. K brought a suit against P to recover possession of land. Whilst this suit was pending, the right, title and interest of P in the land were sold in execution of a decree against him at the instance of a judgment-creditor, and purchased by G. K's suit for possession was decreed, and G instituted a suit against K to eject him and obtain possession of the land. Held that the doctrine of lis pendens applied, and G was not entitled to recover the land—Gobind Chunder v. Guru Churn, 15 Cal. 94 (99).

The doctrine of lis pendens applies also to a sale held by order of a Magistrate under sec. 88 Cr. P. Code. So, where during the pendency of a suit in a Civil Court, the suit-property was attached and sold by the Magistrate under sec. 88, Cr. P. Code, and subsequently the Civil Court decreed the suit, held that the decree-holder could recover the property from the purchaser in the criminal proceeding—Narayan v. Gobind, 31 Bom. L.R. 345, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 200 (201), 116 I.C. 271. Where during the pendency of a mortgage suit the mortgaged properties are sold for realizing the abkari dues, forest dues or dues other than the land revenue, the purchaser will not get such right as in the sale for arrears of land revenue and the doctrine of lis pendens will apply—Korlapati v. Medida, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1161, 51 M.L.J. 475, 98 I.C. 201. But the Rangoon High Court has held in a case of municipal taxes that the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply as it would be a dangerous extension of the doctrine to hold that neither the Government nor a local body could recover its taxes or rates from a defaulter so long as a law-suit was pending between the defaulter and some of his other creditors (though in this case it was a mortgage suit)—Abdur Rauf v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 175, 7 Rang. 113, 117 I.C. 575. A sale by the defendant during the pendency of a suit even though pursuant to an agreement to sell prior to the institution of the suit is hit by lis pendens—Dakshinamurthi v. Sitharamayya, (1958) 1 Andhra W. R. 85.

233A. Mortgage suits :—It has been decided by the Allahabad High Court that where a sale in execution of a decree obtained on foot of a puisne mortgage takes place during the pendency of a suit on the prior mortgage, it is affected by the rule of lis pendens, so as to make the purchaser's right subject to the result of the prior mortgagee's suit—Ram Sanehi v. Janki Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 All. 466 (473, 489), (1931) A.L.J. 729, 134 I.C. 1. But the dissentient view of Mukherji, J., seems to be the correct one. He is of opinion that where a transfer takes place as a result of an auction sale, held during the pendency of a prior mortgagee's suit, in execution of a subsequent mortgagee's decree, the principle of lis pendens will not apply. If, however, both the subsequent mortgagee and mortgagor be parties to the prior mortgagee's suit, the auction purchaser in the subsequent mortgagee's suit will be bound by the result of the prior mortgagee's suit, but not on the principle of lis pendens, but because the subsequent mortgagee and all who are parties to his suit claim under titles inferior to that of the prior mortgagee—at p. 487. The same view has been taken by the Madras High Court where it has been held that a sale in pursuance of a mortgage decree, the mortgage having been executed before the institution of the suit, is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens—Chinnaswami v. Darmalinga, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 566, 139 I.C. 309; Sripathi Rangiah v. Batkari Maisamma, A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pr. 722; Jayarama Mudaliar v. Ayyaswami Mudaliar, (1969) 2 M.L.J. 209. But see Tatya Lagamanna Desai v. Yogabai, A.I.R. 1962 Bom. 191. Where a mortgage-decree has been passed for sale of some of the mortgaged properties and subsequently a suit for declaration that the decree is not binding is instituted and the properties are sold during pendency of the suit, the sale is not hit by the doctrine of lis pendens—Annapurna v. Sarat Chandra, 46 C.W.N. 355 following Chinnaswami v. Darmalinga, supra. As between the mortgagee on the one hand and the person who purchases the equity of redemption pending the mortgage suit on the other, the right of redemption is subject to the rights of the mortgagee decree-holder. But where such person purchases the rights of the mortgagee and thus steps into the shoes of the mortgagee decree-holder, as between him and another person who is no party to the mortgage suit, his right to the equity of redemption must be deemed to have stood intact and is not affected by the doctrine of lis penuens—Amulya Krishna v. Raruli Pioneer Co-operative Bank, 70 C.L.J. 397, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 150, 187 I.C. 416.

Both the mortgages being simple mortgages, in the suit by the second mortgagee the first mortgagee was, but in the suit by the first mortgagee the second mortgagee was not, made a party. During the pendency of the suit of the second mortgagee, the first mortgagee obtained a decree in his suit, purchased the mortgaged properties himself in execution and having got possession settled the lands with Defendant 2. In a suit by the second mortgagee who after the decree purchased the property in execution but failed to obtain possession, it was held that the purchase and the subsequent settlement by the first mortgagee was affected by the rule of lis pendens—Md. Juman v. Akali, (1943) 17 C.W.N. 682. After the passing of the mortgage decree A, one of the co-mortgagors judgment-debtors sold his share in the mortgaged property to B. During the execution proceedings A died, but his legal representatives were not brought on the record and in the execution proceedings against the other co-mortgagor judgment-debtors the mortgaged property was sold. Held that B as the purchaser of A's share was affected by the mortgage decree by reason of this section; but he could not be in a worse position than A himself would have been. As the execution sale was void and did not affect A's share in the mortgaged property B was not affected even by the doctrine of lis pendens—Lzelachand v. Vishnu Ganesh, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 409, 47 Bom. L.R. 330. While a suit on a mortgage was pending, the landlord obtained a rent-decree and put it in execution after the preliminary but before the final decree in the mortgage suit. The landlord purchased the holding in execution, but owing to failure to serve a notice under sec. 212 (2) of the Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913 on one of the co-sharers what passed to him was only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. Held that the landlord's purchase was subject to the mortgage-decree which was passed subsequently—Udayanarayan v. Radhashyam, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 36, I.L.R. (1949) 1 Cut. 559.

The principle of lis pendens is applicable even to Court sales, and a purchaser of mortgaged property in Court sale held after the mortgage suit was filed is bound by the mortgagee's decree as at the sale he purchases the right, title and interest of the mortgagor and cannot claim a better right than the mortgagor—Lalit Mohan v. Hardat Rai, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 146 (147), 41 P.L.R. 629. A purchaser at a mortgage sale purchases the rights of both the mortgagor and mortgagee as they stood on the date of the mortgage. Where therefore a mortgage is executed before the institution of a suit for enforcing a charge of maintenance on the mortgaged property and the mortgage sale takes place during the pendency of such suit, the purchaser at such sale is not hit by the doctrine of lis pendens—Renuka Bala v. Nagendra Nath, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 655 (656), 43 C.W.N. 666, 184 I.C. 518. The purchaser could not be said to be representative of the judgment-debtor in the proper sense of the term which alone would make him liable by the decree passed in the pending suit—Ibid. A sale in execution of a mortgage-decree will not be hit by the doctrine of lis pendens, if the mortgage has taken place long before the institution of the suit, even though the sale might have taken place during the pendency of that suit—Sheikh Bikala v. Sheikh Ali, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 210, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 486.

See also Gendmal v. Laxman, A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 86, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 852.

A suit to enforce a mortgage on 'immoveable property is a suit in which a right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question within the meaning of section 52 and a transfer of the mortgaged property during the pendency of such suit is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens—Parvati v. Govindaraja, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 359, 45 M.L.J. 682, 76 I.C. 896; Ram Charan v. Parmeshwar, A.I.R. 1933 All. 201, 55 All. 235, 144 I.C. 70; Sahib Chandra v. Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 243, 51 All. 696, 56 I.A. 339, 33 C.W.N. 1091, 119 I.C. 612. This doctrine was applied by the Allahabad High Court in a case where the purchase was made in an execution sale—Sital v. Md. M. Yar Khan, A.I.R. 1934 All. 972, 149 I.C. 187. If a preliminary decree in respect of two plots along with other property has been passed in favour of the mortgagee, sec. 52 applies to the subsequent mortgage of the same plots—Radhey Lal v. Ram Lal, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 49, 152 I.C. 1018.

Where a subsequent mortgagee, who in execution of a decree for sale on the foot of his mortgage has purchased the mortgaged property, brings a suit for possession against a transferee pendente lite who redeemed certain prior mortgages, the mortgagee decree-holder is entitled to an unconditional decree for possession of the property. The transferee pendente lite cannot rely on his transfer and claim re-imbursement with respect to the earlier mortgages redeemed by him—Har Prasad v. Sita Ram, A.I.R. 1940 All. 141, 187 I.C. 332.

Where a person purchased property at an auction sale in execution of Government dues while a mortgage suit was pending and where the property was sold in execution of the final decree for sale, the doctrine of lis pendens applied and the purchaser at the first auction sale had no longer any right of redemption—Dodey Ram v. Mt. Gulkando, A.I.R. 1929 All. 601, 118 I.C. 660.

A mortgagee who has purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his mortgage decree is entitled to avoid a lease on the ground that it was granted by the mortgagor during the pendency of the mortgage suit. Purchaser in execution of a money decree however has no such right—Nisar v. Sundar, A.I.R. 1927 All. 657, 25 A.L.J. 1025, 104 I.C. 292. Sec. 52 of the T. P. Act prevents the mortgagor from creating any lease during the pendency of a mortgage suit so as to affect rights of the mortgagee or the purchaser at the sale in execution of the mortgage decree—Ramdas v. Fakira Pandu, A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 19. But where during the pendency of a mortgage suit the mortgagor executed a lease of the mortgaged properties in favour of a third person, the mortgaged properties were sold to the mortgagee at a private sale and the entire decretal amount was paid out of the sale consideration, the lease was not invalid under this section inasmuch as execution of the lease did not affect the rights of any party to the mortgage suit—Ram Chander v. Maharaj Kunwar, I.L.R. 1939 All. 809, 1939 A.L.J. 692, A.I.R. 1939 All. 611. B. purchased a property which was subject to three mortgages and thereafter cleared two of the mortgages. In the meantime the mortgagee of the third mortgage, who instituted a suit for sale even before B's purchase, obtained a decree, in execution of which, the property was purchased by the assignee of the mortgagee. C, an assignee of the mortgagee's assignee, sought to take delivery of possession from B, who asked the court to direct C to pay the amount which he had to pay to clear the two mortgages. Held that B was not entitled to such direction by reason of lis pendens—M. Raghavan Pillai v. Thamman Thommi, A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 121. Where a mortgage comprises not only the land but also future crops and the final decree on the mortgage declares a charge on such future crops, a lease of the property granted after the final decree is subject to the charge and any transfer of such crops or the right to raise them during the litigation will be affected by the principles embodied in sec. 52—Korlapalli v. Sethraje, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 942, 71 M.L.J. 638, 165 I.C. 951.

Charge :—Though a charge does not create any interest in the property, it none the less amounts to a right to the property within the meaning of this section, and therefore a claim to have a charge on certain property in a suit attracts the doctrine of lis pendens—Hiranya v. Gouri, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 227, 76 C.L.J. 191; Govindun Sankaran v. Sankaran Achuthan, A.I.R. 1955 Trav. Cochin 234; Nagubai v. B. Shama Rao, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 593.

Where in execution of the personal liability clause of a decree as well as a charge liability for payment of money the property is attached and sold, a purchaser prior to the auction sale but after the date of the decree having no notice of the charge at the time of his purchase will be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens inasmuch as no complete satisfaction or discharge of even a declaratory charge decree can be predicted so long as the possibility of the enforcement of the charge by way of a separate suit remains—Rajagopala v. Abdul Shukkoor, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 396, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 83.

A purchaser of properties subject to a charge created by a compromise decree the satisfaction or discharge of which has not been obtained or has not become barred by limitation does not get any assistance from the Proviso to sec. 100 even though he is a purchaser for value without notice of the charge. So long as the decree is not satisfied and is kept alive, the purchase is hit by the rule of lis pendens irrespective of whether the purchase is a bona fide transaction or not—Arunachalam v. Lingiah, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 71. If a charge is created by a decree for maintenance and the decree-holder purchases the property charged in execution of his decree, such purchase shall prevail over a prior purchase in execution of a money-decree during the pendency of the suit for maintenance, because the prior purchase is hit by lis pendens—Shyam Narain v. Khubla Mahito, A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 238.

234. Sale by mortgagee under power :—This section does not apply to a suit for redemption brought by the mortgagor who has given to the mortgagee under the mortgage an express power of sale. Therefore, a private sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee in exercise of such power is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens, and is valid though made during the pendency of a redemption suit filed by the mortgagor—Ramkrishna v. Official Assignee, 45 Mad. 774 (776), 43 M.L.J. 566, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 390, 69 I.C. 407.

235. Pre-emption suits :—The doctrine of lis pendens applies to a suit for pre-emption, and the vendee cannot defeat the pre-emptor's right by transferring the property pending the suit for pre-emption—Ram Shankar v. Nanik Prosad, 17 O.C. 150, 24 I.C. 32; Bhagwan v. Nanak Chand, 49 All. 516, A.I.R. 1927 All. 336 (337), 25 A.L.J. 479; Ghasitey v. Govind, 30 All. 467 (469); Bhagirathi v. Rajkishore, 1930 A.L.J. 766, A.I.R. 1930 All. 354 (355), 122 I.C. 887; Kubra Bibi v. Khudaija, 20 O.C. 13, 38 I.C. 582 (584); Hazara v. Bube Khan, A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 403; Fazal Karim v. Md. Karim, A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 43 (45); see also Krishnabai v. Madhukar, A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 367, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 758; Chanan Singh v. Waryam Singh, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 175, 226 I.C. 434. But when a sale has taken place to a stranger, the vendee's acquisition by gift of a share in the village pending a co-sharer's suit for pre-emption defeats that co-sharer's claim for pre-emption. The decisive date as regards the rights of the co-sharer to pre-empt is the date of the decree—Hans Nath v. Ragho Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 57 (60), 54 All. 189, 59 I.A. 138, 136 I.C. 402. See also Madho Singh v. Sikinner, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 433 (F.B.), 43 P.L.R. 581.

Where pending a suit for pre-emption the vendee sold the property to one having an equal right to pre-empt as the plaintiff, the right of the plaintiff, was not affected by the sale—Ghasitey v. Govind, supra. But in a later Allahabad case, it has been held that in such a case, the proper procedure is to divide the property among the plaintiff (pre-emptor) and the vendee's vendee—Bachan Singh v. Bijai, 48 All. 221, 24 A.L.J. 130, A.I.R. 1926 All. 180 (181), 90 I.C. 238. In this case, some of the pre-emptors dropped out in the course of the suit. The Lahore High Court, however, is of opinion that the doctrine of lis pendens does not affect the validity of a sale effected by the vendee during the pendency of a pre-emption suit to a person possessing a right of pre-emption equal to that of the pre-emptor; nor can the property be divided equally between the pre-emptor and the vendee's vendee—Mool Chand v. Ganga, 11 Lah. 258 (F.B.), 31 P.L.R. 342, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 356 (357). See Salamat v. Nur Mahomed, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 303, 9 Luck. 475, 149 I.C. 258; Bishan Singh v. Khazun Singh, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 838; Nabir Ganai v. Md. Ismail Ganai, A.I.R. 1960 J. & K. 112.

The doctrine of lis pendens applies to a case where before the institution of the suit for pre-emption an agreement to sell the property has been executed by the purchaser in favour of another prospective pre-emptor with an equal right of pre-emption and subsequent to the institution of the suit, in pursuance of the agreement a sale-deed has been executed and registered in the latter's favour, after the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit to enforce his own pre-emptive right. The sale in favour of the latter cannot defeat the plaintiff's suit—Md. Saddiq v. Ghasi Ram, A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 322 (F.B.), 48 P.L.R. 505.

Where the purchaser in a sale sought to be pre-empted has re-transferred the property to another person having a right of pre-emption either equal or superior to that of the plaintiff who sues to pre-empt the sale, if the re-transfer has taken place before the institution of the suit, the transferee can resist the suit on the strength of his own pre-emptive right, regardless altogether of the consideration whether the transfer in his favour was made in recognition of his superior pre-emptive right or could otherwise be regarded as having been made in recognition of such right. In such a case it would be immaterial whether the transfer took the form of a sale, a gift or an exchange—Wazir Ali v. Zahir Ahmad, A.I.R. 1949 E.P. 193 (F.B.), 51 P.L.R. 39. It is settled law that unless a transfer pendente lite can be held to be a transfer in recognition of a subsisting pre-emptive right, the rule of lis pendens applies and the transferee takes the property subject to the result of the suit during the pendency whereof it took place—ibid.

If, pending the suit for pre-emption the vendee sells the property to a person having right of pre-emption superior to that of the plaintiff, the doctrine of lis pendens will not apply, and the purchaser having a preferential right of pre-emption is entitled to retain the property purchased by him—Malik Singh v. Shiam Lal, 1929 A.L.J. 537, A.I.R. 1929 All. 440 (442), 118 I.C. 43; Bhag v. Ujagar, 32 P.L.R. 283, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 435. If, however, at the time of the original sale by the vendor to the vendee, the person having a preferential right of pre-emption did not come forward to assert his right within the period of limitation, and then after a suit for pre-emption was brought by another person, the vendee sold the property to the person having the preferential right, held that the superior pre-emptor, having waived and lost his right, was not entitled to retain the property as against the inferior pre-emptor (plaintiff)—Asa Singh v. Naubat, 19 A.L.J. 143, 61 I.C. 34; Rama Shankar v. Nanik, supra; Kamta Prasad v. Ram Jag, 36 All. 60 (62); Kubra Bibi v. Khudaija, supra.

Even the resale of the property by the vendee to the vendor after the institution of the suit for pre-emption cannot defeat the plaintiff's right of pre-emption—Kedar Nath v. Bankey Behary, 11 I.C. 645 (646) (All.); Rajai v. Irbhan, 3 I.C. 923, 5 N.L.R. 136; Bhikhi Mal v. Debi Sahai, 47 All. 923, A.I.R. 1926 All. 179 (180), 23 A.L.J. 615, 89 I.C. 219; Durga Prasad v. Gangadin, 88 I.C. 202, A.I.R. 1925 All. 502; Kahar Singh v. Jahangir, 47 All. 625, A.I.R. 1925 All. 487 (488), 88 I.C. 761.

Where the plaintiff files a suit to enforce an agreement to reconvey and during the pendency of the suit the defendant purchases the right, title and interest of the plaintiff under the agreement to reconvey in execution of a money decree against the plaintiff, the purchase is not hit by sec. 52; consequently the plaintiff cannot continue the suit any further—Jogesh Chandra v. Tarulata, 60 C.W.N. 1089.

235A. Contribution suits :—Where a person purchases another man's property by private sale during the pendency of a contribution suit against such person in which a simple money decree without reference to any charge was passed, the purchaser is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and is not subject to the decree passed in the suit—Bhagwan v. Akbar, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 571 (572), 165 I.C. 567. But where on a mortgage-decree against two properties jointly mortgaged, one was sold, the sale proceeds of which sufficed to satisfy the whole debt, and a person who had acquired before the sale a share in that property in execution of a simple money-decree against the mortgagor, sued for contribution from the other property and ultimately obtained a decree in his favour, and where that other property was sold away to another during the pendency of the contribution suit, held that the doctrine of lis pendens applied, and that the purchaser could take that other property only subject to the right of contribution decreed against it—Baldeo Sahai v. Baij Nath, 13 All. 371.

236. "Pendency" :—The words "active prosecution" have been substituted by the word "pendency"; consequently, the cases which turned upon the construction of the former expression are no longer of any importance. A right acquired before the commencement of a suit is not affected by the rule of lis pendens even though the remedy for the enforcement of that right may be sought during the pendency of that suit—Seikh Bikala v. Sheikh Ali, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 210, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 486.

237. When "pendency" of suit begins :—Under the Explanation newly added, the pendency of a suit or proceeding begins from the presentation of the plaint or the institution of the proceedings.

Where instead of rejecting the plaint on account of insufficiency of stamp the Court receives the deficit Court-fee and grants time to the plaintiff to make good the deficiency, the plaint must be deemed to have been presented when it was first received by the Court. Hence the principle of lis pendens will affect an attachment made after the date when the plaint was received by the Court—Shivasankarappa v. Shivappa, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 27, 44 Bom. L.R. 874. But if a plaint is presented with insufficient Court-fee, and is returned by the Court, and then the plaintiff re-presents it after paying the proper Court-fee, and then the plaint is registered as admitted on the later date, it is this later date which must be taken as the date of institution of the suit. A transfer of property made between the date of original presentation and this later date is not affected by lis pendens as no suit was pending at that time—Mohendra v. Parameshwar, 60 I.C. 439 (440); Govinda Pillai v. Aiyappan Krishnan, A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 10, where the plaint was returned for presentation in proper court and transfer took place before such presentation. So, where a redemption suit was filed in a wrong Court before a final decree was passed in the mortgage suit and the plaint was then presented in the proper Court when the final decree had already been passed, it could not be held to be ineffective on account of the institution of the subsequent redemption suit—Mustafai Begam v. Raghuraj, A.I.R. 1937 All. 108, I.L.R. 1937 All. 544, 169 I.C. 577. In case of a pauper suit, the active prosecution (i.e., the pendency of the suit) is deemed to commence as soon as the application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is made to the Court. Therefore, where after such an application was made by the plaintiff, but before it was granted, the defendant mortgaged part of the property in dispute, and the plaintiff's suit was subsequently, after contest, decreed, held that this section applied, and the mortgage could not be enforced against the plaintiff—Ambika Partap v. Dwarka Parshad, 30 All. 95 (102); Maddukuri v. Yenuca, A.I.R. 1936

Mad. 853, 71 M.L.J. 301, 164 I.C. 1066. Similarly, where a son has filed an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis praying for partition of the joint family property against his father, the rule of lis pendens would operate from the date of the application for leave and from that date the plaintiff must be deemed to have become separated from his father, and a mortgage executed after the aforesaid application is not binding on his share in the joint family property—Puthumadammal v. Guru Nanjappa, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 275, 1939 M.W.N. 311, 184 I.C. 824; see also Rama v. Venkatusubbayya, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 274, 46 M.L.W. 309, 173 I.C. 347; Bimala Bala v. Sanat Kumar, 65 C.W.N. 701. But where the application is dismissed no rights in respect of the property arise in his favour and hence sec. 52 does not apply—Mt. Sahaudra v. Radha Ballabhji, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 30 (34, 35), 176 I.C. 67.

Where the application for amendment of plaint was made after alienation, the order on it related back to the date of the application—Nallakumara v. Pappayi Ammal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 219, 1945 M.W.N. 127.

The presentation in Court of an award obtained by the plaintiff empowering him to sell certain property mortgaged to him in satisfaction of his debt was held equivalent to the presentation of a plaint for the specific performance of the contract of mortgage; the proceedings consequent thereon constituted a lis pendens during which a mere money-decree-holder could not, by bringing the property to sale, defeat the object of the plaintiff's application to the Court—Pranjiban v. Biju, 4 Bom. 34.

Under the old section, the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply unless the suit was "contentious," and the Courts had to consider from what point of time the suit became contentious. The present section has omitted that ambiguous word, and therefore the decisions bearing on the construction of the word "contentious" need not be considered. It was held in some earlier cases that a suit became contentious only from the date when the summons was served on the defendant, and therefore lis pendens did not begin until such summons was served. See Radhashyam v. Shibu, 15 Cal. 647; Parsotam v. Sanchilal, 21 All. 408; Abhoy v. Annamalai, 12 Mad. 180; Krishna Kamini v. Dinamani, 31 Cal. 658. But the Privy Council overruled these decisions remarking that it would be dangerous to hold that lis pendens did not begin until the summons was served on the opposite party, especially in a country where evasion of service is not a matter of any difficulty. The doctrine of lis pendens would apply even where the transfer took place before service of summons—Faiyaz Husain v. Prag Narain, 29 All. 339, 345 (P.C.); Krishnappa v. Shivappa, 31 Bom. 393; Jogendra v. Fulkumari, 27 Cal. 77 (83); Ghasitey v. Gobind, 30 All. 467 (468). This section becomes operative from the very moment of the institution of a bona fide suit which is not in any way collusive—Shafiqullah v. Samiullah, 52 All. 139, A.I.R. 1929 All. 943 (945). The Explanation now lays down in express terms that, the lis commences from the presentation of the plaint. The question of "active prosecution," as it stood before the amendment was a question of fact and was not allowed to be raised before the Privy Council when it was not raised in the Courts below—

Parameshwari Din v. Ram Charan, 41 C.W.N. 1130 (P.C.). Where a transfer is executed on the date of the filing of the suit, the transfer is not hit by lis pendens unless the plaintiff succeeds in proving that the deed was executed earlier than the filing of the plaint—Madhan Philip v. Ithak, A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 98.

238. How long does "pendency" of suit continue :—The principle of lis pendens extends right up to the conclusion of the litigation including the appellate stages and the execution proceedings—Md. Hanif v. Khairat Ali, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 577 (580), 20 Pat. 346, 192 I.C. 451. See also Ghanshyam v. Ragho, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 64, 10 Pat. 234, 130 I.C. 257; Motichand v. British India Corporation, A.I.R. 1932 All. 210, 1932 A.L.J. 54, 136 I.C. 78. Therefore, this section applies to transfers made during the pendency of execution proceedings—Shivjitram v. Waman, 22 Bom. 939; Thakur Prasad v. Gaya, 20 All. 349; Har Shankar v. Shew Govind, 26 Cal. 966; Abid Hussain v. Munno Bibi, 2 Luck. 496, 102 I.C. 72, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 261 (263); Wazir Husain v. Beni Madho, 7 O.W.N. 676, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 362; Aravamudhu v. Abiramavalli, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 353, 66 M.L.J. 566, 150 I.C. 930. This is now made clear by the Explanation which lays down that the pendency of a suit continues until complete satisfaction of the decree has been obtained. The ruling in Bhoje Mahadev v. Gangabai, 37 Bom. 621, that the lis ends with the decree is no longer correct. See also Kulandaivelu v. Sowbhagyammal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 350, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 261.

The doctrine of lis pendens applies to a transfer made during the pendency of an appeal—Radhika v. Radhamoni, 7 Mad. 96 (98); Moti Chand v. British India Corporation, infra.

So also, the doctrine of lis pendens applies to an assignment made after the passing of the decree and before the filing of the appeal—Govindappa v. Hanumanthappa, 38 Mad. 36 (39). In such a case, the suit is regarded as pending till the decision of the Appellate Court. The decree of the Appellate Court is the "final decree" in the case, and the proceedings in the Appellate Court must be treated as a continuation of the proceedings in the original Court. It is not open to a defeated suitor to file an appeal immediately, as he has to obtain copies of decree and judgment, and he ought not to suffer for the delay imposed by law. There is no reason why this delay should prejudice him in this respect any more than the delays due to adjournment or stay of proceedings—Settappa v. Muthia Goundan, 31 Mad. 268 (270); Dino Nath v. Shama Bibi, 28 Cal. 23 (26, 27), 4 C.W.N. 740.

In the case of a mortgage-suit, a decree under O. 34, r. 4, C. P. Code is, on the face of it, not a final decree but a decree nisi. The suit does not terminate with the decree nisi but continues till the making of the order absolute (final decree) for sale. So, a purchase is to be considered pendente lite, if it is made between the date of a decree nisi and the passing of an order absolute (final decree) for sale—Parsotam v. Chhedda, 29 All. 76 (80); Chunnimal v. Abdul Ali, 23 All. 331 (334); Dhiraj v. Dinanath, 6 N.L.R. 140, 8 I.C. 288 (290); Lachiram v. Bholu, 82 I.C. 452, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 132 (134); Motichand v. British India Corpn., A.I.R. 1932 All. 210, 136 I.C. 78. It has been further held that in a suit for sale on a mortgage, the proceedings for the purpose of lis pendens must be taken to continue till the property is actually sold—Ramasami v. Govinda, 31 M.L.J. 839, 38 I.C. 1 (4); Bepin v. Priyabrata, 26 C.W.N. 36; Marina v. Chaganti, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1039, 87 I.C. 714; Unreported Calcutta Case (referred to in 23 All. 331 at p. 335). The same principle applies in respect of maintenance suits in which the decree declares the maintenance claim a charge on the properties—Abdul v. Seethalakshmi, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 120, 130 I.C. 666. The doctrine of lis pendens is applicable during proceedings to realise the mortgage-money after the decree for sale or after the sale—Bhawani v. Mathura, 7 C.L.J. 1; Braja Nath v. Jogeswar, 9 C.L.J. 346, 1 I.C. 62; Surjiram v. Barhamdeo, 2 C.L.J. 288; Mahomed Tayab v. Hem Chandra, 10 C.L.J. 590, 4 I.C. 731; Ghanshyam Das v. Ragho, 10 Pat. 234, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 64 (67). The lis pendens continues till the final decree is made and the mortgagee or auction-purchaser, as the case may be, is placed in possession—Sami Nath v. Thakur Prasad, A.I.R. 1927 All. 309 (310). But the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to a proceeding under O. 34, r. 6, because it is not a proceeding in which any right to immovable property is directly or specifically in question, the decree passed in such proceeding being a mere money-decree—Badri Singh v. Hazari Singh, 7 O.W.N. 123, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 93 (95). In a suit for foreclosure, the lis does not terminate with the passing of the preliminary decree under O. 34, r. 2, which is only a decree nisi and does not end the litigation; and therefore a transfer of the mortgaged property, made after the passing of the preliminary decree but before it is made final or before an application is made for the final decree, is subject to the doctrine of lis pendens—Parsotam v. Chheddalal, 29 All. 76 (80); Premasukh Das v. Peerkhan, 23 N.L.R. 86, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 21 (22); Ram Charan v. Parmeshwar, 55 All. 235, A.I.R. 1933 All. 201 (202). The law is now clearly stated in the Explanation which lays down that the pendency of a suit continues until the suit has been disposed of by a final decree or order and complete satisfaction of the decree or order has been obtained. See Moti Chand v. B. I. Corporation, 1932 A.L.J. 54, A.I.R. 1952 All. 210.

Similarly, in a suit for account, lis pendens does not terminate with the passing of the decree for account, for the decree does not practically put an end to the suit—Gocool v. Administrator-General, 5 Cal. 726.

Negligence in executing decree :—It was held under the old section that the party relying upon the rule in this section must not be guilty of laches or negligence, and that one element of 'active prosecution' of a suit was that there must be no negligent intermission in its continuance. Therefore, where nothing was done in a suit after the decree during the 7 years which elapsed between the date of the decree and the date of the transfer, held that the suit in which the decree was passed could not affect that title of the purchaser as a lis pendens, and the transferee took the property unaffected by the decree-holder's equitable lien created by the decree—Venkatesh v. Maruti, 12 Bom. 217. In another case also, where within four years after the passing of the decree no execution proceedings were taken, and the judgment-debtor thereafter sold a portion of the property, it was held that it could not be said that the purchase was made during the active prosecution of a suit or proceeding—Bhoje Mahadev v. Gangabai, 37 Bom. 621, 21 I.C. 54. So also, where there was a delay of two years in executing a decree for specific performance, it was held that there was no active prosecution on the part of the decree-holder—Haralal v. Lala Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 138 (140), 133 I.C. 395; Lakshman v. Rama Chandra, 34 Bom. L.R. 117, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 301. Under the present section, by reason of the omission of the words “active prosecution” the question of negligence has become immaterial; and the Explanation extends time of lis pendens up to the date of satisfaction of the decree.

Transfer during claim suit :—A suit under O. XXI, r. 63 being only a continuation of the claim proceedings, an alienation of property made during the continuation of the proceedings originated by the claim petition till the disposal of the claim suit, must be deemed an alienation pendente lite, and the alienee takes his alienation subject to the result of the claim suit or appeal—Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader, 38 Mad. 535 (541), 26 M.L.J. 449, 25 I.C. 1; Khairulla v. Sett Dhanrupmal, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 82, 80 I.C. 905; Ma Ma v. Maung Nya, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 473; Mt. Anundei v. Lala Ram, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 178 (179), 14 Luck. 543, 1939 O.W.N. 408. A proceeding under sec. 144, Code of Civil Procedure is a continuation of the suit in which the original decree (subsequently reserved) was passed—Manikchand v. Gangadhar, A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 288. If on appeal from an order passed under Or. 21, r. 90, the sale in execution of a mortgage decree is set aside but in the meantime the auction purchaser sells away the property, the sale is hit by lis pendens—Ramathal v. Nagarathinammal, (1967) 1 Mad. L.J. 260. The lis continues between the date of dismissal under Or. 9 r. 2, C.P.C. and the date of its restoration—Krishnaji v. Anusayabai, A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 475.

“Or discharge” :—The Explanation says that the pendency of a suit continues until satisfaction or discharge of the decree has been obtained. The words “or discharge” provide for the case of discharge of a decree by the relinquishment by the decree-holder of his decretal rights—Report of the Select Committee (1929).

When “pendency of suit” ends :—When a suit is decreed, and a sale takes place in execution of the decree, the lis ends there, and does not continue up to the date of confirmation of sale, because the confirmation relates back to the date of sale. Therefore, where a female brought a suit for maintenance subsequent to the sale, and pending the suit, the sale was confirmed, held that the sale was not pendente lite and the purchaser took the property free from any charge of maintenance—Lanka Gopalam v. Lenka Ratnamma, 28 M.L.J. 666, 26 I.C. 353 (355).

239. Revival of suit :—Where a suit dismissed for default is revived within a reasonable time, there is no suspension of lis pendens. By the immediate application for re-trial, the plaintiff will be considered constant and continuous in the prosecution—Bishop of Winchester v. Paine, (1805) 11 Ves. 194 (200, 201). The restoration of a suit relates back to the date of the application for restoration. Thus, a suit was dismissed for default on 23rd April, 1907 and an application for restoration was made on the 24th April. On the 25th April the defendant sold away a part of the property in dispute; the application for restoration was granted on 4th March, 1908. Held that the restoration must be deemed to have related back to the date of the application for restoration on the 24th April, so that the sale on the 25th April was affected by the rule of lis pendens—Ashutosh v. Ananta Ram, 50 I.C. 727 (Cal.).

But the doctrine has no application in a case, where on the dismissal of the first suit, the plaintiff is compelled to bring a fresh suit; and, therefore, a transfer made between the date of dismissal and that of the institution of a new suit will not be affected by the rule of lis pendens—Hukum Chand on Res Judicata, pp. 698, 699.

240. Review :—Proceedings on a review are not regarded as a continuance of the original suit, the judgment wherein it is sought to reverse. An application for review is a new and original proceeding which, to affect a stranger as a lis pendens, cannot be regarded pending before service of notice. Prior to the commencement of proceedings on a review and the service of notice, if the decree-holder in the original suit transferred the property decreed to him, the purchaser would be unaffected by the doctrine of lis pendens—Hukum Chand on Res Judicata, pp. 701, 702. "It is clear that when a sale of land is made between the date of final judgment affecting the land and the date when proceeding in error is commenced to reverse that judgment, it is not subject to a lis pendens, and the purchaser will get a good title by the purchase notwithstanding the circumstance that the judgment is afterwards reversed in the proceedings under the writ of error".—Pierce v. Stinde, 11 Moo. P.C. 364.

240A. Suits in British Courts :—This section restricts the operation of the doctrine of lis pendens only to suits in India. Therefore, when a land situate in India is the subject of proceedings in a foreign Court, a mortgage or sale thereof cannot be affected immediately by those proceedings—Palani v. Subrahmanian, 19 Mad. 257. The reason of the rule restricting the application of the doctrine only to suits pending in British Courts is obviously founded upon the fact that in foreign Courts not only the procedure but the remedy may be different and governed by different considerations and laws—Cox v. Mitchell, 7 C.B. (N.S.) 55.

"Court of competent jurisdiction" :—See Explanation.

The Court must have jurisdiction over the property. Where the property is situate outside the jurisdiction of the Court, it cannot pass a valid decree so as to affect an alienation made pendente lite—Karusinga v. Narasinha, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 121, I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 895, 39 Bom. L.R. 1287, 174 I.C. 116. Therefore, where a Hindu widow in possession of land in the mofussil granted a pu'ni lease of the same during the pendency of an equity suit in the Supreme Court at Calcutta against her husband's executors, the lease was held valid as the land was not situated within the (original) jurisdiction of the Supreme Court —Bissanath v. Radha Kristo, 11 W.R. 554. A decree of sale of land in the mofussil passed by the Supreme Court of Calcutta will not have any effect on the land and so cannot bind a purchaser pendente lite—Anandamoyi v. Dhanendra, 16 W.R. (P.C.) 19, 14 M.I.A. 101. But if the property is partly situated within the original jurisdiction of the High Court and partly outside its jurisdiction, the decree passed by the High Court on a mortgage suit in respect of the property (the suit having been instituted with the leave of the High Court under clause 12, Letters Patent) would attract the operation of lis pendens—Kiernander v. Benimadhab, 58 Cal. 598, 134 I.C. 561, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 763 (767).

It has been held that a Registrar of Co-operative Societies under Rule 14 of the Co-operative Societies Act II of 1912 is a Court for the purpose of this section—Velayudha v. Co-operative Rural Society, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 40, 57 Mad. 426, 148 I.C. 1098. But is it a "Court of competent jurisdiction"?

Pendency of suit in wrong Court :—It was held under the old section that the words "active prosecution" did include the prosecution of a suit in a wrong Court which from defect of jurisdiction was unable to entertain it. Therefore, the doctrine of lis pendens applied where the transfer of property took place during the interval between the return of the plaint by the wrong Court and its re-presentation in the proper Court—Ma Than v. Maung Ba, 5 Rang. 101, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 145 (148), 101 I.C. 797; Tangor Majhi v. Jaladhar, 14 C.W.N. 322 (324), 5 I.C. 691. But these decisions are no longer good law, because the words "active prosecution" have been omitted, and because the Explanation expressly lays down that the pendency of a suit commences from the date of presentation of the plaint in a Court of competent jurisdiction. Thus where a minor member of a joint Hindu family institutes a suit for partition against his father in a wrong Court and the father executes a mortgage of the family property before the plaint is presented to the proper Court, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to the mortgage—Nathu Singh v. Anandrao, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 185 (186), 1940 N.L.J. 20, 186 I.C. 688.

On such terms as the Court may impose :—When a party to a suit was not prepared to furnish security to compensate the opposite party in case the latter was restrained from selling the immoveable property in dispute during the pendency of the suit and thus sustained loss, ad-interim injunction asked for by the former could not be granted—Kishan Lal v. Mool Chand, A.I.R. 1950 Aj. 29.

242. Suit must not be collusive :—The words "contentious suit or proceeding" have been replaced by the words "suit or proceeding which is not collusive." Under the old section also, it was held that the word "contentious" was used in contra-distinction to a friendly or collusive suit—Bhagirathi v. Raj Kishore, 1930 A.L.J. 766, A.I.R. 1930 All. 354 (355), 122 I.C. 887; Tinoodhan v. Trailokhya, 17 C.W.N. 413; Bharat Ramanuj v. Srinath, 49 Cal. 220 (226); Tangor Majhi v. Jaladhar, 14 C.W.N. 322 (325), 5 I.C. 691. Where in a previous suit by A to set aside a sale made by him to B as void the plea of B that the sale and mortgage were good was upheld, a purchaser from B pending the suit was however allowed to plead that the mortgage was invalid for want of consideration on the ground that no contest was made by his vendor in the previous suit as to the validity of the mortgage—Manjeshwara v. Vasudeva, 41 Mad. 458 (F.B.). Where a plaintiff in a suit abandons his claim the result of the suit will not operate as lis pendens against any purchaser pendente lite of the suit property—Annamonal v. Chellakutti, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 300.

For the application of this section the proceedings should not be collusive and the right to immoveable property must be directly and specifically in question in the suit. Therefore, when an appeal from a decree in a partition suit is collusive, sec. 52 does not apply—Ram Narain v. Nawab Sajjad Ali, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 99, 21 Luck 185. The mere fact that a suit results in a consent decree does not however render the suit a collusive one so as to bar the application of the doctrine of lis pendens—Madholal v. Gajrabi, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 194, I.L.R. 1951 Nag. 241.

A collusive suit is no real suit at all but a mere pretence—Ahmedbhoy v. Vulleebhoy, 6 Bom. 703; Chenvirappa v. Puttappa, 11 Bom. 708. A collusive suit is a suit in which there is no real contest between the parties—Bharat Ramanuj v. Srinath, 49 Cal. 220 (226). The rule of lis pendens does not apply to a collusive suit or a suit in which the decree is obtained by fraud or collusion—Tangor Majhi v. Jaladhar, 14 C.W.N. 322 (325), 5 I.C. 961; Nagubai v. B. Shama Rao, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593. If the proceeding is tainted with fraud or collusion the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply. A collusive proceeding whether in the Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal is not a real proceeding but a mere pretence, and a decision arrived at in such a proceeding is binding only on the parties and their privies but not on others (transferees)—Nuzhat-ud-dowla v. Dilband Begum, 16 O.C. 225, 21 I.C. 570 (571); Tangor Majhi v. Jaladhar, 14 C.W.N. 322 (325), 5 I.C. 691; Periamurugappa v. Manicka, 49 M.L.J. 68, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 50, 87 I.C. 213; Emdad v. Haran, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 590. There is a fundamental distinction between a proceeding which is collusive and one which is fraudulent—Nagubai v. B. Shama Rao, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593.

A friendly suit stands on the same footing as a collusive suit, and the rule of lis pendens does not apply to a friendly suit, in which there is no contest and the parties bring the suit only to obtain the decree of a Court of Justice declaring their rights as to which they are themselves in perfect agreement—Jogendra v. Fulkumari, 27 Cal. 77 (92); Kathir v. Maremadissa, 38 Mad. 450 (451). As to whether the doctrine of lis pendens applies to administration suits, partition suits, etc., see Note 244, infra.

Decree in suit:—Section 52 expressly provides for all cases of decrees in suits relating to immoveable property whether they involve a mortgage or a charge or recovery of possession—Kulandajvelu v. Soubhagayammal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 350 (1945) 1 M.L.J. 261.

As this section stands, it is immaterial how the decree is obtained in the suit, whether after contest or by consent, and whether the decree is right or wrong. The Court cannot sit in judgment on the previous decree. The principle of lis pendens applies though the right claimed in the suit was not the right given by the decree—Hiranya v. Gouri, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 227, 76 C.L.J. 191.

Ex-parte decree :—The prohibition in this section is only against a suit which is collusive : there is nothing to prevent the doctrine of lis pendens from applying to a suit which is decreed ex-parte, owing to non-appearance of the defendant—Krishnappa v. Shivappa, 31 Bom. 393; Brojo Kishore v. Miajan, 11 C.W.N. 1138. The rule of lis pendens applies to a suit in which an ex-parte decree is passed, which is not fraudulent or collusive—Ram Bharose v. Rampal, 42 All. 319; Bhagirathi v. Raj Kishore, 1930 A.L.J. 766, A.I.R. 1930 All. 354 (355), 122 I.C. 887.

Compromise decree :—This section applies to a compromise decree and such a decree cannot, by reason of its very nature, be expected invariably to reflect the precise relief claimed—Gouri Dutt v. Sukur Mohammad, A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 147, 75 I.A. 175, 52 C.W.N. 840. Where in a suit on an agreement seeking specific performance and alternatively a charge on the property in question, a compromise decree providing in substance for the relief of charge is passed, the decree comes within the expression mentioned above, and the fact the plaintiff by the terms of the compromise relinquished their rights under the agreement could not lead to a different conclusion—ibid. But if the final decision in the pending suit is brought about by fraud and collusion, it cannot affect the rights of the transferee pendente lite—Nathu v. Ramchand, A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 462, 48 Bom. L.R. 301; Lakshmi Gnanapakiam v. Thyne Nadar, A.I.R. 1955 Trav-Co. 3.

A suit originally contentious (i.e., non-collusive) does not cease to be so, merely because it is subsequently compromised by the parties. This section should be construed as applying to a suit originally contested but subsequently compromised, provided that such compromise is not tainted by fraud or collusion—Annamalai v. Malayandi, 29 Mad. 426 (F.B.) (overruling Vythinaidayan v. Subrahmanyam, 12 Mad. 439); Bhagirathi v. Raj Kishore, 1930 A.L.J. 766, A.I.R. 1930 All. 354 (355), 122 I.C. 887; Ramdulari v. Upendra, 4 Pat. 619, 90 I.C. 251, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 462; Mati Lal v. Preo Lal, 13 C.W.N. 226 (232); Bharat Ramanuj Das v. Srinath Chandra, 49 Cal. 220 (227), 25 C.W.N. 806; Parvati v. Govinda, 45 M.L.J. 682, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 359; Periamurugapa v. Manicka, 49 M.L.J. 68, 87 I.C. 213, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 50; Sarat Narain v. Badri, 4 O.W.N. 1275, 107 I.C. 556, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 146 (148); Dhiraj v. Dinanath, 6 N.L.R. 140, 8 I.C. 288 (289); London v. Morris, (1832) 2 L.J. Ch. 35; Windham v. Windham, (1667) 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 280; Norris v. Ite, (1894) 152 Ill. 190; McIlwraith v. Hollander, (1880) 73 Missouri 105; Partridge v. Shepherd, (1886) 12 Pacific 480; Turner v. Babb, (1875) 60 Missouri 342; Chhotabhai v. Dadabhai, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 54, 155 I.C. 715; Krishnaji v. Motilal, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 337, 31 Bom. L.R. 476; Shyam Lal v. Sohan Lal, A.I.R. 1928 All 3 (7), 50 All. 290, 106 I.C. 255; Parvati v. Govindaraja, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 359 (360), 45 M.L.J. 682, 76 I.C. 896. The fact that a sum of money was paid by one party to induce the other party to agree to a compromise decree does not make the doctrine of lis pendens inapplicable—Ramdulari.

v. Upendra, 4 Pat 619, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 462, 90 I.C. 251. As to the effect of a compromise decree, see 50 All. 290 under Note 250.

The mere fact that a suit terminated by a consent decree does not take the suit out of the operation of the doctrine of lis pendens—Tinoodhan v. Trailokhya, 17 C.W.N. 413; Ram Dulari v. Upendra, supra; Juthan v. Parasnath, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 270, 151 I.C. 70. Simply because the defendant admitted the plaintiff's claim, it would not render the suit non-contentious—Gharbhoya v. Deodatta, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 400, 172 I. C. 389.

When a compromise is entered into by a party to the suit with the opposite party subsequent to the transfer of his interest in favour of a stranger with a view to defraud the latter, that compromise will not affect the interest of the transferee and the decree passed on such a compromise will not affect that transferee, that is to say, the principle of lis pendens will not apply to such a case—Venkiteswara v. Mahomed Ali, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 309. Where properties are brought to sale by both parties in pursuance of the same compromise decree, the principle of lis pendens cannot be applied to the earlier sale—Chakravarti v. Gangadara, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 692, (1953) 1 M.L.J. 343.

243. Immoveable property :—Section 52, although in general terms, limits its own operation. For its application the suit must be one in which the rights to immoveable property are in issue, the order must be an order relating to the rights to such property and the transaction which will give place or be made subject to the order of the Court, must be one derogatory from other party's rights to the property in suit. A Court cannot create proprietary rights in a party on grounds distinct from the property itself. That is to say, section 52 only applies to rights of the other "party" involved in or arising out of the property which is the subject-matter of the suit—Ramdhone v. Kedarnath, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 1 (5), 64 C.L.J. 406, 173 I.C. 828. See also Maharaja Bahadur v. Abdul Rahim, 62 I.C. 900 (Pat.); Wigram v. Buckley, (1894) 3 Ch. 483. Where the property is moveable, sufficient protection will be afforded by O. XXXIX, r. 1, and O. XX, r. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

But the principle of this section applies to moveables also. "The fact that sec. 52 of the T. P. Act relates only to immoveable property should not make us blind to the consideration that the legal principle underlying it might appropriately be applied to moveables also, in cases where the alienee of the moveables is proved to have had notice of the pending litigation at the time of the alienation"—Talari Koval v. Viswanathan, 1 L.W. 587, 25 I.C. 133. But in Maharaj Bahadur v. Abdul Rahim, 62 I.C. 900 (901) (Pat.), their Lordships felt doubt whether the principle of lis pendens applied to moveable property such as money; and in Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Nari Mollani, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 279, 40 C.W.N. 683, 63 Cal. 1117, 165 I.C. 17, the Calcutta High Court has definitely held that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to a suit to enforce a claim to a sum of money in which no question of any right to immoveable property is involved. Thus, a suit for rent in respect of an agricultural holding cannot be regarded as a claim to charge specific immoveable property, and if during the pendency of such suit the tenant transfers the holding, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply; and the same view has been expressed in Josna Bank v. Asian Bank, A.I.R. 1962 Ker. 309.

This section applies where immoveable property is transferred pending a suit. If a preliminary decree for sale of a mortgaged property is sold by the mortgagee after the passing of the decree, the doctrine of lis pendens applies, because, although a decree is not by itself immoveable property, still the decree for sale of immoveable property represents all the interest which the mortgagee has in the property, and this transfer of the decree carries with it a transfer of that interest in immoveable property, which after the transfer obviously does not remain in the mortgagee but passes with the decree to the assignee—Chunni Lal v. Abdul Ali, 23 All. 331 (335).

Standing timber:—This section applies to immoveable property. Standing timber is not immoveable property as defined in sec. 3 ante. The scope of sec. 52 cannot be enlarged by introduction into it in an indirect manner the definition of "immovable property" in the General Clauses Act—Thangal v. Kutti, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 59. See Notes 17 and 18 ante. Where A obtains a decree against B's vendor for an injunction restraining the vendor from interfering with A's right to drain off water through the land of B's vendor and B purchases the property after the passing of the decree the only course for A is to execute the decree against B and not to file a separate suit, because the suit of A is governed by this section, easement being an interest in immovable property—Addanki Ramanamma v. Ramavarupa Anthamma, A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 199.

244. Right to property must be directly and specifically in question :— For the doctrine of lis pendens to affect an alienation, it is essential that the property transferred must be directly and specifically involved in the suit during the prosecution of which it was transferred. The question involved in the suit must directly affect an interest in the immoveable property and not merely money secured on it. Thus, where a suit is on a promissory note, the claim is limited to a money demand, and at least only a money-decree can be passed against the defendant; and the fact that the money-decree may be satisfied out of his property does not make the property directly and specifically in issue in the suit—Maung Ta Pan v. Maung Po Thaw, 3 Bur. L.T. 115, 8 I.C. 1208 (1209). So also, where in a suit for the recovery of the sums claimed to be due on a mortgage, only a money-decree not constituting any debt against the mortgaged estate was passed, held that so long as this decree remained unreversed the suit could not be regarded as one in which a right to immoveable property was directly and specifically in question within the meaning of this section—Chatterput v. Maharaj Bahadur, 32 Cal. 198 (212, 217) (P.C.). A proceeding under O. 34, r. 6 is not a proceeding in which a right to immoveable property is directly or specifically in question, because the decree which is passed in such proceeding is a mere money-decree—Badri v. Hazari, 7 O.W.N. 123, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 93 (95).

The essence of the doctrine of lis pendens is that the property in question should form the subject-matter of dispute. Where the property is never the subject of a contest, nor is the charge on it, and the only dispute is about a sum of money, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply—Badridas v. Raja Pratapgar, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 8 (13), 1939 N.L.J. 525, 188 I.C. 23; Abdul Gaffar v. Ishtiaq Ali, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 354 (F.B.), (1943) O.W.N. 261; Kedarnath Lal v. Sheonarain Ram, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 408. Consequently, where by agreement the debtor and the creditor referred the question of the liability of the debtor under certain promissory notes to arbitration and the arbitrator passed an award declaring the amount of the debtor's liability and charging the same upon the property of the debtor, and decree in terms of the award was passed by the Court on the application of the debtor, no right to immovable property was directly and specifically in question, nor any question of charge arose before the arbitrator made his award or thereafter, and therefore this section had no application in such a case, and a transfer of the property charged after the passing of the decree would not be hit by this section—ibid. Moreover proceedings involving a charge on immovable property does not imply that a right to immovable property is directly or specifically in question—ibid. But see Govindan Sankaran v. Sankaran Achuthan, A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Cochin 234, where it has been held that the principle of lis pendens applies not only to a case where the plaintiff seeks to enforce a pre-existing charge but also to a case in which the plaintiff asks for the grant of a charge and that in the latter case the transferee pendente lite takes a transfer from the defendant subject to the rights granted by and enforceable under the decree. See also Nagubai v. B. Shama Rao, A.I.R. 1956 S. C. 593. In cases where there is no plaint, the property must be the subject-matter of the relief sought in the application which starts the contest, e.g., application for probate, administration, etc.—Badridas v. Raja Pratapgar, supra. The mere fact that the defendant does not appear does not destroy the lis, because the fact of suing itself indicates a contest—Ibid. The right to a property cannot be said to be 'directly and specifically in question after its attachment in execution of a money-decree, particularly where the attachment remains undisputed by a judgment-debtor or any other person—Lankaram v. Sundaragopala, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 208, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 1038, 1941 M.W.N. 66. See also Saroop Singh v. Nar Singh, A.I.R. 1929 All. 846, 122 I.C. 679; Mahadeo Saran v. Thakur Pershad, 14 C.W.N. 677, 11 C.L.J. 528, 6 I.C. 40. Where attachment of the joint family property in execution of a money decree obtained against the father alone was effected when the father and the sons were joint and a partition between them took place after the date of attachment: held that the proceeding for execution of the money decree was not a proceeding in which any right to the immovable property of the family was directly and specifically involved. Therefore s. 52 had no application to the partition—Ganpatrao v. Bhinrao, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 278, I.L.R. 1950 Bom. 114.

Where the estate of a deceased person is under administration by the Court, a purchaser from a residuary legatee or heir buys subject to any disposition which has been or may be made of the deceased's estate in due course of administration—Chatterput v. Maharaj Bahadur, 32 Cal. 198 (218) (P.C.). Where during the pendency of a suit brought against the trustees for the construction of the trust-deed, for the ascertainment of the respective rights of the parties interested thereunder and for directions as to the administration of the trust, one of the beneficiaries alienates the property covered by the trust, the alienee takes the property subject to the orders and directions that may be given by the Court—Puran Chand v. Monmotho, 55 Cal. 532 (P.C.), 32 C.W.N. 629 (633), 108 I.C. 342, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 38. Where a creditor of the deceased brought a suit against the heirs of the deceased for recovery of the sum due to him and, if necessary, for administration of the estate and the appointment of a receiver, held that as there was no specific property mentioned in the plaint, the suit was not one in which a right to immoveable property was directly and specifically in question merely because the plaintiff included in his plaint a general prayer that if necessary the estate should be administered by and under the directions of the Court—Bepin Krishna v. Byomkesh, 51 Cal. 1033 (1042), A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 395, 84 I.C. 880.

Suit for rent:—A suit for rent is not a suit in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question. It is primarily a suit for money, and although rent is a first charge on the property, no charge is created in any event before decree. The suit by itself can hardly be regarded as a claim to charge specific property—Syed Jaynal Abedin v. Hyder Ali, 55 Cal. 701, 32 C.W.N. 268 (271, 272), A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 441; Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Nari Mollani, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 279, 40 C.W.N. 683, 63 Cal. 1117, 165 I.C. 17; Nrisingha v. Nil Ratan, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 221, 54 C.W.N. 683; Dirpal v. Karamchand, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 9; Giridhari v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 41, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 195; Sheolal v. Balkrishna, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 114; I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 537. Therefore an involuntary sale effected during the pendency of execution of a rent decree is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens—ibid. The rights referred to in this section are rights such as arise with regard to sale, specific performance, lease and so on; a mere claim for rent is not a 'right to immoveable property' within the meaning of this section—Dhirendra v. Charushashi, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 191, 90 I.C. 431. If in a suit to recover a simple money debt a charge over the immovable property of the debtor is created by the decree sec. 52 is not attracted as no right in immovable property was involved in the suit—Raichand Gulabchand v. Dattatraya Sankar Mote, A.I.R. 1964 Bom. 1.

A suit for specific performance of a contract for sale or lease of immoveable property is a suit in which the immoveable property is directly and specifically involved within the meaning of this section, and the purchaser pendente lite is bound by the result of the suit—Moti Lal v. Preo Lal, 13 C.W.N. 226 (232); Jahar Lal v. Bhupendra, 49 Cal. 495 (499); Vedachari v. Narasimha, 45 M.L.J. 825, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 307, 76 I.C. 793; Hadley v. London Bank, (1865) 3 DeG. J. & S. 63; Bhaskar v. Shankar, 26 Bom. L.R. 518, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 467, 80 I.C. 453; Pancham v. Kandhai, A.I.R. 1934 All. 713, 148 I.C. 653; Khaja Bi v. Mohammad Hussain, A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 269 (F.B.) Sec. 47, Registration Act can only be read together with sec. 54, T. P. Act on the basis that the transfer by a registered instrument under sec. 54 once effected relates back to the date of execution or other conventional date. Consequently a deed of sale executed before the institution of the suit for specific performance of a prior contract for sale of the same property but registered thereafter cannot be held to be executed pendente lite—Sadei Sahu v. Chandramani, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 60, 13 Cut. L.T. 21. If during the pendency of a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell instituted by a subsequent contractee without impleading the prior contractee the property in suit is sold to the prior contractee the sale is not hit by lis pendens—Munnial v. Bhaiyalal, 1962 M.P.L.J. 142.

A suit for declaration of charge upon specific immoveable property does come within the purview of this section. A charge may not create an interest in immovable property, but all that is necessary for bringing a case within the scope of sec. 52 is that a right in immovable property must be directly or specifically in question—Sudhamoyee v. Jessore Loan Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 322, 49 C.W.N. 68; Nagubai v. Shama Rao, A.I.R. 1956, S.C. 593.

Maintenance-suit:—Ordinarily a suit by a Hindu wife for maintenance against her husband is a personal suit, and any purchaser of the family property during the pendency of the suit is not affected by the rule of lis pendens—Gangubai v. Pegubai, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 403, 41 Bom. L.R. 815, 185 I.C. 81. Where a Hindu widow brought a suit for maintenance against her step-son merely enumerating in the plaint the immoveable properties of her husband in the hands of her step-son, but not charging any specific property with the maintenance, held that the plaintiff enumerated the properties merely to enable the Court to determine what amount of maintenance might fairly be given and there was not any right to immoveable property directly and specifically in question. Therefore, a mortgage of the properties by the defendant during the pendency of the suit was not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens under this section—Manika v. Ellappa, 19 Mad. 271 (272, 273). But where in a suit for maintenance, the widow claims that her maintenance should be made a charge on the property, this section applies and an alienation of the property made during the pendency of such a suit is affected by the rule of lis pendens—Dose Thimanna v. Krishna, 29 Mad. 508 (510); Venkatrama v. Rangiah, 46 M.L.J. 258, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 449 (450), 77 I.C. 504; Mahesh v. Mundar, infra. See also, Shidlingappa v. Sankappa, A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 207, I.L.R. 1945 Bom. 885; Ramchandra v. Kamalabai, A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 191, I.L.R. 1949 Bom. 274; Nagubai v. B. Shama Rao, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593; Singamaneni Ramappa v. Amilineni Paddakka, (1968), 1 An L.T. 242. This is so even if the sale is for discharge of the husband's debts or the debts of the joint family or in favour of the holder of a pre-existing mortgage—Gangubai v. Pagubai, supra. See also Seetharamanujacharyulu v. Venkatasubbamma, 54 Mad. 132, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 824, 59 M.L.J. 485; Somasundaram v. Unnamalai, 43 Mad. 800; Sudhirendra v. Ramendra, 51 C.L.J. 364, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 539. Where a decree is passed specially creating a charge on specific immovable property and the decree is not merely a declaratory decree but an executable one, a transferee of the property before the decree is fully satisfied, is bound by the decree, irrespective of the fact that he had no notice of the charge created by the decree—Mahesh v. Mt. Mundar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 141 (F.B.), 1951 A.L.J. 39. See also Ramchandra v. Kamalabai, supra and Tirthabasi v. Trinayani, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 306; Madan Mohon v. Hari Anandilal, A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 269. Where a decree is merely a declaratory one and does not admit of execution proceedings being taken, the lis ends with the passing of the decree and any transfer made by the judgment-debtor after the date of the decree will not be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. But in a maintenance suit the decree does not terminate the litigation, and the lis continues even after the decree, and the transfer of the property executed by the judgment-debtor after the decree in the suit is affected by lis pendens—Shudlingappa v. Sankappa, supra.

When a suit is filed for maintenance with a prayer that it be charged on specified properties it is a suit in which right to immovable property is directly in question and the lis commences on the date of the plaint and not on the date of the decree creating the charge. Hence the purchaser of the suit properties during the pendency of the suit for maintenance but before the decree takes them subject to the result of the suit for maintenance—Nagubai v. B. Shama Rao, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593 ; Krishnaji v. Anusayabi, A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 475.

When a private award creates a charge for maintenance, the presentation of the application to file the award is a plaint for creating a charge over the suit properties. The lis commences with the application to take a decree in terms of the award and it will continue till the final satisfaction of the maintenance decree or till its satisfaction becomes unobtainable by reason of the bar of limitation—Shidlingappa v. Sankappa, supra.

The case is however different when a wife brings a suit for maintenance against the husband. The husband's liability to maintain the wife is a personal and absolute obligation independent of any property ; and when a wife brings a suit against the husband for maintenance and asks for a charge on the property belonging to him, she does not ask for any right directly and specifically in respect of the property. Of course, in order to get maintenance properly paid she is entitled to ask for a charge, and the Court in decreeing maintenance gives her a charge on the property. But the mere fact that she mentions in the plaint all the property belonging to her husband would not make the property the subject-matter of the suit. Consequently, a transfer of the property by the husband pending the suit is not affected by sec. 52—Rattamma v. Seshachalam, 52 M.L.J. 520, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 502, 101 I.C. 806. See also Official Receiver v. Subbamma, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 403 (404), 99 I.C. 564. If the wife's suit is decreed, and the decree gives her a charge on the property, it cannot be said that the charge is given to her from the date of suit. The charge takes effect from the date of the decree. Therefore, a transfer of property by the husband before the decree is not affected by the rule of lis pendens—Rattamma v. Seshachalam, supra. But the case would be different if the plaint claims a charge on specific immoveable property of her husband and the decree also grants such prayer and charges such immoveable property. In such a case the decree creating a specific charge over specific items of property mentioned in the plaint operates to give her a charge as from the date of the plaint and not as from the date of the decree. A simple money-creditor or her deceased husband has no priority over such a charge granted by the maintenance decree, and a purchaser in a sale held in execution of a simple money-decree obtained by the creditor during the pendency of such maintenance suit, is not entitled to priority over a person who purchases such property in execution of the maintenance decree—Seetharamanujacharyulu v. Venkatasubbamma, 54 Mad. 132, 59 M.L.J.

485, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 824 (831, 832), 127 I.C. 809, distinguishing (and also dissenting from) Rattamma v. Seshachalam, supra.

Where a lady who claims maintenance prays that a charge may be declared, not on all the properties, but on a sufficient portion of the properties, all the properties are involved in the lis, so far as her prayer is concerned; a reference in the written statement to the undoubted power of the Court to restrict the charge to a reasonable portion of the property should not itself be made the reason for excluding the operation of the doctrine of lis pendens—Bommadevara v. Subba Rao, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 84, 116 I.C. 421; see also Ramaswami v. Trichinopoly C. C. Bank, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 867, 69 M.L.J. 447, 158 I.C. 778.

Suit for dower:—Where a Mahomedan widow brought a suit for dower against the heir of her deceased husband and for possession of her husband's property in the hands of the heir, the rule of lis pendens applied if there was an alienation during the pendency of the suit, even though the decree was not for possession but was passed for an account declaring the liability of the defendant to pay the amount decreed out of the assets coming into his hands—Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chand, 4 Cal. 402 (409) (P.C.). The doctrine of lis pendens is also applicable to a suit in which the widow merely claims the dower, although it contains neither any prayer for possession of the property nor any prayer that any specific items should be charged with the dower, if the decree passed in the suit is such that it can only be executed against the property of the husband in the possession of the husband's heirs—Yasin Khan v. Yar Khan, 19 All. 504 (505). But the Oudh Chief Court is of opinion that a Mahomedan woman claiming dower debt cannot claim a charge on any specific portion of her husband's property; her claim is a mere money claim, although the decree may be executed against her husband's property; consequently a husband transferring a portion of his property during a suit brought by his wife for dower is not affected by this section, especially if the remaining property is not insufficient to satisfy the dower claim—Abdul Rahman v. Inayati, 7 O.W.N. 1181, 130 I.C. 131, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 63 (65), dissenting from 19 All. 504, and following Bhola Nath v. Maqbulunnissa, 26 All. 28 (in which 19 All. 504 was doubted).

Administration-suit:—Speaking generally, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to administration-suits, because in such a suit though the property may be said to be directly in question, it cannot be said to be specifically in question. But if in such a suit a particular portion of the estate is sought to be affected in a particular way, the doctrine would apply—A. L. A. R. Chetty Firm v. Mg. Thwe, 1 Bur.L.J. 133, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 69 (70), 74 I.C. 54. An administration-suit brought by a creditor or next-of-kin of the deceased against the administrator for the administration of the estate of the deceased by or under the directions of the Court is not a suit in which any property is directly or specifically in question and consequently a sale of a property of the deceased made by the administrator pending the suit cannot be set aside on the ground of lis pendens. So also, where the claim in the administration suit was really one for a money-decree to be calculated on the realisation of the entire estate, it cannot be said that the right to any property was specifically in question in that suit, and consequently the rule of lis pendens could not apply to a sale of property pending that suit—Lee Lim Ma Hock v. Saw Math Home, 2 Rang. 4 (19), A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 221, 79 I.C. 729. Where a creditor or a next-of-kin instituted an administration-suit against an executor or administrator, the mere institution of the suit or obtaining of a mere administration-decree will not bring the doctrine of lis pendens into operation and does not deprive the executor or administrator of his general power to dispose of the assets, unless and until the plaintiff has obtained an order appointing a Receiver of the estate or at least an injunction restraining the executor or administrator from exercising the powers vested in the executor or administrator—Ibid (at p. 21) following Berry v. Gibson, L.R. 8 Ch. App. 847. A suit in which one of two co-heirs sues the other heir, who is administrator of the estate, for his share of the estate and asks for the profits of the estate, in which a preliminary decree is given declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a half share of the estate and directing that the usual accounts and enquiries be taken and made, in which a commissioner is appointed to take those accounts and make enquiries, and in which a final decree is given for the half share in the estate as found by the commissioner, is in fact an administration-suit, and the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to such a suit—Ma Kin v. Ma Bwin, 5 Rang. 266, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 186 (187), 103 I.C. 264. A creditor's action for general administration of an estate may be a sufficient lis pendens so as to entitle the plaintiff to priority over a purchaser or mortgagee from the defendant taking subsequently to the institution of the lis, if the plaintiff, previously to the purchase or mortgage, has sufficiently indicated his intention to make the particular estate specifically liable for his debt; a mere general claim for administration is not of itself a sufficient indication of such intention—Price v. Price, (1887) 35 Ch. D. 297. In an administration-suit brought in 1914 by the heir of the deceased, at first there was no specific mention of any property and no indication as to the property which was claimed, and the Court passed a preliminary administration decree in January 1917, and then the proceedings went before a Commissioner for an enquiry as to what the estate consisted of. The land in dispute was then claimed before the Commissioner to be part of the estate, and the Commissioner submitted his report in April 1917 recording his finding that the land was part of the estate. In 1926, the defendant in that suit transferred the land. Held that when the suit was first filed, there was no property directly or specifically in question, but when the matter went to the Commissioner, before whom the land was specifically claimed, and he reported that the land was part of the estate, the doctrine of lis pendens came into operation, and the subsequent transfer of the land was affected by it—K. Y. Chettyar Firm v. Jamila, 7 Rang. 734, 121 I.C. 792, A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 132 (136).

Where in an administration-suit brought by the creditor against the heirs of the deceased, an administration order was made which directed that an account should be made of the moveable and immoveable properties of the deceased, and that the estate of the deceased should be applied in payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses in due course of administration, held that the estate of the deceased came under the administration of the Court and consequently a mortgage created by the heir after the passing of that order would be subject to any disposition of the deceased's estate that might be made by the Court in due course of administration—Bepin Krishna v. Byomkesh, 51 Cal. 1033 (1044), A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 395, 84 I.C. 880. See also Puran Chand v. Mommotho, 55 Cal. 532 (P.C.). "It is difficult," observed their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, "for their Lordships to understand that the Legislature could have intended that when a suit for administration of any estate is before a Court competent to entertain it and to order that accounts should be taken in the suit, any other Court should have power to grant permission for the sale of property, part of the estate"—Ma Chit v. National Bank of India, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 261 (263), 91 I.C. 432.

A suit brought by a legatee for a declaration of his right under a will does not fall under this section ; and therefore, if during the pendency of such a suit, a creditor of the deceased testator brings a suit, obtains a decree and in execution thereof brings some properties of the deceased to sale, the sale is not affected by the legatee's suit, but would bind the legatee—Chaturbhujadoss v. Rajamanicka, 54 Mad. 212, 60 M.L.J. 97, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 930 (938), 129 I.C. 460.

A suit under O. 21, r. 63 C. P. Code is not in essence an original suit but merely a continuation of the proceedings in a claim petition, and hence all alienations during the continuance of the proceedings originated by claim petition till disposal of the suit under O. 21, r. 63 are affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. Where the auction sale takes place after the rejection of an objection under O. 21, r. 58 but before the institution of suit under O. 21, r. 63 it would be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens which applies to auction sales also—Madholal v. Gajrabi, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 241.

Interpleader suit :—Where a person purchases a property from one of the parties to an interpleader-suit, in which a decree creating a charge on the property has been passed, the purchase is pendente lite, and the purchaser is bound by the charge—Arunachalam v. Pratapasimha, 60 M.L.J. 79, 33 L.W. 391, 129 I.C. 63, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 988 (990).

Suit for partition :—The section does not apply to a suit for partition in which neither the shares of the parties nor the rights of the parties to the shares are disputed. "In this case, the question is, whether the mode in which the lands should be allotted between the ascertained sharers affects the right to any property specifically. I do not think it does. The shares are ascertained shares, and the only office that the Court has to perform is to divide the property which belongs to them all, in such plots of land as are most convenient for the enjoyment of each"—Shaik Khan Ali v. Pestonji, 1 C.W.N. 62 (64) ; Ramchandra v. Jaideo, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 198 (199), 109 I.C. 566 ; Bhupati v. Bon Behary, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 436. In other words, if the rights are not disputed and the shares are ascertained, and the Court has only to divide the plots of land between the co-sharers in a convenient manner, the suit cannot be said to be one in which the "right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question". But if the shares are not ascertained and the Court has to decide the question as to whether the defendant is entitled to a share, or to decide what share is to be taken by each sharer, then this section unquestionably applies. The quantum of interest to which each member is entitled is a right to immoveable property, and since it is directly and specifically involved in the suit, the doctrine of lis pendens applies, and the final decision of the suit is binding upon the transferee purchasing pendente lite—Jogendra v. Fulkumari, 27 Cal. 77 (92); Nand Kishore v. Lallu, 1930 A.L.J. 1286, A.I.R. 1931 All. 45 (47); Chandan v. Fakirgir, 11 N.L.R. 21, 27 I.C. 940 (942).

It is well settled that a partition suit operates as lis pendens with the result that the purchaser of an undivided share pending a suit takes only that property which is allotted on partition to his vendor. But such a suit does not operate as a lis pendens where a property subsequently allotted to the mother under a final decree for partition has been sold pending the partition suit in execution of a decree in respect of a pre-partition debt binding on all the members of the family and no provision is made in the partition decree for payment of that debt because the decree-holder is entitled to proceed against the entire joint family property which, on the date on which he proceeds to sell it, is not vested in the mother in any sense—Jamuna Devi v. Mangal Das, A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 306, 25 Pat. 13. Where in an appeal from a decree in a partition suit the share of the parties in the immovable property is not disputed, the appeal is not one in which their rights thereto are directly and specifically in question, and hence this section does not apply not such a case—Ram Narain v. Sajjad Ali, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 99, 21 Luck. 185.

Where a joint family property was mortgaged and the mortgaged property was purchased by the mortgagee under a final decree on the mortgage while the suit for partition was pending and the mortgagee was impleaded as a party to the partition suit by reason of the mortgage, the purchase of that property cannot be annulled by invoking the principle of lis pendens—Baldeo v. Sorojini, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 697, 34 C.W.N. 160. But where the plaintiff purchased a certain property included in a pending partition suit, it was held that the doctrine of lis pendens applied—Khem Chand v. Mul Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 457, 148 I.C. 731. So, where a suit for partition was pending between a father and a son, and the father between the preliminary and final decrees granted a lease of the suit property in favour of a third person, the lease could not prevail against the decree in the suit by which the property affected by the lease was allotted to the son—Veerayya v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 887, M.L.W. 861.

245. Property must be definitely described :—In order that the rule of lis pendens may apply, the plaint in the suit must be so definite in the description that any one reading it can learn thereby what property is intended to be made the subject of the litigation. In other words, in order that lis pendens may be created, it is essential that the property involved in the suit must be described by such definite and technically legal description that its identity can be made out by the description alone, or that there be such a general description of its character or status that upon inquiry the identity of the property involved in the litigation can be ascertained—Hukum Chand on Res Judicata, p. 728; Loke Nath v. Achutananda, 15 C.L.J. 391, 2 I.C. 85 (86); Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wallace 237; Achut v. Shivajirao, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 244 (253), 39 Bom.L.R. 224, 170 I.C. 172. Where there is nothing in the proceedings, except the simple description of the property, which will tend to put the public on enquiry or give a clue for further and more definite knowledge, the description must be so definite that any one reading it can learn thereby what property is intended to be made the subject of the litigation. On the other hand, if enough appears in the proceedings to put a purchaser on guard, although they do not in themselves describe the property with that particularity which amounts of itself to complete identification, lis pendens would be created. In other words, in order to make the doctrine of lis pendens applicable, the property must be described in the pleadings with sufficient accuracy—Loke Nath v. Achutananda, 15 C.L.J. 391, 2 I.C. 85 (87); Periamurugappa v. Manicka, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 50 (51), 46 M.L.J. 68. Whether the misdescription of the property is of such a character as to render the identification of the property impracticable, is a question of fact which must be decided with reference to all the records of the suit—15 C.L.J. 391. But misdescription of the property will not prevent the application of the rule of lis pendens, in the case of a person having knowledge or notice of the true state of things—Bepin Krishna v. Priya Brata, 26 C.W.N. 36, A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 730.

Where the judgment-debtor's interest in the property is not specified nor the encumbrances on the property in the sale-proclamation, the auction-purchaser is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens because he has purchased the property during pendency of another suit by the decree-holder in which the same property was involved. In such a case since the auction-purchaser has suffered detriment on account of the decree-holder, the latter would be estopped from raising the plea that the purchase is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens—Rajkishore v. Sultan Jehan, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 58.

If any amendment is made pendente lite in the plaint by a change in the description of the property, the amendment dates from the time it is made and will not relate back to the date of the institution of the suit so as to affect a prior alienation—Wali Bandi v. Tabeya Bibi, 41 All. 534, 50 I.C. 919. Plaintiff got a decree in 1912 for foreclosure but by mistake a particular piece of property was not included in the decree. Subsequently the defendant attached that property in execution of a decree obtained by him, and brought it to sale. In 1914 the plaintiff obtained amendment of his decree by the inclusion of the above property, and then brought a suit for declaration that the property was not liable to be attached or sold in execution of the defendant's decree. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the declaration. The doctrine of lis pendens was not applicable, in as much as at the time of the auction-purchase no suit or proceeding was pending in respect of this property—Ram Chandra v. Bhagwan, 57 I.C. 652.

246. "Transferred":—Transfer includes the grant of a lease, and therefore a person taking a lease of immoveable property during the pendency of a suit or proceeding relating thereto will be affected by this rule—Madan Mohan v. Rajkishori, 21 C.W.N. 88, 39 I.C. 182 (183); Kiran Chandra v. Dutt & Co., 29 C.W.N. 94, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 251; Nisan v. Sundar, 50 All. 202, 104 I.C. 292, A.I.R. 1927 All. 657 (658); Nageshar v. Gudar, 4 O.W.N. 660, 2 Luck. 659, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 603 (604); Girdharilal v. Harilal, 33 Bom.L.R. 1123, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 539, 134 I.C. 1223; Ramasami v. Govinda, 38 I.C. 1 (4), 31 M.L.J. 839; Pancham v.

Kandhai, A.I.R. 1934 All. 713, 148 I.C. 653. The doctrine of lis pendens is as much applicable to agricultural leases as to any other kind of transfer—Rati Ram v. Shri Krishna, A.I.R. 1949 All. 257, (1948) O.W.N. 376. An agricultural lease (in C.P.) is a transfer, and it lies on the party relying on the lease to show that it did not affect the rights of the other party to the litigation—Shri Ganesh v. Pandurang, 14 N.L.R. 133, 46 I.C. 762; Matilal v. Ganpatrao, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 211; Narain v. Abdul Majid, 15 C.P.L.R. 6; Dhiraj v. Dinanath, 6 N.L.R. 140, 8 I.C. 288 (290); Chandan Singh v. Fakirgir, 11 N.L.R. 21, 27 I.C. 940 (941); Maroti v. Tulsi, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 299. If the agricultural lease does not affect the rights of the other party, it will not come within the mischief of the rule. Thus, where an agricultural lease was granted by the mortgagor in the ordinary course of management, and it was for the benefit of the mortgagee as he would clearly get the lessor's share of the crops, held that this section did not apply—Sakharam v. Tukaram, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 316 (318). Where during the pendency of a suit on a mortgage of the proprietary right in a field, a lease of the land was granted in good faith, and with no intention of affecting the rights which the mortgagees would acquire if they obtained a final decree for foreclosure, held that sec. 52 had no application—Seth Misrilal v. Bhimrao, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 295 (296). A lease for a year given by a mortgagor who was allowed to remain in possession, pending the execution-sale of his property, was an ordinary and reasonable incident of an interim beneficial enjoyment, and was not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens, and the lessee was entitled to the crops raised by him for the year—Subbaraju v. Seetharamaraju, 39 Mad. 283 (285) (dissenting from Thakur Prasad v. Gaya Sahu, 20 All. 349); Radhika v. Radhamani, 7 Mad. 96 (99); Karu v. Pandia, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 226 (227), 75 I.C. 874.

This section hits all transfers affecting rights of the other party. It is only in cases where there is no such express provision of law which is in force that the principle underlying sec. 100 can come into play, namely the postponement of the rights of a charge-holder to the right of a bonafide purchaser for value without notice; where the charge falls within the ambit of sec. 52 there is an end altogether of the transfer or alienation prevailing over the rights of the party in whose favour a charge has been created under the decree—Kulandaivelu v. Sowdhagayammal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 350, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 261. Where the defendant became the purchaser during the pendency of the plaintiff's mortgage suit, he was bound by the result of that suit—Maulabux v. Sardarmal, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 341 (F.B.). The transfer to which the provisions of sec. 52 can properly be applied is the creation of the mortgage itself, not the subsequent sale in the enforcement of the mortgage—Natesa v. Subbimarayana, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 91, I.L.R. 1945 Mad. 578. A mortgage executed after a mortgage decree and during the course of the proceedings in execution of that decree is subject to lis pendens. Therefore a mortgage executed by the mortgagor before the suit to which he was a party ended by sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the mortgage decree passed in the suit is affected by lis pendens—Madho Ram v. Kritiya Nand, A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 96, 49 C.W.N. 75, (1944) 2 M.L.J. 343. The right of the plaintiff co-sharer to pre-empt under sec. 4(1), Partition Act, 1893 the share purchased by a stranger is not affected by the subsequent reconveyance by the stranger to a co-sharer, because such reconveyance is hit by sec. 52—Sundari Bewa v. Ranka Behara, A.I.R. 1968 Orissa 134.

Transfer includes a charge by a liquidator and the doctrine of lis pendens applies to it even though it be created by the authority of the District Court in a winding up when a suit relating to the property was pending in the High Court—Motilal v. Poona C & S. Manufacturing Co., 19 Bom. L.R. 602, 41 I.C. 246. It of course includes a mortgage which is a transfer of immoveable property, so a mortgage taken from one of the parties to a pending suit is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens—Thakur Das v. Jai Kishen, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 448, 40 P.L.R. 763. But a subsequent mortgage taken before a suit on the prior mortgage is instituted will not be subject to the doctrine of lis pendens—Lachmi v. Hirday, A.I.R. 1926 All. 480, 24 A.L.J. 661, 97 I.C. 4.

Transfer of possession pendente lite is transfer of "property" within the meaning of this section, but the lis must be such as can affect possession. Thus where the suit was for redemption of the mortgage in favour of defendant 1 and not for the redemption of the sub-mortgages granted by the latter, it did not mean that the plaintiff was redeeming the sub-mortgages directly and therefore the transfer of possession by the sub-mortgagees in favour of the transferee's transferee of the mortgage right could not be a transfer which could be vitiated by the pendency of the proceeding which was only for the redemption of the mortgage—Devassya v. Thomman, A.I.R. 1953 Tr. Coch. 573.

In applying the doctrine of lis pendens law does not make any difference between a transfer inter vivos and an involuntary transfer—Udayanarayan v. Radhashyan, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 36, I.L.R. (1949) 1 Cut. 559. A lease granted by a mortgagor under the statutory power given by Sec. 65A pending a suit by the mortgagee would be subject to the rule of lis pendens—M. Sathianesan v. M. Sankaran, A.I.R. 1957 Trav. Co. 292.

247. "Or otherwise dealt with": The words "or otherwise dealt with" include partition; and therefore a partition of the property among the defendants pendente lite does not affect the right of the plaintiff—Iswar v. Dattu, 37 Bom. 427, 19 I.C. 885 (887, 890). See also Bhubendra v. Tarupriya, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 119, I.L.R. (1950) 2 Ass. 159. The words also include a contract for sale—Kubra Bibi v. Khudaija, 20 O.C. 13, 38 I.C. 582 (584).

But an adoption pendente lite is not to be regarded as an alienation pending the suit. If a legitimate son had been born to C during the suit, such son, to be bound by a pending suit affecting his father's ancestral property, must have been made a party, and a son adopted during a suit is in the same position. The one at his birth and the other at his adoption would take a vested interest in his father's property according to the Hindu Law in the Presidency of Bombay. The circumstance that C might have adopted the plaintiff for the purpose of endeavouring to defeat the bakshishpatra did not alter the case, because as a sonless Hindu he had a right to adopt a son—Rambhat v. Lakshman, 5 Bom. 630 (635).

Similarly where an owner of property files an insolvency petition, is adjudged an insolvent and his property vests in the Court or receiver appointed by the Court, it cannot be said that the owner of the property has transferred or otherwise dealt with it—Indian Cotton Co. v. Ram-charanlal, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 128, 1939 N.L.J. 202, 183 I.C. 97; see also Puninthavelu v. Bhashyam Ayyangar, 25 Mad. 406 and Subramania v. Rama Krishna, 46 M.L.J. 426, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 335, 70 I.C. 357. Where after the discharge of a trustee under a mortgage trust-deed a new trustee is appointed by the author of the trustee deed, the latter cannot be said to have transferred or otherwise dealt with the trust properties within the meaning of this section—Matinuzzaman v. Hunter, 14 Luck. 548, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 161, 1939 O.W.N. 402.

So also, the mere admission of the execution of a sale-deed before the registering officer relating to a property covered by such a deed is not 'dealing with the property' within the meaning of the section—Rafuddin v. Brijmohan, 9 N.L.R. 155, 21 I.C. 602. So also, the receiving of the balance of the purchase-money after the institution of the suit does not amount to 'transferring or otherwise dealing with' the property—Ibid.

If a subsequent mortgagee pays off a prior mortgage, and is entitled under the law to claim a charge in respect of such payment, the doctrine of lis pendens would not affect him, for the taking over of the prior debt would not amount to any dealing with the property in suit. It would be a mere continuance of a pre-existing paramount liability—Shafiqullah v. Samiullah, 52 All. 139, A.I.R. 1929 All. 943 (945), 1930 A.L.J. 57.

A defendant will not be at liberty to erect buildings on a piece of land which is the subject-matter of the litigation and thus compel the plaintiff to file another suit for the removal of the obstruction. To such a case sec. 52 applies—Narain v. Imam Din, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 978.

Surrender to a person having no title cannot operate as a surrender. It will however operate as an assignment, and if it does so, it would not be vitiated by lis pendens unless the transfer is made by a defendant in the suit, the proceedings of which operate as lis pendens—Philipose v. Karunakara, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 12.

248. Transfer by persons other than parties to the suit:—The rule in this section applies where the property is transferred by a party to the suit or proceeding: and those persons only are affected by lis pendens who purchase from any of the parties to the litigation. Thus, where a decree-holder is seeking to establish his right to attach and sell his judgment-debtor's property by a suit against a successful claimant, the judgment-debtor is not a party to the claim suit, and if another decree-holder attaches the same property and brings it to sale, the auction-purchaser who purchases at such sale is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and is not affected by a subsequent sale held in execution of the decree of the first-named decree-holder—Pethu Aiyar v. Sankaranarayana, 40 Mad. 955 (958), 32 M.L.J. 374, 38 I.C. 778. The doctrine of lis pendens is not applicable in favour of a third party. Where the only point for decision in the suit was whether a deed of settlement was true or false, a right to immovable property was not in question and this section did not apply, nor could it be invoked by a person who was not a party to the suit—Shammugasundaram v. Parvathi Ammal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 454, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 173.

So also, the operation of the law of lis pendens cannot extend to persons whose title is paramount to that of the parties to the suit, or whose title is not in any way connected with them. Therefore, where pending a suit between a pattadar and his mortgagee, the landlord got the land sold for default in payment of rent, held that the landlord's right being paramount to that of his pattadar, the suit did not affect his statutory power of sale under the Madras Rent Recovery Act, and the purchaser was also unaffected by the suit—Munisami v. Dakshinamurthi, 5 Mad. 371.

The words "by any party" are not merely descriptive; they refer to the time at which the transaction which it is sought to assail actually took place. Therefore, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply where the transfer was made, during the suit, by a person who was not a party to the suit at the time of the transfer but who was subsequently made a party—Ammayya v. Narayana, 21 L.W. 125, 86 I.C. 187, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 407; Bala Ramabhadra v. Daulu, 27 Bom. L.R. 38, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 176, 86 I.C. 126; Sheoratan v. Kamta Prosad, 11 Pat. 485, 139 I.C. 78, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 270. Thus, in 1910 V made a gift of his land to his daughter R. The plaintiff sued V in 1914 to recover possession of the land. V died pending the suit and R was brought on the record as V's legal representative. But before she was so brought on the record, she had sold the land to the defendants. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendants to recover possession of the land from them on the ground that the sale was affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. Held that R was not a party to the suit of 1914 and the sale to defendants took place before she was brought on the record, and therefore the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply—Bala Ramabhadra v. Daulu, (supra).

249. Effect of transfer pendente lite :—The words "cannot be transferred so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto" show that the transfer pendente lite is not ipso facto void but is only voidable at the option of the party whose interests are affected thereby. See Bennett on Lis pendens, p. 234. The effect of the rule of lis pendens is not to annul the conveyance, but only to render it subservient to the rights of the parties to the litigation. Its effect is only to bind the transferee if he happens to be a third person with any decree that is made in the suit, even if he is no party to it—Madho Singh v. Skinner, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 433 (442) (F.B.), 43 P.L.R. 58; see also Har Prasad v. Sitaram, (infra). The rule is not that an alienation pendente lite is absolutely void, but that the transfer will not affect the rights of any party thereto under any decree or order that may be made in the suit. In other words the transfer will be available and valid, subject, however, to the result of the suit—Jagannatha v. Ram Chandra, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 589, 165 I.C. 453; Liladhar v. Shivaji, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 125, 165 I.C. 550; Mathura Prasad v. Ghansiram, 132 I.C. 767. Thus, where during the pendency of a partition suit between A and B, A mortgages the suit property, and then the Court declares A to be entitled to a half share of the property, the mortgage would not be absolutely void, but would be binding on the moiety that has been granted to A, though it would not be binding on the other moiety granted to B—Rangaswami v. Sundarapandia, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 635 (637), 110 I.C. 548. If the father and the eldest son of a Mitakshara Hindu joint family mortgage some property for the benefit of the family and the mortgagee obtains possession after purchasing the property in execution of his mortgage decree, alienations in the meantime by the other sons are hit by lis pendens—S. A. Venkatagiriiah v. A. Ramarthana, (1968) 1 Mys. L. J. 384. Where a lease is made after the decree for the sale of the mortgaged property but before its final satisfaction, the lease is hit by lis pendens and is not binding on the mortgagee or the auction-purchaser—Maganlal Jaiwandas Firm v. Lakhiram Haridasamal, A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 193.

Even though the transfer is voidable only, there is no analogy between a suit for possession by a decree-holder against a transferee pendente lite and a suit by a Hindu reversioner for possession of property alienated by a widow—Har Prasad v. Sitaram, A.I.R. 1940 All. 141, 187 I.C. 332.

The purchaser can have no higher right than the vendor, and the sale having been made during the prosecution of the litigation, the purchaser must be bound by the result of the litigation—Shib Chandra v. Lachmi Narain, 33 C.W.N. 1091 (1096) (P.C.), 56 I.A. 339, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 243, 119 I.C. 612; Bhagirathi v. Raj Kishore, A.I.R. 1930 All. 354, 122 I.C. 887. In transfers of this kind the transferee stands in the shoes of the transferor, and takes the title of the latter subject to the pending litigation. If the litigation terminates in favour of the transferor, the title of the transferee becomes valid; if however the transferor fails, the interest acquired by the transferee becomes voidable, and the other party, if his rights in the subject-matter of the litigation are affected by the alienation, may eject the transferee from the property; Hukum Chand on Res Judicata, p. 730. If the transferor succeeds in the Court of first instance but fails in the appellate Court, and the transfer was made while the suit was pending in the first Court, the transferee is bound by the decision of the appellate Court, and cannot obtain possession under the transfer. It makes no difference to the application of the doctrine of lis pendens that the decree of the Court of first instance was in favour of the transferor. That decree was open to appeal, and the decree being appealed against, it was the decree of the appellate Court that was the decree in the suit, and the parties were bound by that decree—Gobind Chunder v. Guru Churn, 15 Cal. 94 (99). In other words, the "decree or order which may be made therein" means the final decree or order in the suit. This is also borne out by the words of the Explanation which says that the lis continues "until the suit or proceeding has been disposed of by a final decree or order."

A final decree for foreclosure can be executed against the judgment-debtor's transferee pendente lite who is in possession of the property under the transfer, although he may not have been a party to the decree and although the decree-holder may have previously obtained symbolical possession against the judgment-debtor—Parmeshwari Din v. Ram Charan, 41 C.W.N. 1130 (P.C.).

The word 'rights' in this section ("so as not to affect the rights of any other party" etc.) has reference not only to substantive rights but also to a matter of procedure. Thus, it includes a right to execute a decree—Krishnabai v. Savlaram, 51 Bom. 37, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 93 (95), 29 Bom. L.R. 60,100 I.C. 582.

A person who has acquired a right of redemption by transfer or by adverse possession during the pendency of a mortgage suit is not a necessary party to the suit, as the right he acquired is hit by the principle of lis pendens—Sakhubai v. Eknath, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 97, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 719. A purchaser from the defendant pendente lite is deemed to be a representative in interest of the defendant and therefore a representative within sec. 47 C. P. Code—Narayanrao v. Chunnilal, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 236, I.L.R. 1952 Nag. 150.

Notice :—The wording of this section makes it clear that the doctrine of lis pendens is not based upon notice, but it rests upon the ground that neither party to a suit can alienate the property in suit pending the suit so as to defeat the rights of the other party. It is based upon expediency and it is immaterial whether the alienee pendente lite had or had not notice of the suit. A purchase made for valuable consideration and without any express or implied notice affects the purchaser pendente lite in the same manner as if he had notice—Achut v. Shibajirao, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 244, 39 Bom. L.R. 224, 170 I.C. 172; Kulandaivelu v. Sowbhaggyammal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 350, (1945) M.L.J. 261. The doctrine of lis pendens is independent of notice—Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Abdul Rahim, 62 I.C. 900; Krishnaji v. Anusaya Bai, A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 475. A purchase made of property actually in litigation, though for valuable consideration and without any express or implied notice in point of fact affects the purchaser in the same manner as if he had such notice—Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Sec. 405; Baswan v. Natha, 11 O.L.J. 452, 1 O.W.N. 319, 82 I.C. 747, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 30; Sohan Lal v. Jot Singh, 16 O.C. 148, 20 I.C. 458. Where a litigation is pending, the decision in the suit shall be binding not only on the litigating parties but also on those who derive title under them by alienations made pending the suit, whether such alienees had or had not notice of the pending proceedings. If this were not so, there would be no certainty that the litigation would ever come to an end—Bellamy v. Sabine, 1 DeG. & J. 556 (per Lord Cranworth); Lakshmandas v. Dasrat, 6 Bom. 168; Basappa v. Bhimangowda, 52 Bom. 208, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 65 (66); Girdharlal v. Harilal, 33 Bom. L.R. 1123, 134 I.C. 1223, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 539; Dodey Ram v. Gulkando, A.I.R. 1929 All. 601, 118 I.C. 650. The doctrine of lis pendens is not based on the equitable doctrine of notice but on the ground that it is necessary to the administration of justice that the decision of a Court in a suit should be binding not only on the litigating parties but on those who derive title from them pendente lite, whether with notice of the suit or not—Krishnabai v. Savlaram, 51 Bom. 37, 100 I.C. 582, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 93 (95) (per Fawcett J.); Nathaji v. Nana, 9 Bom. L.R. 1173.

Sec. 41 ante cannot be invoked when the transfer is pendente lite and when the transferee knew of the claim of the real owner long before the transfer—Sadiq Hussein v. Co-operative Central Bank, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 106.

249A. "Any party to the suit" :—A person, who ought to have been joined as a party to a suit but had not been joined before the decree, cannot be impleaded in the course of execution proceedings so as to make him bound by the decree—Ammanna v. Ramakrishna, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 886, I.L.R. 1949 Mad. 904.

A transferee pendente lite is a representative of the transferor, the party to the suit, and is also a person bound by the decree within the meaning of O. 21, r. 35, C. P. Code read with the present section, even though he is not made a party to the suit or appeal—Hurmat v. Matlib, A.I.R. 1952 Ass. 111. The transferee has no right to insist upon being impleaded in addition to or instead of the transferor. The right of the decree holder to ignore the transfer continues after the death of the transferor and the decree holder can prosecute the proceedings in execution with the legal representatives of the deceased transferor on record and without the transferee—Pyte v. Varghase, A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 147 (F.B.).

250. “Any other party” :—The doctrine of lis pendens is intended to protect the parties to the litigation against alienations by their opponents pending the suit. Therefore, if the first defendant sells a property to the second defendant pending the suit, the third defendant cannot dispute the validity of the sale on the ground of lis pendens. In other words, the prohibitions contained in this section is inapplicable between parties to a suit who are ranged on the same side and between whom there is no issue for adjudication. The words ‘any other party’ in this section mean any other party who can be said to be arrayed on the opposite side to the party alienating, owing to the existence of some issue between them upon which the Court is called to adjudicate in the suit; the words mean any other party between whom and the party alienating there is an issue for decision which might be prejudiced by the alienation—Krishnaya v. Mallaya, 41 Mad. 458 (463); Manjeshwara v. Vasudeva, 41 Mad. 458 (F.B.). But in a recent case in the Patna High Court, Mr. Justice Wort has expressed the opinion (obiter) that the words “any other party” in this section are unconditional and are not in any way restricted as to mean any opposite party and not co-defendants—Nrishingha v. Ashutosh, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 487, 19 P.L.T. 35.

During the pendency of a suit for possession of land brought by T against D, the land was mortgaged by T to W. The suit ended in a compromise, whereby the debt due to the mortgagee was agreed to be paid by D (who obtained a part of the property under the compromise) and the mortgagor was absolved from payment of the debt. The debt was not made a charge on any property in the hands of D but was described merely as a personal covenant. Afterwards, the mortgagee brought a suit to enforce the mortgage against D. Held that sec. 52 has been enacted for the benefit of the “other party” and not for the benefit of the party making the transfer. The other party (viz., D) is not affected by the transfer, and the mortgagee cannot enforce his mortgage against D. Moreover, under the compromise the mortgage debt was converted into a purely personal contract, and no property was charged or earmarked. Therefore, the mortgagee cannot touch the property which D, the other party, got under the term of the compromise-decree—Shyam Lal v. Sohan Lal, 50 All. 290, 25 A.L.J. 77, 106 I.C. 255, A.I.R. 1928 All. 3 (9).

Under this section protection is given only to the rights of the parties as they existed when the suit was commenced. Nothing done by a party during the pendency of the suit affects the rights of any other party under the decree, but if a right exists in a stranger from before in relation to the property, it will not be affected merely because the title to the property in pursuance of that right was perfected during the pendency of the suit—Narayan v. Rajkishore, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 613.

A brought a suit against B as legal representative of the deceased C and obtained a decree. Subsequently D who was another legal representative of C filed a suit to have the decree obtained by A set aside and obtained an award by which it was declared that the decree passed against B in favour of A was not binding on the property of C and that C's property belonged to D. During the pendency of this suit the property covered by it was sold in execution of decree obtained in the former suit. Held that D was not "any other party" within the meaning of sec. 52. D was as much a legal representative as B was. Hence sec. 52 had no application—Dholandas v. Dadanbai, A.I.R. 1947 Sind 181.

251. Transfer made before commencement of suit :—Where a right is acquired before the suit but is perfected and paid for after the institution and during the pendency of the suit, the rule in this section does not apply, and therefore a deed of sale or mortgage made prior to the institution of the suit may be registered pendente lite (because the deed on registration takes effect from the date of execution)—Venkataramana v. Rangiah, 41 M.L.J. 399, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 249, 70 I.C. 212; Guru Basappa v. Setra Santhappa, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 359, 48 M.L.J. 496; Veerakutty v. Ramaswami, 32 I.C. 431; Rafiuddin v. Brijmohan, 9 N.L.R. 155, 21 I.C. 602; Akki v. Valuvathi, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 710, 48 M.L.J. 496, 87 I.C. 568; Harichand v. Gordhan Das, A.I.R. 1957 Punjab 238; Shankar Prasad v. Mt. Mureshwari, A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 304. The party relying on section 52 must establish that his suit was instituted before the execution of the deed of transfer, i.e., that the transfer took place after the institution of the suit. If the execution of the deed of transfer takes place before the institution of the suit, the doctrine of lis pendens cannot apply even though the deed is registered during the pendency of the suit—Rafiuddin v. Brijmohan, 9 N.L.R. 155, 21 I.C. 602 (603). A mortgage executed before the institution of the suit may be enforced (by a sale in pursuance of mortgage-decree) after the suit. The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to previously existing transfers or to legal proceedings taken to enforce those transfers—Chinnaswamy v. Darmalinga, 63 M.L.J. 394, 139 I.C. 309, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 566 (573); Joy Chandra v. Sreenath, 32 Cal. 357.

A second mortgage executed before but registered after the institution of a suit on the first mortgage is not affected by lis pendens. The second mortgage takes effect from the date of its execution—Pingali v. Kotigari, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 249, 70 I.C. 212.

The rule of lis pendens does not afford any protection from any antecedent right—from any right in rem acquired prior to the litigation. When a prior mortgagee brings a suit on his simple mortgage without impleading a puisne mortgagee, he does not acquire any right under the decree which can be hostile to the left out puisne mortgagee. No question of protection by lis pendens arises in such a case—Md. Juman v. Akali Mudiani, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 577, 47 C.W.N. 682. See this case as to the effect of the rule of lis pendens on a lease granted by the prior mortgagee-decree-holder auction purchaser.

In a Bombay case an opinion was expressed that if A executed a deed of gift of certain property in favour of B, and then during the pendency of a suit in respect of the property B got the deed of gift registered, the registration was invalid because by registering the document he transferred the property to himself pendente lite—Subba Ramu v. Venkatasubba, 48 Bom. 435 at p. 441 (per Macleod, C.J.). But this should be taken as a mere obiter and not as an authoritative pronouncement (because it was not a case under sec. 52). Moreover the case has been overruled by the later Full Bench decision in Atmaram v. Vaman, 49 Bom. 388 (F.B.), 27 Bom. L.R. 390.

The rule of lis pendens does not affect a person who purchased by contract and entered into possession before the commencement of the suit, and then pendente lite, without actual notice, fulfilled his contract, and took a deed for the property. See Hukam Chand on Res Judicata, p. 709. When a particular property is added by amending the plaint but the property is sold to a bonafide purchaser before amendment the sale is not hit by lis pendens—Rangaswamy v. Upparige Gowda, A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 189.

So also, this section does not apply where the sale actually took place before the commencement of the suit but by virtue of a compromise entered into in the suit the validity of the sale-deed was accepted by the other party—Krishnaji v. Motilal, 31 Bom. L.R. 476, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 337 (339), 122 I.C. 66.

Where a subsequent mortgagee assigned to the plaintiff his mortgagee rights during the pendency of a suit based on a prior mortgage to which he was no party at the date of the assignment, but subsequently he was impleaded as a party, it was held that the plaintiff was not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and he was entitled to redeem the prior mortgage—Mt. Sheoratan v. Kamta Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 210, 11 Pat. 415, 139 I.C. 78.

The doctrine of lis pendens is applied to things coming into existence during the pendency of the suit and not where there is an existing right prior to the suit. In a case where the right of pre-emption had accrued before the declaratory suit was instituted and pre-emptors had also obtained their decree for pre-emption, the doctrine of lis pendens had no application. The right of pre-emption is one of substitution and it cannot, therefore, be said that the successful pre-emptors are representatives of or claim under the original vendee. They cannot thus be bound by the decree against the vendee—Shariff Hussain v. Nur Shah, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 589 (590). See also Bishan Singh v. Khazam Singh, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 838. There the defendants sold the disputed land to A. B applied for pre-emption. The parties compromised on the terms that B should pay the consideration to A by a certain date. Before B deposited the amount C, having an equal right of pre-emption filed a suit for pre-emption. Held B's purchase was not hit by lis pendens. C's suit was dismissed.

Where a lease was granted by the mortgagor before the institution of the mortgage suit, the lessees can maintain their possession as against the purchaser in execution of the decree in the mortgage suit—Madan Mohan v. Rajkishori, 21 C.W.N. 88, 17 C.L.J. 384, 39 I.C. 182 (185). When an auction-sale took place before the institution of the suit, the fact that the sale certificate was issued pending the suit does not bring in the doctrine of lis pendens. Though under sec. 316, C. P. Code, 1882, the title of the auction-purchaser is made to date from the certificate and not before, still his equitable title arose on and was completed with effect from the date of the sale; such title was incomplete until the sale was confirmed, but on confirmation it related back to the date of sale—Lanka Gopalam v. Lanka Ratnamma, 28 M.L.J. 666, 26 I.C. 353 (355). If in a suit for declaration of title and possession the plaintiff dispossesses the defendant and thereafter the suit is dismissed but the plaintiff remains in possession for more than 12 years and the defendant thereafter files a suit for possession he cannot invoke the doctrine of lis pendens and his suit must fail on the ground of limitation—Santa Singh v. Rajinder Singh, A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 415 (F.B.).

“Except under the authority of the Court” :—A transfer made by an order of Court is an exception to the section—Sripat v. Naresh, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 94. If a transfer is to be made free from defect, this clause authorises the parties to apply to the Court before which the suit is pending, and any transfer made by permission of the Court will not be invalid. If, however, the order of the Court is obtained by fraud (e.g., where the order is issued under a misapprehension of which the applicant was the wilful cause) any alienation made under such order will not be free from the rule.

252. Plea of lis pendens :—A plea of lis pendens raised in the first Court but not pleaded in the written statement ought to be tried by the appellate Court, when no further facts or evidence than those already on the record are necessary—Kather v. Maremadissa, 38 Mad. 450.

 Fraudulent immoveable property transfer. made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor shall be voidable at the option of any creditor so defeated or delayed.

Nothing in this sub-section shall impair the right of a transferee in good faith and for consideration.

Nothing in this sub-section shall affect any law for the time being in force relating to insolvency.

delay any such person, and such transfer is made gratuitously, or for a grossly inadequate consideration, the transfer may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid.

Nothing contained in this section shall impair the rights of any transferee in good faith and for consideration.

A suit instituted by a creditor (which term includes a decree-holder whether he has or has not applied for execution of his decree) to avoid a transfer on the ground that it has been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, shall be instituted on behalf of, or for the benefit of, all the creditors.

(2) Every transfer of immoveable property made without consideration with intent to defraud a subsequent transferee shall be voidable at the option of such transferee.

For the purposes of this sub-section, no transfer made without consideration shall be deemed to have been made with intent to defraud by reason only that a subsequent transfer for consideration was made.

Amendment :—The whole section has been re-drafted by sec. 15 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The following amendments have been made :—

- (a) The first para of the old section which related both to transferees and creditors, has been split up into the two sub-sections of which sub-section (1) relates to creditors, and sub-section (2) applies to transferees. See Note 253.
- (b) The reference to prior transferees and co-owners or other persons interested in the property (1st para of the old section) has been omitted. See Notes 268.
- (c) The second para of old section has been omitted. See Note 266.
- (d) The third para of old section, which was an exception to the whole section, has now been appended to sub-section (1) of the new section. See Note 261.
- (e) The 3rd and 4th paras of sub-section (1) and the second para of sub-section (2) are new. See Notes 263 and 269.

The reasons have been stated in proper places.

Analogous laws :—The old section was taken from 13 Eliz., c. 5 and 27 Eliz., c. 4. Both these Statutes applied to Presidency-towns [22 W.R. 60; 6 Mad. H.C.R. 455, 474; 25 Bom. 202, 208-209; Abdul v. Mazaffar, 10 Cal. 616 (P.C.)], and were repealed by the Transfer of Property Act, so far as they applied to those towns. 13 Eliz., c. 5, dealt with transfers made with intent to defeat or delay creditors, and 27 Eliz., c. 4, dealt with transfers made with intent to defraud subsequent transferees for consideration.

The amended section has been framed on the lines of secs. 172 and 173 of the (English) Law of Property Act, 1925. The section as it stood before amendment has been printed on the left hand side.

253. Reasons for splitting up the section :—"The first paragraph of old section 53 consists of two parts, of which the first relating to subsequent transferees is based on section 2 of 27 Eliz., c. 4, and the second relating to creditors is based on section 1 of 13 Eliz., c. 5."

"On the statute 27 Eliz., c. 4, the English decisions are clear to the effect that a voluntary (i.e., gratuitous) transfer of land, afterwards made the subject of a conveyance for valuable consideration, may be avoided by the subsequent purchaser, although in making the voluntary conveyance there was no actual fraud and although the purchaser had notice of the settlement; see 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 12th edition, page 27. From the fact that the settlor afterwards conveyed the land to a purchaser for consideration it was inferred that the voluntary conveyance was made with intent to defeat the purchaser. 'The principle appears to be that, by selling the property for a valuable consideration the settlor so entirely repudiates the former voluntary conveyance and shows his intention to sell, as that it shall be taken conclusively against him and the person to whom he conveyed, that such intention existed when he made the conveyance, and that it was made in order to defeat the purchaser'—Newman v. Rusham, 17 Q.B. 723. 'It may be assumed', said Grant. M. R. 'that a voluntary settlement, however free from actual fraud, is by the operation of that statute (27 Eliz., c. 4) deemed fraudulent and void against a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration even when the purchase has been made with notice of the voluntary settlement'.

"Following the same principle, Sale, J. held in Joshua v. Alliance Bank of Simla, (1895) 22 Cal. 185, that the words 'may be presumed' in para. 2 of the old section should be construed as equivalent to 'shall be presumed', and that a voluntary transfer of immoveable property afterwards made the subject of a transfer for consideration was void as against the subsequent transferee, even though the subsequent transferee had notice of the previous transfer. The view taken by Sale, J., was dissented from by Jenkins, C.J., in Bai Cooverbai v. Muhammad, (1905) 7 Bom. L.R. 267. As regards transfers made with intent to defraud creditors, the Courts in India have held that the phrase 'may be presumed' in the second paragraph should be given its plain meaning, that is to say, the meaning which it bears in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, section 3. The result is that the same phrase 'may be presumed' may have one meaning attached to it in case of transfers made to defraud subsequent transferees and another meaning in case of transfers made to defeat or delay creditors. Again, paragraph 3 of the old section can hardly apply to cases where there is a contest between a prior voluntary transfer and a subsequent transfer for consideration.

"Such being the case, it is desirable to split the section into two parts—one dealing exclusively with transfers made with intent to defraud creditors and the other with transfers made to defraud subsequent transferees. In drafting the two sub-sections we have followed the lines of sections 172 and 173 respectively of the English Law of Property Act, 1925."—Report of the Special Committee (1927).

254. Application of section :—The principle of this section applies to Hindus and Mohamedans, as it is not inconsistent with their laws—Rangilbhai v. Vinayak, 11 Bom. 666 ; In re Kahandan, 5 Bom. 154 ; Abdul Hye v. Mahomed, 10 Cal. 616 ; Hormusji v. Cowasji, 13 Bom. 297.

The principle of this section has been held to be applicable to the Punjab, although this Act does not apply to that province—Md. Ishaq v. Md. Yusuf, 8 Lah. 544, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 420, 101 I.C. 172 ; Champa v. Shankar Das, 14 I.C. 232, 74 P.R. 1912 ; Ibrahim v. Jivan Das, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 707, 75 I.C. 1043 ; Tapasi v. Raja Ram, 115 I.C. 417 ; Chattru Mal v. Mt. Majdan, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 460, 15 Lah. 849 ; Miler v. Mangal, 1938 Lah. 156.

By virtue of secs. 2 (d) and 5 the present section in terms does not apply in the case of a transfer under an order or decree of Court. But where a person has obtained a transfer under an order of the Court as a result of gross fraud, the Court can give relief by applying the principle of common law for avoiding fraudulent transfers—Ramanathan v. Unnamalai, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 632 (1942) 2 M.L.J. 213. The principles embodied in this section are in accordance with the general principles of justice, equity and good conscience and as such should be taken as a guide by the Courts even in cases such as when a party bases his title on a transfer by a decree of the Court where the provisions of this section do not apply—Mt. Akramunnissa v. Mt. Mustafannissa, A.I.R. 1929 All. 238, 51 All. 595, 116 I.C. 445.

This section has no application in a case where a creditor pleads that the deed of sale by the judgment-debtor was a sham and bogus transaction and that the property was never conveyed at all and remained the property of the vendor—Parbhu Nath v. Sarju Prasad, I.L.R. 1940 All. 542, A.I.R. 1940 All. 407, 1940 A.L.J. 470. See also Fakir Bux v. Thakur Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 457 (465), 1941 O.W.N. 801, 194 I.C. 588 ; Purna Chandra v. Sarojendra, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 251, 50 C.W.N. 740 ; Bankey Behari v. Brij Rani, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 314, (1944) O.W.N. (410) ; Raj Kuer v. Rajendra, A.I.R. 1951 All. 443 ; Bommarayigowda v. Kalegowda, A.I.R. 1951 Mys. 103 ; Ram Rao v. Ajodhya Pada, A.I.R. 1952 All. 83 ; Mahendra Mahto v. Suraj Prasad Ojha, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 568. In such a case the creditor is entitled to a declaration independent of this section, that the property purported to have been sold is liable to sale in execution of his decree—Parbhu Nath v. Sarju Prasad, supra. Attack based on this section involves the admission that the transfer is a real transfer—Mt. Hedayat-ul-Nissa v. Jalabud-Din, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 95, 1940 O.W.N. 1057, 1941 O.L.R. 29. All transfers intended to defeat or delay creditors cannot be presumed to be sham. Such a transfer, whether real or sham, has to be decided with reference to the document and the surrounding circumstances. The question depends upon the animus transferendi which the parties had at the time of the transaction—Tirupathi v. Lakshmana, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 545, (1953) 1 M.L.J. 123.

This section is not intended to apply to a transfer by which one creditor is preferred to another. It is intended to apply to transfer by which property is removed from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor—Ma Pua May v. Chettiar Firm, 56 I.A. 379, 7 Rang. 624, 34 C.W.N. 6, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 279; Naraindas v. Bhojraj, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 269, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 97 (99), 181 I.C. 888. See Note 263, post.

If the debtor does not retain any benefit for himself and if it is found that the transfer was for adequate consideration which was entirely expended in satisfaction of genuine debts of the debtor, then this section does not apply—Gharbhoya v. Deodatta, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 400, 172 I.C. 389. Where the sale was effected in order to satisfy a decree and was the means of the decree-holder securing a benefit in the previous execution proceedings, it would not be set aside under this section—Chettyar Firm v. Ma Mai, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 51, 167 I.C. 599. The mere fact that the judgment-debtor has other property to meet a creditor's decree does not, however, prevent the application of this section—Gopi Chand v. Jodhraj, A.I.R. 1929 All. 458, 116 I.C. 815.

A inherited some property from his father and as he began to contract debts, disputes arose between him, his wife and his minor son. The matter was referred to arbitration and an award was made by which the entire property was allotted to the minor son and a monthly allowance was fixed for A and his wife and a decree was passed in terms of the award, the wife acting as guardian for her minor son: held, that though A was entitled to a share, as he had submitted to the award and the order of the Court, neither he nor his creditors were entitled to attack the award subsequently—Shantilal v. Munshilal, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 498, 56 Bom. 595.

255. Transfer :—The word "transfer" used in this section is comprehensive enough to embrace within its purview all kinds of transfers, whether with or without consideration—Ram Raj v. Lal Chandra, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 205, 1941 O.W.N. 56, 1941 O.L.R. 210. The mere fact that a transfer is executed without consideration, as in the case of a gift, will not necessarily lead to an inference that the transfer was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor. Each case must be examined on its own merits. A transfer made merely with intent to defeat an anticipated execution is not a transfer made with intent to defraud, defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of this section—ibid; see also Musahar v. Hakim, 43 I.A. 104, 43 Cal. 521, 32 I.C. 343 and Riazat Husain v. Mt. Ali Bandi, A.I.R. 1920 Oudh 182, 60 I.C. 725.

This section contemplates a transfer of property binding as between the parties to it, but which is voidable in the circumstances laid down in the section. If, however, the transaction is merely colourable and not meant to be acted upon between the parties there is no transfer at all, but merely a fraudulent attempt to avoid a liability—Bhagwan v. Rajendra, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 564, 77 I.C. 1. This section does not apply to the purchase of property in the name of another as benamdar, as there is no transfer of any property—Jamnabai v. Dattatraya, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 160, 60 Bom. 226. See in this connection Narayan v. Guru Prasad, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 246; Ishwar Das v. Radha Mal, A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 417. But the mere fact that the transaction is hollow does not make it the less a transfer of immoveable property within the meaning of this section, and if its conditions are satisfied, the document should be declared void against the creditors of the transferor—Vetchand v. Sittaram, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 287, 27 Bom.L.R. 205, 86 I.C. 873. This section applies to a suit by the creditor for a declaration that the transfer is sham and that he is entitled to proceed against the property for the realisation of his debt—Ouseph Skaria v. Cherian Joseph, A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 288. Where the sale is void ab initio the creditor need not bring any suit for avoiding it, but need only, after obtaining a decree against the transferor-debtor, attach the property, and in the event of the transferee filing a claim case or a suit, plead that the transfer was void ab initio—Shantilal v. Champalal, A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 363.

Where two debtors allowed the wife of one of them to apply for mutation on a false allegation of an oral gift of their property and to allege possession under the gift and themselves acquiesced in the passing of an order for mutation by stating that they had no objection, such an act amounted to a transfer and was voidable under this section—Askari Begam v. Ballabh Das, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 165, 175 I.C. 708.

A partition among the members of a joint Hindu family is a transfer within the meaning of this section—Rasa Goundan v. Arunachela, 44 M.L.J. 513, 72 I.C. 978, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 577 (dissenting from Indoji Jithiaji v. Kothapalli, 10 L.W. 498, 54 I.C. 146); Ramaswami v. Kathamuthu, 24 L.W. 180, 97 I.C. 70, A.I.R. 1926 Journal 167. See also Chhote Lal v. Lakhimchand, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 355. Where immoveable property has been partitioned among co-owners, it is a transfer within the section—Waman v. Ganpat, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 10, 60 Bom. 34, 160 I.C. 242; Sm. Rattan Devi v. Jagadhar Mal, A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 46. Whether a partition is or is not a transfer within the meaning of this section the principle thereof would apply—Vinayak v. Moreswar, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 44 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 342.

The word "transfer" in this section covers a surrender by a Hindu widow of her widow's estate and if made to defeat or delay creditors, it is voidable—Nilkanta v. Muktabai, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 166, 165 I.C. 944; Shivu Shidda v. Lakhmichand, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 496, 41 Bom.L.R. 1007.

The execution of a baimukassa deed by a husband in favour of his wife is a transfer of property—Bibi Saira v. Bibi Saliman, 2 P.L.T. 577, 63 I.C. 111 (113).

Transfer includes a settlement by which the settlor conveys all his interest in the property to trustees, or a surrender by a Hindu widow of her life-interest in favour of the reversioner. See Natha v. Dhunbaiji, 23 Bom. 1. A waqf is a transfer; and no person can make a waqf of his entire property without making arrangement for the payment of his debts. A waqf created as a device for defeating creditors is voidable. The Mahomedan law also is to the same effect. Consequently, the provisions of sec. 53 apply to waqf created with intent to defraud creditors. Section 2 (d) does not prevent this section from applying to the case—Ahmad Husain v. Kallu Mian, 1929 A.L.J. 460, A.I.R. 1929 All. 277 (278), 117 I.C. 97; Bismillah v. Tahsin Ali, 1930 A.L.J. 616, A.I.R. 1930 All. 462 (465), 124 I.C. 722. Before the amendment of this section in 1929 a waqfnama made by the settlor with intent to defeat or delay his creditors would only be voidable at the option of the creditors so defeated or delayed. Until so avoided the deed would remain valid—Zafrul Hasan v. Farid-ud-Din, A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 177, 40 C.W.N. 115, (1944) A.L.J. 517. See in this connection Har Prasad v. Md. Usman, A.I.R. 1942 All. 2.

Where a suit was originally instituted under O. 21, r. 63, C. P. Code, an application for amendment of the plaint so as to bring it in conformity with the requirements of the present section was allowed—Durai-swami v. Nataraja, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 619, (1953) 1 M.L.J. 322. See also Purna Chandra v. Sarojendra, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 251, 56 C.W.N. 740.

Immoveable property :—See Notes 17 and 18 under sec. 3.

Moveable property :—This section is restricted to immoveable property (25 Bom. 202, at p. 209) and has no application to moveables. In India, there is no statutory provision restraining the fraudulent transfer of moveable property, but the general principle of justice, equity and good conscience as enunciated in this section may be extended to cases relating to transfer of moveable property—Chidambara v. Sami Aiyar, 30 Mad. 6 (9); Kunhu v. Raru Nair, 46 Mad. 478 (481); Ah Foon v. Hoe Lai, 9 Rang. 614, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 13; Motilal v. Kashibai, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 249, 172 I.C. 396.

256. Intent to defeat or delay creditors :—The word “intent” implies “aim” and thus connotes not a casual or merely possible result but rather connotes the one object for which the effort is made, and thus has reference to what has been called the dominant motive, without which the action would not have been taken—Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (226). The intent in order to render a transfer voidable must be an intent so to impair the estate as to render it incapable for remaining assets to satisfy its general liabilities. If the untransferred assets suffice to meet all claims, a single creditor cannot prevent the transferor from dealing as he pleases with the surplus—Chettyar Firm v. Ma Than, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 308, 153 I.C. 191. Intention is a question of fact and not of law—Mathura v. Jagdeo, A.I.R. 1928 All. 61 (62), 50 All. 208, 107 I.C. 33. Where the partition takes between the husband and the wife at a time when the husband is heavily indebted and all the tangible property is given to the wife leaving property of a flimsy character for the husband, the partition is hit by this section—Sm. Rattan Devi v. Jagadhar Mal, A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 46. Where the mortgaged property is sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, any transfer by way of gift or otherwise cannot be said to be with a view to defraud or defeat the mortgagee, and the mere fact that the transfer was without consideration cannot raise a presumption of intention to defraud—Mt. Saraswati v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1928 All. 476 (478), 109 I.C. 272. Where a transfer is challenged as void under this section what the Court has to consider is whether the action of the transferor on the date of the transfer was intended to defeat or delay the creditors, and not whether the creditors have been defeated since. The fact that all the creditors have been paid off since the date of the transfer is however immaterial—Deokali v. Ram Devi, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 76, 1940 P.L.R. 777. But on this last point see Abdul Rahman v. Sultan Begam, infra. The relevant period of time for judging the intention of the transferor is the date of the transfer. The Court must consider whether on that date the transferor had the intention to defeat or delay and not whether the creditors have been defeated since—Bibi Kura Begum v. Jainandon Prasad, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 370; Uman Sult v. Union of India, I.L.R. (1965) 2 Mad. 250.

If the intention of the vendors was to put their property beyond the reach of creditors by converting it from land to cash (which can easily be concealed) it would bring the case within sec. 53, because that is the most obvious and effective method of defeating and delaying creditors—Palamalai v. S. I. Export Co., 33 Mad. 334 (336). But the mere fact that a transfer was made to defeat an anticipated execution is not a good reason for holding that the intent was to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, if there is other property left to meet the claim of the creditors—Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (224); Ram Raj v. Lal Chandra, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 205, 1941 O.W.N. 56, 1941 O.L.R. 210. So also, the mere fact that three decrees were outstanding against the transferor when he made a gift of his property to his son and grandson, would not lead to the inference that the gift was intended to defeat the execution of the decrees, unless it was proved that after the gift the transferor had no other property left to satisfy the decrees—Jwala Sing v. Fatta, 19 A.L.J. 87, 60 I.C. 825. But a transfer of all the properties of the transferor, soon after a decree has been passed against him, must be deemed to have been made with the intention of defeating the creditors—Natha v. Dhunbaiji, 23 Bom. 1 (11). See also Phoosi v. Radhey Shyam, A.I.R. 1951 Aj. 41. Each case must be decided on its own facts. Where a gift was made orally by a judgment-debtor after the decree-holders had obtained their decree and the reasons given by the donee for the gift were both inconsistent and inadequate, these facts were enough to raise the presumption that the gift was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors. The mere fact that the judgment-debtor had other property to meet the decree did not prevent the application of the section—Md. Haidar v. Sajdar Jah, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 230 (231), (1938) O.W.N. 922. So also the mere fact of the general knowledge that the transferor was in financial difficulties would not by itself establish want of good faith on the part of the transferee—Rajbari Bank v. Rani Harshamukhi, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 154, 51 C.W.N. 36. Where a husband executed a hiba-bil-uwaz in favour of his wife in lieu of dower, conveying all his moveable and immoveable properties including the household effects, and it appeared that the couple had been married for 15 years and no explanation was forthcoming as to why the donor thought of making the gift just at the time when a suit had been instituted against him by one of his creditors and it was also found that no physical possession of the property had been conveyed to the donee, held that the gift was made with the object of defrauding creditors—Aminā v. Sheo Prasad, 8 A.W.N. 794, 134 I.C. 415, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh

344. See also Abdul Hye v. Mozaffar Hossein, 10 Cal. 616 (P.C.); Natha v. Dhanbai, 23 Bom. 1. Where a person executes a deed of gift in favour of his wife the crucial question is however one of intention to defraud the creditors, and the facts that all the creditors existing at the date of the deed have been paid off before the institution of the suit and that no fresh debts were incurred by the donor for about three years after the execution of the deed, even though not conclusive, afford a very strong evidence negating the intention to defraud—Abdul Rahman v. Sultan Begam, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 178, 1940 O.W.N. 1336, 1941 O.L.R. 65; see also Mt. Bibo v. Sampuran Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 222, 162 I.C. 922 and Zahir Ahmed v. Devi Dayal, 6 Luck. 397, 1931 Oudh 134, 129 I.C. 333. Where a transfer is made in order to settle a debt created by money advanced previously by the transferee, the mere fact that the transferee is relative of the transferor by marriage does not establish the fact that the transfer was bogus and entered into without consideration with a view to defeat and delay the creditors of the transferor—Ahmed Din v. Partap Singh, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 438, 41 P.L.R. 373. Where the purpose of dedication to charity of a very small quantity of land of the donor was real and not illusory, it could not be said that the dedication was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors when the bulk of the property was placed in the hands of the sons of the donor for the express purpose of paying off all his debts—Raman, Chettiar v. Muthuswami, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 188. (1940) 2 M.L.J. 803, 1940 M.W.N. 1180.

In order to defeat or delay his creditors, a person can adopt two methods—(1) by making a fictitious transfer and (2) by making a real transfer. When the first method is alleged, the allegation is sufficiently rebutted by finding that the consideration passed. When the second method is pleaded, the plea cannot succeed unless it is shown that the transferee has entered into a conspiracy with the debtor to defeat or delay his creditors—Amar Nath v. Dwarkadas, A.I.R. 1945 All. 42, I.L.R. 1944 All. 737.

Where during the pendency of a suit the defendant applied for an adjournment, and during the adjournment conveyed all his properties, some of them at half their value, and it was found that the money obtained by the sale was utilised for paying off the whole of a debt for which he was only jointly responsible with two other persons and a debt for which no demand of payment had been made, held that the intention was to defeat and delay the creditors—Chettyar Firm v. Ma Sein, 5 Rang. 588, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 1 (3), 105 I.C. 582. Where the object of the transferor and his transferee clearly was to defraud the creditor, the mere fact that the debt due to the creditor was eventually satisfied in its entirety out of the property left by the transferor did not make any difference; because the test to be applied in such cases is whether at the time the transaction sought to be impeached was entered into the intention of the parties to that transaction was to defraud or defeat the payment of debts—Amina Bibi v. Saiyed Yusuf, 20 A.L.J. 731, 44 All. 748, A.I.R. 1922 All. 449 (454). [This portion of the judgment is not to be found in 44 All. 748]. If there is a clear finding that a sale by a debtor was made in order to defeat the creditor's claim, it is immaterial and unnecessary to consider that the debtor had other properties sufficient to satisfy the creditor's claim—Meenakshi v. Ammani, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 657 (659), 101 I.C. 610, 38 M.L.T. 369; and the case would be stronger for the application of this section, if the other properties of the debtor are not easily available for satisfaction of the creditor's decree—Gopi Chand v. Jodhraj, A.I.R. 1929 All. 458, 116 I.C. 815. Where during the pendency of execution proceedings consequent on a mortgage-decree a judgment-debtor sells his property and pays the decretal amount into Court for the satisfaction of the decree-holder, no question of intent to defraud arises, and the transfer is perfectly valid—Kanchan Mandar v. Kamala Prosad, 21 C.L.J. 441, 29 I.C. 734. But where a judgment-debtor, soon after a money-decree had been passed against him, sold away his houses and lands without any intention of paying the judgment-creditors, held that the sale was voidable under this section, and the mere fact that he subsequently paid some money to some creditors through fear of arrest did not make any difference—Palamalai v. S. I. Export Co., 33 Mad. 334 (337). Muniyammal v. Thyagaraja Mudaliar, A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 580. Where a part of the money obtained by the transferor under a conveyance was applied for the discharge of some of his debts, another part was paid to a person who was not his creditor, and the rest was kept by the transferor himself although there were other creditors, held that the transaction was intended to defeat these creditors and was voidable under this section—Chidambaram v. Sami Aiyar, 30 Mad. 6 (9).

The transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not one which prefers one creditor to another, but which removes property from the creditors for the benefit of the debtor. A debtor can pay some creditors in full leaving others unpaid. The debtor must not however retain a benefit for himself—Nainsukhdas v. Gowardhandas, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 110, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 510; Balagurunathan Chetty v Subha Reddy, 1 An. W.R. 79.

Where a judgment-debtor without any special pressure by his creditor transferred all his property to the creditor without receiving any cash consideration and all the consideration alleged was old debts and money paid or promised to be paid to other creditors, the transfer was regarded prima facie voidable—N. S. & Co. Firm v. Attauddin, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 191, 148 I.C. 539; Tej Bhan v. Chandi Shah, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 564. Where a person carrying on business which is to a certain extent hazardous and with opportunity of utilizing other's property for his own purpose, executes a deed of gift of his own property in favour of his wife, the effect of the deed would be to defeat or delay any claims which the other persons might have at any time against him. Such a deed of gift is therefore false and fraudulent. If he executes a deed of gift with the above intention, it cannot be given effect to as a wakf—Mahammad Ali v. Mt. Bisneillah, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 255, 35 C.W.N. 324, 128 I.C. 647. See also Chidambaram v. Srinivasa, 37 Mad. 227 (P.C.); Nilkanth v. Muktabai, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 166, 165 I.C. 944.

The subsequent and the prior conduct as well as the contemporaneous conduct of the transferor are all relevant and must be considered in order to decide what his motive was in transferring the property—

Rattan Chand v. Kishen Chand, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 136 (137). Where at the date of transfer of the property to her sons the transferor owed money to the creditors and subsequently had to transfer her goods at a great loss to some of the creditors and there were still creditors who had not been satisfied, the inference was irresistible that her motive in transferring the property in favour of her sons was to screen it from her creditors—Ibid at p. 138. If the intention of the transfer is to defeat one of the creditors, that is not a transaction contemplated by this section; but it by no means follows that because a transfer is for the purpose of defeating one of the creditors, the intention of the transfer is not to defeat all the creditors—Kedarwati v. Radhey Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 609, 107 I.C. 353. S. 53 (1) applies where only a part of the property of the debtor is sold—C. Abdul Shukoor Sahib v. Arji Papa Rao, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150.

Where a person who was indebted to B and several other creditors, made a gift of his property to a third person, and thereafter he dealt with the property as if it were his own and a few months after the gift mortgaged the property to B, the only inference was that either the gift was wholly fictitious or that it was intended to defeat or delay creditors and in particular to defraud the mortgagee B—Mt. Kaival v. Babu Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 819, 172 I.C. 508. Where a Mahomedan judgment-debtor transferred certain property which was subsequently attached in execution of a decree against him started prior to transfer to his wife for an alleged deferred dower and it was not shown that the judgment-debtor had ever previously attempted to pay off the dower, nor was there any particular necessity shown for making the transfer on that date, it was deemed to have been made for the purpose of defeating the judgment-creditor—Gokul v. Khanum Nur, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 216.

But an intention to defeat the creditor may well exist on the part of the vendor, yet the sale will be valid unless the vendee was also a party to the fraud—Vinayak v. Kaniram, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 293, 92 I.C. 810. The mere probability or even certainty of a transfer having the effect of delaying or defeating the attachment by a judgment-creditor is not a sufficient reason for invoking sec. 53. In such a case there must either be the additional fact of the transfer being for a grossly inadequate consideration or something else would raise the presumption of fraud—Gaya Prasad v. Murlidhar, A.I.R. 1927 All. 714 (715), 25 A.L.J. 829, 104 I.C. 406.

The burden lies on the creditor to show that the transfer was intended to defeat or delay his claim, or at least that his claim against the transferor had been defeated or delayed by the transfer—Md. Ishaq v. Md. Yusuf, 8 Lah. 544, 101 I.C. 172, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 420; Fakira v. Majho, 2 P.L.J. 546 (548). After the creditors have made out a prima facie case of intention to defraud, it is for the debtor to meet the case made out and to explain the facts—Bachan Singh v. Banarasi Dass, A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 361.

257. Creditors :—The term “creditor” in this section is correlative to “debtor” and signifies a person to whom a debt is due. It includes not only those creditors who have obtained decrees, but also those whose claims have yet to be proved in a Civil Court. It also includes those creditors who become so subsequent to the transfer—Abdallakhan v. Parshottam, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 265, I.L.R. 1947 Bom. 807; District Board v. Md. Abdul Salem, A.I.R. 1947 All. 383, (1947) A.L.J. 408; Murli Motiram v. Rewachand, A.I.R. 1946 Sind 137, I.L.R. 1946 Kar. 14; Ishwar Timmappa v. Devar Venkappa, 27 Bom. 146; Chinamal v. Gul Ahmad, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 478, 73 I.C. 719; Faiz Ali v. Harkuar, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 334; Gamu v. Nathu, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 494; Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Atwell, (1869) L.R. 7 Eq. 347.

The rule of this section is not applicable to mortgagees as such, whose debts being secured upon their debtor's property cannot be defeated out of their right by any subsequent alienation fraudulent or otherwise—Stephens v. Olive, 2 Br. C.C. 90; Kanchan v. Baijnath, 19 Cal. 336. But where the property mortgaged is not sufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt and the debtor is personally liable, the mortgagee will be a creditor for the balance—Harman v. Richards, 10 Hare 81. If the mortgagee relinquishes his security for the debt or if it for any reason goes off, he will then rank as a simple creditor and will be entitled to the protection under the section—Lister v. Turner, 5 Hare 281.

A landlord is a creditor in respect of the rents due from his tenant—Nagendra v. Satadal, 26 Cal. 536. A Hindu wife who has got a claim for past maintenance is a creditor of her husband, although she has not obtained decree for maintenance—Meenakshi v. Ammani, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 657 (658), 101 I.C. 610. But an auction-purchaser who is not a decree-holder is not a creditor or a subsequent transferee within the meaning of this section—Bai Hakimbu v. Dayabhai, 41 Bom. L.R. 1104, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 508, 185 I.C. 655.

A creditor whose claim has become barred by limitation ceases to be a creditor and cannot sue under this section to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. See Burforji v. Dhanbai, 16 Bom. 1 (17).

Although the word "creditors" is used in the plural number, still this section applies with equal force and effect if a debtor transfers his property with the intention of defeating one single creditor amongst a number of creditors. This section is not limited in its application to cases where there is an intention to defeat the general body of creditors—Fakir v. Majho, 2 P.L.J. 546 (550), following In re Moronay, L.R. 21 Ir. 27; Ishan Chandra v. Bishu Sardar, 24 Cal. 825 (827). The fact that there is only one creditor and not more is no reason to exclude the application of the section, if it is clear that the transfer is fraudulent and made for the purpose of defeating or delaying him—Naraindas v. Bhojraj, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 269, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 97 (99), 181 I.C. 888; see also Md. Ishaq v. Md. Yusaf, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 420, 8 Lah. 544, 101 I.C. 172 and Mt. Bibo v. Sampuram Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 222, 162 I.C. 922; Body of creditors of Piler Khasim Sahab v. Bhaskara Chalamiah, (1963) 2 Andh. L. T. 224.

Where the claim of a wife to maintenance has not matured into a claim for separate maintenance, a transfer by the husband in consideration of her right to maintenance cannot be regarded as a transfer to a creditor for the purposes of this section—Brij Raj Kuar v. Ram Doyal, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 40, 135 I.C. 369.

The burden lies on the creditor to show that he was a creditor at the time of the transfer; i.e., he lent money before the transfer sought to be impeached took place—Md. Ishaq v. Md. Yusuf, 8 Lah. 544, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 420 (421), 101 I.C. 172.

In a suit by the creditor under this section he should ask for the amount and the relief of a declaration that the transfer by the debtor is void as regards him, because he is defrauded, defeated or delayed. But no issue under this section can be framed if the creditor asks for a decree for the amount against the transferee from the debtor and treats the transfer as a valid one—Sarju v. Shyam Sunder, A.I.R. 1934 All. 918, 153 I.C. 674; Sachidanand v. Radhapat, A.I.R. 1928 All. 234, 26 A.L.J. 524.

Subsequent creditors :—The benefit of this section is not restricted to existing creditors alone; a fraudulent transfer may equally be impeached by subsequent creditors as well as by those existing at the time it was made—Hooseinbhai v. Haji Esmail, 5 Bom.L.R. 255; Thomas Pillay v. Mathuraman, 33 Mad. 205; Ram Chand v. Mathura Chand, 19 A.L.J. 299, 60 I.C. 896; Narasimham v. Narayana, 22 L.W. 592, 92 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 66 (68); Meenakshi v. Annmani, 101 I.C. 610, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 657; Parkash Narain v. Birendra, 7 Luck. 131, 132 I.C. 51, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 333; Zahir Ahmad v. Devi Dayal, 6 Luck. 397, 129 I.C. 333, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 134; Magnibai Kishorjee v. Kesrimal Sawairam, A.I.R. 1955 M.B. 159. It is not necessary that a man should be actually indebted at the time he enters into a voluntary settlement; for if a man does it with a view to being indebted at future time, it is equally fraudulent and ought to be set aside—per Lord Hardwick in Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 481. So, where a transfer was executed at a time when the executant was well aware of the probability of a decree for a substantial sum being passed against him, this section would apply, although the transferor had no present debts at the time the transfer took place—Manraj Agarwala v. Ahammad, 47 I.C. 932 (Cal.); Rajagopala v. Sivagami, 20 L.W. 538, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 779, 82 I.C. 945; Ram Das v. Debu, A.I.R. 1930 All. 610, (1930) A.L.J. 1278, 128 I.C. 436. Similarly, "a man is not entitled to go into a hazardous business, and immediately before doing so, to settle all his property voluntarily; the object being 'If I succeed in business I make a fortune for myself. If I fail, I leave my creditors unpaid. They will bear the loss.' This is the very thing which the statute was meant to prevent"—per Jessel, M. R. in Ex parte Russel, 14 Ch. D. 588; Mohammad Ali v. Bismillah, 7 O.W.N. 821 (P.C.), 35 C.W.N. 324 (329), A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 255, 128 I.C. 647; Shantilal v. Munshi Lal, 56 Bom. 595, 34 Bom.L.R. 862, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 498 (504). "A man who contemplates going into trade cannot on the eve of doing so take the bulk of his property out of reach of those who may become his creditors in his trading operation."—per Malins V. C. in Mackay v. Douglas, L.R. 14 Eq. 106; see also Freeman v. Pope, L.R. 5 Ch. 538.

But cases in which persons of extravagant habits make settlements of the whole of their property in favour of their son or wives, with the purpose of protecting the property against the consequences of their own improvidence, stand on a different footing. Such conveyances are well-known in English law, and Courts in India have also given effect to such voluntary conveyances. In such cases, when the settlor was not in debt at the time but subsequently contracted debts, the creditors have not been permitted to avoid the settlement; because it was made with the intention of saving the property from the settlor's own improvidence and not with the intention of defeating the creditors. When there was no indebtedness at the time of the settlement, no mala fides can be presumed merely from the possibility that it might prejudice the claim of subsequent creditors—Sadashiv v. Trimbak, 23 Bom. 146 (156, 157). No question of consideration arises in such case. In fact, the consideration is natural love and affection—Ibid. Thus, a certain person who was leading a life of dissipation transferred all his property to his wife, so that he might not be at liberty to live lavishly as before. But even after the execution of the deed, he drifted into his old bad way of life and began to contract debts. In a suit by a creditor impeaching the transfer, it was held that there having been no indebtedness of the transferor at the time when he executed the deed of assignment of his wife, and the consideration for the same being natural love and affection which the law regarded as good, no mala fides could be presumed merely from the possibility that the settlement might prejudice the claims of subsequent creditors—Ebrahim-bhai v. Fulbai, 26 Bom. 577 (585). See also Md. Ishaq v. Md. Yusuf, 8 Lah. 544, 101 I.C. 172, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 420 (421).

In the case of subsequent creditors, i.e., where there are no debts due at the time and the transferor runs into indebtedness subsequently, the presumption will be regulated by the peculiar circumstances of each particular case. If, for instance, the transfer was made to ward off the effects of a threatened litigation or in anticipation of the transferor embarking upon a commercial venture or on the eve of his going into trade, the intent to defeat or delay future creditors will be presumed. But in other circumstances the transaction will be presumed to be bona fide, and it will lie on the future creditors to prove that the transfer was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors—Md. Ishaq v. Md. Yusuf, 8 Lah. 544, 101 I.C. 172, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 420 (421). Where a person executes a deed of wakf or gift in favour of his son and it is found that all his existing creditors at that time are fully paid off, this fact affords a very strong evidence negating the intention to defraud creditors, and a subsequent creditor cannot bring a suit to set aside the transfer—Zahir Ahmad v. Debi Dayal, 6 Luck. 397, 7 O.W.N. 1115, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 134 (135); see also Shantilal v. Munshilal, 56 Bom. 595, 139 I.C. 820, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 498 (504). In the absence of any express intention to defraud, a voluntary deed cannot be set aside at the instance of a creditor whose debt comes into existence after its date, if all the creditors existing at the time have been paid off—In re Kelleher, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 1. "Where the settlor was not indebted at the time, the onus of proving the fraud is thrown on those who impeach the settlement, for fraud is not to be presumed. The mere fact of subsequent indebtedness is not evidence of a fraudulent intent against subsequent creditors"—May's Fraudulent Conveyances.

258. 'Voidable' :—Section 53 does not render a transaction void ab initio, but only voidable, and that only at the option of any person defeated, defrauded or delayed—Krishna Kumar v. Joykrishna, 13 C.L.J. 570, 29 I.C. 690 ; Rangnath v. Gobind, 28 Bom. 639 ; Krishna Bai v. Debi Singh, 71 I.C. 409, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 195 ; Malan Devi v. Amritsar National Bank, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 286, 162 I.C. 39 ; Budhermal v. Verharam, A.I.R. 1946 Sind 78, I.L.R. 1946 Kar. 98. If the transferee pays off the debt due to the creditor, the latter cannot complain that he is defeated or defrauded by the transfer and so cannot avoid it—Krishna Bai v. Debi Singh, (supra).

A transfer declared void under this section is not annulled altogether, but only against creditors and only to the extent necessary for satisfaction of their claims. Subject to their claims the transfer is enforceable—Nanjamma v. Rangappa, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 173.

Where a sale is a real one, though for grossly inadequate consideration or fraudulent, the transaction is perfectly valid till avoided by a person given the right to do so under this section. The equitable maxim of in pari delicto and the related one of ex dolo malo non oritur actio do not apply to a transaction which the law itself is prepared to uphold and enforce, unless it falls within this section—Narayan v. Maruti, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 207, 165 I.C. 76 ; Nathusa v. Munir, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 42, 1943 N.L.J. 133 ; Anantha v. Arunachalam, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.Coch. 105 ; Tirupathi v. Lakshmana, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 545, (1953) 1 M.L.J. 123.

The question whether an alienation should be set aside as being in fraud of the creditors is a pure question of fact and cannot be agitated in a second appeal—Subramania v. Annavi, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 522, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 556 ; Errachi Reddiar v. Vellayya Reddiar, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 256.

A Mahomedan transferred certain properties to his wife in lieu of dower, but more than two years before his adjudication as insolvent. The property was mortgaged by the wife and in execution of the mortgage-decree it was purchased by B. It was found that the transfer in favour of the wife was fraudulent. The Official Receiver thereafter applied to avoid the transfer ; held that the transfer in favour of the wife was voidable and not void and was liable to be set aside under this section, but only without impairing the rights of a bona fide transferee for valuable consideration. As the right of B had come into existence before the application for avoiding the transfer in favour of the wife was made by the Receiver, the transfer in his favour must stand—Basharat v. Ram Rattan, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 73. The argument that one is entitled under the Mahomedan law to execute a deed open to challenge under sec. 53 is irrelevant for the purposes of this section—Har Prasad v. Md. Usman, A.I.R. 1943 All. 2, 1942 A.L.J. 645. A transfer by a Shia Muhammadan is not outside the scope of this section—Bibikubra Begum v. Jainandan Prasad, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 370.

The creditor has the election of either accepting the transaction or of avoiding it ; and he may do so expressly or by implication. If he affirms the transaction expressly or does any act which amounts to an affirmation of the transaction, he loses his right of avoiding it afterwards. Once he has decided to do one thing, he loses his other option, and cannot be allowed to reprobate what he has approbated—Sachitanand v. Radhapat, 26 A.L.J. 524, A.I.R. 1928 All. 234 (235), 116 I.C. 86.

In a suit to set aside a deed of assignment under this section, the Court passed a decree that the deed of assignment was bogus and fraudulent and declared it as cancelled and of no effect against the creditors: held, the Judge intended to cancel the assignment and not merely to declare it void in part leaving it effective as between the assignor and the assignee and ineffective only against the creditors—Ramchandra v. Vittu Govind, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 65, 42 Bom. L.R. 1057. In this case the proper form of decree to be passed in such cases was indicated.

For the purpose of avoiding a transfer which is voidable under this section, it is not necessary that a suit should be filed by a creditor. It is enough that he repudiates the transfer by an unequivocal declaration, such as by attachment of the properties transferred—Ouseph v. Annamma, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 237.

259. Whether 'suit' by creditor is necessary:—Under this section the avoidance by a creditor of a fraudulent transfer by the debtor need not be by a suit, brought on behalf of all the creditors or even by that one creditor; an open and unequivocal declaration of the intention to avoid it expressed by a creditor is sufficient in law to enable him to treat it as void and to take steps on that footing to enforce his rights as a creditor for obtaining satisfaction of his debt. Thus, where a creditor after coming to know of a prior fraudulent transfer by the debtor, made a subsequent purchase of one of the lands included in the prior transfer, ignoring the prior transfer and treating it as if it conveyed no title to the prior transferee so far as the land purchased by himself was concerned, held that there was a sufficiently unequivocal expression of an intention by the creditor to avoid the prior transfer to the extent to which it was necessary to give effect to his own purchase. The methods of avoidance are not restricted to proceedings against the property through attachment and sale for the purpose of recovering the debt. This section does not preclude recovery by means of any other reasonable transaction, through which, without incurring the expenses of litigation the creditor could make available the value of the property to satisfy his debt—Sami Asari v. Adinam, 12 L.W. 718, 61 I.C. 580 (582, 583); Ramaswami v. Lakshmania, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 408, 161 I.C. 1003. See also Nanjamma v. Rangappa, supra.

Where a creditor attaches in execution the property transferred by the debtor, that is sufficient exercise of the option by the creditor to avoid the transaction—Nauratan v. Margaret Stephen, 3 P.L.T. 613, 68 I.C. 369, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 572. But see Thaher Unnissa Begum v. Shereunnissa Begum, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 446 where it has been held that only when a suit is instituted by a creditor for avoiding a transfer does s. 53 come into operation.

An auction-purchaser cannot be regarded as a creditor or a transferee within this section—Nanjamma v. Rangappa, supra. Where a decree-holder has elected to avoid a transfer by putting up the properties to auction sale in execution of his decree, the avoidance however enures for the benefit of the auction-purchaser—ibid. Subsequent creditors also are entitled under this section to avoid the transfer—ibid.

Defence by creditor in a suit by transferee:—If a creditor wants to avoid a fraudulent conveyance made by his debtor he can do so not only by a properly instituted suit, but also by way of defence to a suit brought by the transferee. A suit to set aside the fraudulent transaction is not the only remedy; this section can be pleaded as a defence—Ramaswami v. Mallappa, 43 Mad. 760 (F.B.), 39 M.L.J. 350, 59 I.C. 947 (overruling Palaniyari v. Appavu, 30 M.L.J. 565; Subrahmania v. Muthia Chettiar, 41 Mad. 612 (F.B.); and Muthukumara v. Alagappa, 6 L.W. 518); Cheruthazhath Abdulla Haji v. Cheriyaandi, 50 I.C. 959 (per Seshagiri Aiyar J.); Abdul Kadir v. Ali Mia, 16 C.W.N. 717, 14 I.C. 715; Dhansukhdas v. Jhango, 16 N.L.R. 3; Ram Chand v. Mathura Chand, 19 A.L.J. 299, 60 I.C. 896; Nilkanth v. Muktabai, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 166, 165 I.C. 944; Shaukat Ali v. Sheo Ghulam, A.I.R. 1936 All. 663, 165 I.C. 124; Naraindas v. Bhojraj, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 269, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 97 (98), 181 I.C. 888; Bibi Kubra Begum v. Jainandan Prasad, A.I.R. 1955 Pat 370; Ramnath Sastrigal v. Alagappa Chettiar, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 682. See also Seth Ghansham Das v. Uma Pershad, 23 C.W.N. 817 (P.C.), 50 I.C. 264 in which the Judicial Committee allowed the creditor to raise in defence the plea that the plaintiff's mortgage was executed collusively as a device to defeat the creditors, court can give relief to a creditor who in his written statement take his distinct pleas: (1) that the sale was void being sham and fictitious; (2) that even if real it was intended to delay or defeat creditor, hence voidable—C. Abdul Shukoor Saheb v. Arji Papa Rao, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150.

261. Protection of transferee in good faith:—See second para of sub-section (1). This was the third para of the old section, and was intended to apply to both cases where the transfer was made with intent to defeat creditors and where it was made with intent to defraud subsequent transferee. But it has been pointed out by the Special Committee that "this para can hardly apply where there is a contest between a prior voluntary (gratuitous) transfer and a subsequent transfer for consideration." For this reason this para has been included only in sub-section (1) of the new section.

Every conveyance of immoveable property made with intent of defeating the claims of creditors is voidable at the instance of any person so defeated. But if such a person does not with reasonable promptitude avoid the transaction and by his laches allows the transferee to convey the same to a third person for value and such third person takes it in good faith and for consideration this para applies and the person whose claim is defeated is estopped in equity from denying such third person's title—Phagoo v. Tulshi, A.I.R. 1930 All. 438, 125 I.C. 506. A transfer cannot be set aside on the ground that it was made to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, if the transferee acted in good faith and proved consideration—Daya Ram v. Nadir Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 318.

This para protects a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, whether he purchases from the original fraudulent transferor or from a transferee from him—Kunhu Pothanassiar v. Raru Nair, 46 Mad. 478, 44 M.L.J. 527, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 558; Shikar Chand v. Jagmandar, 25 A.L.J. 873, 106 I.C. 519, A.I.R. 1928 All. 29 (32); Malan Devi v. Amritsar National Bank, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 286, 162 I.C. 39; Basharat Ali v. Ram Rattan, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 73, I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 439, 40 P.L.R. 1000; Man

Singh v. B. N. Sinha, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 198, 191 I.C. 639. A fraudulent grantee takes the entire estate of the fraudulent grantor, and a bona fide purchaser from the fraudulent grantee takes the entire estate, even though the deed is voidable at the instance of the creditors of the original grantor—Shikar Chand, supra. But where the original transfer was supported by no consideration, and devised by the parties to defeat the creditors of the transferor (and was therefore not merely voidable but void) and the property was afterwards assigned for value to an innocent purchaser, held that this last mentioned person was not protected by this para; since his assignor had acquired no interest in the property under the void transfer, he had no title to convey to his transferee, although this person was a transferee in good faith—Basti Begam v. Benarsi Prasad, 30 All. 297 (308), explained in Shikar Chand's case, supra.

This clause lays down that when the consideration for the transfer and good faith on the transferee's part are present, the intention of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors is immaterial. Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., pp. 160-161. There can however be no good faith when the transferee knows that part of the consideration is fictitious and when he assists the debtor in his device to defeat and delay his creditors. It does not matter whether part of the consideration is good, nor whether part of the motive is good—Jamadar Singh v. Naiyab Ali, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 378, 45 C.W.N. 498.

The meaning of this para is that where a person acquires any property for value and in good faith, that is, without being a party to any design on the part of the transferor to defraud his creditors, his right shall not be impaired by anything contained in this section, notwithstanding that the transferor may be actuated by such desire—Ishan Chunder v. Bishu Sardar, 24 Cal. 825 (827, 828). If the transferee did not share the intention of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors, he would be a transferee for good faith and for consideration and his rights would be protected under this section; but if both of them are actuated by the same common intention to defraud creditors, there is no good faith, even though full consideration has passed—Shaukat Ali v. Sheo Ghulam, A.I.R. 1936 All. 663, 165 I.C. 124; Waryam Singh v. Thakar Das, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 404, 16 Lah. 680, 158 I.C. 254; Muthuswami v. Ramaswami, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 751, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 444. A mere fraudulent intention on the part of the grantor alone will not invalidate the transfer, if it is for valuable consideration and there is no want of good faith on the part of the grantee—Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu, 34 Cal. 999 (1017); Gopal v. Bank of Madras, 16 Mad. 397; Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (224). The knowledge and intention of the transferee are the determining factors in such a case. If he buys in good faith and for valuable consideration, his purchase cannot be set aside by reason of the transferor having sold the property for the express purpose of defeating or delaying the creditors. It is a question of fact in each case whether the transferee purchased in good faith without knowledge of the transferor's fraudulent intention—Ibrahim v. Jiwan Das, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 707 (709), 75 I.C. 1043; Daulat Ram v. Ghulam Fatima, 89 I.C. 953, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 25.

A deed cannot be said to have been executed in good faith, when it was executed as a mere cloak, the real intention of the parties being that the ostensible grantor should retain the benefit to himself—Ramasamia v. Adinarayana, 20 Mad. 465 (466); Natha v. Maganchand, 27 Bom. 322 (327); Ex parte Games, (1879) 12 Ch. D. 314.

If the property of the debtor is transferred for consideration to a bona fide purchaser, then even though such transfer has the effect of putting the debtor's property out of the reach of the creditors, the transfer will nevertheless be effective and the creditors will not be entitled to have the transfer set aside or declared void—Fakira Singh v. Majho Singh, 2 P.L.J. 546 (550, 551), 40 I.C. 685. The transaction may defeat or delay; the transferor may intend that it should; the transferee may know that it will; the consideration may be inadequate; and yet unless the transferee himself has been wanting in good faith, his rights will not be impaired—Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (226). Even where consideration has been paid, and possession delivered to the transferee, the transfer will not affect the rights of the creditor, if the transferor's intention was to defeat or delay him. But so far as the transferee is concerned it must be found that he participated in the intention of the transferor to defeat or delay the creditor. If the transferee had no notice of and did not share in the fraudulent intention, the transfer will not be set aside—Pandurang v. Bapuji, 71 I.C. 28, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 103. The definition of constructive notice given in sec. 3 should not be imported into this section. So, the mere knowledge on the part of the transferee of an impending execution of a decree against the transferor is not sufficient to make the transferee a transferee otherwise than in good faith, when he does not share the intention of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors nor participates in the commission of the fraud—Ishan Chunder v. Bishu Sardar, 24 Cal. 825 (828, 830); Raizat v. Ali Bandi, 7 O.L.J. 699, 60 I.C. 725 (727); Bakht Bali v. Lekhrani, 15 I.C. 509 (510); Ah Foon v. Hoe Lai, 9 Rang. 614, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 13 (14). The mere knowledge on the part of the purchaser that the sale may defeat or delay the creditors is not sufficient to negative the bona fide of the purchaser—Kamuni Kumar v. Hira Lal, 23 C.W.N. 769, 51 I.C. 736; Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (213). Where a mortgage was executed at a time after the first attachment had ceased and before the next attachment had come into existence, the mere knowledge that the execution was pending against the transferor for long does not necessarily make the transfer invalid as against a bona fide transferee for value—V. P. L. Firm v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 169, 146 I.C. 954.

Where the circumstances raise a presumption of fraud, the burden lies on the transferee to prove good faith on his part and consideration—Amarchand v. Gokul, 5 Bom.L.R. 142; Palamalai v. S. I. Export Co., 33 Mad. 334 (338); R. M. A. M. Firm v. Maung San, 6 Bur.L.J. 145, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 331 (332), 104 I.C. 557; Hashmat Begam v. Mohan Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 349, 168 I.C. 53; C. Abdul Shukoor Saheb v. Arji Papa Rao, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150.

A transferee who knows the extravagant and reckless character of the transferors ought to inquire whether they are transferring the property with the intention of defeating their creditors; but the absence of such inquiry, especially when the transferee is not aware of any debts of the transferors, cannot be called mala fide—Natha v. Dhunbaiji, 23 Bom. 1 (14). So also, it is not the duty of the purchaser to see to the application of the purchase-money—Deoki Nandan v. Saiyed Jawad Hussain, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 199 (201), 106 I.C. 356.

Under this clause, good faith is more essential than consideration, so that if the element of good faith is not present, the transaction will be avoided even where there is some consideration—Narmal Das v. Chet Ram, 11 O.C. 197; Sundar Singh v. Ram Nath, 7 Lah. 12, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 167 (168), 27 P.L.R. 219, 93 I.C. 1013. It is not sufficient to render a deed valid that it should be made upon good consideration; it must also be proved that it was made in good faith; for (as Lord Coke observed in Twyne's case) "a good consideration doth not suffice, if it be not also bona fide"—Chidambaram v. Sami Aiyar, 30 Mad. 6 (9); Kamini Kumar v. Hiralal, 23 C.W.N. 769, 51 I.C. 736; Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar, 34 Cal. 999 (1008, 1013); Viswananda v. Raja Venkata, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 278 (280), 25 L.W. 223, 99 I.C. 709; Madan Gopal v. Lahri Mal, 12 Lah. 194, 130 I.C. 62, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1027 (1028). Under this section, the Court has not only to determine whether there was consideration, but has also to consider whether the purchaser was a transferee in good faith, i.e., whether or not the transferee combined with the transferor in carrying out the improper purpose of defeating the creditors—Hamidunnissa v. Nazirunnissa, 31 All. 170 (172). So, if the transferee shares with the transferor the intention of defeating the creditors of the latter, the transfer will be voidable at the option of the creditors, even though there is some consideration—Bhikhabai v. Panchand, 43 Bom. 707 (714), 52 I.C. 682. In ordinary circumstances, if it is proved that there was a valuable consideration adequate to the occasion, the Court will be slow to hold that there was no good faith (5 Bom. L.R. 142); but if the circumstances indicate that the transferee knew that the vendors were selling the property for the purpose of defeating and delaying their creditor, and that the transferee assisted the vendors in that purpose, held that he could not be deemed to be a transferee in good faith although he paid good consideration—Palanmalai v. S. I. Export Co., 33 Mad. 334 (338); Chidambaram v. Sami Aiyar, 30 Mad. 6 (10); Ishan Chunder v. Bishu Sardar, 24 Cal. 825; Ah Foon v. Hoe Lai, 9 Rang. 614, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 13 (14). Where the transferor acted throughout in bad faith and with the object of defeating, delaying and obstructing his creditor, and it was further found that not only was the transferor acting in fraud of his creditor but that the transferee also had knowledge of the fact and aided and abetted him in doing so, and that though there was some consideration, a substantial portion of the consideration was fictitious, held that the whole transaction must be treated as fraudulent and effected with the object of defeating the creditor—Mulu Ram v. Jivandra Ram, 4 Lah. 211 (213, 214), 72 I.C. 452, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 423.

Thus, if a debtor with the purpose of cheating his creditors converts his lands into money, because money is more easily shuffled out of sight than land, he of course commits a gross fraud; and if his object in making the sale is known to the purchaser, and he nevertheless aids and assists in executing it, his title is worthless as against creditors, though he may have paid the full price—per Black, C. J. in Covanhawan v. Hart, 60 Am.

Dec. 57, cited in 34 Cal. 999 (1014); Alagappa v. Dasappa, 24 M.L.J. 293, 18 I.C. 332; Palamalai v. South Indian Export Co., 33 Mad. 334 (336); Kamini Kumar v. Heera Lal, 23 C.W.N. 769, 51 I.C. 736; Aftabuddin v. Basanta Kumar, 22 C.W.N. 427; Ishan Chunder v. Bishu Sardar, 24 Cal. 825 (828); and such a transfer cannot be held to be valid on the ground that a portion of the consideration-money was applied by the transferor in payment of some debts which he owed to third persons—Aftabuddin v. Basanta Kumar, (supra). A gift of property by a person under embarrassed circumstances to his wife and so to make provision for their maintenance cannot be held to be bona fide, because although the donor is bound to maintain his wife and minor son, still such obligation is a personal obligation, and the payment of debts takes precedence over a right of maintenance—Sundar Singh v. Ram Nath, 1 Lah. 12, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 167 (168), 93 I.C. 1013.

When the transferee is a creditor of the transferor, and accepts the transfer in satisfaction of the debt due to him, though with the knowledge that his doing so has the effect of defeating other creditors of the transferor, the transfer will still be considered as made in good faith and within the protection of this clause—Ishan Chunder v. Bishu Sardar, 24 Cal. 825 (829); Rajani v. Gour, 35 Cal. 1051 (1058). A creditor is a transferee in good faith if the transfer is made in satisfaction of his dues, even though he is aware that proceedings had been taken by another creditor for the recovery of his debt, if his primary object is to protect himself and not to defeat other creditors—Maung San v. Maung Kyaw, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 471.

Notice:—Where one person takes a possessory mortgage of property with full knowledge and notice that another is already in possession of such property under an earlier instrument of a similar kind, he cannot be said to be acting in good faith within the meaning of this section. Even though his instrument may be registered, still his status will be affected by his own mala fides—Ram Autar v. Dhanauri, 8 All. 540 (542).

Onus:—Either under sec. 100 or under the more general rule of law, the burden is on the transferee to establish that he is a bona fide transferee for value without notice—Renukabai v. Bheosan Hapsaji, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132, 1939 N.L.J. 129, 185 I.C. 33 following Bhup Narain v. Gokul Chand, 61 I.A. 115, 13 Pat. 242, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 68; Errachi Riddiar v. Vallayya Reddiar, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 256.

262. Consideration :—The term 'consideration' in the 2nd para of sub-section (2) means valuable consideration, for if the consideration is inadequate, the presumption may arise that the transferee did not act in good faith. It is not correct perhaps to say that there is any distinction between consideration which should be valid for the purposes of the Contract Act, but not valid for the purposes of sec. 53 of this Act—Tej Bhan v. Chandi Shah, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 564. No doubt in a suit under this section the question of adequacy of consideration is relevant, but that question becomes immaterial in a case where the issue framed is whether the transaction is fictitious or genuine—Fakir Bux v. Thakur Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 457 (463), 1941 O.W.N. 801, 194 I.C. 588; Jagadamba v. Ram Khelwan, A.I.R. 1942 All. 344, 1942 A.L.J. 399.

"Valuable consideration means some right, interest, profit or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other"—pér Lush, J., in Currie v. Misa, L.R. 10 Ex. 153 (162), cited in Mahammadunnissa v. Bachelor, 29 Bom. 428 (433). A time-barred debt forms no consideration for a transfer—Rangilbhai v. Vinayak, 11 Bom. 666 (674, 677); Narayana v. Viraraghava, 23 Mad. 184 (189); but see contra—Motimal v. Manghomal, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 284, 127 I.C. 701. Where a Muhammadan relinquished his share in the family property in order to facilitate the appointment of the Collector as guardian of the minor nephew of the surrenderer, held that the relinquishment was not a gratuitous gift unsupported by consideration. The consideration of the relinquishment was the Collector's undertaking the guardianship of the minor and the responsibility of taking charge of the minor's property—Mahammadunnissa v. Bachelor, supra.

Prima facie when the execution of a mortgage or other conveyance is proved, it is not necessary to prove as against a third person that the consideration passed, and proof that the consideration mentioned did not pass is of no avail to show that the interest was not conveyed. Such proof is only important when, taken with other circumstances, it tends to show that the instrument was a mere sham and not intended to convey any interest—Maung Din v. Ma Hnim, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 227, 3 Rang. 71, 89 I.C. 436.

Where a mortgage effected for consideration of old debts during the pendency of suit by creditors was challenged to be a sham transaction, it was held by the Privy Council that if the debts for which the mortgage was granted cannot be displaced as bona fide debts, and if the mortgage in its authenticity and its execution cannot be impugned, then the consolidation of the debts at the particular period was a piece of family policy not contrary to law, although open to full scrutiny in judicial proceedings—Muthia v. Palaniappa, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 139 (143), 51 Mad. 349, 32 C.W.N. 821, 55 I.A. 256, 109 I.C. 625.

The personal liability of the manager of a joint Hindu family cannot prevail against a settlement for consideration, viz., allotment of a share for the maintenance of his wife though subsequent in time to the incurring of the liability—Mt. Raj Kuar v. Din Dayal, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 325, 135 I.C. 895. If the transfer is made for valuable consideration with the full intention that the title should pass and if no benefit is intended to be retained to the grantor, then the transfer will be valid as against an attaching creditor, even though the object of the transfer might have been to defeat an impending execution and the transferee has also knowledge of the same—Mohideen v. Mt. Mustaffa, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 665 (667-68), 126 I.C. 604.

If it is proved that the transferee paid what was the full value of the property transferred to him, the Court will lean towards holding that the transferee acted bona fide in the transaction—Ah Foon v. Hoe Lai, 9 Rang. 614, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 13 (15), 135 I.C. 641. A transfer is not void under this section where there is nothing to show that the transfer was not made entirely in good faith, that is to say, that there was not full consideration for the transfer, even though the transferee may have got a preference over other creditors or possible creditors—Tan San v. U Kya, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 162, 145 I.C. 330. Where the greater part of the consideration has been paid, the fact that a small portion of it is still due to the vendor is not sufficient to vitiate the sale for want of consideration—Natha v. Maganchand, 27 Bom. 322 (328). If the consideration was not grossly inadequate, the mere fact that full consideration was not paid would not be a ground for holding that the transaction was fraudulent—Devkinandan v. Jawad Hussain, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 199 (201), 106 I.C. 356.

If the transfer was made for a grossly inadequate consideration, the presumption may arise that the transfer was fraudulent and that the transferee did not act in good faith—Chettiyar Firm v. Ma Mai, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 51, 167 I.C. 599. But this presumption holds good in case of a sale, but not in case of a mortgage, for with regard to a mortgage it cannot be said that consideration is grossly inadequate, seeing that a mortgage can be for any amount regardless of the value of the property—Banwari v. Bhag Mal, 12 Lah. L.J. 107, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 213. Where it is alleged that a sale is effected for an inadequate consideration only to defraud the decree-holder creditor of the judgment-debtor vendor, the only evidence that can be available is the various suspicious circumstances from which an inference can be drawn that the sale was made with a view to defraud the creditor—Appalaraju v. Krishnamurthy, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 182, 139 I.C. 582. It is not necessary, however, for the Court to find that the consideration was "grossly inadequate" in order to come to a conclusion that sec. 53 applies—Kedarwati v. Radhey Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 609, 170 I.C. 353.

Partial consideration:—Where a portion of the consideration for a mortgage is fictitious, the whole instrument ought not to be considered fictitious; it must be upheld to the extent to which it is supported by consideration—China Pitchia v. Pedukotiah, 36 Mad. 29 (30), 11 I.C. 868. But when a debtor with a view to defeat or delay his creditors colludes with one of them and creates a mortgage in his favour for a consideration which is partly fictitious and partly made up of a true money debt due to that creditor on the footing that the transaction as a whole was a collusive transaction intended to defeat and delay creditors, the transaction should be set aside as a whole, and the creditor who is a party to the fraud cannot be allowed the protection of the transaction to the extent of his prior debt discharged thereby—Javvadi Narasimamurti v. Maharaja of Pittapur, (1941) 2 M.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 690 (693), 1941 M.W.N. 573; see also Sama Rao v. Doraiswami, 24 M.L.J. 266, 18 I.C. 768 and Rajabhadar v. Thiruvengada, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 20, 106 I.C. 651; Jamadar Singh v. Naiyab Ali, 45 C.W.N. 498, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 378. Where only a small part of the consideration is a barred debt, it cannot be held on that account that there was no consideration and that the deed is void in toto. It is valid to the extent of the consideration which is valid—Natha v. Magan Chand, 27 Bom. 322 (328). Where the considerations for a mortgage are separable, part being valuable, and part fictitious for the purpose of defeating or delaying the creditors, the transfer is valid and enforceable with regard to the part which is for valuable consideration, and is inoperative so far as the consideration is fictitious. Thus, a mortgage was executed for a total sum of Rs. 8,500. It was found that Rs. 4,853 was actually advanced by the mortgagee and the evidence as to the balance Rs. 3,647 was extremely suspicious and seemed to be for the purpose of delaying another creditor who had obtained a decree on a hatchita; held that there ought to be a mortgage-decree on the footing of Rs. 4,853, being the principal money secured—Rajani Kumar v. Gourkishore, 35 Cal. 1051 (1057, 1058); Loorthi v. Gopalasami, 46 M.L.J. 125, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 450 (453), 80 I.C. 147. But in some other cases it has been held that the two parts of such a single transaction are not separable and ought not to be separated; therefore the transfer in fraud of creditors which is partly supported by consideration is wholly void, and is not good to the extent to which consideration passed—Sama Row v. Doraisami, 24 M.L.J. 266 (269), 18 I.C. 768 (dissenting from 35 Cal. 105); Chidambaram v. Sami Aiyar, 30 Mad. 6 (11); Visvananda v. Raja Venkata, 1927 M.W.N. 1, 25 L.W. 223, 99 I.C. 709, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 278 (280) (dissenting from 36 Mad. 29); Bhikhabhai v. Panchand, 43 Bom. 707 (715), 21 Bom. L.R. 770, 25 I.C. 682; Madan Gopal v. Lahri, 12 Lah. 194, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1027 (1029); Rajabhadar v. Thiruwengada, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 20, 106 I.C. 651. See also Narayana v. Viraraghavan, 23 Mad. 184, in which part of consideration was fictitious, and the transfer was held to be void in toto. If a transfer though in part for valuable consideration is as regards the other part only an arrangement to defeat creditors, it is wholly void against the creditors and cannot be upheld to the extent to which it is supported by consideration. It is fraud that vitiates the transaction. The only exception the law contemplates is in favour of a transferee in good faith and for consideration—Warryam Singh v. Thakur Das, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 404, 16 Lah. 680, 158 I.C. 254; Motilal v. Mt. Kashibai, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 249, 172 I.C. 396; Gokul v. Khanum Nur, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 216; Bhagwan v. Rajindra, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 564, 77 I.C. 1; Appalaraju v. Krishnamurthy, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 182, 135 I.C. 582. In such a case if the transferee has paid off prior mortgages in favour of himself and another person, the mortgages will stand though the sale be invalid—Peruri v. Peruri, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 182, 135 I.C. 582. But when there is no pre-existing debt, the mere fact that some considerations passed under a mortgage which on the evidence has been held to be in fraud of creditors will not justify the view that the mortgage can be held to constitute a valid security to the extent of the contemporaneous advance—Mathu Vasu v. Velu Muruga, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 362, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 745 (749), 1939 M.W.N. 633; see also Bai Hakimbu v. Dayabhai, 41 Bom. L.R. 1104, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 508 (513), 185 I.C. 655.

If, however, a portion of the consideration has been applied in paying off a mortgage-debt of the transferor, the transfer is valid to that extent. The principle is that when a transfer of immoveable property is set aside on the ground that it was intended to defeat or delay the creditors, the transferee is entitled to get credit only for the mortgage-debt binding on the property that he may have discharged as part of the consideration for the transfer, but not for the money-debts of the transferor discharged by him—Gangama v. Veerappa, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 513 (520), 131 I.C. 833.

Dower :—A dower-debt due by the wife from her husband is a valuable consideration, consequently a transfer of property by the husband to the wife in satisfaction of her dower-debt is a perfectly legitimate transaction, and no Court has any power to disturb it—Suba Bibi v. Balgovind, 8 All. 178; Bibi Saira v. Bibi Saliman, 2 P.L.T. 577, 63 I.C. 111 (113); Mahadeo Lal v. Bibi Maniram, 12 Pat. 297, 145 I.C. 213, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 281 (283). If there is a real dower-debt due to the wife, equal to or exceeding the value of the property transferred, the transfer cannot be impeached if it is a genuine transfer and the transferor reserves no benefit for himself—Mahadeo Lal v. Bibi Maniram, supra. A gift by a Muhammadan husband of a portion of his property to his wife could not be impeached under this section, when it was found that part of the wife's dower-debt was still due and it was further shown that the husband still retained in his possession other immoveable property to meet the claims of his creditors—Amina Bibi v. Md. Ibrahim, 4 Luck. 343, 114 I.C. 504, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 520 (521); Umrao Singh v. Kaniz Fatima, 1901 A.W.N. 67.

Permission to marry a second time:—In a Madras case, permission to marry a second time has been held to be a good consideration. A transfer of all the properties of a person in favour of his children by his first wife at a time when he was about to marry a second wife, and in consideration of his being permitted to do so by the relatives of his first wife is not a transfer in fraud of creditors and is not voidable, even though the transferor was heavily indebted at the time—Kapini Goundan v. Sarangapani, 3 L.W. 287, 34 I.C. 744 (745).

263. Preference of one or some creditors:—Para 3 of sub-section (1), which has been newly added, lays down that nothing contained therein shall affect the law of insolvency. The Special Committee remarks:—

"To make sub-section (1) more comprehensive we have provided, as is done in section 172 of the English Law of Property Act, 1925, that nothing contained in sub-section (1) shall affect the law of insolvency for the time being in force. Thus, a voluntary transfer, though it may be good under sub-section (1), may be avoided in insolvency proceedings under the circumstances mentioned in section 55 of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909, and section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920. Similarly, a transfer is not necessarily void under sub-section (1) because it amounts to an assignment of all the transferor's property for the benefit of a particular creditor or of particular creditors [Alton v. Harrison, (1869) L.R. 4 Ch. 622 (626)], but it may operate as an act of insolvency under section 9 of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act and section 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, or it may be void as amounting to a fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 56 of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act and section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act."

It is a well-known principle of English law, which has been consistently followed in India, that except in cases falling under the law relating to insolvency, a conveyance is not voidable because it secures a preference to one creditor or some of the creditors, to the exclusion of the others. Section 53 renders void only those transfers which are made for the purpose of defeating all the creditors of the transferor to the benefit of the debtor, but it does not render void a transfer which is made merely for the purpose of preferring one creditor to another. Thus, a debtor purported to convey his properties for adequate consideration for the purpose of paying off some only of his creditors, and it was proved that the debts were genuine debts and were in fact discharged out of the consideration for the conveyance, and the consideration for the deed represented the value of the properties transferred; held that the transfer was not voidable at the instance of the other creditors—Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar, 34 Cal. 999 (1019), affirmed by the Privy Council in Musahar v. Hakim Lal, 43 Cal. 521; Body of creditors of Piler Khasim Saheb v. Bhaskar Chatamiah, (1963) 2 Andh. L.T. 224. A preference of one creditor to the detriment of another is no ground for impeaching the deed, even if the debtor was intending to defeat an anticipated execution by another creditor. In a case in which no consideration of the law of Bankruptcy applies, there is nothing to prevent the debtor paying one creditor in full and leaving others unpaid, although the result may be that the rest of his assets will be insufficient to provide for the payment of the rest of his debts. But the debtor must not retain a benefit for himself—Musahar v. Hakim Lal, 43 Cal. 521 (524) (P.C.); Muthia Chetty v. Palaniappa, 51 Mad. 349 (P.C.), 109 I.C. 626, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 139; Ma Pawa May v. Chettyar Firm, 7 Rang. 624 (P.C.), 34 C.W.N. 6 (10), A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 279, 120 I.C. 645; Badri v. Hazari, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 93, 5 Luck. 625, 125 I.C. 163; Atmaram v. Dayaram, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 94, 115 I.C. 330; Marwadi, etc., Firm v. Sripathi, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1114, 101 I.C. 568; Motilal v. Kashibai, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 249, 172 I.C. 398; Lalit Mohan v. Anil Kumar, 43 C.W.N. 1036; Mila v. Mangal, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 156; Chettyar Firm v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 531; Dewan Chand v. Punjab & Kashmir Bank, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 220, 170 I.C. 68; Parmanand v. Jairamdas, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 215 (216); Ram Ratan v. Mt. Akhtari Begum, 14 Luck. 621, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 230 at p. 231, 1939 O.W.N. 398; Nathusa v. Munir, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 42, 1943 N.L.J. 133; Haque Brothers Private Ltd. v. Mohendra Nath Sarma, A.I.R. 1966 Assam 36. The transfer of property to one creditor for a price far in excess of the debt due to him and the retention of the excess amount for his own benefit indicates an intent to defeat or delay the other creditors, especially when he has no other property left—Bai Hakimbu v. Dayabhai, 41 Bom. L.R. 1104, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 508 (512), 185 I.C. 655; see also Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh, 44 I.A. 72, 44 Cal. 602. Apart from the law of bankruptcy a creditor may take a transfer although he is fully aware that the other creditors are thereby defeated and even when proceedings at their instance are pending. The principle is this: What the law contemplates is the defeating or delaying of creditors, by which is meant the whole body of creditors, and so long as there is even a single creditor who takes the benefit, it cannot be said that the transfer amounts to a fraud; all the creditors not having been defrauded, the preference of one creditor to another even though fraudulent in the law of insolvency cannot be impeached under the general law—Dasamsetti v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 250, 68 M.L.J. 57; C. Abdul Shukoor v. Arji Papa Rao, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150. The provisions of para 2 of sub-section (1) do not come into operation until the provisions of para 1 of that sub-section have been fulfilled—Parmanand v. Jairamdas, supra. The circumstance that the debtor's action is prompted by revenge against a creditor who got him imprisoned for his debt is irrelevant—Mila v. Mangal, supra. The mere fact that one creditor is preferred to another does not in itself render the transaction in favour of the preferred creditor voidable under this section, if the debtor reserves no benefit to himself.

A debtor, for all that is contained in sec. 53, T. P. Act, may pay his debts in any order he pleases, and may pay and creditor he chooses—Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh, 44 Cal. 662 (P.C.) ; Palamalai v. South Indian Export Co., 33 Mad. 334 (337) ; Muthia v. Palaniappa, 45 Mad. 90. A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 447, 70 I.C. 432, 41 M.L.J. 594 ; Kalu v. Randhir, 21 O.C. 97, 46 I.C. 330 (331) ; Amina Bibi v. Md. Ibrahim, 4 Luck. 343, 114 I.C. 504, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 520 (521) ; Madan Gopal v. Lahri Mal, 12 Lah. 194, 130 I.C. 62, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1027 (1028) ; Uttamrao v. Gangaram, 27 N.L.R. 382, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 33. The meaning of the statute is that the debtor must not retain benefit for himself ; it has no regard whatever to the question of preference or priority among the creditors of the debtor. See the above cases and Mahadeo v. Bibi Maniram, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 281, 12 Pat. 297, 145 I.C. 213 ; Daya Ram v. Nader Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 318, 150 I.C. 640. A settlement which preferred certain creditors and intended to defeat others might be good under the statute—Middleton v. Pollock, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 104 (108), cited in 34 Cal. 999 (1010). In one sense it may be considered fraudulent for a man to prefer one of his creditors to the rest and give him a security which left his other creditors unprovided for ; but that is not the sense in which the law understands the term 'fraudulent.' The law leaves it open to a debtor to make his own arrangements with his several creditors and to pay them in such order as he thinks proper—per Baron Ralf in Eveleigh v. Purssord, 2 M. & R. 541 ; Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria, 44 Cal. 662 (P.C.).

A transfer of property made by a Mahomedan husband in favour of his wife in lieu of real dower debt equal to the value of the property transferred, though it affects the body of creditors by reason of the fact that one creditor is preferred, does not affect the validity of the transfer where there is no question of insolvency—Rameshwar v. Mt. Aftab, A.I.R. 1936 All. 803, (1936) A.L.J. 906, 166 I.C. 56 ; Razina Khatun v. Abida Khatun, A.I.R. 1937 All. 39, I.L.R. (1937) All. 153, 166 I.C. 619 ; Amina v. Md. Ibrahim, infra ; Kasturchand v. Mt. Wazir Begam, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 1, I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 291, 167 I.C. 48 ; Mt. Amina v. Lachmichand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 705 ; Mahadeo v. Bibi Maniram, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 281, 12 Pat. 297, 145 I.C. 213 ; Amina v. Md. Ibrahim, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 520 (521) 4 Luck. 343, 114 I.C. 504 ; Kulsum Bibi v. Shaiyam Sunder, A.I.R. 1936 All. 600, 164 I.C. 515 ; Fakir Bux v. Thakur Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 457 (462, 463), 1941 O.W.N. 801, 194 I.C. 588 ; Ram Ratan v. Akhtari Begam, 14 Luck. 621, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 230 (232), 1939 O.W.N. 398. A dower can be fixed at a period later than the marriage and the fact that the dower is unascertained and has to be determined by the Court does not change the wife's position as one of the creditors of her husband—Bansidar v. Mt. Nawab Jahan, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 44 (45), 171 I.C. 887 ; Amina v. Md. Ibrahim, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 520 (521), 4 Luck. 343, 114 I.C. 504. A marriage settlement made before and in consideration of marriage is protected but where there is an intention in the minds of both the parties to the marriage to defeat and delay creditors of the settlor the settlement is voidable—Alamelu Achi v. Meenakshi Achi, A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 536.

Where the transfer is made in favour of a creditor for a pre-existing debt, the knowledge of the creditor that the transfer is likely to defeat or delay the other creditors does not make the transfer voidable under this section—Gobind Ram v. Chhogmal, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 161 (162), 152 I.C. 472. Unless the debt advanced to the mortgagor at the time of execution of the deed can be considered as a part of his pre-existing liability to the mortgagee, no preference can be claimed for that debt over the debts of other creditors. What is protected is the preference of one creditor over the others for his pre-existing liabilities and not for those that are being freshly incurred—Warryam Singh v. Thakar Das, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 404, 16 Lah. 680, 158 I.C. 254.

An agreement by which an insolvent who obtained his personal but not his final discharge without notice to the Official Assignee or his other creditors, settles the claim of one creditor and by which the creditor agrees not to oppose his final discharge, is void as in fraud of creditors and as inconsistent with the policy of insolvency law—Naoraji v. Siddick, 20 Bom. 636.

Where a debtor conveyed his property to one of his creditors in satisfaction of the debt due to him, and the creditor knew that his taking the conveyance had the effect of defeating or delaying the other creditors, still the transfer would not be voidable under this section, if it is for good consideration and retains no benefit for the debtor—Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar, 34 Cal. 999 (1015); Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (213); Rajani v. Gaurkishore, 35 Cal. 1051 (1058); Motilal v. Uttam, 13 Bom. 434 (441); Solema v. Hafez, 54 Cal. 687, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 836 (839); Suba Bibi v. Balgobind, 8 All. 178 (180); Mukundi v. Bulaki, 124 P.L.R. 1911, 9 I.C. 1037; Bibi Saira v. Bibi Saliman, 2 P.L.T. 577, 63 I.C. 111 (113). A debtor may make preference amongst his creditors even to the extent of transferring all his property to one creditor to the exclusion of the others. The object of sec. 53, T. P. Act is not equality of distribution of the property of the debtor among the creditors, as in the case of a Bankruptcy Act. Consequently a debtor may openly prefer a particular creditor to the rest, and may transfer property to him for the bona fide purpose of discharging his debt, and such transfer is not void against the preferred creditor. If there is no secret trust between the debtor and that creditor in favour of the former, but the sole object of the transfer is to pay or secure the payment of a debt, the transaction is a valid one—Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar, 34 Cal. 999 (1015, 1016); Mushahar v. Hakim Lal, 43 Cal. 521 (P.C.). A preferential transfer of property to one creditor cannot be declared fraudulent as to the other creditors although the debtor in making it intended to defeat their claims, and that creditor had knowledge of such intention. If the only purpose of the debtor is to pay off a debt to that creditor and the property is not worth materially more than the amount of the debt, the transaction is not fraudulent. If, however, the transfer is not in reality a preference of an actual debt, but is a mere colourable device to place the debtor's property beyond the reach of his other creditors, or if the transaction extends beyond the necessary purpose of a mere preference, so as to secure some benefit or advance for the debtor himself or for some one in whom he is interested, or to unnecessarily hinder and delay other creditors, the transfer is fraudulent—Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu, 34 Cal. 999 (1018); Chidambaram v. Sami Aiyar, 30 Mad. 6 (11); Loorthia v. Gopalasami, 46 M.L.J. 125, 80 I.C. 147, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 450 (453); Nagarathna v. Chidambaram, 1928 M.W.N. 617, A.I.R. 1928 Mad.

860 (864), 113 I.C. 129; Labhu Ram v. Charnu, 30 P.L.R. 306, 116 I.C. 317, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 409 (413); Visvananda v. Raja Venkata, 25 L.W. 223, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 278, 99 I.C. 709. Thus, if a barred or irrecoverable debt is set up as part of the consideration for the property transferred to the creditor, or if the value of the property transferred to the creditor is greatly in excess of the amount of the debt due to the creditor, it will be presumed that the transfer was made with intent to defeat the other creditors—Rangilbhai v. Vinayak, 11 Bom. 666 (674, 677); Hanifa Bibi v. Punnamma, 17 M.L.J. 11; Narayana v. Viraraghava, 23 Mad. 184 (189); see also Loorthia v. Gopalasami, supra.

It is not opposed to sec. 53 for a creditor to take a mortgage or sale of the debtor's property when he finds that the debtor is unable to pay him, but the transaction would become voidable if in order to help the debtor the creditor takes the mortgage or sale for a larger amount than his debt on the understanding that the rest of the consideration is to be for the debtor's benefit, and the mortgage or sale should be used as a shield against other creditors. The transaction is voidable only when both the transferee and the transferor share the fraudulent intention. Where the transaction is void under this section, the transferee cannot claim a charge on the property for the part of the consideration paid by him unless the consideration has gone towards satisfying an encumbrance on the property—Visvananda v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 278, 99 I.C. 709.

The reason for the distinction between an ordinary transferee (who purchases for a present consideration) and a creditor-transferee (who purchases in satisfaction of pre-existing debt) is thus stated: "A person who purchases for a present consideration is in every sense a volunteer; he has nothing at stake, no self-interest to serve; he may with perfect safety keep out of the transaction. Having no motive or interest prompting him to enter into it, if yet he does enter, knowing the fraudulent purpose of the grantor, the law very properly says that he enters into it for the purpose of aiding that fraudulent purpose. But not so with him who takes the property in satisfaction of a pre-existing indebtedness; he has an interest to serve; he can keep out of the transaction only at the risk of losing his claim. The law throws upon him no duty of protecting other creditors. He has the same right to accept a voluntary preference that he has to obtain a preference by superior diligence; he may know the fraudulent purpose of the grantor, but the law sees that he has a purpose of his own to serve; and if he goes no further than is necessary to serve that purpose the law will not charge him with fraud by reason of such knowledge."—Lockrain v. Rastan, 81 N.W. 60, 9 North Dakota 434, cited in 34 Cal. 999 (1018); Chetty Firm v. Maung Po, 7 Bur. L.T. 257, 23 I.C. 341.

263A. Fraudulent transfer :—A fraudulent transfer should be distinguished from a fictitious transfer which is in fact no transfer at all, while in the former case there is a transfer but on account of a conspiracy between the parties to the transfer to defeat the claims of others it can be avoided by them—Jagadamba v. Ram Khelwan, A.I.R. 1942 All. 344, 1942 A.L.J. 399. Such a transaction, even if it be directed to defrauding one creditor alone, would still be one in fraud of creditors voidable by the creditor sought to be defrauded or delayed—Ousepp v. Annamma, A.I.R.

1951 Tr.-Coch. 237. See also Ratnibai v. Khemraj, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 133, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 125. But the creditors are not entitled to get at what the friends of the debtor have. It would be no fraud for a debtor to say to his friend "do not give it to me; if you do, it will just go to my creditors. Keep it and I will ask you to give it to me when the creditors have been finished with. I am filing my petition"—ibid. A surrender by a Hindu widow may operate as transfer within the meaning of sec. 53—Chidambara Goundar v. Senniappa Goundar, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 337.

When after execution of a mortgage binding on all the members of the joint family, the parties effect a partition without providing for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt, the partition is fraudulent—Jivram v. Kantilal, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 247, 52 Bom. L.R. 104. Where the object of the partition is to enable a sharer to defeat his creditors, i.e., to assign to him properties which the creditors would not be able to touch and which would enable the sharer to keep them for himself, the transaction is fraudulent—Vinayak v. Moreshwar, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 44 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 342. See also Mooppanar v. Velu, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 203, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 404; Nainsukhdas v. Gowardhandas, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 110, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 510; Chana v. Mankubai, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 57; Murli Motiram v. Rewachand, A.I.R. 1946 Sind 137, I.L.R. 1946 Kar. 14. The mere fact that one of the members received a larger share under the partition does not however render it collusive or fraudulent—Bankey Behari v. Brij Rani, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 314, (1944) O.W.N. 410. For cases where the partition was held not to be fraudulent see the following: Schwebo v. Subbiah, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 381, I.L.R. 1945 Mad. 138; Ganpatrao v. Bhimrao, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 278, I.L.R. 1950 Bom. 114; Isabi v. Abdulla, A.I.R. 1950 Tr.-Coch. 60 (F.B.).

When an insolvent has made a real transfer in fraud of creditors, he cannot remove the transferee unless the transfer is first annulled under the present section—Girija v. Kiran, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 471, 26 Pat. 253. See in this connection—Bhatia Damodar v. Receiver, A.I.R. 1952 Sau. 47.

The onus to prove the fraudulent intent is on those who challenge the transaction. When they establish that intent, the transferee will have to show that he had acted in good faith—Rajbari Bank v. Rani Harshanukhi, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 154, 51 C.W.N. 36. A defendant can contend that the plaintiff in a suit to recover money due under a decree assigned to him cannot do so as the transaction was fraudulent—Kosuru v. Chevern, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 714, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 491. When possession is delivered to an auction purchaser on the basis of a collusive and fraudulent decree the other creditors can sue for a declaration that the decree and all other proceedings are void—Thiruvengada Mudaliar v. T. Narayana Reddiar, A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 141.

264. Effect of fraud inter parties :—"There is no real conflict", it has been observed by the Judicial Committee, "between the two maxims [nemo allegans turpitudinem suam audiendus est—no one alleging his own baseness ought to be heard] and in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis—in equal fault the condition of the possessor is the more favourable. The principle underlying both is the same; one embodies the general rule and the other an exception to the same rule. It is one of the fundamental doctrines of all civilized system of jurisprudence that Court of law shall not lend its aid to enforce a transaction which is tainted with fraud. A person who has polluted his hands by being a party or privy to a fraudulent transaction shall not be allowed to approach the fountain of justice 'with his own infamy on his lips' and obtain relief on such a transaction. The moment he relies on such an agreement he will be told nemo allegans suam turpitudinem audiendus est. This is the general rule. But its right application to all cases regardless of the attendant circumstances might result at times in giving effect directly or indirectly, to the fraudulent design of its authors, and thus defeat the very object for which the rule was framed. In order to avoid such consequences several exceptions to the rule have been recognized. One such exception arises in the familiar case in which the fraudulent transaction is still executory and the purpose of the fraud has not yet been effected. In such a case one of the parties to the fraud is allowed to approach the Court, repudiate the transaction and recover money or property handed over to the opposite party in furtherance of the transaction. In such circumstances public policy requires that locus penitentie be given to one or other of the parties and he be allowed to retrace his steps, state the true facts before the Court, and by revoking the authority of his confederate to carry out the fraudulent scheme, defeat the purpose of the contemplated fraud"—Petherpermal v. Muniandy, 35 Cal. 551 (566) (P.C.), 35 I.A. 98, 12 C.W.N. 562. See also Bai Devmani v. Ravishankar, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 147, 53 Bom. 321, 116 I.C. 236.

This question therefore should be discussed in its two aspects : (a) where the fraud is inchoate, i.e., where it is merely attempted but not carried into effect, as for instance, where the apparent transferor merely executes a sham sale-deed, but no property, is actually conveyed to the apparent transferee and no creditor has been defrauded thereby; (b) when the fraud is accomplished or perfected, i.e., where in consequence of the execution of the sham conveyance, the property could not be seized by the creditors, so that the creditors have been actually defrauded by reason of the transaction.

(a) Where the fraud is inchoate, the apparent transferor will be entitled to sue for a declaration that the deed of transfer was in the nature of a benami, and that nothing has been actually transferred to the grantee. "In India, where the benami system is common, it has been recognised by our Court that there may be a sham conveyance, which, though registered and delivered to the grantee, not being intended to pass the property but merely to be used as a blind to deceive creditors or others, conveys no estate to the nominal grantee"—Sadashiv v. Trimbak, 23 Bom. 146 (170). Where the purpose for which the assignment is made is not carried into effect and nothing is done under it, the mere intention to effect an illegal object does not deprive the assignor of his right to recover the property back from the assignee who has given no consideration for it—Symes v. Hughes, (1870) L.R. 9 Eq. 475 (cited in 33 Cal. 967, 982); Pether Permal v. Muniandy, 35 Cal. 551 (P.C.); Dhirendra v. Chandra Kanta, 36 C.L.J. 82, 68 I.C. 648, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 154; Jadu Nath v. Rup Lal, 33 Cal. 967 (969); Chenvirappa v. Puttappa, 11 Bom. 708 (718); Rangammal v. Venkatachin, 18 Mad.

378; Maung Po Zu v. Maung Po Kwa, 65 I.C. 322, A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 58, 11 L.B.R. 323; Bansidhar v. Ajodhya, 27 O.C. 175, 82 I.C. 333, 1 O.W.N. 248, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 120; Rajani Kanta v. Abani Kanta, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 850, 94 I.C. 33. Where a colourable conveyance is executed for the purpose of enabling the transferor to defraud his creditors, the transferor is entitled to recover back his property before the fraud is actually carried out, and there is a locus penitentiae until a creditor has been actually defrauded—Govinda Kuar v. Lala Kishun Prosad, 28 Cal. 370; Sham Lal v. Amarendra, 23 Cal. 460; Tirupathi v. Lakshmana, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 545, (1953) 1 M.L.J. 123; Laxmi Bai v. Lal Chand, A.I.R. 1952 U.P. 69.

Mere intention not carried into effect ought not to be sufficient to deprive the party of the assistance of the Court in enforcing his rights; and if he either abandons his fraudulent purpose before it is accomplished or pays his debts to the full value of the property conveyed, the fraud should be regarded as purged—Raghupati v. Nrishingha, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 90, 36 C.L.J. 491, 71 I.C. 1. Thus, when in order to save his properties from being sold in execution of a decree from which he had preferred an appeal, the owner executed a sham deed of relinquishment in favour of another person (who was aware of the sham nature of the transaction) but being successful in the appeal sued that person for a declaration that the deed of relinquishment was colourable and did not convey title, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. In such an event, a Court of Equity cannot rightly hold that the plaintiff must suffer because he had an improper motive, since no one has been defrauded thereby—Jadu Nath v. Rup Lal, 33 Cal. 967 (979). If in such a case, the Courts were to refuse aid to the plaintiff, they would be assisting in a fraud, for they would be giving an estate to a person (transferee) when it was never intended that he should have it—Debia Chowdrani v. Bimola Soonduree, 21 W.R. 424; Jadu Nath v. Rup Lal, 33 Cal. 967 (983).

When a sole surviving co-parcener or all the co-parceners then in existence save property by resorting to benami transactions, it will not be open to the subsequent born co-parceners to recover that very property especially when it is in the hands of alienees from the ostensible owner—Lacha Reddi v. Venkamma, A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 225.

In these cases, the transferee also will not be entitled to bring a suit to recover possession of the property, in respect of which he has no true right or title. When a transfer to defeat creditors is made in favour of the transferee by the collusive act of the transferor, the transferee will not be helped by the Court in getting possession of the property thus transferred, though the transferor in spite of his fraudulent conduct is allowed to be benefited thereby—Raghavalu v. Adhinarayan, 32 Mad. 323. See also Babaji v. Krishna, 18 Bom. 372; Preo Nath v. Kazi Mahamed, 8 C.W.N. 620. Here the Court will not assist the plaintiff (transferee) on ground of public policy, to recover a property or enforce a contract in respect of which he has no true title or right—Yaramati v. Chundru, 20 Mad. 326 (330); Raghupati v. Nrishingha, supra.

It should be noted that in Chenvirappa v. Puttappa, 11 Bom. 708 and Yaramati v. Chundru, 20 Mad. 326, the Judges did not make any distinction between cases where the fraud was inchoate and cases where the fraud was perfected, and they have laid down as a general rule that (even in cases where the fraud is inchoate) the transferor will not be allowed to come into Court alleging his own fraud and ask the Court to set aside the fraudulent deed or make a declaration to protect him from the threatened consequences of his own act. But these cases have been dissented from by the Calcutta High Court in Jadu Nath v. Rup Lal, 33 Cal. 967 (969).

(b) Where the fraud is perfected, i.e., where the creditors have been actually defrauded, the transferor will not be entitled to recover back the property from the transferee on the ground that conveyance was a merely colourable one. He cannot, in such a case, escape from the consequence of his fraud—Yaramati v. Chundru, 20 Mad. 326 (331); Honappa v. Narsappa, 23 Bom. 406 (413); Rajani Kanta v. Abani Kanta, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 850, 94 I.C. 33; Sarup Narain v. Madho Singh, 30 I.C. 253, 18 O.C. 131; Banshidhar v. Ajudhia, 27 O.C. 175, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 120, 82 I.C. 333; Lalji v. Bachchoo, 9 O.W.N. 275, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 6; Lachman Das v. Mulchand, A.I.R. 1923 All. 411, 71 I.C. 441; Maung Tin v. Ma Mai Myint, 65 I.C. 459, 11 L.B.R. 83; Maung Po Zu v. Maung Po Kwa, 65 I.C. 322, 11 L.B.R. 323, A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 58; Brahmayya v. Kamisetti, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 849, 47 M.L.J. 652, 82 I.C. 14; Gascoigne v. Gascoigne, (1918) 1 K.B. 223; Rupai Devi v. Bamdeb, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 199, 31 Pat. 787; Anantam Veeraju v. Velluri Venkayya, A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 222. Where the intended fraud has been carried into effect, the Court will not allow the true owner to resume the individuality which he has once cast off in order to defraud others—Jadu Nath v. Rup Lal, 33 Cal. 967 (978). Where the illegal purpose has been answered by defeat of third person's rights, a claim for reconveyance will be properly dismissed. The transferee will not be treated as a trustee holding for the benefit of the transferor. The particeps criminis stands on a quite different footing from an innocent third party, and if he has actually parted with the direct ownership of the property, he cannot at the same time have annexed to the ownership a trust in his own favour, the necessary effect of which would be to give success to a conspiracy for defeating the law—Chenvirappa v. Puttappa, 11 Bom. 708 (713, 718, 719). To lay down that when the illegal purpose has been fully or partially carried out, the transferor is nevertheless entitled to claim relief, would not only remove the risk of the sham transferor losing his property, which operates as a check upon knavery, but would also stain the administration of justice and make the Courts active instruments for securing to the guilty plaintiff the fruits of his successful fraud—a position which, it is hardly necessary to say, is absolutely indefensible—Rangammal v. Venkatachari, 18 Mad. 378; Honopa v. Narsappa, 23 Bom. 406 (413). Where the plaintiff with the object of defeating the claims of his creditors executed a colourable conveyance of his property in favour of another person, and the transferee successfully resisted the creditors of the plaintiff from seizing the property in execution of their decree, and then conveyed the property to a third person who took possession, held that the plaintiff would be precluded from maintaining a suit for recovery of the property. If in such a case the Court was to grant relief to a wrong-doer, it would be making itself a party to the fraud—Gobordhan v. Ritu Roy, 23 Cal. 692; Banka Behari v. Rajkumar, 27 Cal. 231; Govinda Kuar v. Lala Kishen Prosad, 28 Cal. 370; Munisami v. Subbaraya, 31 Mad. 97. Sidlingappa v. Hirasa, 31 Bom. 405. Where in order to defeat an execution by a judgment-creditor, the judgment-debtor invited his landlord to distrain and sell for rent not really due, the tenant should not be assisted by the Court in recovering the money realised by the sale—Sims v. Tuffs, 6 Carr. & P. 207 (cited in 11 Bom. 708, 713).

If, however, the transferor remained in possession of the property inspite of the execution of the sham conveyance, the transferee will not be permitted to bring a suit for possession of the property on the strength of the conveyance—Yaramati v. Chundru, 20 Mad. 326 (332). See Immant Appa Rao v. Gollapalli, A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 370 where it has been held that the transferor can plead fraud by way of defence, and this principle has been applied by the Madras High Court in Kanthammal v. D. Venkata Krishna Reddiar, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 362. In such a case if the transferee illegally ousts the transferor and enters into possession under the shadow of the fraudulent deed, he will not be allowed to do so and possession will be restored to the transferor—Hafizulla v. Ally Mulla, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 405, 164 I.C. 914. But generally speaking the defrauding party will not be allowed to disclaim his fraud for the purpose of resiling from his position and the party fails who first has to allege the fraud in which he participated—Ali Ahmed v. Shamsunnissa, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 602, 42 C.W.N. 1059.

It has been decided that where there is no difference in degree of guilt, in a case in which fraud has been perpetrated, of the plaintiff and the defendant the duty of the Court is not to assist either party—Vilayat v. Mesran, 45 All. 369. But a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court has held that in a suit by a benamidar to recover possession of property from the beneficiary the latter is not precluded from pleading that both the parties were in pari delicto and thus showing the real nature of the transaction—Quadir Baksh v. Hakam, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 503 (F.B.), 13 Lah. 713, 139 I.C. 17. Where the object of the mortgage deed was to defraud a third person and the mortgagee was cognizant of and indeed a party to the intended fraud, the circumstance would not operate to estop the mortgagor from pleading the real nature of the transaction against the claim of the mortgagee upon the instrument—Arunachalam v. Rangaswami, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 88, 59 Mad. 289, 159 I.C. 729.

265. Suit to set aside transfer must be a representative suit :—Para 4 of this section, which has been newly added, enacts that a suit instituted by a creditor to set aside a fraudulent transfer shall be instituted on behalf of all the creditors, because a transferee should not be exposed to a multiplicity of suits at the instance of various creditors.

N. W. F. Province :—The rule of procedure laid down in this section does not apply to the N.-W.F. Province. Hence a suit under Or. XXI, r. 63, C.P.C., by a decree-holder for a declaration that the judgment-debtor had interest in certain property is not bad, although not instituted for the benefit of the creditors—Kamal v. Gurcharan, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 158, 164 I.C. 153.

A suit to set aside a transfer on the ground that it was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors should be brought on behalf of all the creditors. It is not competent to any of the creditors to institute such a suit. The proper test to apply in determining whether a suit comes within the purview of this section is to see whether if the plaintiff succeeds the property claimed in the action would be available to the general body of creditors—Fakir Bux v. Thakur Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 457 (465), 1941 O.W.N. 801, 194 I.C. 588. In a suit under this section the plaintiff has to accept the genuineness of the deed as an initial fact and has to prove that the transfer, though genuine, was made with a view to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor—Ibid.

It is competent for one creditor alone to sue to set aside the fraudulent transfer, without impleading the other creditors of the transferor; but he must sue not in his individual capacity but in a representative capacity, i.e., he must sue on behalf of himself as well as all the other creditors; and the decree will enure to the benefit of all the creditors—Ishwar Gimappa v. Devar Venkappa, 27 Bom. 146 (150); Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Shahu, 34 Cal. 999 (1006); Chatterput v. Maharaj Bahadur, 32 Cal. 198, 217 (P.C.); Shantilal v. Munshilal, 56 Bom. 595, 139 I.C. 820, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 498 (504); Ebrahimbai v. Fulbai, 26 Bom. 577 (581); Burjorji v. Dhanbai, 16 Bom. 1 (19); Natha v. Maganchand, 27 Bom. 322; Palaniandi v. Appavu, 30 M.L.J. 565, 34 I.C. 778 (per Courts Trotter J.); Sunder Singh v. Ram Nath, 7 Lah. 12, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 167 (168), 93 I.C. 1013; Champo v. Shankar Das, 74 P.R. 1912, 14 I.C. 232, 165 P.L.R. 1912; Sri Thakurji v. Iarsingh Narain, 6 P.L.J. 48 (50), A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 53, 63 I.C. 788; Chetty Firm v. Maung Po, 7 Bur. L.T. 257, 23 I.C. 341; Deo Kali v. Ram Devi, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 76, 1940 R.L.R. 777. And hence the death of some of the creditors who were the parties originally to such a suit does not cause an appeal therein to abate, though the legal representatives were not substituted in time—Sunder Singh v. Ram Nath, (supra). This rule is based on perfectly sound and intelligible principle. To allow one creditor (in his individual capacity) to impeach the validity of a conveyance would expose the transferee to several attacks by different creditors, each of whom might litigate the same question in a different suit, and it is not inconceivable that the Court might arrive at different conclusions in different suits brought at the instance of the different creditors—Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar, 34 Cal. 999 (1007); Magnibai Kishorjee v. Kesrimal Sewairam, A.I.R. 1955 M.B. 159. In England also it has been held that if an action is brought to set aside a conveyance on the ground that it is voidable under statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, it should be by a creditor on behalf of himself as well as all other creditors of the settlor—Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Atwell, (1869) L.R. 7 Eq. 347; Daniell's Chancery Practice, pp. 201, 490; Seton on Decrees, p. 1372; May on Voluntary Conveyances (2nd Edn.), p. 525.

The contrary view taken in Pokker v. Kunhammad, 42 Mad. 143 (146, 149) and by Seshagiri Ayyar J. in Palaniandi v. Appavu, 30 M.L.J. 565, by Sadasiva Ayyar J. in Ramaswami v. Mallappa, 43 Mad. 760 (769) (F.B.), and by Venkatasubba Rao J. in Narasimham v. Narayan, 22 L.W. 592, 92

I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 66, is no longer correct. Consequently the opinion expressed in Lal Singh v. Jai Chand, 12 Lah. 262, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 70 (71), 130 I.C. 778, that the omission to sue by one creditor does not bar the general body of creditors, no longer holds good.

Under the amended section a suit instituted by a creditor to avoid a transfer on the ground that it has been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor must be instituted for the benefit of all the creditors, that is to say, the suit must be instituted according to the provisions of Or. 1, r. 8, C.P.C. Where the suit is not so instituted the plaintiff is not entitled to claim the benefit of sec. 53—Ekkari v. Sidheshwar, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 783, 62 C.L.J. 548; Nandramdas v. Zulika Bibi, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 531, (1943) 2 M.L.J. 1. If a suit is not brought for the benefit of all the creditors, though the claim in it proceeds on the principle of sec. 53, it is not a suit within that section—Radhika v. Hari, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 812, 37 C.W.N. 1141, 57 C.L.J. 399. When all the persons jointly interested are made parties O. 1, r. 8 does not however apply—Jaina Md. v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 25, I.L.R. 1946 Mad. 486. See also Budhermal v. Verharam, A.I.R. 1946 Sind 78, I.L.R. 1946 Kar. 98. The suit, however, need not be a representative one when the allegation in the plaint is that the transfer is fictitious—Premraj Seth v. Ramawatibai, 1957 M.P.L.J. 107.

Provisions of Or. 21, r. 63, C. P. Code is not incompatible with the present section and a suit brought under that rule is incompetent for want of the Court's permission under Or. 1, r. 8, C. P. Code—Madina Bibi v. Ismail Darga Association, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 872, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 789, I.L.R. 1940 Mad. 808, Ayyamperumal Chettiar v. Palaniandi Chettiar, (1958) 2 M.L.J. 540. Where there is no other creditor than the one in execution of whose decree the proceedings under O. 21, r. 63 have arisen, the suit for declaration brought by that creditor will satisfy the requirements of the present section, because the plaintiff being the sole creditor the suit is instituted on behalf of all the creditors—Fazalul Rahim v. Nawal Kishore, A.I.R. 1952 All. 226 (F.B.); Bhaskara Chalamiah v. Body of Creditors of Piler Khasim Saheb—A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pr. 68. When relief is granted to a claimant in a claim proceeding on the basis of transfer in his favour, the decree holder can challenge the validity of the transfer by a suit under Or. 21, r. 63 and the suit need not be a representative one—Ganeshmal v. Meghraj, A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 283. Even a single creditor can institute a suit under sec. 53 when there are no other creditors of the transferor—State of Punjab v. Giani Bir Singh, A.I.R. 1968 Punjab 479 following Bhaskar's case, A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 68.

Section 53 can be pleaded in defence by a creditor who has been defeated or delayed and it is not necessary that he must bring a representative suit on behalf of all the creditors—Shaukat Ali v. Sheo Ghulam, A.I.R. 1936 All. 663, 165 I.C. 124; Ratan Chand v. Kishen Chand, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 136. He may plead the section as a personal defence to the suit against him. The addition of para 4 to sub-section (1) of sec. 53 does not make any difference—Bai Hakimbu v. Dayabhai, 41 Bom. L.R. 1104, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 508 (513), 185 I.C. 655; see also Jagat Kishore v. Kula Kamini, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 233, 72 C.L.J. 420. In a suit by the claimant-transferee under Or. 21, r. 63, C.P.C. the attaching creditor can avoid the transfer even by way of defence to such suit—C. Abdul Shukoor v. Arji Papa Rao, A.I.R. 1963 s. 1150 ; Ahmed Ali Khan v. Veerayya, A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 280.

Whether the plaintiff has brought the suit in his individual capacity or whether the suit is of a representative character, depends upon the nature of the averments made in the plaint, the pleadings, and the decree that is ultimately passed. Where it is found that though the pleadings raised the larger issue between the transferor and the body of creditors, still the suit was not for benefit of the creditors as a whole and the plaintiff was content with merely a money-decree in his favour and did not claim a decree in terms of Form No. 13, Appendix D to Sch. I. C. P. Code, held that the suit was not brought in a representative capacity—Rahimtulla v. Rasulkhan, 29 N.L.R. 246, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 169.

An objection as to the frame of the suit on the ground of non-joinder of other creditors must be taken in the Court of first instance and ought not to be allowed to be raised in the appellate Court. If however the objection be taken for the first time in the appellate Court and the objection prevails, the plaintiff ought to be allowed an opportunity to amend the plaint, so as to frame the suit as one on behalf of himself and all the other creditors of the transferor—Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar, 34 Cal. 999 (1007) ; Chetty Firm v. Maung Po, 7 Bur. L.T. 257, 23 I.C. 341 ; Burjorji v. Dhunbai, 16 Bom. 1 (20) ; Ekkari v. Siddeswar, supra.

Suit by decree-holder-creditor:—It has been held in some cases that a judgment-creditor who has got a decree on his debt is entitled to proceed in his individual capacity, and is not bound to bring a representative proceeding. Thus, it is said that an attaching judgment-creditor whose attachment has been raised on the claim petition of a transferee of the attached property, is not bound to bring a representative suit on behalf of all the creditors of the judgment-debtor to set aside the transfer as fraudulent under sec. 53 of the T. P. Act, but is competent to institute a suit to establish his right to proceed against the property under O. 21, rule 63, C. P. Code. The attaching judgment-creditor has a statutory right of suit given to him under O. 21, rule 63, C. P. Code, and that suit must necessarily be one brought by himself alone and is not a representative suit—Pokker v. Kunhammad, 42 Mad. 143 (146, 153), 36 M.L.J. 231, 51 I.C. 714 ; Chettyar Firm v. Ma Sein, 5 Rang. 588, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 1 (3) ; 105 I.C. 582 ; Chinamal v. Gul Ahmad, 73 I.C. 719, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 478. This view was based on the following rule of English law : "In an action to set aside an alienation under the statute (13 Eliz. c. 5) a creditor should sue on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the grantor, except where he has recovered judgment for his debt, in which case he can obtain an order declaring the alienation as void against him and containing consequential directions for the satisfaction of his debt alone, without mention of any other creditors, or their debts"—Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XV, p. 89.

But this view is no longer good law, because the 4th para expressly lays down that the term 'creditor' includes a decree-holder whether he has or has not applied for execution of his decree. "We also do not agree with the view expressed by the High Court of Madras that a decree-holder is not a creditor and that he may therefore bring a suit on his own behalf to set aside the transfer."—Report of the Special Committee. It has been held in Bandaru v. Alluri, A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pr. 25 that a suit under sec. 53 cannot be instituted by a decree-holder.

A suit by a creditor to set aside an adverse claim order may in certain circumstances be in essence a suit under this section, but when one creditor merely resists a claim, his resistance in those summary proceedings cannot be deemed to be on behalf of all the creditors—Pethuraju v. Muthuswami, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 128, (1941) 2 M.L.J. 784, 1941 M.W.N. 982; following Jagannath v. Ganesh, 18 All. 413.

Suit by auction-purchaser :—A suit by the auction-purchaser of the property sold in execution of a decree obtained by a creditor of the judgment-debtor, for declaration that a conveyance by the judgment-debtor is fraudulent, and for possession, is not a suit under sec. 53 at all, and need not be instituted in a representative capacity on behalf of all the creditors. The test to be applied under this section is, whether if the plaintiff succeeds in the action the property claimed in the action would be available to the general body of creditors. If it would not, then the action cannot by any possibility be regarded as an action under sec. 53. In a suit by the auction-purchaser, it is obvious that the property claimed would not be available to the general body of creditors but would go to the plaintiff alone who has purchased it at an execution sale. The suit is really a suit for possession, and the prayer for declaration is only to remove a cloud thrown on the plaintiff's title—Sri Thakurji v. Narsing Narain, 6 P.L.J. 48 (50, 51), 2 P.L.T. 217, 63 I.C. 788. Where a fraudulent transfer of his house made by the judgment-debtor in favour of his son after the passing of a decree against him is avoided by the decree holder and the house is attached by the decree-holder in execution of his decree the judgment-debtor has no locus standi to raise an objection to the attachment under sec. 60 (1) (ccc) Code of Civil Procedure because the transfer in so far as the parties to it are concerned is still a good and valid transfer though it would not affect the rights of the decree holder—Ranga Mal v. Kasturi Mal, A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 423.

Suit by attaching creditor :—When a suit is brought by an attaching creditor under Or. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C. to establish his right to attach and bring to sale certain property and it is necessary to avoid a transfer of the property on the ground that the transfer has been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, the suit must be brought in the form of a representative suit on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors of the transferor and the provision of Or. I, r. 8, C.P.C. will be applicable, and the transferee as well as the judgment-debtor will be necessary defendants to such a suit—Maung Tun v. Maung Sin, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 332, 12 Rang. 670, 153 I.C. 942; Magnibai Kishorejee v. Kesrimat Sawairam, A.I.R. 1955 M.B. 159; C. Abdul Shukoor v. Arji Papa Rao, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150. Contra in U Maung v. Chettier Firm, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 200, 152 I.C. 506, where it was held that sec. 53 was not applicable. When the suit of the attaching creditor does not involve the avoidance of any transfer, the section has no application and the suit need not be brought as a representative suit—Chidanubaram v. R. M. & C. Firm, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 302, 12 Rang. 666, 152 I.C. 855.

It has been held by the Bombay High Court that a suit brought under Or. XXI, r. 63, C.P.C. by a judgment-creditor who has been defeated at the instance of an intervenor in proceeding taken in execution of his decree, need not necessarily be a representative suit under sec. 53—Shrimal v. Hiratal, I.L.R. (1938) Bom. 445. There is no rule of law, it has been held by the Patna High Court, that a plaintiff, who has been sought to be defeated by a fraudulent and colourable transfer which is a sham transaction, is limited to the remedy of this section, and there is no bar to the plaintiff succeeding on the strength of his title after obtaining a declaration that the nominal transfer was a colourable and sham transaction—Sheo Gobind v. Ram Asray, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 5, 19 P.L.T. 697.

Suit against insolvent after order of adjudication:—After an order of adjudication is made, the effect of which is to vest the administration of the insolvent's estate under the control of the Court, it is not open to a creditor of the insolvent to sue under this section to set aside a transfer made by the insolvent, without obtaining the leave of the Court as provided by sec. 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act (1907) Vasudeva v. Lakshminarayana, 42 Mad. 684 (686). But the same High Court has ruled that there is nothing in the Provincial Insolvency Act to prevent the creditors and the Official Receiver from proceeding under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act if they wish; and the fact that they have another remedy under sec. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 (sec. 36 of the Prov. Ins. Act of 1907) does not deprive them of their right of suit under sec. 53 of the T. P. Act—Official Receiver v. Bastiao Souza, 23 L.W. 643, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 826, 95 I.C. 300. In a suit by a creditor impeaching a transfer by his debtor as being fraudulent under this section or in an appeal from a decree passed in such suit, the Receiver, when the debtor has been subsequently adjudged insolvent, is a necessary party, and such a suit or appeal is incompetent when the Receiver is not made a party, even if he does not himself wish to institute the suit—Din Mohammad v. Walait Begam, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 856.

A suit by a creditor under this section to set aside an alienation made by the debtor before he is adjudged an insolvent is maintainable without the leave of the Insolvency Court. But if the creditor desires to make the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver a party, he can only do so with the consent of the Insolvency Court—Chidambaram v. Sella Kumara, I.L.R. 1942 Mad. 1.

Onus:—The burden of proof in a suit under this section is on the plaintiff who wishes to avoid the transfer—Mohideen v. Md. Mustappa, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 665, 126 I.C. 604; even if he be the Official Receiver—Ram Ditta Mal v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 365, 15 Lah. 294, 147 I.C. 1026; V. E. A. R. M. Firm v. Maung Ba, 5 Rang. 852 P.C. 32 C.W.N. 28, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 237; Appathuari v. Vellayan, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 302, 55 Mad. 748, 62 M.L.J. 236; Chan Wan v. Chettyar, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 108, 1940 R.L.R. 659; Ram Raj v. Lal Chandra, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 205, 1941 O.W.N. 56, 1941 O.L.R. 210; Mt. Bibo v. Sampuran Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 222, 162 I.C. 922; Abdul Rahman v. Sultan Begam, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 178, 1941 O.L.R. 65; Javvadi Narasimhamurti v. Maharaja of Pittapur, (1941) 2 M.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 690 (693), 1941 M.W.N. 513. When a prima facie case has been established on that basis, then the burden shifts to the alienee to show that he is a transferee in good faith for valuable consideration—Javvadi Narasimhamurti v. Maharaja of Pittapur, supra; see also Narayana v. Viraraghavan, 23 Mad. 184; Har Prasad v. Md. Usman, A.I.R. 1943 All. 2 1942 A.L.J. 645. The vendee, who personally knows the whole circumstances of the case, should be examined. It is an error to rely on the abstract doctrine of burden of proof—Mohideen v. Mustappu, supra. See also Gopal v. Sheokumar, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 85, 169 I.C. 954.

Limitation :—A suit under this section by a creditor for a declaration that the transfer by the debtor is intended to defeat or delay the creditors and is therefore not binding upon them is governed by Art. 120 and not by Art. 91, Limitation Act, 1908, and limitation starts against him when he is fixed with the knowledge about the fraudulent character of the transaction. The fact that the plaintiff knew some facts which would raise suspicion is not enough—Marthandu v. Basappa, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 388, (1950) 2 M.L.J. 653; Abdallakhan v. Parshotham, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 265, I.L.R. 1947 Bom. 807; Ahmed Ali Khan v. Veerayya, A.I.R. 1059 Andh. Pra. 280. It is true that the creditor has to challenge the transfer only within 6 years, but where the creditor has occupied the position of a defendant, no time limit affects his defence—Man Singh v. B. N. Sinha, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 198, 191 I.C. 639.

266. Presumption of fraudulent intention :—The second para. of the old section contained a rule of evidence, indicating the circumstances under which the fraudulent intention might be presumed. This para has been omitted from the present section.

It is evident that by omitting the second para of the old section, the Legislature intends to lay down that the intent to defraud, defeat or delay must not be presumed merely from the effect of the transfer or from absence or inadequacy of consideration, but is to be established by looking to all the circumstances surrounding the execution of the conveyance. See next Note.

A transaction cannot be assumed to be fraudulent. Where there is no evidence to show the extent of debts and also of property, it cannot be concluded that the transaction is fraudulent—Rukiayia v. Radha Kishan, A.I.R. 1944 All. 214, I.L.R. 1944 All. 325. If the transfer is to a creditor in payment of his debts, it cannot be impugned as fraudulent unless the real object of the transfer is to place the property beyond the reach of the creditors for the benefit of the debtor—Nathusa v. Munir, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 42, 1943 N.L.J. 133. But it is otherwise where a person, who is indebted to a considerable extent and is apprehensive of further liabilities in future, makes a gift of the bulk of his properties in favour of a near relative—Nandaramdas v. Zulika Bibi, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 531, (1943) 2 M.L.J. 1.

267. Indicia of fraud :—It is a truth confirmed by experience that in the great majority of cases fraud is not capable of being established by positive and tangible proofs. It is by its very nature secret in its movements. It is therefore sufficient if the evidence given is such as may lead to the inference that fraud must have been committed. In the generality of cases circumstantial evidence is the only resource in dealing with questions of fraud—Parkash Narain v. Birendra Bikram, 7 Luck. 131, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 333, 132 I.C. 51; Rattan Chand v. Kishen Chand, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 136; Hashmat Begam v. Mohan Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 349, 168 I.C. 53. Fraud may be presumed from the following circumstances: (1) where the transferor disposes of his entire estate, without any exception, including his wearing apparel; (2) where he remains in possession of the property although possession is professedly transferred; (3) where the transfer is made in anticipation of or pending a suit; (4) where the transfer is made in secret; (5) where there is a trust between the parties (for "fraud is always apparelled and clad with a trust, and trust is the cover of fraud"); (6) where the deed contains a statement that the transfer is made honestly, truly and bona fide—Twyne's case, 3 Coke's Rep. 80, 1 Sm. L.C. 1, cited in Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (218). Similarly, the absence or gross inadequacy of consideration, the indifference of the purchaser as to the enforcement of any claim he may have had as to inspection or valuation before purchase, the continuance of the transferor in possession and control after the sale, the secrecy in making the arrangement, and the attempt to include in it all available assets, must always be considered in determining the existence of good faith of the transaction—Bhagwant v. Kedari, 25 Bom. 202 (228). Where it was found that the vendor having many debts to pay sold away all his property reserving nothing, that the vendee purchased the property without even taking care to value it, that the consideration consisted of debts some of which had become time-barred and others had not then become due, that the properties remained in the possession of the vendor who paid the assessment of the same, and that the consideration was grossly inadequate, held that the sale-deed was fictitious and the transaction was a colourable one intended to defraud creditors—Nana v. Rautmal, 22 Bom. 255. The embarrassed circumstances of the vendor, the fact that the sale was hurried on after his house had been attached, and when the attachment of the lands was imminent, the hurried registration, the sale of other lands for a suspicious consideration, the hasty manner in which the price was fixed without any valuation of the arrears and other things he was taking over in addition to the lands, all these go to show that the transaction was effected for the purpose of defeating the creditors and that there was no good faith on the part of the transferee—Palamalai v. South Indian Export Co., 33 Mad. 334 (337, 338). So also, the motive with which a purchase is entered into, the position of the parties to the transaction and their relation to one another, the possession of the property concerned and of the title-deeds thereof, the source and adequacy of the purchase-money, and the previous and subsequent conduct of the parties to the transaction, all afford valuable data for determining the intention of the parties, and nature of the interest, if any, sought to be created—Ahmudi Begam v. Raja Udit Narain, 17 O.C. 173, I.C. 264. Thus, in a case before the Privy Council, the secrecy and haste with which the mortgage-deed was executed, the subsequent negotiations for a composition with creditors on a payment by them to get the mortgage revoked, the non-production of material books, the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence as to the settlement of the accounts on which the mortgage was based, the relation of the parties and the reservation of the entire usufruct of the immoveable properties for the wife and children of the debtor, were held by their Lordships to prove irresistibly that the mortgage was in fraud of creditors—Ghansham Das v. Uma Pershad, 23 C.W.N. 817 (P.C.), 50 I.C. 264. As to the case of a trust-deed which has been held to be a fraudulent deed executed with the intent of shielding the properties from the claims of the creditors of the sons, see Jagat Kishore v. Kula Kamini, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 233, 72 C.L.J. 420.

When once it is established that the mortgagee has set up as true an item of consideration which to his knowledge was false and that the transaction as a whole was intended to defeat and delay creditors, the inference is irresistible that the mortgagee himself was a party to the scheme of fraud—Javvadi Narasimhamurti v. Maharaja of Pittapur, (1941) 2 M.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 690 (693), 1941 M.W.N. 513.

Where a debtor in insolvent circumstances gives security to a creditor in pursuance of a previous contract, the security is not, however, an act of fraudulent preference—Narayana v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 294, 150 I.C. 389.

If there be only one creditor, then the act of the debtor in transferring all his property to a stranger with a view to secrete the same and defeat the creditor will be fraudulent and the transfer can be set aside if the transferee has notice of the circumstances and of the debtor's evil design—Mohideen v. Md. Mustappa, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 665, 126 I.C. 604. But if the transferor is in fact indebted to the plaintiff, the mere fact that the transfer to him has the effect of giving preference will not render the transaction fraudulent—Madan Gopal v. Lahri Mal, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1027, 130 I.C. 62. The mere fact that debts are due from the transferor is not itself sufficient to establish a fraudulent intention; it must be proved that at the time of the transfer, motive for the transaction was to defeat or delay the creditors—Rattan Chand v. Kishen Chand, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 136.

If the evidence shows that the transactions were not bona fide, that they were made gratuitously and presumably to defraud the plaintiff, he can impeach the transfers, and the mere fact that mutation had been effected in favour of the so-called transferees is immaterial—Parkash-Narain v. Birendra, 7 Luck. 131, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 333, 132 I.C. 51, 8 O.W.N. 593.

Pleading as to fraud:—The use of such general words as "fraud" or "collusion" are ineffectual to give a fraudulent colour to the particular statements of fact in the plaint. The particular circumstances in which the fraud has been committed or from which fraud can be inferred should be clearly set forth in the plaint. It is not necessary that the plaint should disclose the evidence by which fraud is to be established—Creet v. Gangaraj, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 129, I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 203, 170 I.C. 214. The fraudulent intention of transfer has got to be proved by the creditor—Chettyar Firm v. Ma Than, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 308.

Waiver of the right to challenge alienation:—Where in a case of alienation a person entitled to challenge it is present at the mutation proceedings but does not object in spite of opportunity to object he cannot challenge the alienation subsequently—Ram Sarup v. Ram Saran, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 650; Shatchitananda Tiwari v. Radhapat, A.I.R. 1928 All. 234. But if a creditor after filing an objection at the mutation proceedings merely drops it later on he is not debarred from suing—State v. Giani Bir Singh, A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 479.

268. Transfer with intent to defraud subsequent transferees :— See sub-section (2). The old section contained the words “prior or subsequent transferees”. The word ‘prior’ has now been omitted, because it is redundant. On the same ground the words ‘co-owners or other persons having an interest in such property’ have also been omitted.

The amendment in this section was made to clarify the law and not to alter it. The mere fact that there was intent to defraud does not, as against a subsequent transferee render the transaction void—Nathusa v. Munir, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 129, I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 42.

A person who purchases the property of the fraudulent transferor at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained by a creditor of the transferor, is not a subsequent transferee within the meaning of this section, because he is not a transferee by act of parties but by operation of law, and also because he was not the person intended to be defrauded by the transferor—Vasudev v. Janardan, 39 Bom. 507, 29 I.C. 497 (498); Awadhut v. Punjabi, 53 I.C. 205. In this connection see the cases of Sami Asari v. Adinam, 12 L.W. 718, 61 I.C. 580 (583), and Sri Thakurji v. Narsingh, 6 P.L.J. 48 (50), though these cases do not strictly fall under this sub-section.

269. Sub-section (2), Second para :—This para is new, and has been inserted for the following reasons :—

“Coming now to transfers made with intent to defraud subsequent transferees for value, we have already referred to the English cases by which it was determined that every voluntary conveyance of immoveable property was void as against a subsequent purchaser for value. These decisions, as stated above, were followed by Sale, J. in 22 Cal. 185, but the law in England was altered by section 2 of the Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict., c. 21), by which it was provided that a voluntary conveyance, if made bona fide and without any fraudulent intent, should not be deemed fraudulent (within the meaning of 27 Eliz., c. 4) by reasons of any subsequent purchase for value. Section 2 of the Voluntary Conveyances Act has been reproduced in sec. 173 of the English Law of Property Act, 1925. We think that a similar provision should be made and we have done so accordingly in sub-section (2).”—Report of the Special Committee.

The expression subsequent transferee does not include a purchaser at a Court sale—Mahendra Mahto v. Suraj Prasad Ojha, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 568. If a transferor having no debts on the date of transfer makes a gift of his property to his wife and children the gift is not fraudulent—Johrilal v. Gordhan, I.L.R. (1962) 12 Raj. 517.

53A. Where any person contracts to transfer for consideration any immoveable property by writing signed by him or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty, Part performance. and the transferee has in part performance of the contract, taken possession of the property or any part thereof, or the transferee, being already in possession, continues in possession in part performance of the contract and has done some act in furtherance of the contract, and the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract, then, notwithstanding that the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered, or, where there is an instrument of transfer, that the transfer has not been completed in the manner prescribed therefor by the law for the time being in force, the transferor or any person claiming under him shall be debarred from enforcing against the transferee and persons claiming under him any right in respect of the property of which the transferee has taken or continued in possession, other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract ;

Provided that nothing in this section shall affect the rights of a transferee for consideration who has no notice of the contract or of the part performance thereof.

This section has been newly added by sec. 16 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

270. Previous law :—Before the enactment of this section there were three views as to the rights of the vendor and vendee in cases where the vendor delivered possession of immoveable property worth Rs. 100 or upwards to the vendee but executed no registered conveyance.

One view was that the express words of the statute must prevail and that no title was created by mere delivery of possession, in the absence of a registered deed. Another view was that even in the absence of a registered instrument of conveyance, the vendor against whom the purchaser could maintain a suit for specific performance of an oral or unregistered written agreement for sale was disentitled from recovering possession from the purchaser, provided that the Court deciding the question of ejectment had jurisdiction to decree specific performance and the circumstances were such as to entitle the defendant to such a decree in the suit. This view is based upon the English case of Walsh v. Lonsdale. A third view would refuse to the vendor (or to a purchaser taking from him with notice of the prior transaction) any right to eject even though the time has elapsed within which a suit for specific performance is allowed by the Limitation Act.

In the case of Pir Bux v. Md. Tahar, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 235, 39 C.W.N. 34, 60 C.L.J. 370, 151 I.C. 325 the Privy Council again considered the law as it stood before the insertion of sec. 53A and held that an averment of the existence of sale whether with or without averment of possession following upon the contract was not a relevant defence to an action of ejectment. If the contract was still enforceable the defendant might found upon it to have the action stayed, and by suing for specific performance obtain a title which would protect him from ejectment. But if it was no longer enforceable, its part performance would not avail him to any extent. [In this case their Lordships followed Ariff v. Jadunath, A.I.R.

1931 P.C. 79, 58 Cal. 1235 and Currimbhoy v. Creet, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 29, 60 Cal. 980, 141 I.C. 209]. These cases have been followed in Nemtulla v. Tyeballi, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 208, 37 Bom. L.R. 82, 156 I.C. 779; Mukteswar v. Barakar Coal Co., A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 246, 152 I.C. 498; Saya Hman v. Saya Hla, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 448.

Object of the new section:—By section 4 of the Statute of Frauds (1677) (29 Car. II, c. 3) it is provided that no action or suit shall be maintained on an agreement relating to land which is not in writing signed by the party to be charged with it. The strict application of the provision led to great hardship in cases where a parol agreement relating to land had been partly performed by one party and yet he could not sue the other party for specific performance. Thus, the latter party was enabled to practise a fraud upon the former. In such cases the Courts intervened on equity and enforced specific performance, holding that part performance took the cases out of the Statute of Frauds. The general ground upon which the doctrine is based is prevention of fraud. It is said that where one party has executed his part of the agreement in the confidence that the other party would do the same, it is obvious that, if the latter should refuse, it would be a fraud upon the former to suffer this refusal to work to his prejudice (see Story on Equity, section 1045).

The object of inserting this new section was to alter the statute law by partial incorporation of the English doctrine of part performance—Durgapada v. Nrishingha, 62 Cal. 492, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 541, 39 C.W.N. 416, 159 I.C. 20; Dhanrajmal v. Hazarimal, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 81, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 513. The right conferred by this section can be invoked only by way of defence—Prabodh Kumar v. Dantmara Tea Co., A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 1; Dammulal v. Mohd. Bhai, A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 306; Karoi Mal v. Paramanand, A.I.R. 1955 Punj. 252; Susheelamma v. Palla Bucha Reddy, (1969) 1 Andh. L.T. 150.

The doctrine of part performance embodied in this section is an equitable doctrine. The object of this section is to prevent a transferor or his successor-in-interest from taking any advantage on account of the non-registration of the document, provided the transferee has performed his part of the contract and in pursuance thereof has taken possession of some immovable property—Labhu v. Shib Ram, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 57.

The doctrine of part performance was enunciated by the court of Equity in England in order to give relief to persons hit by the Statute of Frauds, 1677, which inter alia provided that no action might be brought upon any contract for sale or other dispositions of land or any interest in land unless the agreement was in writing and signed by the party to be charged. The Law of Property Act, 1925 has re-enacted the above provisions of the Statute of Frauds.

The object of the Statute of Frauds was to prevent fraud and perjuries. But, in practice, it encouraged dishonest dealings. The equitable doctrine of part performance seeks to prevent such dishonest dealings. Under this doctrine the court will in certain cases allow a contract of a nature required to be proved by writing, to be proved by parol evidence, when the party seeking to enforce the contract has done acts in performance of his obligation under the contract. The attitude adopted by the court of equity is that it would be fraudulent for a defendant to take advantage of the absence of writing if he has stood by and allowed the plaintiff to alter his position for the worse by doing acts in performance of his obligation under the contract. If, for instance, P agrees to let out a plot of land to Q, and if Q enters into possession of and improves the land, it would be fraudulent, at least, inequitable for P to refuse to grant the lease on the ground that the agreement is not in writing. Equity grants a decree for specific performance of the contract against P.

Reference may be made to the recent decision of the House of Lords in Mason v. Clarke [1955] A.C. 778, (1955) 1 All. E.R. 914. There R was the tenant from year to year under a company in respect of a part of an estate known as Hothorpa. By an oral agreement the company granted to M the right to catch and kill rabbits on the said estate for one year on receipt of £100. R kicked out the snares laid by M and prevented M from exercising his right of rabbiting (profit a prandre). On M's action for injunction and damages Held: that M could maintain the action against R in trespass since M had entered into possession of a profit a prandre under an oral agreement, that the act of setting snares by M was in part performance of the oral agreement, and that therefore the fact that there was no sufficient written memorandum of that agreement for about two months and a half was immaterial.

270A. Essentials of the section :—The essentials of this new section are—(1) a contract to transfer immoveable property ; (2) the contract must be for consideration ; (3) it must be in writing signed by or on behalf of the transferor ; (4) the terms can be ascertained from the writing ; (5) the transferee has taken possession or is already in possession of the property ; (6) he has done some act in furtherance of the contract, and (7) has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract—see Ma Thet v. Ma Se, 13 Rang. 17. See also Shravan v. Garbad, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 406, 45 Bom. L.R. 874 ; Yenugo Achayya v. Eranki Venkatasubba Rao, 1956 Andhra W.R. 830.

271. Scope :—This section, which imports in India the equitable doctrine of part performance only partially, does not give the transferee any right on which he can found a suit as a plaintiff, but only a right which is available to him as defence in order to protect his possession. It does not confer any title on the transferee who takes possession in pursuance of a written, but unregistered contract. Accordingly he cannot maintain a suit for declaration of his title or that the transferor or other person has no title to the property—Dantmara Tea Co. v. Probodh Kumar Das, 41 C.W.N. 54 ; Luchwar Lime & Stone Co. v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 372 (378), 15 Pat. 460, 163 I.C. 501 ; Mt. Nasiban v. Md. Sayeed, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 174, 164 I.C. 557 ; Bajrangi v. Rupnarain, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 464 ; Hari Prasad v. Abdul Haq, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 160 ; Gulab Chand v. Makchhed, A.I.R. 1939 All. 504, 1939 A.L.J. 384, 184 I.C. 233 relying on Currimbhoy & Co. v. Creet, 60 I.A. 297, 60 Cal. 980, 37 C.W.N. 265, where it has been held that under sec. 53A "a defendant in an action of ejectment may, in certain circumstances, effectively plead possession under an unregistered contract of sale in defence to the action". In the appeal from Dantmara Tea Co. v. Probodh Kumar Das, supra, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed: "The amendment of the law effected by the enactment of sec. 53-A conferred no right of action on a transferee in possession under an unregistered contract of sale." Their Lordships agree with the view expressed by Mitter J., in the High Court that the right conferred by sec. 53-A is a right available only to the defendant to protect his possession—Probodh Kumar Das v. Dantmara Tea Co., 66 I.A. 293, 44 C.W.N. 145, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 250, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 1 (2); see also Ram Jiawan v. Basrurkar, U.A., A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 794. In a later Privy Council case Lord Atkin, who delivered the judgment, said: "Now whether sec. 53-A applies at all to an agreement to transfer a partial interest in property, such as a right to win minerals or cut timber or the like, is a question which on this occasion it is not necessary to determine. It is at least possible that it only applies to an agreement to sell or otherwise dispose of the entirety of a piece of real property. But the words of the section make it quite plain that the section does not operate to create a form of transfer of property which is exempt from registration. It creates no real right: it merely creates rights of estoppel between the proposed transferee and transferor, which have no operation against third persons not claiming under those persons—S. N. Banerjee v. Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co., (1942) 46 C.W.N. 374 (P.C.). Consequently, when the dispute arises in Court after sec. 53-A came into force the purchaser is entitled to press it into his service even though the sale may have taken place prior to its coming into force—Balaram v. Kewalram, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 396 (400), 1940 N.L.J. 499, 199 I.C. 881; see also Mulji Sicca v. Nurmohammad, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 432, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 377, 181 I.C. 126; Jahangir Begum v. Golam Ali Ahmed, A.I.R. 1955 Hyd. 101.

No doubt it is settled law that sec. 53-A is available by way of defence only, but a suit by a vendee under Or. 21, r. 103, C. P. Code being a suit by way of defence because in such a suit the vendee is merely asking to protect the rights which he is entitled to under sec. 53-A, it is open to the vendee to rest his case on this section, even though he is a plaintiff—Mt. Firdos Jahan v. Md. Yunus, 15 Luck. 43, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 1 (5), 1939 O.W.N. 876 relying on Ram Chunder v. Maharaj Kunwar, 1939 A.L.J. 692, A.I.R. 1939 All. 611, I.L.R. 1939 All. 809. See also Ewaj Ali v. Firdous Jehan, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 212, (1944) O.W.N. 228; Gulab Chand v. Madholal, A.I.R. 1953 Aj. 47. A suit by the transferee against an attaching creditor under O.21, r. 63, C. P. Code is not however one between him and the transferor. So the transferee as a plaintiff cannot avail himself of the provisions of the present section—Padmanabha v. Appalanara- samma, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 143. But see Manak Chand v. Lal Shanker, A.I.R. 1956 Ajmer 22.

The English doctrine of part performance is not available in India by way of defence to a suit for ejectment except under provisions of this section and in cases to which it applies—K. K. Das v. Amina Khatun, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 161, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 356, 44 C.W.N. 247; Tantooram v. Chandrika, 1960 M.P.L.J. 673. This section has imported a modified form of the English doctrine of part performance into this country. The basis of the doctrine is not contract, but the acts subsequent to the contract—per Nasim Ali J. in Nakul v. Kalipada, I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal. 328, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 163 (166), 42 C.W.N. 630. It is not the law that this section applies only to the case where a contract can be specifically enforced. On the other hand, it will be brought into aid when the specific performance of a contract is barred or the contract is otherwise unenforceable—Bharat Chandra v. Md. Ramjan, 45 C.W.N. 489; Jahangir Begum v. Gulam Ali Ahmed, A.I.R. 1955 Hyderabad, 101.

In order to attract the provision of this section it is necessary that there should be a completed agreement and that possession has been delivered in part performance of that agreement—Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co. v. Secretary of State, supra. If there is an agreement for sale in respect of a property in the possession of the agent of the owner between the owner and a benamdar for the agent, the possession of the agent subsequent to the agreement is not in part performance of the contract—Gandi Anant Ramulu v. Asif Ahmed, (1964) 2 An. W.R. 5.

The general provisions contained in this Chapter apply to transfers of agricultural holdings unless they are specifically excluded by the Bengal Tenancy Act. Particularly, sec. 53A deals with rights arising out of incomplete contracts of transfer—a matter not dealt with by Bengal Tenancy Act. Consequently, this section applies to transfers of occupancy holdings otherwise governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. Where a person has been put in possession of an occupancy raiyati holding in pursuance of an unregistered kobala supported by consideration, he can, in a suit by a subsequent transferee under an unregistered kobala, successfully protect his possession by setting up the right given by this section, although his right to obtain specific performance of the contract of transfer may have been time-barred and although there was no transfer in accordance with sec. 26C of the Bengal Tenancy Act. "It is contended", observed S. K. Ghose, J. "that sec. 26C not only provides for the registration but also for bringing in a third party, namely the landlord, to whom notice has to be issued and certain fees are to be paid. But where these conditions are not complied with, it only means that the transfer has not been completed in the manner prescribed therefor by law, which again satisfies one of the conditions for the application of sec. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act"—Nokul v. Kalipada, 42 C.W.N. 630 (633). Again in the same case his Lordship observes: "As a result of this section (section 53A) the defendant has now got a statutory right which is limited by two conditions, viz., that the contract must be in writing and further that it is available only as a defence or to use a convenient expression, as a passive equity and not as an active equity. . . . If the transferee is entitled to specific performance of contract of a lease, it is provided for by sec. 27A of the Specific Relief Act. In such a case it is not necessary for him to resort to sec. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, and since the provisions of that section confer a right which is only available to a defendant to protect his possession, no question of limitation arises thereunder since there is no bar of limitation to a defence. This is consistent with what was said in Pir Buksh's case [(1934) 61 I.A. 338, 39 C.W.N. 34] and we ourselves said in the case of Dantmarā Tea Co. v. Probodh Kumar Das, (supra)" at p. 635. See also Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co. v. Secretary of State, supra.

Under this section a minor may be regarded as a transferor. Thus where the mother of a Hindu minor enters into a contract of sale on behalf of the minor and the contract is one which is within her competence as guardian to enter into so as to be binding upon the minor, the latter is the "transferor" within the meaning of this section—Subramanyam v. Subba Rao, A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 95, 75 I.A. 115, 52 C.W.N. 706. Overruling Subramanyam v. Subba Rao, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 337. See also Amrco v. Babarao, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 403, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 25; Manglu v. Sukru, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 217, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 107. Where the father as manager of a joint family consisting of the father and his minor sons executes a contract of sale of the joint family property for the benefit of the family and the transferee is put into possession of the property after he has paid the consideration the transferee can resist the claim of the sons for possession, because under Hindu law the father can enter into a contract on behalf of his minor sons—Padmanavaraju v. Lakshmi Kumar Raju, A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 237 (F.B.). See also Labchand Shankarlal v. Sharifabi, A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 215. When the manager of a joint Hindu family enters into an agreement to sell the family property for legal necessity the manager is the transferor within the meaning of sec. 53A—G. Govindaraju Mudaliar v. Vinayaka Mudaliar, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 310.

The difference between the protection given by this section and the right conferred by sec. 27A of the Specific Relief Act is that the former creates a defence while the latter a ground of claim. What sec. 53A creates is a defence by prohibiting the enforcement of a right by the transferor while sec. 27A gives a right to the transferor and transferee to enforce specifically the contract by compelling registration where there is a part performance—Hari Prasad v. Hanumantrao, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 74 (76); Md. Rowther v. Tinnevely Municipal Council, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 746 (748), 48 M.L.W. 74. In granting relief under the present section the question whether a contract is specifically enforceable or not has no bearing at all. S. 12 of the Specific Relief Act is also quite distinct from the present section—Sobharam v. Totaram, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 244. A transferee in possession under a contract of sale in a suit for specific performance of the contract cannot also avail himself of the provisions of the present section—Parul Bala v. Saroj Kumar, A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 147, 82 C.L.J. 273.

The legislature has by sec. 27A, Specific Relief Act recognized that the equity of part performance is an active equity as in English law and enables the plaintiff to support an independent action. The section however has no application to contracts executed before 1st April, 1930, though in such a case the defence under the present section is available to a person who has an agreement of lease in his favour—Maneklal v. Hormusji, A.I.R. 1950 S.C. 1, (1950) S. C. R., 75, 52 Bom. L.R. 521.

In order to invoke the doctrine of part performance as embodied in sec. 53A, it is, however, necessary that the possession relied upon as part performance must be referable to the agreement only and not to anything else—Bahadur Singh v. Jyotirupa, 40 C.W.N. 476. Thus, the possession of a Receiver caused to be appointed by a decree-holder in execution proceedings is not possession in part performance of a contract so as to make this section available and to cure the effect of non-registration of the decree—Sambhuram v. Gulzarilal, 40 C.W.N. 974. The absence of an averment in the written statement that the defendant is ready and willing to perform his part of the contract is not fatal—Karthikeya Mudaliar v. Singaram Pillai, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 693; Malikajappa v. Bhimappa, A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 86.

Where there is no agreement or where the agreement has been abandoned, sec. 53A does not apply—Cooverji v. Vasant & Co., A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 91, 154 I.C. 583; Venkatasubbayya v. Rasayya, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pr. 58. So also in cases of void agreements, e.g., under sec. 6 (a)—Lalita Prasad v. Sarman, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 165 (172), 14 P.L.T. 27. This section does not apply to a family arrangement or a partition which does not involve a transfer of property—Mt. Jileba v. Mt. Parmesra, A.I.R. 1950 All. 700, 1950 A.L.J. 477; Gopinath v. Hangsnath, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 129; Radhakristnayya v. Sarasamma, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 213, I.L.R. 1951 Mad. 607. But relinquishment being a transfer the principle of part performance applies to it—Lakshmibai v. Bhoja, A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 114. In land acquisition proceedings a claimant who is in possession in part performance of a contract to transfer can rely on Sec. 53A—Maharaj Kumar Irfan Rasul Khan v. U. P. Govt., I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 71.

Para 3.—Para 3 of this section makes it a condition that the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract. It means complete performance or complete willingness, so far as he is concerned. It is not sufficient compliance with this condition that the transferee should have performed his part of the contract to some extent—Becharadas v. Borough Municipality of Ahmedabad, 43 Bom. L.R. 603, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 346 (348) dissenting from Suleman v. Patell, 35 Bom. L.R. 722, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 381, 145 I.C. 557 where it has been held that it is not necessary that the transferee's willingness should continue throughout the period of the agreement, if there are substantial acts of part performance. See in this connection Probodh Kumar Das v. Dantmara Tea Co., 45 C.W.N. 132. This readiness and willingness must be pleaded, otherwise the contract is not a valid one—Pusaram v. Deorao, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 188, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 991.

Para 4.—This section debars the transferor from exercising rights which he would have apart from the agreement. There is, however, an exception to this disablement in the words "other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract". But the transferor can derive no rights from this section which are inconsistent with the conditions subject to which the section comes into operation. Since it is a condition precedent that the transferee shall have performed his part of the contract or should be willing to perform his part, the material time being the time when the section is sought to be made use of, a suit for damages for breach of a contract can never be founded upon this section—Becharadas v. Borough Municipality of Ahmedabad, supra. See in this connection Ram Protap v. National Petroleum Co. A. I. R. 1950 Cal. 23, 54 C.W.N. 53.

By this section no rights are conferred at all on the transferor—Municipal Board v. Moradhuj, A.I.R. 1940 All. 340, 189 I.C. 819.

Objection under this section will not be entertained for the first time in a second appeal—Sailajananda v. Lakhichand, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 502, 30 P.L.T. 388.

271A. Application :—The doctrine of part performance would equally apply to a lease, and defects, if any, of the requirements of sec. 107, post would be cured by sec. 53A—Jumman v. Jaganath, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 85 (86), 1939 O.W.N. 102, 179 I.C. 635 ; Deochand v. Parvatibati, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 115. Under section 27A, Specific Relief Act, such a person can claim specific performance of the contract also which for want of registration may not afford a basis for a claim of title, ibid. See also Kochuvareed v. Mariappa, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 10. A lease was invalid for not being signed by both the lessor and the lessee as required by sec. 107, post and the lessee was in possession by virtue of this lease. Subsequently, the defendant demolished a part of the building on the land and the plaintiff brought a suit for injunction for restraining the defendant from interfering with any of the rights of the plaintiff as lessee, held by Thom. C.J. and Ganga Nath J., that it was the defendants who were seeking to enforce their rights under the contract of lease and the plaintiff was only seeking to debar them from doing so and was thus merely protecting his rights: there was therefore nothing in sec. 53A which disentitled the plaintiff from maintaining the suit—Ram Chunder v. Maharaj Kunwar, I.L.R. 1939 All. 809, A.I.R. 1939 All. 611, 1939 A.L.J. 692. The correctness of this decision seems to be questionable in view of the later Privy Council decisions mentioned in Note 271. Where a previous lessee holds possession of land under an unregistered lease and has been continuously paying the fixed rent to his landlord, a suit by a subsequent lessee to dispossess him does not lie—Banarasi v. Ali Mahammad, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 5, 157 I.C. 839. See also Wakefield v. Sayeeda Khatun, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 36 (37), 15 Pat. 786, 166 I.C. 797 ; Shyam Sundar v. Din Shah, A.I.R. 1937 All. 10 (12), I.L.R. 1937 All. 312, 166 I.C. 540 ; Ashutosh v. Nalinakshya, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 467, 64 C.L.J. 558, 170 I.C. 267. Where a lease-deed for a period of five years was unregistered and the lessee alleging himself as a monthly tenant vacated the premises after giving notice, in a suit by the lessor for damages for breach of agreement, it was held that under this section the lessor could enforce his claim—Suleman v. Patell, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 381, 145 I.C. 557. But see Ramji Lal v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 306, 162 I.C. 712, where it has been doubted if this section apply to a case in which only rent is claimed after the house has been vacated and held that it does not apply to a tenancy from month to month. See also In re Jambad Coal Syndicate, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 628, 62 Cal. 394, 163 I.C. 845, where it has been held that landlord cannot recover rent either under this section or under sec. 49 of the Registration Act as amended in 1929 on the basis of an unregistered lease if it requires registration. In Mulji Sicca & Co. v. Nur Mahammad, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 377, the principle was applied in the case of an unregistered license.

A lease being a transfer of immoveable property, this section applies to it—Ramchandra v. Subraya, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 127, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 692; Sayi v. Subbanna, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 310, (1946) 1 M.L.J. 92. Where a person is inducted to land under an agreement to lease which cannot be said to be a valid lease, and the tenant performs his part of the contract by paying rent to the lessor, the tenant can take the benefit of this section—Hadu v. Ramdulal, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 35, 9 Cut.L.T. 27; Md. Sadruddin v. Gulam Mohiuddin, A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 97. But sec. 53A has no application to a case where the document is not a contract of transfer by the lessor but is a Kabuliyat executed by the lessee, Rammarain Pasi v. Sukhi Tiwari, A.I.R. 1957 Pat 24; Chandra Nath v. Chulai Pashi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 40.

A formal lease is not required. All that is necessary is that an agreement in writing signed by the transferor can be gathered from the evidence—Maneklal v. Hormusji, A.I.R. 1950 S.C. 1, 1950 S.C.R. 75, 52 Bom. L.R. 521. If the agreement to lease is suppressed by the plaintiff the defendant can prove the agreement by oral evidence—Karthikēya Mudaliar v. Singaram Pillai, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 693. Where the defendant proves that there is a written and signed contract of lease and in accordance with the terms thereof he has taken possession and built a factory on the land and also that he was paying rent to the plaintiffs in accordance with that agreement, the defendant is entitled to retain possession—ibid. Such an agreement though not registered is admissible under sec. 49, Registration Act as evidence of part performance—ibid. See also Qamar Jahan v. Banshi Dhar, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 231, (1941) O.W.N. 1395; Bijoli Prova v. H. C. Dutta, 71 C.W.N. 681. But where under an unregistered lease for 5 years the lessee takes possession of the premises in performance of the contract and remains in possession for the full period, he is bound to vacate the premises on the expiry of the period—Ram Pratap v. National Petroleum Co., A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 23, 54 C.W.N. 58. Where the contract has been partly performed, a suit for damages for its breach does not require to be rested upon the present section—ibid. Where under an hukum nama the grantee was given a right to dig mica mines with certain kudalis and to appropriate the mica dug out, the hukum nama did not come within the purview of this section—Traders & Miners Ltd. v. Dhirendra, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 261, 23 Pat. 115. Where there is a completed contract of lease, the leased deed though invalid as lease on account of not being signed by the lessee, is sufficient to attract sec. 53A—Ramakrishna Singh v. Mahadei Halwai, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 467. If A executes a patta in favour of B for 25 years but the patta is neither registered nor signed by B and if B enters into possession, his possession cannot be disturbed for 25 years, not because he is a tenant, but because of part performance—Lal Behari Sasmal v. Kanak Kanti Roy, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 502.

For the application of this section to sale see Kaura Ram v. Chaman Lal, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 751, 154 I.C. 1088. In a case where the vendee entered into possession in part performance of a contract of sale, the Rangoon High Court held that although he was not entitled to a declaration of his right as plaintiff, he was entitled to the possession of the property as against third persons—Mastram v. Ma Ohn, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 284, 154 I.C. 769; Somi Reddy v. Ranganayakalu, (1967) 2 Andh. W.R. 2. A Mahomedan for himself and as guardian of a Mahomedan minor purported to enter into a contract for sale of a property belonging to them to a person who was in possession of the property as a tenant. There was no evidence to show that the tenant continued in possession after the alleged contract of sale: held that sec. 53A did not apply—Bharat Chandra v. Md. Ramjan, 45 C.W.N. 489. A transferee in possession of the property by way of part performance cannot maintain a suit under Or. 21, r. 103 C.P.C. against the auction-purchaser of such property—Maruti Gurappa v. Krishna Bala, A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 34.

P was a mortgagee by a registered deed dated 1930 of a certain piece of land from M. M and his wife had mortgaged the same land in 1928 by an unregistered deed to D for Rs. 1,000 with possession. The unregistered deed allowed redemption on repayment of the principal sum. P obtained a mortgage-decree against M and subsequently sued D for possession and ejectment: held that sec. 53A applied and the suit by P for possession and ejectment could not, as it stood, succeed. P was however entitled to redeem the land on payment of Rs. 1,000 to D. He was merely debarred from enforcing any claim other than that arising out of the contract itself—Daw Yi v. Maung Po, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 175, 182 I.C. 651. But where a mortgagee holding possession of a property under a possessory mortgage leased out the property to the mortgagor under a rent-note which the mortgagor alleged to be a nominal transaction and that he had been in possession ever since the date of the mortgage, in a suit by the mortgagee on expiry of the lease, it was held that the doctrine of part performance could not be invoked in favour of the mortgagee—Mt. Nasiban v. Md. Sayeed, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 174, 164 I.C. 557. The doctrine of part performance cannot ordinarily be applied to a mortgage—Salla Venkata Reddy v. Bheemreddy, A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 238. But it can be applied to a usufructuary mortgage—Ram Reddi v. Venka Reddy, A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 489.

Where under a mortgage the mortgagee has only a right to foreclose and the mortgagor gives possession to the mortgagee of the mortgaged property in satisfaction of his debt, the possession taken by the mortgagee cannot be said to be in part performance of the contract—Balkrishna v. Rangnath, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 171, I.L.R. 1951 Nag. 618. Where after executing an unregistered sale deed in favour of the mortgagee in possession the mortgagor sells the mortgaged property to another person having notice of the prior unregistered sale, the mortgagee can resist the suit for redemption by the mortgagor and the subsequent transferee—Devisahai Premraj v. Gurind Rao, A.I.R. 1965 M.P. 275.

Where the transfer-deed is a registered one, this section does not apply—Tarak v. Jagdish, A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 41. It is doubtful whether under this section a party can institute a suit for declaration that he has become owner of the property under an invalid deed of partition which however has been acted upon—Ram Kishan v. Salig Ram, A.I.R. 1946 All. 476. If there is an arrangement between two parties that one will take the movables and the other will take the house and the latter continues in possession pursuant to this arrangement his possession is protected by sec. 53A—Hussain Babu v. Shivnarayan, A.I.R. 1966 Madh. Pra. 307.

This section applied where the transfer was made before the Act but the suit was brought after the Act came into force—Fateh Md. v. Ghoria Bibi, A.I.R. 1953 Aj. 19; Kanbi Karshan v. Kanbi Harkha, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 56; Jahangir Begum v. Gulam Ali Ahmed, A.I.R. Hyd. 101.

In the Punjab:—Unless this section can be taken as embodying some general rule of equity which would prevail in India apart from the provisions of the T. P. Act, it can have no force in the Punjab to which it has not been applied—Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 407 (410) (F.B.). A later Full Bench have however held that sec. 53A being based on the equitable principles which were previously applicable to the whole of India including the Punjab and even after the enactment of that section which is not applicable to the Punjab, the principles embodied in the section are applicable to the Punjab—Milkha Singh v. Mt. Sankari, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 1 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1947 Lah. 449.

This section would not apply to Kutch—Gangabai v. Malbai, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 64.

Section does not supersede registration :—This section merely lays down that the transferor will not be entitled to eject the transferee under the circumstances mentioned herein. But it does not give any title to the transferee. That title will have to be completed by execution and registration of a deed of transfer. See Ram Gopal v. Tulshi, 51 All. 79 (F.B.), 26 ALJ. 952, 116 I.C. 861, A.I.R. 1928 All. 641, where this subject is very fully discussed. See also Pearey Lal v. Prithi Singh, A.I.R. 1945 All. 422, I.L.R. 1945 All. 910.

Value of unregistered document :—The unregistered document embodying the terms of the contract shall be received in evidence for the purpose of proving part performance. The proviso to sec. 49 of the Registration Act, newly added by the T. P. Amendment Supplementary Act XXI of 1929, runs as follows :—

"Provided that an unregistered document affecting immoveable property and required by this Act or by the Transfer of Property Act to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a suit for specific performance under Ch. II of the Specific Relief Act or as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of sec. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, or as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be effected by a registered instrument." See Suleman v. Patell, 35 Bom. L.R. 722, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 381 (385) and Dalip Singh v. Jagat Singh, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 721; Maneklal v. Hormusji, A.I.R. 1950 S.C. 1, 1950 S.C.R. 75, 52 Bom. L.R. 521. Where possession is delivered in pursuance of an unregistered sale-deed, it is admissible to prove part performance—Girija v. Girdhari, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 277, 29 Pat. 628; Egam Malliah v. Gondia Malliah, (1957) 1 Andhra W.R. 366; Nanasaheb v. Appa, A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 138. Sec. 91. Evidence Act and sec. 54, T.P. Act do not prohibit this—Nagayya v. Sayanna, A.I.R. 1951 Hyd. 42; Murlidhar v. Tara Dye, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 349. But see Ananda v. Murli, A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 120, (1944) O.W.N. 496, where it has been held that in a case where the parties deliberately committed a fraud on registration, the unregistered document cannot be looked at for giving effect to a plea under the present section.

The above words in the newly added Proviso to sec. 49, Registration Act do not deprive the Province of Punjab of the benefit of the Proviso simply because the T. P. Act is not in force in that Province—Milkha Singh v. Mt. Shankari, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 1 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1947 Lah. 449.

An unregistered Kobala is invalid as a document of title. But for purposes of proving the requisite contract in writing under sec. 53-A or the terms thereof, it may be received in evidence. There is nothing in sec. 91, Evidence Act, which would exclude such proof. Mere non-registration would not affect the admissibility of the Kobala to prove the requisite contract to transferee, which is not per se registrable—Manjural Haque v. Mewajan Bibi, A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 350. Where the mortgagee is put in possession under a mortgage by conditional sale containing a provision for reconveyance on payment of the consideration after six years and the mortgagor after six years relinquishes all his rights by an unregistered deed on receipt of additional consideration, a subsequent suit for redemption can be resisted by invoking sec. 53A—Habib Myan v. Mahemud Mir, A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 221.

272. No Limitation :—“There is some conflict of decisions in the Indian Courts with regard to the period within which equitable relief can be given to parties to a transaction when there has been no registered instrument. One view is that such relief can be given only within the period during which a suit for specific performance would lie, the other view being that such relief can be given even after that period has expired. It seems to us that the first view, to which we propose to give effect by adding section 30A, to the Specific Relief Act, 1877, does not go far enough, in all cases, to afford the relief which the equities arising out of part performance require. Because, even after the period of limitation, when part performance has taken place, the parties stand in the same relation to each other as they did within the period of limitation and the equities which arose within that period remain the same. In fact, the longer the possession in part performance, the higher will be the equities. We, therefore, think that, in order that the relief may be effective, it ought to be available at all times during which the transferee is in possession in part performance of the contract and subject to the other conditions which we have proposed. In 46 Mad. 919 and 23 C.W.N. 284, the Courts took the view that the relief was available even after the period of limitation for specific performance was over. We feel that, in order that the relief may be real, it ought to be available as between the parties to the transaction even after such period of limitation.”—Report of the Select Committee.

This section supersedes 27 C.W.N. 159, 24 C.W.N. 643 and 33 C.L.J. 437 (cited under “second view” in Note 270) so far as they lay down that part performance can be pleaded as defence so long as a suit for specific performance is not barred by limitation. It also overrules the view taken in 46 Bom. 722 (cited under “third view” in Note 270) that the vendee will not get a conveyance from the vendor after the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit for specific performance. See also Bholai v. Lakhi Kanta, A.I.R. 1949 Ass. 8; Amroo v. Babarao, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 403, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 23; Nana Saheb v. Appa, A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 138.

It has been held under this section that Art. 113 of the Limitation Act does not apply. “Limitation does not” observed Nasim Ali J., “generally apply to a plea in defence; see Sri Kishan Lal v. Mt. Kashmiro, [20 C.W.N. 957 (P.C.); 31 M.L.J. 362]; Somi Reddy v. Rangnayakalu (1967) 2 An. W.R. 2. Section 53A has imported in a modified form the English doctrine of part performance into this country. It confers only a passive right to a defendant to protect his possession. Art. 113 Limitation Act certainly cannot apply to such a right"—Nokul v. Kalipada, 42 C.W.N. 630 at. p. 636; Somireddi v. N. Ranganaikulu (1967) 2 Andh. L.T. 133. But in order to have the protection of sec. 53A, possession must be taken in part performance of the contract before the enforcement of the contract is barred by time—Raju Roy v. Kashinath Roy, A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 308.

272A. Whether retrospective :—Section 16 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act XX of 1929 by which this new section was inserted is not one of the sections specifically mentioned in sec. 63 of the aforesaid Act which deals with the retrospective operation of the amendments. It says : "and nothing in any other provisions of this Act (Act XX of 1929) shall render invalid or in any way affect, anything already done before the first day of April 1930, in any proceeding pending in a Court on the date." It is therefore clear that sec. 53A does not affect anything already done in any proceeding pending in a Court on 1st April, 1930—See Ram Krishna v. Jainandan, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 291, 14 Pat. 672 (F.B.) ; Muthuswami v. Laganatha, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 404, 41 M.L.W. 600 ; Hari Prasad v. Hanumantrao, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 74 ; Mukteswar v. Barakar Coal Co., A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 246, 152 I.C. 498 ; Durgapada v. Nrishingha, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 541, 62 Cal. 492, 39 C.W.N. 416, 159 I.C. 20. Maneklal v. Hormusji, A.I.R. 1950 S.C. 1, S.C.J. 317 ; Kankamma v. Krishnamma, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 445 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1943 Mad. 831 ; Naidu v. Naidu, A.I.R. 1945 Mad 171, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 158 ; Mahalakshmi v. Venkatarreddi, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 556, (1944) 2 M.L.J. 103 ; Narayana v. Karibasappa, A.I.R. 1951 Mys. 126.

But there is a great divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether the section, apart from pending actions, is retrospective or not in its operation. In the following cases it has been held that the section is not retrospective ; Kanji v. Shunmugam, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 734, 63 M.L.J. 571, 139 I.C. 510 ; Cooverjee v. Vasant etc. Society, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 91, 36 Bom. L.R. 1245, 154 I.C. 583 ; Gauri Shankar v. Gopal Das, A.I.R. 1934 All. 710, 151 I.C. 388 ; Ramji Lal v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 306, 162 I.C. 712 ; Tauquir Ali v. Ram Ratan, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 41, 1940 O.W.N. 753, 190 I.C. 85 ; Jagadamba Prasad v. Anadi Nath, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 337, 19 P.L.T. 594, 176 I.C. 273 ; Krishnabai v. Parwatibai, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 282, 165 I.C. 934 ; Katireddi v. Koonam, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 916, 71 M.L.J. 639, 166 I.C. 535 ; Baldeo Singh v. Md. Akhtar, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 488, 20 P.L.T. 399. In Md. Serajul Haque v. Dwijendra Mohan, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 33, Mr. Justice Biswas seems to have been inclined to agree with the judgment of Wort, J. in Jagadamba Prasad v. Anadi Nath, supra but felt bound by the decision of the Division Bench in Md. Hosein v. Jamini, infra ; Veera-brahmacharyulu v. Monduru Venkata, A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 31.

On the other hand it has been held in the following cases that the section is retrospective ; Gajadhar v. Bachan, A.I.R. 1934 All. 768, 153 I.C. 717 ; Suleman v. Patell, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 381, 145 I.C. 557 ; Benarsi v. Ali Mahammad, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 5, 157 I.C. 839 ; Shyam Sundar v. Din Shah, A.I.R. 1937 All. 10, I.L.R. (1937) All. 312, 166 I.C. 540 ; Md. Hushen v. Jamini, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 97, 42 C.W.N. 38, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 607, 176 I.C. 41 ; Ashutosh v. Nalinakshya, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 467, 64 C.L.J. 558, 170 I.C. 267 ; Wakefield v. Sayeeda Khatun, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 36, 15 Pat.

786, 166 I.C. 797 ; Ko Po v. Maung Lu, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 402 ; Tukaram v. Atmaram, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 31, 40 Bom. L. R. 1192.

It is submitted that this latter view is correct. For a discussion of the question see Note 1A. In a recent case Jack J. of the Calcutta High Court has expressed the opinion that the section is not retrospective. Besides this being obiter, it does not appear that the earlier cases of this High Court was brought to the Judge's notice—Mahendra v. Prafulla, (1938) 43 C.W.N. 34 ; A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 795 (796).

After this note of the present editor in the last edition the following cases have appeared in support of the above proposition, namely—Tukaram v. Atmaram, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 71, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 31, 40 Bom. L.R. 1192 ; Jagad Bhusan v. Panna Lal, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 287 and Rustomji v. Bai Nath, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 50, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 90, 41 Bom. L.R. 1310. In the last cited case Beaumont, C.J., discusses the question elaborately giving additional reasons in support of the above proposition. For a detailed commentary on this question, see Note 1A pp. 3-7.

272B. Para 2 :—“Contract”—This section does not apply where there is not a contract in writing, but an oral contract—Dhanrajmal v. Hazarimal, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 81, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 513 ; Ajabsingh v. Jhabbulal, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 67, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 449 ; Katihar Jute Mills, Ltd. v. Calcutta Match Works, Ltd. A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 133. Sec. 53A cannot be invoked if a material portion of the contract in writing is orally varied—Yasodammal v. Janaki Ammal, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 294. A document which not only refers to the previous oral agreement but incorporates all the terms of the oral agreement can be set up as a defence, but not a document which merely refers to the previous oral agreement without incorporating its terms—Allam Gangadhara Rao v. Gollapalli Gangarao, A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 291. Where by reason of non-compliance with the statutory formalities the Government resolution could not be regarded as an effectual grant passing title in the land, it was also not an enforceable contract—Collector v. Municipal Corpn. A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 469, 1951 S.C.J. 752. In this case it was held by the Supreme Court that the decision in Ariff v. Jadunath, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 79 did not apply to the facts of the case. As to an act in furtherance of the contract, see Gopalan v. Kanaran, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 925 ; Gopinath v. Hangsnath, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 129.

This section applies only when the “contract” is a valid and completed contract. A person cannot seek the benefit of the section on the basis of a contract forbidden by law or of negotiations which had not matured into a contract—Bharat Chandra v. Md. Ramjan, 45 C.W.N. 489. A contract between a person and the cantonment infringing certain provisions of the Cantonment Act, 1924 cannot be set up to sustain the plea of part performance—Akrammea v. The Secunderabad Municipal Corporation, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pra. 859 ; Jitendra Nath v. Commissioner of Badhuria Municipality, A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 423. Again this section contemplates reliance upon an entire contract. When part of the alleged contract is not valid, the contract cannot be split up and the section brought in aid of the part which is valid—ibid. It cannot however be said that a document which is primarily a receipt is always insufficient for the purpose of this section—Mt. Firdos Jahan v. Md. Yumus, 15 Luck. 43, A.I.R. 1940

Oudh 1, 1939 O.W.N. 876 ; see also Shira Khatun v. Maung Pan, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 206, 1939 R.L.R. 575, 182 I.C. 523. Where an agreement to sell land by a tenant is entered into without the sanction of the competent authority required for such transfer and possession is given to the transferee, such possession is not protected by sec. 53-A—Muprial Raghavachari v. Sunkeypalli Ramakrista Reddy, I.L.R. (1965) Andh. Pra. 1226. Where a landlord agrees in writing to sell the demised property to the tenant and the tenant continues in possession pursuant to such agreement, the landlord is precluded from filing a suit for eviction—Annamalai Goundan v. Venkatasami Naidu, A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 354. If a lease is executed by the lessor alone and the lessee is put in possession, the lessor can invoke sec. 53-A—Mahadei Haluai v. Ram Krishna Singh, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 353.

Possession:—This section requires that the transferee has either been put in possession or has continued in possession in part performance of the contract. Where he was never put in possession or allowed to continue in possession, actual or constructive, the section does not apply—Subba Rao v. Raju, A.I.R. 1950 F.C. 1, 1949 F.L.J. 398, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 752 ; Nila Padhan v. Gokulananda, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 118. Where the transferor has put the transferee in possession in part performance of the contract, the latter can enforce a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract, and the fulfilment of all the conditions mentioned in this section is not a condition precedent to the enforcement of such right—Muralidhar v. Tara Dye, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 349. But see Venkatasubbayya v. Rosayya, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pr. 58, where it has been held that the defendant can non-suit the plaintiff only if he has complied with the conditions laid down under sec. 53-A. This section does not require that the contract must contain a direct covenant regarding transference of possession. If the transferee is already in possession and some act is done in furtherance of the contract, that is sufficient—Ewaz Ali v. Firdous Jehan, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 212, (1944) O.W.N. 228 ; Ratanlal v. Kishanlal, A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 141. See in this connection Gopinath v. Hangsnath, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 129 ; Anandiravan v. Anandiravan, A.I.R. 1950 Tr.-Coch. 81 and Gopalan v. Kanran, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 925. Where the transferee is admittedly put in possession, the fact that subsequently he loses possession cannot deprive him of his rights under the section—Yenugo Achayya v. Eranki Venkata Subba Rao, 1956 Andhra W.R. 830. Where a property is leased by A and B to a partnership of which B is a partner and there is an agreement by the partnership to transfer their leasehold interest to a company, no advantage of sec. 53-A can be taken by the company against A at all and as against B in his capacity as one of the owners of the property—Stewart & Co. Ltd. v. C. Mackerich, A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 198. If the tenant of a house agrees to purchase the house but the house is purchased by P with knowledge of the tenant's agreement P can obtain a decree for ejectment during the pendency of the suit by the tenant for specific performance because the tenant cannot invoke sec. 53-A—Bhagwandas v. Surajmal, A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 237.

It is not necessary under this section to show that the transferor has delivered possession. It is only necessary to show that the transferee has taken possession or continued in possession in part performance of the contract and has done some act in furtherance of it—Mt. Firdos Jahan v. Md. Yunus, supra. Where a vendee in pursuance of a contract of sale of a house paid earnest money and did other acts such as repairs and payment of Municipal tax, it can be said that the vendee took possession of the house in part performance of the contract—Ibid; see also Tauquir Ali v. Ram Ratan, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 41 (43), 190 I.C. 85. But the act of part performance must not be an act preparatory to the completion of the contract, and acts introductory to and previous to the agreement cannot be treated as acts of part performance—Kukaji v. Basantilal, A.I.R. 1955 M.B. 93. But see Vithal Das v. Mohanlal, 1967 Raj. L.W. 413, where it has been held that payment of consideration amounts to part performance.

272C. Para 4:—“Or any person claiming under him”—In this section the person claiming under the transferor is a person who claims under a title derived subsequently to the date of the transfer and not anterior to that date—Hemraj v. Rustomji, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 503. The words “claiming under the transferor” are wide enough to include an attaching creditor of the proposed purchaser, who has contracted to purchase the property from the judgment-debtor—Gokarakonda v. Surapureddi, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 706, (1943) 2 M.L.J. 300. Where the plaintiffs in a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession of certain immoveable property are persons claiming, under the transferor as his heirs, this section can be set up as a defence—Madhuban v. Basanta, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 424, 25 Pat. 764. A person is said to claim under another person when he is either an assignee from that person or is his legal representative. The step daughter of a widow or the transferee of the former is not a person claiming under the widow—Bhupat v. Jagad, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 344, I.L.R. (1943) 1 Cal. 56. Where the plaintiffs remained in possession without title adversely to the lessor until their title became perfect they are not claiming under the lessor—Raju Roy v. Kashinath Roy, A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 308. If possession is delivered to the mortgagee on the basis of an unregistered mortgage and the mortgagor becomes insolvent, the mortgagee can invoke sec. 53-A against the Receiver in proving his debt—Pt. Chhotu Ram v. Khairaiti Ram, A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 604.

The test of determining whether the words “or any person claiming under him” (i.e., the transferor) apply to a Hindu reversioner, is whether the acts of the widow bind the reversioner or not. If her acts bind the property, they must bind the reversioner in the same manner and to the same extent as the acts of an absolute owner would bind his heir. The reversioner may not be her heir, but is certainly her successor—Balaram v. Kewalram, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 396 (399, 400), 1940 N.L.J. 499, 199 I.C. 881; Ramchhod v. Manubai, A.I.R. 1954 Bom. 153; Babba Suramma v. Smt. Peddireddi Chandramma, A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 568; Karunakar v. Mahakuren, A.I.R. 1960 Orissa 170. But see Jagad Bhusan v. Panna Lal, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 287, where the purchaser from a Hindu widow's daughter was held not to be claiming under the widow and Satyanarayanamurthy v. Tadi Subramanyam, A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 534, where it has been held that a transferee under a contract to transfer by the Karta of a Hindu joint family cannot avail of sec. 53A against a member of the joint family who has not signed the agreement to transfer. It has also been held by the Mysore High Court that where a deed of transfer is executed by the father in respect of joint family property the transferee cannot invoke sec. 53A against the sons who were not parties to the transaction—Nanjedevanu v. H. V. Rama Rao, A.I.R. 1959 Mysore, 173. If N marries C's wife's sister's daughter and helps C in cultivation on an assurance that N will inherit the entire property of C, N cannot avail of sec. 53A in defending his possession against the heirs of C suing N for recovery of possession—Ramchandrayya v. Satyanarayana (1964) 1 S.C.J. 109. Where D executes two agreements of sale in respect of the same property, first in favour of T and second in favour of P, and possession is given to P and the sale deed is executed in favour of T, P is entitled to obtain an injunction restraining D and T from disturbing P's possession—Ramappa v. Tayavva, A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 32.

273. There must be a written document :—The first para of this section contains the words "by writing", and thereby requires the agreement to be in writing. In many of the cases cited in Note 270 above, the doctrine of part performance was applied even though there was no written document. The following cases may be cited as instances—Salamat v. Masha Allah, 40 All. 187, 43 I.C. 645; Bapu Apaji v. Kashinath, 41 Bom. 438; Desaibhai v. Ishwar, 44 Bom. 586; Maung Myat v. Ma Dun, 2 Rang. 285; Maung Tun v. Maung Dun, 2 Rang. 313; Ma Htay v. U Tha Hline, 2 Rang. 649 (652, 653); Dada v. Bahiru, 29 Bom. L.R. 1419, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 627.

These cases are no longer good law. Under the present section, the doctrine can be applied only when there is a written document from which the terms of the contract can be ascertained with reasonable certainty—Aziz Ahmad v. Alauddin, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 485; U Lu Pe v. Oo Kim, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 136 (138); Suleman Haji v. Patell, 35 Bom. L.R. 722, 145 I.C. 557, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 381 (384); Ma Mya v. Annamalai, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 127, 7 Rang. 59, 151 I.C. 227; A. P. Bagchi v. Mrs. Morgan, A.I.R. 1937 All. 36, 166 I.C. 897; Bechardas v. Borough Municipality of Ahmedabad, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 346 (348), 43 Bom. L.R. 603; Narayan v. Guru Prasad, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 246; Shravan v. Garbad, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 406, 45 Bom. L.R. 874; Narasayya v. Ramchandrayya, A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 209. The words "signed on his behalf" must mean signed by a person who has authority to bind or represent the transferor—Ibid. Such written agreement may, of course, be the embodiment of what has already been agreed upon orally and may also refer to payment by the purchaser and receipt by the vendor of the purchase-money, but it must essentially be a written agreement. Unless a document can be held to be an agreement or contract of sale, it will not, by the mere fact that from it the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty, be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of sec. 53A—Maung Po v. Maung Po, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 49, 174 I.C. 169. The section does not apply to oral sales—Krishnabai v. Parwati Bai, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 282, 165 I.C. 934; Subodh v. Bhagwandass, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 353, 50 C.W.N. 851; Balkrishna v. Rangnath, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 171, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 618. A distinction, however, must be drawn between a writing which is a reduction into writing of a previous oral agreement which will fall within sec. 53-A and writing in which there is a mere reference to a previous oral agreement—Maung Ohn v. Maung Po, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 356; Shravan v. Garbad, supra.

Where the terms of a contract has been reduced to the form of a document, it takes the place of the oral contract—Radhabai v. Nayadu, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 285, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 799. But the mere admission by the transferor in mutation proceedings that the land has been sold to the vendee, even though in writing, is not a written contract—Dharameshwar v. Lakhyadhar, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 107. The doctrine of part performance does not apply to a gift—Dayaram v. Ghasia, 1958 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 155; Serandaya Pillai v. Sankaralingam Pillai, (1959) 2 Mad. L.J. 502.

273A. Proviso :—This Proviso saves the right of a transferee for consideration who has no notice of the contract. Therefore, where the plaintiff claimed possession of the property under a good contract of sale earlier in date to the defendant's contract and the defendant was not a transferee for value and he took his contract with the knowledge of the plaintiff's earlier contract, this section did not apply—Hemraj v. Rustomji, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 503. See also Moolji Sicca & Co. v. Nur Mohammad, infra. But when actually the transferee has such notice, the informality of the manner in which he acquired that notice or information is not material—Gopalan v. Kanaran, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 925. Where A obtains possession of a piece of land in pursuance of an agreement to sell executed by P and Q, two joint owners, but the deed of sale is executed by P alone in respect of his share, an assignee from A with possession cannot invoke sec. 53A in a suit for recovery of possession by Q—K. Dharma Rao v. K. Satyavathi, A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 129. Sec. 53A creates no real right, it merely creates rights of estoppel, which are not available against a third person—S. N. Banerjee v. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 128. Where the defendant fails to prove the elements necessary to sustain claim under the main provision of sec. 53A, he cannot defeat the suit by a vendee by merely proving that the vendee purchased with notice of the defendants' contract to purchase—Prova Rani v. Lalit Mohon, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 541.

A person having notice of the same cannot, however, resist the claim of the right of a person to defend his possession under the unregistered contract—Moolji Sicca & Co. v. Nur Mohammad, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 377. The burden of proof as to notice is on the person claiming the benefit of the doctrine of part performance—Ko Ma v. Ma May, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 12, 154 I.C. 474; Sasirekhamma v. Suranuma, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 163. A mortgaged with possession his house with B. Subsequently A sold the house to B in consideration of the mortgage debt and the amount spent by B on the improvement and repair of the house. The deed was not registered. A sold his equity of redemption to C under a registered sale deed. C sued B for redemption. The trial court gave a decree for possession on payment of the mortgage money plus the amount spent by B for repairs and improvements and the decision of the trial court was upheld on appeal and thereafter by the High Court. The suit was decreed as B, the mortgagee failed to prove that C was not a bona fide purchaser for value and that he had notice of the earlier transaction in favour of B. The suit was decreed also on the ground that B failed to show that he continued in possession of the mortgaged property in part performance of the contract of sale—Kukaji v. Basantilal, A.I.R. 1955 Madhya Bharat, 93. But the Mysore High Court has taken the view that if a mortgagee purchaser under an unregistered deed of sale has paid either the whole or part of the consideration, the same can be said to be in pursuance of the contract of sale—Chikkannaswamy v. Hayat Khan, A.I.R. 1955 Mys. 38.

273B. Moveable property :—This section does not apply to moveable property Bhobi Dutt v. Ramalalbyammal, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 303, 152 I.C. 431.

CHAPTER III OF SALE OF IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

54. "Sale" is a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part-paid and partpromised.
"Sale" defined

Such transfer, in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, or in the case of a reversion or other intangible thing, can be made only by a registered instrument.
Sale how made.

In the case of tangible immoveable property, of a value less than one hundred rupees, such transfer may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property.

Delivery of tangible immoveable property takes place when the seller places the buyer, or such person as he directs, in possession of the property.

A contract for the sale of immoveable property is a contract that a sale of such property shall take place on terms settled between the parties.
Contract for sale.

It does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on, such property.

As to the limitation to the territorial operation of paras 2 and 3 of this section, see sec. 1, supra. Section 54 extends to every cantonment in British India—see sec 287 of the Cantonments Act, 1924.

Scope :—The provisions of this section are overridden by sec. 31 (1) of the Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913. Thus every transfer of an occupancy holding or a portion thereof by sale irrespective of the value of the property is compulsorily registrable under that section—Paramananda v. Sankar, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 11, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 322.

274. Applicability of section to Mahomedans :—This section applies to Mahomedans as well as to Hindus. Mahomedans have no more right to transfer immoveable property without complying with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act than any member of the other community, and to allow them to do so would in effect be repealing the provisions of this Act so far as the Mahomedan community is concerned—Ghafuruddin v. Hamid Husain, 10 A.L.J. 154, 16 I.C. 679.

But some cases have laid down that for the purposes of pre-emption, this section need not be entirely applied to Mahomedans, so that if a sale is invalid under this section but valid under the Mahomedan Law, the pre-emptor would get a right of pre-emption. Thus, a property worth Rs. 300 can be sold only by a registered deed under the second para of this section, but under the Mahomedan law delivery of possession of the property would be sufficient to complete the sale. Therefore, if the property is orally sold and possession delivered, there would be a valid sale under the Mahomedan law, which would give rise to a right of pre-emption, though the sale is invalid under this Act—Abdullah v. Ismail, 46 Bom. 302, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 124, 64 I.C. 913; Janki v. Girjadut, 7 All. 482 (F.B.). In considering the question of pre-emption, the rule of Mahomedan law alone is to be applied, and if the sale is valid under that law, the right of pre-emption will arise, although the sale may be incomplete under this Act—Begum v. Muhammad Yakub, 16 All. 344 (F.B.). But the Patna and Calcutta High Courts are of opinion that sec. 54 of this Act abrogates the Muhammadan law of sale even in respect of pre-emption, and no right of pre-emption arises until the sale has been completed under this section by registration—Kheyali Prasad v. Mullick Nazarul Alum, 20 C.W.N. 1048, 1 P.L.J. 174, (177, 178), 34 I.C. 210; Budhai v. Sonaplla, 41 Cal. 943 (949), 18 C.W.N. 890, 23 I.C. 385 (per Carnduff J.). The same opinion was expressed by Banerji J. in Begum v. Yakub, 16 All. 344 (356).

Where transfer was made in the form of a sale in lieu of Kharch-i-pandan in favour of the transferor's wife and the money consideration shown in the deed of transfer not to be the capitalized value of the right, the transaction is neither an exchange nor a sale. In such a case there is no right of pre-emption—Shujat Ali v. Mt. Salim Jahan, A.I.R. 1949 All. 204, 1948 A.L.J. 527.

If the case is governed by the Agra Pre-emption Act, a sale that is pre-emptible under that Act is a sale as defined in sec. 54, T. P. Act. A transfer of property of value more than Rs. 100, effected by a compromise decree is not a valid sale under this Act, in the absence of a registered instrument, and cannot therefore be the subject of pre-emption—Bindraban v. Rajput, 53 All. 100, A.I.R. 1931 All. 741 (742), 1930 A.L.J. 1564, 131 I.C. 242, following Paras Ram v. Neksai, 50 All. 454, A.I.R. 1928 All. 67.

As regards waqf, a bare dedication of the property without delivery of possession is sufficient to a waqf—Zainab Bi v. Jamalkhan, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 428, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 426.

Oral transfer of immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100 by a Mahomedan to his wife by way of gift in lieu of dower debt is not valid. Such a transaction is not a true hiba-bil-ewaz, but a sale—Ghulam Abbas v. Razia Begum, A.I.R. 1951 All. 86 (F.B.), 1950 A.L.J. 917; Md. Usman v. Amir Main, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 237, 26 Pat. 561; Masum Vali v. Illuri Modin, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 671.

274A. Sale :—In determining the question whether a transaction is a sale or any other transfer the Court should look not merely to the ostensible appearance given to it by the words used by the parties, but the real nature and essence of the transaction should be looked at as a whole. The conclusion arrived at by the Court should be the cumulative result of the totality of circumstances emerging from the agreement—Central Finance and Housing Co. v. British Transport Co., A.I.R. 1954 All. 195. What is commonly called hiba-bil-ewaz is not a gift but partakes of the character of a sale—Fateh Ali v. Md. Bakhsh, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 516, 5 Lah. 428; Suburannessa v. Sabdu, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 693, 38 C.W.N. 654, 154 I.C. 480. So where the property is immoveable and is of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument—Ibid. The Oudh Chief Court has however taken a different view. It holds that all cases of hiba-bil-ewaz cannot be held to be sales within the definition in this section, and writing and registration are not always necessary—Abdul Hamid v. Abdul Ghani, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 163, 148 I.C. 801, following Bashir v. Zubaida, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 186, 92 I.C. 265.

For the purpose of ascertaining whether an instrument is a sale-deed or a release, the word "release" used in the document is not sufficient. In the document executed by B in favour of A, members of a joint Hindu family, it was stated in full quit of his share in the family property A was to be paid Rs. 150 by B who executed a promissory note in favour of A, and the document was named as a release, it was held that the transaction amounted to a sale—Somu v. Singara, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 407, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 17.

The mere fact that in the contract between the parties there might be various covenants or the existence of a provision giving the seller certain rights as consideration does not change the character of the transaction if in substance it is one of sale—Matta Sura v. Mana Rama, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 714, 176 I.C. 444.

Execution of a sale deed does not mean signing the deed but it means all acts necessary to make the parties bound thereby. If a man merely signs a contract and puts it in his pocket and does not allow it to depart from him as his act, that is not execution—per Sir Courtney Terrel, J. in Sunder v. Lalji, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 129, 145 I.C. 698.

Certain property in possession of a third party against whom a suit had to be brought to recover its possession was sold for a consideration of Rs. 5,000. Under the deed the vendor was not to get any advantage in case the vendee afterwards succeeded in recovering possession, nor was he liable if the suit failed. The vendee, without waiting for the expiry of one year during which a suit for pre-emption could be brought, sued and recovered the property. A suit was subsequently brought for pre-emption: held that the transaction was a sale within the meaning of this section and was pre-emptible by sec. 11, Pre-emption Act, 1922, and that the vendee was entitled to a proportionate amount of the total costs incurred by him whether in Court or out of Court, but he was not entitled to the benefit of the enhanced value which was in the nature of acquisition to the estate, when there was no pressing necessity for him to sue within a year—Badri v. Bejoy, A.I.R. 1932 All 685, 139 I.C. 693.

Boundaries v. area :—Where there is a conflict between boundaries and area in a sale deed and there is no vagueness in the boundaries, they will prevail and the area must be taken as approximate—Hara Krishna v. Ram Surat, A.I.R. 1952 Trip. 28 relying on Nandlal v. Ghulam Ahmad, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 940 and Pannalal v. Bhaiya Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 281; Delli Gramani v. Ramachandram, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 769.

Material alteration in a sale-deed :—A material alteration in a deed is one which varies the rights, liabilities or legal position of the parties ascertained by the deed in its original state or otherwise varies the legal effect of the instrument as originally expressed, or reduces to certainty some provision which was originally unascertained and as such prejudices or may otherwise prejudice the party bound by the deed as originally executed—Nather Lal v. Mt. Gumti Kuar, 67 I.A. 318, I.L.R. 1940 All. 625, 45 C.W.N. 29, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 160. If an alteration (by erasure, interlineation or otherwise) is made in a material part of a deed after its execution, by or with the consent of any party thereto or person entitled thereunder, the deed is thereby made void. The avoidance however is not ab initio or so as to nullify any conveyancing effect which the deed has already had, but only operates as from the time of such alteration and so as to prevent the person who has made or authorized the alteration and those claiming under him from putting the deed in suit to enforce against any other party bound thereby, any obligation, covenant or promise thereby undertaken or made—Ibid.

Sale in insolvency proceedings :—A sale in insolvency proceedings, whether it be a direct sale by the Official Receiver or a sale at an auction, is nothing more than a transfer by act of parties and therefore the provisions as to registration apply to such sale—Raghubir v. Kunj Behari, A.I.R. 1942 All. 39 (41); see also Shankaram v. Ganapati, 50 Mad. 135 (F.B.), 51 M.L.J. 529, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1; Abdul Hashim v. Amar Krishna, 46 Cal. 887; Golam Hossein v. Fatima Begum, 16 C.W.N. 394.

276. Transfer of ownership :—The Indian law does not recognize legal and equitable estates; therefore there can be one "owner". Where the property is vested in a trustee, the "owner" must be the trustee. The right of the beneficiary is, in a proper case, to call upon the trustee to convey to him. Until conveyance he is not the "owner"—Chhatru Kumari v. Mohan Bikram, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 196, 10 Pat. 851, 53 I.A. 279, 35 C.W.N. 953, 133 I.C. 705.

The "transfer of ownership" marks the difference between a sale and a mortgage. In a mortgage, the mortgagee holds the estate merely as a security for the debt, and not absolutely, and he has therefore only a qualified and limited interest in it, confined to the object of satisfying his debt, and so long as the right of redemption remains in the mortgagor, the full proprietary interest and right cannot be said to have passed from him to the mortgagee. In a sale, on the other hand, the proprietary rights pass in their full sense and absolutely—Indar Sein v. Naubat, 7 All. 553 (F.B.).

A relinquishment does not pass ownership. In Jadu Nath v. Rup Lal, 33 Cal. 967, (1983-84) Mookerjee J. observed: "The plaintiff did not execute a conveyance in favour of the defendant; but gave him a deed of relinquishment. Now it is well-settled that title to land cannot pass by admission, when statute requires a deed". See also Mathura Mohan v. Ram Kumar, 43 Cal. 790. But under this Act a release by parole is a perfectly valid transaction. The appropriate form of conveyance whereby a joint tenant relinquishes his interest in favour of another joint tenant is a release and not a sale or gift: It operates rather as an extinguishment of a right than as a conveyance—Saya Hman v. Saya Hla, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 448, 160 I.C. 325. When property is allotted to a partner as his share of the residue on dissolution the transaction is not a sale—Commissioner of Income-tax v. Dewas Cine Corporation, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 676.

A compromise is merely an acknowledgment of the existing rights of parties. It is not a transfer of ownership, and is consequently not a sale. This section therefore does not apply; so, if the terms of a compromise affecting land worth less than Rs. 100 are reduced to writing, it is not necessary that the writing should be registered or possession given under the 3rd para of this section—Krishna Tanhaji v. Aba Shetta, 34 Bom. 139.

Where during the pendency of a suit the parties executed a document the effect of which was that the litigation should pursue its full course and whatever the result might be, the contestants would at the end of the litigation divide the property, it was held that was an agreement to divide the property at the end of the litigation and could not create any interest in the property under this section—Rupchand v. Jankibai, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 24, 91 I.C. 817, 27 Bom. L.R. 1441.

Under this section a sham deed of sale, even if registered, does not pass title, for the sale does not become complete in such a case by mere execution of the deed—Mt. Boota v. Gur Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 20, 12 Luck. 313, 164 I.C. 817. In such a case title does not pass to the vendee and a suit by the latter for possession is not maintainable—Abdul Wahab v. Muquarrab, A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 27, 1939 Pesh. L.J. 35, 183 I.C. 221; see also Basalingava v. Revanseddappa, 56 Bom. 556, 34 Bom. L.R. 427, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 247; Parsotam v. Ali Haidar, 13 Luck. 484, 1937 O.W.N. 944, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 493 and Hemraj v. Trimbak, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 146, 78 I.C. 1011.

A family arrangement can ordinarily be effected orally, but if reduced to writing and the arrangement results in a transfer of title from one side to the other, then registration is necessary—Kashiprasad v. Bedprasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 113 (116), 1939 N.I.J. 216, 189 I.C. 117.

Grant of easement :—This section applies to the transfer of easements, and not to the creation thereof, because the creation of an easement (e.g., a right of way) is not a transfer of ownership. An easement can therefore be created by a verbal agreement, or unregistered document; no writing or registration is necessary under this section—Satyanarayan-amurti v. Lakshmayya, 57 M.L.J. 46 115 I.C. 145, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 79 (80); Gun Sone v. Cassim Dalla, 9 Bur. L.T. 222, 34 I.C. 95; Sital Chandra v. Delanney, 20 C.W.N. 1158 (1164), 34 I.C. 450. By a document A agreed that when B would build his second storey, he (B), should have a right to discharge rain-water as well as water used for daily household purpose through certain spouts, and that A would take the additional burden on the servient tenement. Held that the right granted was an easement within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Easements Act. The deed did not transfer any portion of the grantor's (A's) right of ownership, and the document did not require registration—Bhagwan Sahai v. Narasinha Sahai, 31 All. 612, followed in Kondayya v. Veerama, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 543, 92 I.C. 672.

... 278. Price :—"In all sales it is evident that price is an essential ingredient, and that where it is neither ascertained nor rendered ascertainable, the contract is void for incompleteness and incapable of enforcement. It is not, however, necessary that the contract should in the first instance determine the price. It may either appoint a way in which it is to be determined, or it may stipulate for a fair price"—Fry on Specific Performance, 6th Edn. Secs. 353, 354; Ram Sundar v. Kali Narain, 55 Cal. 285, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 889 (893), 104 I.C. 527.

Price means money—Empress v. Acappa, 9 Mad. 141; Volkart v. Vettivelu, 11 Mad. 459 (at p. 467); Samaratmal v. Govind, 25 Bom. 696; Madam Pillai v. Badrakali, 45 Mad. 612 (617) (F.B.); Abadi Begam v. Khalil, infra; Venkata v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 140, 54 Mad. 163, 135 I.C. 17; Ghulam Abbas v. Razia Begum, A.I.R. 1951 All. 86 (F.B.), 1950 A.L.J. 917 per Bhargava J. A sale is a transfer of ownership in exchange for money. If a property is transferred in exchange for some thing other than money, the transaction is called an exchange—Talib Ali v. Kaniz Fatima, 2 Luck. 575, 4 O.W.N. 400, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 204 (205), 102 I.C. 142; Commissioner of Income-tax v. Motors and General Stores Ltd., A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 200. Where the consideration for the transfer is something in addition to half the value of the property, i.e., forbearance on the one side to take proceedings to set aside Court sale, the transaction cannot be called a sale, nor is it an exchange there being no mutual transfer of ownership of things—Venkata v. Venkata, infra. Where the only consideration for the transfer is forbearance on the part of the transferee not to contest a title suit by the transferor, the transaction is not a sale—Mahima v. Dinabandhu, A.I.R. 1960 Orissa 16. But where the vendor agrees to sell certain property to the vendee in consideration of certain decretal amounts due from him to the vendee, the result of the arrangement is that the decretal amount changes its legal character and becomes purchase-money in the hands of the vendor and the amount is "price" within the meaning of this section—Matta Sura v. Mana Rama, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 714, 176 I.C. 444. An agreement between two persons to divide the fruits of a contemplated litigation, in which the consideration for the transaction is described as "efforts, attempts, proceedings, payment of vakils' fees, and the danger of failure and loss" cannot be held to be a transaction of sale, because there is no price (i.e., money price) fixed, which is of the essence of a sale, and no amount of money is paid or promised to be paid but the whole is left in the hands of the speculators for the purpose of meeting the expenses of a litigation—Abadi Begam v. Khalil, 6 Luck. 282, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 481 (495), 132 I.C. 753. The transaction does not become a sale merely because the parties are sometimes described as vendors and vendees—Ibid.

Where in lieu of advances made by one brother to another a sale deed is executed by the latter in favour of the former, the transaction cannot be presumed as benami. It is for good consideration even if some of the advances were barred by limitation—Asoke v. Chota Nagpur Banking Assn., A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 247. There may be valuable consideration other than payment of money or promises to pay money. Thus where the consideration of the sale was that the vendee should conduct litigation in respect of the property sold at his own expense and after successful termination thereof was to pay the vendor 50 per cent. of the value of the property when recovered, it was held that the vendor sold the property itself and not a mere right to sue—Beni Madho v. John, A.I.R. 1947 All. 321.

It is settled law that notwithstanding an admission in a sale-deed that the consideration has been received, it is open to the vendee to prove that no consideration has actually been paid, and that if it was not so, facilities would be afforded for the grossest frauds. It is no infringement of sec. 92 of the Evidence Act for a Court to accept proof that by a collateral arrangement between the vendor and purchaser, the consideration money remained with the purchaser, and under the conditions agreed between them—Irfanali v. Jogendra, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 708, 59 Cal. 1111, 36 C.W.N. 461, 143 I.C. 241. See also Shah Lal Chand v. Indarjit, 22 All. 370, 27 I.A. 93; Shah Makhanlal v. Sri Krishna, 12 M.I.A. 157 and Chuni v. Basanti, 36 All. 537. Ordinarily, consideration for a sale is a valuable consideration or price. Past cohabitation besides being immortal is not a valuable consideration—Sabava v. Tamanappa, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 209, 35 Bom. L.R. 345. But see Gastho v. Rohini, 13 C.W.N. 692.

In order that a transaction may be a sale, the payment of some money or consideration must be contemplated. The creation of an adhlapi tenure, whereby in consideration of sinking a well and clearing the land attached to it within a certain period, a person was to get possession of a part of the land as proprietor, does not amount to a sale—Ghulam Muhammad v. Tikchand, 2 Lah. 199 (202), A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 82, 62 I.C. 932. A transfer of property partly in consideration of money and partly in consideration of a forbearance on the part of the purchaser to take certain legal proceeding is not a sale—Venkata Jagannadha v. Venkata Kumara, 54 Mad. 163, 60 M.L.J. 56, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 140 (143).

A discharge of future maintenance is not a 'price', and therefore the transfer of property by husband to his wife for her use during her lifetime in discharge of her future maintenance is not a sale—Madam Pillai v. Badrakali, 45 Mad. 612 (F.B.). A transfer of property in lieu of discharge of the right of maintenance of the transferee charged on the property is not a sale but an exchange—Rajjo v. Lajja, 26 A.L.J. 169, A.I.R. 1928 All. 204 (205), 114 I.C. 43. In another Madras case it has been held that a transfer of property in consideration of a discharge of a debt is a transfer in exchange of a 'price' and amounts to a sale—Ariyaputhira v. Muthu Kumaraswami, 37 Mad. 123, 15 I.C. 343. But this case has been disapproved of in 45 Mad. 612 (F.B.) cited above.

Assignment of property by a Mahomedan to his wife as a dower is not a sale—Ali Hasan v. Mt. Rashidan, A.I.R. 1931 All. 237, 124

I.C. 750. But a transfer of immoveable property by a Muhammadan in favour of his wife in lieu of dower is a sale—Asalat v. Sambhu Dayal, 14 O.C. 214, 11 I.C. 928; Fahmidunnissa v. Hiralal, 64 I.C. 126 (Nag.); Md. Zaki Khan v. Mannu, 28 O.C. 227, 87 I.C. 176, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 407, 2 O.W.N. 171; Saiful v. Abdul Aziz, 1931 A.L.J. 951, 133 I.C. 901; Abbas Ali v. Karim Bakksh, 13 C.W.N. 160, 4 I.C. 466. Where the transfer of property is made in lieu of a sum of money whether the money is paid in cash or by the extinction of a dower-debt, the transaction comes within the definition of a sale in sec. 54, T. P. Act—Md. Zaki Khan v. Mannu, (supra). But see Bashir Ahmad v. Zobaida, 1 Luck. 83, 29 O.C. 108, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 186, 92 I.C. 265, and Talib Ali v. Kaniz Fatima, (supra), where such a transaction has been held to be a hiba-bil-ewaz (exchange) and not a sale, (and cannot give rise to a right of pre-emption) as the word 'price', in this section means money and not the release of an obligation to pay dower-debt. But so far as the T. P. Act is concerned, it makes no difference whether the transaction is treated as a sale or an exchange, for in either case, sec. 54 applies (see sec. 118).

Where at the time of sale the property sold was not in the possession of the vendor but was held by a third party against whom a suit had to be instituted for recovery of possession, but the vendor being too poor to sue for its recovery sold the property to the purchaser for Rs. 5,000, and it was agreed that the vendor was not to get any further sum if the vendee succeeded in his suit for recovering the property, nor was the vendor liable if the suit failed, held that the total consideration was Rs. 5,000, neither more nor less, and the property was transferred for this cash consideration. The transaction was therefore a sale—Badri Prasad v. Bijay Nand, 54 All. 905, 139 I.C. 693, A.I.R. 1922 All. 685; Beni Madho v. John, A.I.R. 1947 All. 321.

Where the larger part of the consideration was paid by the vendee, the sale cannot be held as hollow—Radhabai v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 50, 45 Bom. L.R. 980. Title passes to the vendee, unless there was intention of the parties that it would not pass until the entire amount of the consideration has been paid—Rajkumar v. Uchit, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 454. Non-delivery of the original document of sale and non-delivery of possession were not held to be important in the circumstances of this case.

279. "Promised":—Conditional promise to pay price :—There is nothing contrary to public policy in providing in a deed that the payment of the consideration in a transaction amounting to a sale shall be postponed under certain events (e.g.; until possession is obtained within a year) and that it shall not be paid at all in the event of the property being lost or possession not being obtained. It does not thereby become a gambling transaction—Kauleshar v. Abadi Bibi, 37 All. 631 (633). Where in a contract for sale the entire purchase-money was to be paid within one month after the receipt of earnest money, and the vendor during that month accepted various instalments towards the purchase-money, the vendor should be regarded to have waived his right for entire payment within one month and cannot plead time as essence of the contract—U Tha v. Chettiar Firm, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 367.

281. Non-payment of price :—The words 'price paid or promised' show that where a sale has been completed by execution and registration of the conveyance, the mere non-payment of the purchase-money does not prevent the passing of the title of the property sold from the vendor to the purchaser; and the vendee, notwithstanding such non-payment, can maintain a suit for possession of the property—Shiblal v. Bhagwan, 11 All. 244 (252); Krishnamma v. Mali, 43 Mad. 712, 38 M.L.J. 467, 56 I.C. 530; Somasundaram v. Shwe Ba, 13 Bur. L.T. 26, 57 I.C. 948; Bajinath v. Paltu, 30 All. 125 (127); Umed Lal v. Davu, 2 Bom. 547 (548); Ramdhari v. Borakh Rai, 10 Pat. 264, 133 I.C. 34, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 236; Tatia v. Babaji, 20 Bom. 176 (183); or he can maintain a suit for declaration of his proprietary right, in case the property is in the possession of other persons, e.g., mortgagees—Kesri v. Ganga, 4 All. 168 (170). If the executant conveys title to the vendee from the date of the execution of the document and the recital regarding consideration comes later independently of the clause regarding title, then the title passes independent of the question of consideration—Michha Kumar v. Raghu Jena, A.I.R. 1961 Orissa 19.

As regards the remedy of the vendor, it has been held in some cases that he is to bring a separate suit for recovery of the purchase-money. The Court cannot, in a suit brought by the purchaser for possession, make the decree for possession conditional on the payment of the purchase-money, nor can it decree payment of the vendor in the purchaser's suit—Krishnamma v. Mali, 43 Mad. 712 (713, 714); Velayutha v. Govindaswamy, 34 Mad. 543 (544); Somasundaram v. Shwe Ba, supra; Sagaji v. Namdev, 23 Bom. 525 (527). The grounds of this decision are : firstly, that it is not competent for the Court to incorporate the vendor's charge for unpaid purchase-money into the decree passed in the suit brought by the purchaser for recovery of the property; and secondly, that as the vendor is not able to set up a counter claim, the decree cannot incorporate the vendor's lien. But these are mere matters of convenience and procedure, rather than of substantive law, and from the point of view of convenience it has been decided in some other cases that in decreeing the purchaser's suit for possession the Court can make it subject to the condition that the purchaser shall pay the purchase-money within a time fixed by the Court, and that on his failure to pay within the time so fixed the suit shall stand dismissed—Bajinath v. Paltu, 30 All. 125 (127); Basalingava v. Chinnava, 30 Bom. L.R. 1064, 114 I.C. 369, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 60 (62); Basalingava v. Chinnava, 56 Bom. 556, 138 I.C. 534, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 247 (250); Jogeendra v. Manmatha, 34 I.C. 106 (108); Umedmal v. Davu, 2 Bom. 547 (549); Rama Aiyar v. Vanamamalai, 27 I.C. 336 (337); Nilmadhab v. Haranprasad, 17 C.W.N. 1161, 20 I.C. 325 (327); Mt. Pran Dei v. Sat Deo, A.I.R. 1929 All. 85, 111 I.C. 761; U Tin v. Chettiyar Firm, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 401, 147 I.C. 742. In other words, the right of the purchaser to obtain possession and the right of the vendor to realise the unpaid purchase-money should be recognised and enforced in one action. If the Court gives an unconditional decree to the purchaser for possession, the vendor will be driven to institute another suit for the unpaid purchase-money. It is obviously undesirable that the matter in controversy which may be settled without disadvantage to any of the parties in a single litigation should be repeatedly agitated in a succession of suits—Nil-madhab v. Haran Prosad,^{*} supra; Basalingava v. Chinnava, supra. But the vendor has no right, on account of non-payment, to treat the sale as void and convey the property to a third person—see Shib Lal v. Bhagwan, 11 All. 244 (251, 252); Kesri v. Ganga Prasad, 4 All. 168; Moidin v. Avaran, 11 Mad. 263 (264). As to the vendor's charge for unpaid purchase-money, see Note 311 under sec. 55.

Where there is a registered deed of sale, which is not tainted by any fraud or the like, it passes the title and interest conveyed, notwithstanding the non-payment of purchase-money—Chetty Firm v. Chetty Firm, 9 Bur. L.T. 199, 34 I.C. 125 (126); Jogendra v. Manmatha, 34 I.C. 106 (107). The non-payment of the consideration money may be an important item to be taken into consideration in determining whether the conveyance 'was or was not a real transaction. But a conveyance, notwithstanding the non-payment of consideration, may be a perfectly good transaction, except where the conveyance is drawn in such a form that the transfer is conditional only upon the payment of the consideration money—Kumud Kamini v. Khudumani, 47 I.C. 202 (203, 204) (Cal.); Makhian Lal v. Hanuman, 2 P.L.J. 168 (170), 38 I.C. 877; Sarjug Saran v. Ramcharitar Singh, 1968 B.L.J.R. 74. The true test in such a case is the intention of the parties to the transaction. If the intention is that the title should pass immediately even though the consideration has not been paid, the title passes; that is, the failure to pay the consideration for a conveyance does not defeat the conveyance, except when there is an agreement that it should take effect only if the consideration is first paid—Nitai Chandra v. Champaklata, 29 C.L.J. 250, 51 I.C. 104 (105). On the other hand, if the operation of the transaction was intended to be postponed till the consideration money had been paid, the transfer would become complete and operative only upon such payment—Kashi Das v. Chaithru, 19 C.L.J. 239, 23 I.C. 813; Abdullah v. Bhichuk, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 68, 147 I.C. 767. The question whether the passing of the title is postponed till the payment of the entire price depends on the intention of the parties to be gathered from the sale-deed itself; but where it is not clear, the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the parties may be considered—Pirtam Singh v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 1, 12 B.R. 318; Ghanshyam v. Udayanath, A.I.R. 1949 Or. 14, 14 Cut. L.T. 40; Ramchandra Biharilal Firm v. Mathuramohon Naik, A.I.R. 1964 Orissa, 239. In cases of sale, it is seldom the intention of the parties to allow title to pass without the receipt of consideration and this intention can be gathered from the sale-deed—Shiba Prasad v. Upendra, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 45, 154 I.C. 612; Munshi Bahem Khan v. Ramachandra Samat, I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 381. Where the sale-deed expressly stipulates that if the vendee omits to pay the balance of purchase-money within a specified time the deed will be treated as null and void, the vendor is entitled to avoid the deed on the vendee failing to make the payment agreed upon—Bakhtawar v. Naushad Ali, 55 I.C. 659 (Oudh). But in a recent case, in similar circumstances, the Privy Council has held that there is nothing in sec. 31, which merely declares that a limitation upon a condition subsequent is a lawful method of grant, to exclude the right of the Court to give relief to vendees who failed to make payment by the date agreed upon in the sale-deed which provided that on failure by the vendees to make payment to vendor's creditors within the date fixed, the deed was to stand cancelled and the cash balance received by the vendors was also to be forfeited—Devendra v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 24, (25-26), 15 Pat. 127, 40 C.W.N. 238, 63 I.A. 26, 159 I.C. 559; Shankar Nand Seal v. Harichand Mehra, 1966 B.L.J.R. 291. Refusal by the vendee to pay the price to the vendor would not by itself be a reason for setting aside the sale. Once a sale is completed, it cannot be rescinded for failure of consideration, unless that right is expressly reserved, in which case an action will lie not in consequence of any general right vested in the vendor but on the express covenant made in the deed. In another case, all that the vendor could claim would be damages for breach of the promise to pay the price—Bai Devmani v. Ravishankar, 53 Bom. 321, 31 Bom. L.R. 109, 116 I.C. 236, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 147 (150); Prem Singh v. District Board, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 917, 151 I.C. 163.

Where the father of a minor got a sale-deed in the name of his son by which the father agreed to discharge certain debts binding upon the property sold to the minor and the deed provided "the debt shall be discharged and the minor may hold and enjoy the lands exclusively": held that the property vested in the minor though the debts were not discharged—Gangai v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 544, 84 I.C. 626.

Where a cash payment is to be made at the time of registration, the commoner practice is for the vendee on payment to present the deed for registration and get the registration receipt. But while the retention of the receipt by the vendor is suggestive of non-payment of the cash sum, it is not sufficient proof by itself of non-payment—Bhup Narain v. Gokul, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 68 (70), 13 Pat. 242, 61 I.A. 115, 38 C.W.N. 393, 147 I.C. 1134.

Where the recital in a registered sale-deed showed that full consideration was received by the vendor and possession was delivered to the vendee, but it was found that not a farthing was paid by the latter and the possession of the property and the registered sale-deed remained with the vendor, the conclusion was irresistible that the intention of the parties was that title would not pass unless consideration money was paid and that the title remained with the vendor—Motilal v. Ugrah Narain, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 288. See also Girish v. Akhtar, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 330; Chandrasekhar v. Pitambari, A.I.R. 1953 Or. 315; Panchoo v. Janki, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 263; Gopalakrishnamurthi v. Madireddi, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 882, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 240. But see Chandrashankar v. Abhla Mathur, A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 56, 53 Bom. L.R. 861, where it has been held that the recital in the sale-deed of the payment of the consideration if not true, does not render the deed invalid. If the document shows that there was an intention to pay the consideration, it is not rendered invalid on account of non-payment of the consideration. So long as passing of the consideration is not a term of the contract, evidence that it did not pass, though the contract did not recite it, is not prohibited by sec. 92, Evidence Act and oral evidence can be admitted under Proviso 2 thereof—Mutyalu v. Veerayya, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 452, (1946) 1 M.L.J. 346.

Where the vendee purchased under a registered sale-deed, but he abstained from paying the purchase-money for more than three years, and allowed his vendor to retain possession and to sell the land to other persons, held that the vendee was not thereafter entitled to bring a suit for possession—Sangu v. Cumarasami, 18 Mad. 61 (63). Where the sale-deed was registered and possession delivered to the vendee, but no consideration was paid (although it was expressed in the sale-deed to have been paid) and it was found that the vendor was forced to execute the deed during his illness under undue influence, held that the vendor was entitled to have the sale-deed cancelled and possession restored—Tatia v. Balaji, 22 Bom. 176. Where the parties enter into a bargain for the sale of property, then if the real intention is that the property should pass, the mere fact of non-payment of part or even the whole of the consideration will not make the deed of transfer fictitious. But the non-passing of the consideration may often be a very strong evidence that the conveyance is not a real transaction and that the deed was not intended to operate. Each case must be decided upon the facts proved—Alamdard v. Moti Ram, 16 A.L.J. 454, 46 I.C. 382. Where the fact found is that a portion of the consideration set out in a sale-deed has been found to be good consideration, the mere fact that another portion of the consideration has not been paid is no ground for coming to the conclusion that the parties did not intend the document to be enforceable between them—Muniram v. Amjad Ali, 26 A.L.J. 539, A.I.R. 1928 All. 391 (392), 114 I.C. 192.

If no price is paid or even promised, there is no sale and the transfer does not take effect, because the essence of sale is exchange of property for a price paid or promised. Where the price was not paid, and the purchaser never promised to pay it, even a registered conveyance cannot effect a sale—Maung Saing v. Shwe Lon, 4 L.B.R. 369.

282. Proof of payment of price :—Notwithstanding an admission in a sale-deed that consideration has passed, the vendor can prove that no consideration has in fact been paid—Sah Lal v. Indrajit, 22 All. 370 (P.C.). In such cases, the party (vendor) who alleges non-payment of consideration is ordinarily bound to prove his allegation, and the mere denial by the vendor of the receipt of consideration acknowledged in the recitals of the deed of sale is not in all cases sufficient to cast upon the vendee the burden of proving payment of consideration, especially where the vendee has been put in possession of the property and of the title-deeds—Rampal v. Suba Singh, 4 P.L.J. 517, 53 I.C. 83. But where possession has never been transferred after the sale, and the vendee has silently submitted to the withholding of possession for several years, the Court will presume that possession has been withheld for non-payment of consideration, and it will be incumbent on the vendee to give evidence that the consideration has in fact passed and to account for his being out of possession of the property since his purchase—Achobandil v. Mahabir, 8 All. 641.

284. Tangible immoveable property :—An undivided share in immoveable property is a tangible immoveable property—Peari Lal v. Lala, 14 O.C. 161, 11 I.C. 673; Maung Hoe v. Pe Hla, 3 Bur. L.J. 63, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 267, 83 I.C. 270; Nathu v. Gulab Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 13, 144 I.C. 919. The right to remove sand and earth from a plot of land has been held to be an interest in immoveable property Kanji v. Shunmgam, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 734, 63 M.L.J. 577, 139 I.C. 510. The interest under a settlement of landed property is an interest in immoveable property—Official Assignee v. M. E. Molla & Sons, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 84, 154 I.C. 9. A mortgage-debt can be validly transferred only in accordance with the provision of this section—Official Receiver v. Lakshman, 41 M.L.J. 456; Perumal v. Perumal, 40 M.L.J. 25; Vijayaraghavalu v. Arunachalam, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 165, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 582, 18 M.L.W. 766. The right of a usufructuary mortgagee is a legal right in tangible immoveable property—Pheku v. Syed Ali, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 178, 15 Pat. 772, 167 I.C. 890. An assignment of a mortgage-deed requires registration, but the want of registration will not have the effect of extinguishing the original rights of the assignor—People's Bank of Northern India v. Ram Kishan, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 430. A right to catch fish in a lake being a profit a prendre is either immoveable property or an intangible thing—Ananda Behera v. State of Orissa, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 17.

As to what is an 'immoveable property' see 'Notes 17 and 18 under sec. 3.

285. Reversion or other intangible thing :—Unlike the Registration Act, the Transfer of Property Act, sec. 54 does not contain the wide phrase "any interest to or in immoveable property", but the phrase "reversion or other intangible thing" covers every interest in immoveable property which is not regarded (as, e.g., an unavoids share in land is regarded) as being tangible immoveable property in itself—M. E. Moolla & Sons, Ltd. v. Official Assignee, (1936) 40 C.W.N. 1253. It has been held by the Lahore High Court that a sale-deed of immoveable property although for Rs. 99 will require registration, if it is in possession of tenants, as what is sold is only an intangible thing—Sahobuddin v. Kalendar, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 304, 40 P.L.R. 24, relying on Bhaskar v. Padman, 40 Bom. 313, 33 I.C. 267. A right to redeem a usufructuary mortgage is tangible and not intangible property and a sale of this right to redeem if less than Rs. 100 in value can be effected by delivery of possession—Sreerama Venkatasubbamma v. Somiseti, Subayya, A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 21.

An intangible property can be sold only by a registered deed (para 2), irrespective of value. The following have been held to be intangible property :—

(1) Equity of redemption, in property usufructuarily mortgaged is intangible and not tangible property, because possession thereof cannot be given to the purchaser—Ramaswami v. Chinnan, 24 Mad. 449 (463); Rahamat Ali v. Muhammad, 11 A.L.J. 407, 19 I.C. 818 (820; Jairam v. Balkrishnadas, 3 N.L.R. 72; Sheikh Hashmal v. Sheikh Jamir, 23 C.W.N. 513 (514), 52 I.C. 558; Mahendra v. Chandrapal, 24 O.C. 155, 63 I.C. 284. In Tukaram v. Atmaram, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 71, 40 Bom. L.R. 1192, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 31, Broomfield & Macklin, JJ., have held that the equity of redemption in the case of a usufructuary mortgage is tangible property so that it can be transferred by an unregistered deed where the value of the property does not exceed Rs. 100, following Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 All. 986 (F.B.), 26 A.L.J. 1084, A.I.R. 1928

All. 726. But this Full Bench case, it appears, does not support the above wide proposition. See in this connection Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, 43 C.W.N. 281, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14. See Dharmeshwar v. Lakhyadhar, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 107 per Ram Labhaya, J. Thadani C. J. contra. See also Jagarnath v. Chhatu Sah, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 504, I.L.R. 27 Pat. 202. But see Sarju Prasad v. Mt. Aguta Devi, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 153 (F.B.) and Bhanwarlal v. Dhulilal, A.I.R. 1459 Raj. 218, where the equity of redemption in usufructuary mortgage has been held to be tangible property. So also the equity of redemption in case of a katkobala is intangible property—Ramnarain v. Kula Chandra, 49 I.C. 426 (Cal). But the equity of redemption in the case of a simple mortgage is tangible immoveable property—Ramaswami v. Chinnan Asari, 24 Mad. 449 (463). The interest of a mortgagee in a mortgage which does not involve the immediate transfer of either legal title or possession is an intangible right in immoveable property—Girdhar v. Motilal, A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 5, 1940 N.L.J. 151.

(2) Contingent interest—Subrahmanian v. Perumal, 18 Mad. 454 (455); Peari Lal v. Lala, 14 O.C. 161, 11 I.C. 673.

(3) Right of a simple mortgagee in the property mortgaged—Ramaswami v. Chinnan, 24 Mad. 449 (463) (dissenting from Subramanian v. Perumal, 18 Mad. 454); Balagurumoorthy v. Nagulu, 41 M.L.J. 267, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 277, 69 I.C. 473; Mutsaddi Lal v. Muhammad Hanif, 10 A.L.J. 167, 15 I.C. 853 (854).

(4) Reversion :—Where the land is in possession of tenants, the landlord has nothing but a reversion—Sahabuddin v. Kalendar, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 304, 40 P.L.R. 24; Bhaskar v. Padman, 40 Bom. 313, 33 I.C. 267; Damodar v. Giridhari, 27 All. 564. An “intangible thing” being in the nature of a reversion, a debt which has already become due from a third person (e.g., profits already due from a lambardar to a co-sharer) is not included in the term. An assignment of such a debt does not require to be registered—Damodar v. Giridhari, 27 All. 564.

(5) The right of cutting and appropriating “plants now standing or that may hereafter form” on certain land—Kuthwa v. Thoppai, 15 I.C. 234 (Mad.).

(6) The interest of a partner in a partnership—Sahebram v. Purushottamlal, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 89, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 355.

(7) A patta right in Hyderabad—Anthya v. Gottadu, A.I.R. 1950 Hyd. 58.

Where A allows B to plant mango trees on his land and access to B to gather the fruits thereof, the transaction is not a sale of intangible property—Balaji v. Misrilal, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 321.

This section has no application to the sale of moveable property, such as copyright—Savitri Devi v. Dwarka Prasad, I.L.R. 1939 All. 275, A.I.R. 1939 All. 305, 1939 A.L.J. 71; nor to the transfer of a license to sell electricity—Monmohan v. O. L. Lower Ganges, etc., Distributing Co., I.L.R. 1940 All. 568, A.I.R. 1940 All. 458, 1940 A.L.J. 449. There is no law that such a license can be effected only by a written or registered instrument—Ibid. A decree passed in a suit for specific performance of the contract to reconvey does not create any interest in immoveable property, and hence the transfer of the share of a Mahomedan minor in the decree by the de facto guardian is not void—Govinda Chandra Ghose v. Prabhavati Ghose, A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 147.

286. Mode of transfer :—Paras 2 and 3 lay down the effectual modes of transferring property by sale, and no transfer can be effected otherwise than by complying with the provisions of these paras. The mutation of names in the Revenue papers or a statement made before the Revenue officer in a mutation proceeding is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this section—Ram Prasad v. Bedo, 13 I.C. 436 (All.); Ram Surup v. Charitter, A.I.R. 1927 All. 338 (339), 100 I.C. 270. So also, a title to land cannot pass by a mere admission when the statute requires a deed—Mathura Mohan v. Ramkumar, 43 Cal. 790.

287. Para 2—Registration :—In enacting this section, it was the intention of the Legislature, by means of compulsory registration, to minimise, as far as possible, the chances of litigation and to reduce the opportunities for perjury in connection with sales of immoveable property—Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi, 29 Mad. 336 (334) (F.B.).

The T. P. Act does not apply to Punjab, where a transfer of immoveable property of value of Rs. 100 or upwards can be made orally—Udho Das v. Meher, 34 P.L.R. 714, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 262 (263).

Effect of registration—Transfer of title :—The mere registration of a sale-deed does not necessarily amount to a transfer of property to the vendee, especially if there is no delivery of the deed—Jogendra v. Manmatha, 34 I.C. 106 (107) (Cal.); Hara Beva v. Banchanidhi Barik, A.I.R. 1957 Orissa 243. Where neither the deed of sale nor possession of the property was delivered to the vendee and no consideration passed, the mere registration of the deed of sale did not operate to pass the title to the vendee—Raju Mahton v. Hussain Mean, 59 I.C. 171 (Pat.); Sree Nath v. Sree Kanta, 6 I.C. 477 (478) (Cal.). The mere registration of the deed does not necessarily pass the property. Apart from the section, registration is not a formality which creates any rights, although it affects the admissibility in evidence of the document registered. Registration is prima facie proof of intention to transfer the title but it is not proof of operative transfer; and if there is a condition precedent as to payment of consideration and the delivery of the deed, such conditions must be strictly fulfilled before title can pass—Sheo Narain v. Darbari, 2 C.W.N. 207 (208). The mere registration of a deed of transfer is not in itself sufficient to convey title, but the Court has to see what was the intention of the vendor, if no consideration passed. The intention may be presumed from circumstances—Gostho Behary v. Rohini, 13 C.W.N. 692, 4 I.C. 541. If it was intended by the parties that the title should pass only upon the consideration money being paid, then the mere registration will not be taken as conclusive that the title has passed; and no title will pass unless the consideration money has been paid—Mauladan v. Raghunandan, 27 Cal. 7; Gostho Behary v. Rohini, 13 C.W.N. 692 (693), 4 I.C. 541; Seramot v. Samad Ali, 19 I.C. 562; Abdul Aziz v. Kala Shah, 50 P.W.R. 1916, 32 I.C. 961; Sree Nath

v. Sree Kanta, 6 I.C. 477. (478); Kumud Kamini v. Khudumani, 47 I.C. 202 (204); Makhan Lal v. Hanuman, 2 P.L.J. 168 (170), 38 I.C. 877; Maung Mon v. Ma Kim, 5 Rang. 636, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 47, 106 I.C. 358. If, on the other hand, it is proved that a deed of sale was intended to be operative upon registration, and there was no intention of either party to postpone the operation of the conveyance till the consideration was paid, the deed does not become inoperative by reason merely of non-payment of the purchase-money—Nilmadhab v. Haran Prosad, 17 C.W.N. 1161, 20 I.C. 325 (326); Seramot Ali v. Samad Ali, 19 I.C. 562; Umedmal v. Davu, 2 Bom. 547 (548). See also Note 281 above, "Non-payment of price". Similarly, if it was intended by the owner, whether consideration passed or not, to transfer the property to the defendant who was his mistress, held that the registration of the sale-deed would be sufficient to transfer the title and no proof of payment of consideration was necessary—Gostho Behary v. Rohini Gowalini, 13 C.W.N. 692 (693), 4 I.C. 541.

Two persons entered into a transaction which they embodied in a deed of sale; the deed was described as a contract of sale, but it was registered and it distinctly provided that on certain events happening the property should be regarded as sold to the vendee. The vendee was put in possession of the property in consequence of the registered deed. Held that there was a transfer in consequence and by operation of the registered deed when the conditions of the deed were fulfilled—Kundu Konhuji v. Vishnu, 37 Bom. 53, 17 I.C. 176 (177).

No title before registration :—Where the sale-deed requires registration (e.g., in the case of immoveable property worth Rs. 100 or upwards) the title does not pass until the sale deed has been registered (2 C.W.N. 207), though there may be transfer of possession and payment of consideration. Therefore, if property is sold to A under a sale-deed executed on the 11th August but the sale-deed is registered on the 25th November, and in the meantime the property is sold in execution of a decree against the vendor on the 7th November and is purchased by B, B's title will take precedence over that of A, and he will be entitled to possession by ousting A—Tilakdhari v. Gour Narain, 5 P.L.J. 715 (718), 59 I.C. 290. Where moveable as well as immoveable properties are transferred by a document for a single consideration, which document, though compulsorily registrable in order to affect the immoveable property, is not registered, it is equally ineffectual to affect moveable property—Bhobi v. Ramlalbyammal, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 303, 152 I.C. 431. See also Petman v. Ganesh, 34 I.C. 542 and Bisheshar v. Mt. Bhuri, A.I.R. 1920 Lah. 20, 56 I.C. 595, 1 Lah. 436.

Registration, where invalid :—Where a non-existent property is included in a sale-deed for getting it registered at a place where the Sub-Registrar but for such inclusion would have no jurisdiction to register it, the registration is invalid—Mt. Nathibai v. Wailaji, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 330, I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 111, 169 I.C. 675. Even where the property is in existence, but is a small strip of land situated in another District and is included in the deed solely with a view to obtain registration there, it amounts to a fraud on the law of registration and the registration is invalid. The crucial question in such cases is that of intention—Innuganti

v. Sobhanadri, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 91, 40 C.W.N. 545, 63 I.A. 169, 161 I.C. 29; Collector v. Ram Sunder, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 157 (167), 38 C.W.N. 1101, 56 All. 468, 61 I.A. 268, 150 I.C. 545; Rowther v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 32, 168 I.C. 87.

Presentation of the deed before the Sub-Registrar by a pleader without any power-of-attorney from the executant renders the registration invalid—Jambu Prasad v. Aptab Ali, 37 All. 49 (P.C.), 42 I.A. 22, 19 C.W.N. 282, 28 I.C. 422. In such a case the mere admission of the executant before the Registrar is no compliance with the requirements of the Registration Act—Khaliluddin v. Banni Bibi, 35 All. 34 (F.B.); Halima v. Khairunnessa, A.I.R. 1920 Rang. 17, 3 Rang. 398, 91 I.C. 644. Where the person holding the power-of-attorney for such presentation dies before the presentation and the Registrar was aware of his death but accepted and registered the document, the registration was invalid—Najib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim, 23 All. 233 (P.C.).

Date of registration :—In case of a transfer the date on which the transfer takes effect is the date of the instrument and not the date of its registration—Ganesh Prasad v. Baiyalal, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 253, 175 I.C. 384; Kastur Chand v. Wazir Begam, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 1, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 291, 167 I.C. 48.

288. Absence of sale-deed :—Where there is no deed whatsoever in respect of property above Rs. 100 in value, but merely an oral contract for sale, it does not amount to a sale of the property, even though possession has been delivered to the vendee and he has paid a portion of the purchase-money. The possession by the vendee cannot take the place of the registered deed required by this section. The property does not vest in him until there is a registered deed. Consequently, the vendor can recover possession from the vendee, with mesne profits—Papireddi v. Narasareddi, 16 Mad. 464 (465). But now see sec. 53A which enunciates the doctrine of part performance. A person who claims to be the purchaser of immoveable property of the value of over Rs. 100 cannot sue for declaration of title to the property in the absence of a registered sale-deed except by way of adverse possession—Ma Mya v. Annamalai, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 127, 151 I.C. 227.

Non-registration of deed of conveyance—Part performance :—See sec. 53A and notes thereunder.

289. Evidentiary value of unregistered deed :—In section 49 of the Registration Act, a proviso has been newly added (by the T. P. Amendment Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929) to the effect, that “an unregistered document affecting immoveable property and required by this Act or by the Transfer of Property Act to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a suit for specific performance under Chap. II of the Specific Relief Act, or as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of sec. 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, or as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be effected by a registered instrument.” This proviso supersedes Thayarammal v. Lakshmi Ammal, 43 Mad. 822 (823) where it was held that it was not open to the vendee to treat the unregistered deed as an agreement to sell and to sue for specific performance of such agreement.

Though the unregistered instrument is not admissible to prove transfer of title, it can be used in evidence for the purpose of showing that the purchaser entered upon the property under a contract of sale and for determining the nature of his possession—Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 407 (413) (F.B.); Tauqir Ali v. Ram Ratan, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 41 (43), 1940 O.W.N. 753, 190 I.C. 85; see also Varada Pillai v. Jeevaratnammal, 43 Mad. 244 P.C., 46 I.A. 285; Qadir Bakhsh v. Mangha Mal, 4 Lah. 249, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 495, 73 I.C. 889; Ata Muhammad v. Shankar Das, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 491, 6 Lah. 319, 88 I.C. 872. In such a case the document is admissible to prove the terms of the contract—Parikhet v. Nidhi, A.I.R. 1954 Or. 31. The unregistered document is also admissible for the purpose of showing that the purchaser obtained a lien by the passing of consideration—Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, supra at pp. 411, 412; see also Shib Pershad v. Unnopurna, 12 W.R. 435; Shambhu v. Nama, 35 Bom. 438; Waman v. Dhondiba, 4 Bom. 126 (F.B.).

290. Para 3 :—Para 3 dispenses with the necessity of registered conveyance in cases of immoveable property valued at less than Rs. 100. "It was thought that in the absence of a much larger number of registration offices than at present exist in India, the requirement of registration in the case of every petty transaction relating to land would have been an intolerable hardship"—Whitley Stokes' Anglo Indian Codes, Vol. I, p. 729 (footnote).

By virtue of the amendment of section 4 by the Amendment Act of 1885, para 3 of sec. 54 is rendered absolute, in so far as it prescribes that a sale of tangible immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100 can be made only by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property; if it is made otherwise, e.g., by an unregistered instrument unaccompanied by delivery of possession, the sale is inoperative and confers no title on the vendee—Makhan Lal v. Banku, 19 Cal. 623 (F.B.) (overruling Khatu Bibi v. Madhuram, 16 Cal. 622); Konormat v. Nabin, 15 I.C. 288. See Notes under sec. 4.

An unregistered sale of property under Rs. 100 in value without delivery of possession gives no title to the vendee; consequently, if the same property is afterwards sold to another person under a registered sale-deed, the latter person gets the property in preference to the former, even though the latter purchaser had notice of the prior sale; for the doctrine of notice cannot be invoked to give validity to an invalid title. The contrary view taken in Shivram v. Genu, 6 Bom. 515, Hathisingh v. Kuvarji, 10 Bom. 105, Fazluddin v. Fakir Mohammed, 5 Cal. 336, Bhalu v. Jakhu, 11 Cal. 667 and other cases is no longer good law, as these cases were decided before the amendment of sec. 4, when an unregistered deed without possession gave a good title.

If there is delivery of possession, it is sufficient to transfer the ownership; and the fact that there is also an unregistered sale-deed will not weaken or destroy the effect of the delivery of possession—Bhagabati v. Sashi, 2 I.C. 413; Ganga v. Kalicharan, 22 Cal. 179; Gulab v. Lattu, 22 O.C. 58, 51 I.C. 561; Daya Ram v. Sita Ram, 79 I.C. 394, A.I.R. 1925 All. 206; Narasimha v. Bhupati Raju, 29 M.L.J. 721, 31 I.C. 52; Brajaballav v. Akshoy, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 705, 30 C.W.N. 254, 93 I.C. 115. Such an unregistered kobala is admissible in evidence in a suit for specific performance of the contract—Uma v. Chetu, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 89, 95 I.C. 187. Where the sale is only for an amount less than Rs. 100, the non-registration of the document is not fatal to the validity of the transfer, if the transferee is able to establish a prior oral sale and delivery of possession in pursuance thereof, i.e., an oral sale sufficiently dissociated from the unregistered sale-deed, that one can be regarded as independent of the other—Chinnasami v. Manickammal, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 265, 168 I.C. 681. The mere existence of an unregistered instrument does not prevent the vendee from falling back upon his title by delivery of the property—Rupa Teli v. Bishambar Teli, 8 C.P.L.R. 1; Shambhubai v. Shiblaldas, 4 Bom. 89; Hriday Behari v. Ram Rani, 3 O.L.J. 460, 37 I.C. 20. But in a Madras case it has been held that if the purchaser relies on an oral sale accompanied by delivery of possession, as well as on an unregistered document of sale, it is the document which must be looked to, and as that document is unregistered, there is no valid sale at all. If there had been no document, and the parties would have been satisfied by mere delivery of property, then the transaction would have been a sale by delivery of property, and therefore valid. But if the parties not satisfied with mere delivery, reduce the transaction to writing, it is the writing that must be regarded as containing the terms of the contract, and the sale can hardly be called a sale by delivery; and the writing being unregistered, the sale is invalid—Kuppuswami v. Chinna-swami, 28 L.W. 234, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 546 (548), 111 I.C. 677. This case has been dissented from in Keshwar v. Sheonandan, cited below.

Evidentiary value of the unregistered instrument :—An unregistered sale-deed of immoveable property worth less than Rs. 100, though inoperative under this section, where delivery of possession has not been made to the vendee, is admissible in evidence to prove the contract of sale—Poomalai v. Karuppa, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 136, 34 I.C. 921; Narasimha v. Raghunanda, 29 M.L.J. 721, 31 I.C. 52; it may be used, under sec. 91 of the Evidence Act, to prove the nature and the terms of the transaction which fell through—Brajabullav v. Akhoy, 30 C.W.N. 254, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 105, 93 I.C. 115. Where the sale was effected by delivery of possession, and there was also a deed of sale which was not registered, held that though the unregistered document did not by itself confer title, and could not be used to prove that the title passed under it, still it would be admissible as evidence, under sec. 91, Evidence Act, of the nature and terms of the transaction—Keshwar v. Sheonandan, 10 P.L.T. 449, 122 I.C. 533, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 620 (621); Sheikh Juman v. Mohamed Nobingoaz, 21 C.W.N. 1149, 41 I.C. 779; and can be used in evidence for determining the identity or dimensions of the plot sold—Harsalsa v. Bapu, 18 N.L.R. 8, 56 I.C. 382.

Section 49 of the Registration Act does not make a document purporting to transfer immoveable property of less than Rs. 100 in value inadmissible in evidence. Such a document, although it does not confer title, is admissible for the collateral purpose of showing the nature of possession—Abdul v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 130, 61 C.L.J. 590, 161 I.C. 734; Dawal v. Dharma, 41 Bom. 550 (559). Where in a document for sale of an interest in immoveable property, it is stipulated that the transferee is to remove earth and sand from the transferor's land and level it before vacating, the stipulation is admissible as a collateral transaction not affecting the land—Kanji v. Shummugam, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 734 (735), 43 M.L.J. 577, 139 I.C. 510. See Note 289.

291. Possession versus registration:—A sale of immoveable property worth less than Rs. 100, under an unregistered instrument, but accompanied by delivery of possession, undoubtedly confers a good title on the purchaser (see above); but the question arises, whether such purchaser will be entitled to hold his title as against a subsequent purchaser of the same property under a registered instrument. Under sec. 50 of the Registration Act, all registered deeds take priority over unregistered deeds in respect of the same property, whether registration in respect of such property is compulsory or not; and since that section says nothing about possession, it was held in some cases that a purchaser under an unregistered instrument though he had obtained possession was liable to be defeated by a subsequent purchaser under a registered document (who had no notice of the prior sale)—Fuzluddin v. Fakir Mahomed, 5 Cal. 336; Bimaraz v. Papaya, 3 Mad. 46; Mareshwar v. Datta, 12 Bom. 569; Kondaya v. Guruvappa, 5 Mad. 139. In these cases, possession of the prior purchaser was held not to be equivalent to notice. In some other cases the High Courts have taken the more rational view that sec. 50 of the Registration Act must be read subject to the equitable doctrine of notice, although it has not been expressly mentioned therein, and that the possession of the prior purchaser must be taken as equivalent to notice, with the result that the subsequent purchaser under a registered deed will be defeated by the prior unregistered purchaser with possession—Nani Bibee v. Hafizullah, 10 Cal. 1073 (1075); Krishnamma v. Suranna, 16 Mad. 148 (F.B.); Dinonath v. Auluckmoni, 7 Cal. 753; Sharfuddin v. Govind, 27 Bom. 452; Dundaya v. Chanbasappa, 9 Bom. 427.

This conflict of opinion has now been removed by Explanation II (newly added by the Amendment Act of 1929) in the definition of 'notice' given in section 3. Under that Explanation, possession amounts to notice; consequently, the possession of the prior purchaser will avail as against a subsequent registered purchaser, on the equitable doctrine of notice. See Note 28 under sec. 3.

Where the prior purchaser acquires by a registered deed, and the property is subsequently sold to another by delivery of possession, the former takes the property and the latter gets nothing, since the vendor having already disposed of his right, title and interest to the first purchaser, there remains no residue for him to sell to the second vendee.

292. Delivery of possession:—Under para 4 of this section, if there is no registered deed, the sale must be effected by delivery of possession. Delivery of tangible immoveable property takes place when the seller places the buyer or such person as he directs, in possession of the property. The essence of the transfer is that possession is changed. What was in the occupation of the vendor ceases to continue in his occupation, by reason of the transfer, the possession being transferred to the vendee—Sibendrapada v. Secretary of State. 34 Cal. 207. But mere non-delivery of possession or stipulation to deliver possession at a later period does not prevent the sale from being complete—Hari Chand v. Gordhan Das, A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 238.

293. Delivery of possession may be actual or constructive :—In many cases actual physical delivery of property is impossible (as for instance, where the property sold is in the possession of tenants or lessees); in such cases delivery of title-deeds is sufficient—Man Bhari v. Naunidh, 4 All. 40; Kattayani v. Narayana, 9 Mad. 267. Where the land is in the occupation of tenants, a notice to them by the vendor to pay rents henceforth to the purchaser is sufficient constructive delivery of possession—Kattayani v. Narayana, supra. But where the property is capable of physical possession, there must be real delivery of the property; any sort of constructive possession is not sufficient—Sarju v. Tulsi, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 93, 91 I.C. 1018. Under this section there must be a real delivery of the property—Biswanath v. Chandra Narayan, 48 Cal. 509 (515) (P.C.). Mere recital of delivery of possession in the sale-deed is not sufficient—Nathu v. Gulab Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 13, 144 I.C. 919; Kaliram v. Dulal Ram, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 544, 142 I.C. 582. Where delivery of possession is not possible, the sale-deed must be registered—Ibid. In a recent Full Bench case the Bombay High Court has however held that the delivery of possession contemplated by this section is not constructive or symbolic, but actual or real delivery. Thus where a mortgagor sells the mortgaged property to a sub-mortgagee in possession, even assuming that the equity of redemption is a tangible immoveable property, the sub-mortgagee can acquire title only by a registered document—Bikhabhai v. Chimantal, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 437 (F.B.). The delivery of possession contemplated by this section must be in pursuance of a sale, which the vendee cannot prove as the unregistered sale-deed cannot be used as evidence—Tribhuban v. Sankar, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 431, 45 Bom. L.R. 866. Where both vendor and purchaser are residing jointly, the only way in which possession can be delivered is by change in the village records and by payment of rent being made in the name of the vendee—Sukaloo v. Punan, A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 176. Where a property subject to usufructuary mortgage is sold to the mortgagee, renunciation of rights by the vendor amounts to delivery of possession—Bhanwarlal v. Dhulilal, A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 218.

If, in consequence of the sale, the purchaser enters into possession, there is sufficient delivery of the property and it is unnecessary that there should be any formal making over of possession by the vendor—Gunga Narain v. Kalicharan, 22 Cal. 179; Ummar v. Vythilinga, 5 M.L.T. 263, 4 I.C. 1135. Where the vendee had been in possession of the property from before the date of sale, it was held in earlier Calcutta cases that there could be no formal delivery of possession, and therefore the sale must be effected by a registered instrument; otherwise it would be invalid—Tilak v. Rudeswar, 41 I.C. 8 (Cal.); Sibendrapada v. Secretary of State, 34 Cal. 207; Mrinalini v. Mohima, 6 I.C. 763 (following 34 Cal. 207). This view was followed in an Allahabad case—Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 All. 986 (F.B.), 26 A.I.J. 1084, 118 I.C. 177, A.I.R. 1928 All. 726 (728). The correctness of these decisions may be doubted. Their effect is to make registration compulsory in case of sale of property worth less than Rs. 100 to persons already in possession. This view has been dissented from in Sheikh Dawood v. Moideen, 48 M.L.J. 264, 87 I.C. 331, A.I.R.

1925 Mad. 566; Thakurdas v. Sobhagchand, 12 N.L.R. 3, 32 I.C. 233; Dinanath v. Manbadhi, 12 N.L.R. 139, 36 I.C. 547; Mokbul v. Kule Khan, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 756, 166 I.C. 751; Sonai v. Sonaram, 20 C.W.N. 195, Santokhi v. Siro Jha, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 301; Bhaskar v. Padman, 40 Bom. 313, Maung Mya v. Khine, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 497, 166 I.C. 267; Pheku v. Syed Ali, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 178, 15 Pat. 772, 167 I.C. 890; Ram Nath v. Gajadhar, 92 I.C. 478, A.I.R. 1926 All. 300; and Muthi Karuppan v. Muthusamban, 38 Mad. 1158 (1160), where it has been held that delivery means such delivery as the thing to be delivered is capable of, and that even where the purchaser is already in possession (e.g., as tenant or mortgagee) there can still be a formal delivery of possession within the meaning of this clause, if the vendor by appropriate acts and declarations converts the possession of the tenant or mortgagee into that of a purchaser. These rulings have now been followed by the Calcutta High Court (correcting its earlier view—Kulu Chandra v. Jogendra, 60 Cal. 384, 144 I.C. 155, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 411 (412)). And so, where property of value less than Rs. 100 which had been already mortgaged with possession was sold to the mortgagee, and possession was delivered by pointing out boundaries, by endorsing on the back of the mortgage-bond the fact of sale, and by handing it over to the mortgagee, these acts amounted to formal delivery of possession within the meaning of this section, and the sale was validly effected—Sonai Chutia v. Sonaram Chutia, 20 C.W.N. 195 (196), 34 I.C. 692; see also Ghanaram v. Paltoo, A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 109 (case of a tenant); Bihari Pradhan v. Daitari Dash, 25 Cut. L.T. 281. Where a property which is the subject of a usufructuary mortgage is sold to the mortgagee in discharge of the mortgage, a direction by the vendor to the vendee to keep the property as absolute owner amounts to delivery of possession—Sheikh Dawood v. Moideen Batcha Sahab, 48 M.L.J. 264, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 566, 87 I.C. 331. Where the mortgagor of usufructuary mortgage sold his equity of redemption to the vendee and as provided in the contract of sale the vendee paid off the mortgage and got possession, it was held that he got possession with the assent of the vendor which amounted to delivery of possession by the latter—Tukaram v. Atmaram, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 77, 40 Bom. L.R. 1192, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 31 (33). In such cases the mere existence of an unregistered instrument does not debar the purchaser from falling back upon his title by delivery of the property—Ghanaram v. Paltoo, supra.

In a case of sale of immoveable property worth not more than Rs. 100, by means of an unregistered sale-deed, it is not necessary that delivery of possession should be contemporaneous with the execution of the sale-deed, which will be valid even if the possession is delivered some time after its execution—Md. Yaqoob Ally v. Chhotey Lal, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 218, 179 I.C. 583; Bhulkoo v. Hereyabai, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 410, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 534.

294. Contract of sale—Contract creates no interest or charge:—The last para of this section lays down the principle of Indian law that title in property can be transferred only by a conveyance and not by mere agreement between parties—Raja Bhupendra v. Rajeswar, 32 C.W.N. 16 (25) 55, Cal. 35, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 956, 106 I.C. 117. This para makes a departure from the English law in that it declares that a contract of sale does not in itself create any interest in or charge on the property. Under the English law, the purchaser by virtue of the contract of sale becomes in equity the owner of the property from the date of the contract. See Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, (14th Ed), p. 186; Walsh v. Lonsdale, 21 Ch. D. 9. This principle of English law has no application to places where the Transfer of Property Act is in force—Maung Shwe v. Maung Inn, 44 Cal. 542 (P.C.), 21 C.W.N. 500, 38 I.C. 938; Dayabhai v. Maharaj Bahadur, 1 P.L.J. 238 (246), 34 I.C. 482; Jainarayan v. Balwant, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 35, (1938) N.L.J. 379; Narayanawami v. Lakshmi Narasimha, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 220, 1939 M.W.N. 98, 48 M.L.W. 959; Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 407 (F.B.); Maung Shwe v. Maung Dun, 44 I.A. 15, 44 Cal. 542. In the Punjab where the T. P. Act does not apply it has been observed in Jalaluddin v. Miran Baksh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 240 that an agreement for sale gives the purchaser an equitable title as owner of the property concerned, though it does not operate against a person who obtains a legal interest in the same property in good faith without notice of the equitable title. But see the later Full Bench decision of Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, supra, where it has been held that the purchaser under a contract for sale which has not yet been completed cannot claim any title as owner of the property whether as legal or equitable owner. (It should be noted that prior to the Transfer of Property Act a contract for the sale of immoveable property created an equitable interest in the land and made the purchaser the owner in equity. See Dinkarrao v. Narayan, 47 Bom. 191, at p. 215). A mortgaged his property to B and then sold it to C, who agreed to sell it to D. B brought a suit on his mortgage impleading C. D also filed a suit for the specific performance of the contract to sell against C and got the sale deed executed through court. But B was already in possession as an auction-purchaser. D brought a suit for possession, contending that he had acquired an interest akin to a charge on this property and that therefore he was a necessary party to the mortgage suit instituted by B. Held that suit was not maintainable because D acquired no interest in the property under the agreement of sale—Sankaram Vishnu v. Neelakanta Iyer, A.I.R. 1955 Tr-Co. 195.

In England the vendee under a contract of sale is described as an equitable owner. In India the law recognises no distinction between legal and equitable estates—Md. Saddiq v. Ghasi Ram, A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 322 (F.B.), 48 R.L.R. 505. According to the Indian law embodied in this section a contract of sale does not of itself create any interest in the property. To such a contract, as in other contracts, the doctrine of frustration applies—Satyabrata v. Mugniram Bangur & Co., A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 44. The essential idea upon which the doctrine of frustration is based is impossibility of performance of the contract. "In our opinion, having regard to the nature and terms of the contract, the actual existence of war conditions at the time when it was entered into, the extent of the work involved in the development scheme and last, though not the least, the total absence of any definite period of time agreed to by the parties within which the work was to be completed, it cannot be said that the requisition order (by the Government) vitally affected the contract or made its performance impossible"—ibid at p. 50 per B. K. Mukherjea, J.

There is a clear distinction between a contract which still remains to be performed and specific performance of which may be sought, and a conveyance by which title to property has actually passed. The former is governed by the Contract Act and the latter by the T. P. Act and so much of the Contract Act as is applicable thereto—Dip Narain v. Nageshwar, A.I.R. 1926 All. 1 (2) (F.B.), 52 All. 338, 122 I.C. 872. An agreement of sale does not vest any interest in the property and if a third party, say P, obtains an assignment of the property in question the party in whose favour the agreement has been executed has to seek specific performance; but he cannot challenge the right of P on the basis of his prior agreement and a subsequent sale in his favour by the vendor—Sivarama v. Thiruvadinatha, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 189. In a contract for sale of immoveable property an exclusively written record is not required by the law of this country. If an oral agreement or written memorandum is complete in itself obligation is fixed upon the parties, unless it is understood or intended that such contract shall not become operative until reduced in writing. In such a contract the substantial agreement between the parties upon the main features of the transaction, i.e., the sale, the identity of the property, the price, etc., does not necessarily create a concluded contract—Hyam v. Gubbay, 20 C.W.N. 66, 32 I.C. 53. Although the presumption is that in fixing the price regard was had on both sides to the quantity of land, yet there may be considerations which may rebut or weaken the presumption—Hussonally v. Tribhuban, 25 C.W.N. 385 (P.C.), 61 I.C. 361. Where an instrument is described as an agreement and is stamped as such and it clearly states that a deed of sale will be executed later on, the document is not a conveyance—Amroo v. Babarao, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 403, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 25. Payment of price and delivery of possession will not convey title until a registered conveyance is executed—Comr. of Income-tax v. Dhanomal, A.I.R. 1949 Sind 28, I.L.R. 1947 Kar. 240. Where a preliminary contract, though in writing, is afterwards reduced into a formal deed and there is any difference between them, the former is entirely governed by the deed—Kondal v. Dhanakoti, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 81, 46 M.L.W. 797. A deed should be construed as a whole. In the case of a conveyance for the purpose of carrying out a contract for sale, if the terms of sale-deed are clear they would override the contract. But if the terms of the latter are to be rejected, that part of it should be rejected which is inconsistent with the contract—Krishnaswamy v. Perumal, A.I.R. 1950 P.C. 105, 64 M.L.W. 1.

A document purporting to be a contract of sale which, after reciting the receipt of some earnest money, provided that within two months the vendor would execute a proper conveyance and thereupon receive the balance of the purchase-money and give up possession of the property sold, would not pass any right or interest to the purchaser but only give him a right against the vendor to call for a conveyance and possession on paying the balance of the purchase-money—Harmasji v. Keshav Parshotam, 18 Bom. 13; Mahadeo v. Vasudev, 23 Bom. 181. A mere agreement of sale under which a small portion of the purchase-money is paid, but which is not followed by delivery of possession or a registered sale-deed, does not convey any legal title to the purchaser, and therefore he can not convey any title to others even by a registered conveyance—Mg. Po. v. Mg. Tet, 2 Rang. 459 86 I.C. 205, A.I.R. 1925 Rang 68. When a mortgagee has contracted to sell the mortgage-debt to another person and the latter has paid some consideration, but the deed of sale has not been completed, no title passes to the intended transferee, and he cannot sue on the mortgage-bond. Nor does the vendor stand in the position of a benamidar for the intended transferee—Biswambar v. Nilambar, 33 C.W.N. 997 (999), A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 263, 125 I.C. 861; see also Comr. of Income-tax v. Dhanomal, supra. But if the contract of sale is followed by delivery of possession and payment of purchase-money, then, though there is no registered conveyance, the transaction is more than a mere contract, and the last para of sec. 54 cannot apply. In such a case the vendor cannot say that the vendee has obtained no interest in the property. Nor can the property be attached as the property of the vendor in execution of a decree against the vendor—Ram Baksh v. Mughlani, 26 All. 266 (269, 270); Karalia v. Manusukhram, 24 Bom. 400 (402).

An unregistered contract of sale is an agreement to sell and so gives rise to a right to enforce specific performance—Jainarayan v. Balwant, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 35, 1938 N.L.J. 379, 180 I.C. 963. The vendee's remedy in a contract of sale is a suit to enforce specific performance of the contract not only against the vendor but also against a transferee from the vendor with notice of the contract—Ramasami v. Chinman, 24 Mad. 449; Mahadeo v. Vasudev, 23 Bom. 181; Pancham Lal v. Kishore, 1887 A.W.N. 15; Gangaram v. Laxman, 40 Bom. 498. If the vendor dies without completing the contract for sale, the claim for specific performance can be enforced against his heir. If the vendor gives away the property to somebody else by a will, and then agrees to sell it but dies before completing the sale, the contract can be specifically enforced against the devisee—Gangaram v. Sakharam, 22 Bom. L.R. 1396, 59 I.C. 796. In such a suit for specific performance the purchaser can, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, easily discharge the onus about readiness and willingness by simply showing that he is still ready and willing to carry out the bargain—Brijmohan v. Chandrabhagabai, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 173, 1939 N.L.J. 315, 182 I.C. 12. Although the contract of sale can be enforced against a subsequent transferee with notice and perhaps against an attachment, the title relates back—Gendmal v. Laxman, A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 86, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 852. See also Varughese v. Lonan, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 467. See in this connection Appa Rao v. Veeranna, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 409, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 166. When the chairman of a Municipal Board passes an order directing sale of land belonging to the Municipality the order of the Chairman is not a sale but a contract of sale—Madanlal v. Municipal Board, 1968 Raj. L.W. 356.

There is a distinction between a contract to sell and a contract of sale. The former is an executory contract while the latter is an executed contract. Sale creates a jus in rem while a contract to sell is a jus ad rem. The postponement of the passing of title in a contract of sale does not convert it to a contract to sell—Sahadeo v. Kuiber Nath, A.I.R. 1950 All. 632, 1950 A.L.J. 467. The party who has contracted to purchase a proerty cannot sustain a claim for recovery of mense profits—Kochuvareed v. Mariappa, A.I.R. 1954 Tr. -Coch. 10. Where the property agreed to be sold is compulsorily acquired the purchaser suing for specific performance of the contract cannot claim compensation money lying with the collector under this section or under sec. 73 (2) post—Md. Abdul Jabbar v. Lal Mia, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 254, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 328.

The rule of English law not permitting a purchaser to recover damages for breach of a contract of sale relating to immoveable property is not applicable in India in view of the express provisions of sec. 73, Contract Act, which are comprehensive enough to apply to breaches of contract arising from sale of moveable as well as immoveable property. Refusal by the vendee to implement a contract of sale results in damages to the vendor, and in the case of immoveable property the damages are to be assessed on the footing of what the vendor would have got had the contract been carried out. The vendor is entitled to re-sell the property to re-imburse the loss caused to him by the breach, in accordance with the explanation to sec. 73, Contract Act, which applies to such cases—Motilal v. Jammadas, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 4 (7-8), 162 I.C. 944. Readiness and willingness to carry out his obligation is always a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover damages in respect of breach of one of two concurrent obligations. If it is proved that the purchaser was not in a position to pay the balance of the purchase-price, he cannot recover damages although the vendor may have committed breach. He is, however, entitled to recover the sum paid as a deposit or part of the price—Abdullah v. Tenenbaum, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 91 (92), 149 I.C. 816.

A contract of pre-emption creates no interest in immoveable property—Basdeo v. Jhugru, 46 All. 333 (338, 340); Dinkarrao v. Narayan, 47 Bom. 191 (204). Nor does a mere contract of sale give rise to a right of pre-emption; such right can arise only upon a completed sale—Tukaram v. Ukarda, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 327, 76 I.C. 374.

A contract for sale of immoveable property does not require to be registered, even though the value of the property or the amount of earnest money is Rs. 100 or upwards—Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 407 (F.B.). See the new Explanation to sec. 17, Registration Act, added by the Indian Registration Amendment Act, II of 1927, which supersedes the Privy Council decision in Dayal Singh v. Indar, 31 C.W.N. 125 (P.C.) 53 I.A. 214, 98 I.C. 508, A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 94.

295. Sale to minor :—The Madras High Court was once of opinion that the Privy Council decision of Mohari Bibi v. Dharmadas Ghosh, 30 Cal. 539, declaring contracts by minors void, applied also to sales of immoveable property to minors; and hence such sales were wholly void—Navakoti Narayana v. Loyalinga Chetty, 33 Mad. 312, 19 M.L.J. 752, 4 I.C. 383 (384). But this decision has been overruled by the Full Bench case of Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa, 40 Mad. 308 (313), where it has been held that the Privy Council decision in 30 Cal. 539 which was a case of transfer by a minor should not be applied to a transfer made in favour of a minor, and that a transfer of immoveable property may be made in favour of a minor by way of sale, mortgage or gift, just as a minor may inherit an immoveable property; and that there is no provision in the T. P. Act under which the minor is incapable of being a transferee of property. Section 7 which speaks of "persons competent to contract" applies to transferors and not to transferees. The Allahabad High Court taking the same view, likewise holds that a sale executed in favour of a minor is valid, and the minor is competent to sue for possession of the property conveyed thereby—Munni Kunwar v. Madan Gopal, 38 All. 62 (69), 13 A.L.J. 1084; Narain Das v. Dhanja, 38 All. 154 (160); Ulfat Rai v. Gouri, 33 All. 657. See also Muniya v. Perumal, 24 M.L.J. 352 (disapproving 33 Mad. 312); Gangai v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 544, 84 I.C. 626; Subba v. Guruva, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 425, 120 I.C. 77. But a minor cannot enforce a contract of sale of immoveable property entered into by his guardian on his behalf during his minority, as he is not bound by such a contract and consequently there is no mutuality—Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin, 39 Cal. 232 (P.C.).

296. Sale by Official Receiver :—A sale by an Official Receiver in Insolvency is not exempt from the provisions of this Act, and a duly registered conveyance by the Official Receiver is necessary to pass title to the auction-purchaser—Abdul Hashim v. Amiar Krishna, 46 Cal. 887, 53 I.C. 121; Kamsala v. Hussain Sab, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 55, 152 I.C. 988.

55. In the absence of a contract to the contrary; the Rights and liabilities of buyer and seller. buyer and the seller of immoveable property respectively are subject to the liabilities, and have the rights, mentioned in the rules next following, or such of them as are applicable to the property sold :

(1) The seller is bound—

- (a) to disclose to the buyer any material defect in the property or in the seller's title thereto of which the seller is, and the buyer is not, aware, and which the buyer could not with ordinary care discover ;
- (b) to produce to the buyer on his request for examination all documents of title relating to the property which are in the seller's possession or power ;
- (c) to answer to the best of his information all relevant questions put to him by the buyer in respect to the property or the title thereto ;
- (d) on payment or tender of the amount due in respect of the price, to execute a proper conveyance of the property when the buyer tenders it to him for execution at a proper time and place ;
- (e) between the date of the contract of sale and the delivery of the property, to take as much care of the property and all documents of title relating thereto which are in his possession as an owner of ordinary prudence would take of such property and documents ;

(f) to give, on being so required, the buyer, or such person as he directs, such possession of the property as its nature admits ;

(g) to pay all public charges and rent accrued due in respect of the property up to the date of the sale, the interest on all incumbrances on such property due on such date, and, except where the property is sold subject to incumbrances, to discharge all incumbrances on the property then existing.

(2) The seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same ;

Provided that, where the sale is made by a person in a fiduciary character, he shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the seller has done no act whereby the property is incumbered or whereby he is hindered from transferring it.

The benefit of the contract mentioned in this rule shall be annexed to, and shall go with, the interest of the transferee as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

(3) Where the whole of the purchase-money has been paid to the seller, he is also bound to deliver to the buyer all documents of title relating to the property which are in the seller's possession or power :

Provided that, (a) where the seller retains any part of the property comprised in such documents, he is entitled to retain them all, and, (b) where the whole of such property is sold to different buyers, the buyer of the lot of greatest value is entitled to such documents. But in case (a) the seller, and in case (b) the buyer of the lot of greatest value, is bound, upon every reasonable request by the buyer, or by any of the other buyers, as the case may be, and at the cost of the person making the request, to produce the said documents and furnish such true copies thereof or extracts therefrom as he may require ; and in the meantime, the seller, or the buyer of the lot of greatest value, as the case may be, shall keep the said documents safe, uncanceled and undefaced, unless prevented from so doing by fire or other inevitable accident.

(4) The seller is entitled—

- (a) to the rents and profits of the property till the ownership thereof passes to the buyer ;
 - (b) where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer before payment of the whole of the purchase-money, to a charge upon the property in the hands of the buyer, any transferee without consideration or any transferee with notice of the non-payment, for the amount of the purchase-money, or any part thereof remaining unpaid, and for interest on such amount or part from the date on which possession has been delivered.
- (5) The buyer is bound—
- (a) to disclose to the seller any fact as to the nature or extent of the seller's interest in the property of which the buyer is aware, but of which he has reason to believe that the seller is not aware, and which materially increases the value of such interest ;
 - (b) to pay or tender, at the time and place of completing the sale, the purchase-money to the seller or such person as he directs : provided that, where the property is sold free from incumbrances, the buyer may retain out of the purchase-money the amount of any incumbrances on the property existing at the date of the sale, and shall pay the amount so retained to the persons entitled thereto ;
 - (c) where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer, to bear any loss arising from the destruction, injury or decrease in value of the property not caused by the seller ;
 - (d) where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer, as between himself and the seller, to pay all public charges and rent which may become payable in respect of the property, the principal moneys due on any incumbrances subject to which the property is sold, and the interest thereon afterwards accruing due.
- (6) The buyer is entitled—
- (a) where the ownership of the property has passed to him, to the benefit of any improvement in, or increase in value of, the property, and to the rents and profits thereof ;
 - (b) unless he has improperly declined to accept delivery of the property, to a charge on the property, as against the seller and all persons claiming under him, * * * to the extent of the seller's interest in the property, for the amount of any purchase-money properly paid by the buyer in anticipation of the delivery and for interest on such amount; and, when he properly declines to accept the delivery, also for the earnest (if any) and for the costs (if any) awarded to him of a suit to compel specific performance of the contract or to obtain a decree for its rescission.

An omission to make such disclosures as are mentioned in this section, paragraph (1), clause (a), and paragraph (5), clause (a), is fraudulent.

Amendment :—In clause (1) (a) and clause (4) (b) the italicised words have been added, and in clause 6 (b) the words "with notice of the payment" have been omitted, by sec. 17 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act, XX of 1929. The reasons have been stated in proper places.

With regard to this expression "notice of payment" it has recently been held by the Judicial Committee that possession by tenants under a prior transferee from the seller is not notice of their lessor's title to a subsequent transferee and therefore not "notice of payment" within the meaning of clause (6) (b) as it stood before the amendment of 1929, unless the subsequent transferee had in fact learnt that the rents were paid to the prior transferee—M. M. R. M. Chettiar Firm v. S. R. M. S. L. Firm, 46 C.W.N. 57 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 47.

Scope :—In the absence of a statutory provision prohibiting transfer, the rights of parties to the sale of property held by the transferor on annual patta from Government are governed by the present Act—Jainur Ali v. Chafina Bibi A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 20, I.L.R. (1950) 2 Ass. 1.

297. Contract to the contrary :—The words "in the absence of any contract to the contrary" show that the operation of this section can be excluded by any contract or agreement or covenant between the vendor and the purchaser—Webb v. Macpherson, 31 Cal 57 (71, 72) (P.C.). Thus, where the vendee stipulates that he will pay the purchase-money before the registering officer, he will not be bound to pay the purchase-money at the time of completing the sale in accordance with clause (5) (b) of this section—Vythinatha v. Bheemachariar, 8 I.C. 804. So also, the duty of the vendor to produce his title-deeds for examination as provided in clause 1 (b) may be superseded by a stipulation between the parties dispensing with their production—Re Johnson and Tustin, 30 Ch. D. 42. The seller is bound under clause (2) of this section to give to his purchaser a title free from reasonable doubt. But the purchaser may relieve the vendor of this obligation by a special contract to the contrary and may choose to take such title as the vendor can give—Ghousiah Begum v. Rustamjah, 13 Mad. 158 (163).

But in order to enable the parties to evade the operation of this section it is necessary that the "contract to the contrary" must be indicated by clear and unambiguous expressions—Mahomed Ali v. Budharam, 39 M.L.J. 449, 60 I.C. 235 (236); Mahamud Mamura v. National Bank, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 512, (1944) 2 M.L.J., 264. "When a vendor sells property under stipulations which are against common right and place the purchaser in a position less advantageous than that in which he otherwise would be, it is incumbent on the vendor to express himself with reasonable clearness; if he uses expressions reasonably capable of misconstruction, if he uses ambiguous words, the purchaser may generally construe them in the manner most advantageous to himself"—per Knight Bruce, V.C. in Seaton v. Mapp, 2 Coll. 556 (562); followed in Motiahoo v. Vinayak, 12 Bom. 1 (17). Moreover, in order to evade the operation of this section, the contract must be contrary to (i.e., inconsistent with) its provisions. Thus, where a conveyance was made in consideration of a sum of money a portion of which was paid and the balance was expressed to be payable with interest in annual instalments, for which the purchaser executed an agreement, it was held that the agreement was not inconsistent with the creation of a charge under clause (4) (b), and that the vendor was entitled to a charge for the balance of purchase-money in spite of the agreement—Webb v. Macpherson, 31 Cal. 57 (72, 73) (P.C.). See also Notes under clause (2), infra.

The "contract to the contrary" need not be express and may be implied from the terms of the sale-deed. But in order to exclude the operation of the statutory liability of the vendor imposed by this section, the contract, covenant or agreement, must so clearly be inconsistent with the rules of this section as to lead to the inference that it has been made to qualify the generality of its provisions. Moreover, the contract will be construed favourably to the purchaser. Thus, where the vendors agreed that "if any partner or co-sharer of ours should arise and make a claim, and the whole or part of the property sold goes out of the possession of the vendor, the vendee will be entitled to recover the amounts from our persons and property of every kind", and the vendee was dispossessed by a reversioner of the widow from whom the vendor had purchased the property, held that the clause in the sale-deed was not exhaustive of the contingencies under which the vendee would be entitled to recover the sale-price, and the event which happened in this case entitled the vendee to a refund of the sale-consideration—Nand Ram v. Purshotam, 1933 A.L.J. 201, 145 I.C. 615, A.I.R. 1933 All. 203 (205).

In order that the "contract to the contrary" made by the parties should oust an implied contract contained in this section, the two contracts must relate to the same subject-matter—Balagurumurthy v. Nagulu Chetty, 41 M.L.J. 267, 69 I.C. 473.

298. Clause (1) (a)—Seller is bound to disclose material defects:—The seller is in duty bound to inform the purchaser of any material defect in the property of which the seller is, but the purchaser is not, cognizant, and which the purchaser could not have himself discovered. In other words, the law makes a distinction between latent and patent defects. Patent defects are those defects which may be discovered by ordinary vigilance on the part of the purchaser, and such defects need not be pointed out by the vendor. Thus, the existence of an open foot-path over the property—(Keats v. Earl of Cadogan, 10 C.B. 591; Ashburner v. Sewell, [1891] 3 Ch. 405) or the ruinous state of the buildings is an instance of patent defect which the purchaser might have found out by the exercise of ordinary diligence. But a vendor is bound to disclose all latent defects known to him, even though he may have stipulated to sell the property with faults—Schmider v. Heath, 3 Camp. 506. Latent defects are such as the greatest attention would not enable the purchaser to discover—Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, p. 333. A buyer is not bound to complete the sale if there are defects in the property or in the title which are material and also latent, that is, not discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care, or if the title is not free from reasonable doubt. A defect to be material must be of such a nature that if the buyer had been aware of it he might not have entered into the contract at all. The liability of property to be compulsorily acquired may fairly be said to amount to a material defect which is not capable of being discovered with ordinary care—Lallubhai v. Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 16, 59 Bom. 83, 155 I.C. 564. Where the seller knowingly made a representation in the sale-deed which was false and received consideration on the strength thereof, it was a case of fraudulent misrepresentation. The principle of caveat emptor did not apply in such a case, Varkkey v. Chacko, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 236. Where the non-disclosure amounts to fraud the plaintiff's remedy is a suit for rescission of the sale-deed and for return of the price under sec. 38, Specific Relief Act. He cannot ask for a return of the price before the sale is rescinded—Allahadino v. Udhoomal, A.I.R. 1942 Sind 81, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 32. But see Varkkey v. Chacko, supra.

The seller is bound to disclose only material defects, i.e., those defects which are of such a nature that it must be reasonably supposed that if the buyer had been aware of it he might not have entered into the contract—Flight v. Booth, (1834) 1 Bing. N.C. 370, 41 R.R. 599. But the seller is not bound to disclose defects of a trifling nature, e.g., the rottenness of some boards or joists or broken panes of glass—Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 7th Edn. p. 1082. The words "ordinary care" are however somewhat indefinite. A purchaser who wilfully departs from the usual course of business to avoid knowledge of his vendor's title is not allowed to get advantage from his wilful ignorance of defects, which he would have known if he had transacted the business in the ordinary way—Lallubhai v. Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 16, 59 Bom. 83, 155 I.C. 564. Assuming the existence of a town planning scheme in the area where the land sold is situate and there is a material defect in the seller's title on that account, he can discover it with ordinary care. Therefore sec. 55 (1) (a) cannot be invoked in such a case—Ahmed v. Gani, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 628, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 567.

According to the last para of this section, if the seller does not disclose to his buyer any material defect in the property of which he is aware and of which the buyer is not aware and which he could not discover with ordinary care, the omission is said to be fraudulent; but if the seller himself had no knowledge of the defect, the case does not fall within this section—Nursing Das v. Chuttoo Lal, 50 Cal. 615 (623), 74 I.C. 996, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 641. The duty to disclose is not affected by the fact that the buyer could have discovered the defect had he inspected the property—Ratanlal v. Nanabhai, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 175. Whether the sale is made by auction or by private treaty the purchaser is under no obligation to make enquiry as to defects in the vendor's title, but it is the duty of the vendor to disclose all that is necessary for his own protection—Sk. Moula Buksh v. Dharamchand Raniwala, 65 C.W.N. 881.

Defects in title:—The words 'material defects' include defects in title—Haji v. Dayabhai, 20 Bom. 522. This is now made clear by the addition of the words "or in the seller's title thereto". The Special Committee observes:—"Sub-clause (a) of clause (1) of section 55 provides that a seller is bound to disclose to the buyer any material defect in the property of which the seller is aware. The expression 'material defect in the property' has been held to include a defect in the title of the seller. (I.L.R. 20 Bom. 522). We propose to give effect to the decision by inserting the words 'or in the seller's title thereto' in sub-clause (1)." From practical point of view there is a distinction between a defect in the property and a defect in title—Ratanlal v. Nanabhai, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 175. The former only prejudices a purchaser in the physical enjoyment of the property while the latter exposes him to adverse claims. A buyer is not entitled to resile from a contract of sale when he enters into it with full knowledge of the limitations on his physical enjoyment of the property due to any physical defect in it—Motilal v. Jomnadas, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 4, 162 I.C. 944; Lallubhai v. Mohanlal, supra. So, where the vendee knew the boundaries and extent of the land, he is not entitled to damages on the ground of deficiency in area—Kondal v. Dhanakoti, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 81, 46 M.L.W. 797. An omission to disclose flaws in the title which the purchaser has no apparent means of discovering will be fraudulent under this section, and the vendee will be entitled to get a refund of the purchase-money—Haji Essa Sulleman v. Dayabhai, 20 Bom. 522 (529); Sheo Ram v. Thakur Mahto, 58 I.C. 529 (530) (Pat.); Mahomed Siddiq v. Li Kan, 4 Bur. L.J. 154, 92 I.C. 766, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 372 (373); Sheo Ram v. Thakur Mahto, 58 I.C. 529 (Pat.). "The same rule applies to incumbrance and defects in the title as to defects in the estate itself. The vendor is bound to deliver to the purchaser the instrument by which the incumbrances were created or on which the defects arise, or to acquaint him with the facts if they do not appear in the title-deeds. If a seller knows and conceals a fact material to the title, relief cannot be refused to the purchaser"—Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, (14th Ed.), p. 5 (cited in 20 Bom. 522, 529. The existence of a covenant in a sale-deed guaranteeing non-existence of incumbrances and its subsequent breach necessarily involves the vendor to indemnify the vendee. It is not legally necessary that there should be an express condition in the sale-deed to indemnify the purchaser in case any defect in his title is subsequently discovered—Imam Din v. Bhag Sing, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 746, 166 I.C. 302. Where there is a prior registered encumbrance non-disclosure is not fraudulent because the buyer could have known about it by enquiries—Ganpat v. Mangilal, A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 144; but see Sk. Moula Buksh v. Dharamchand Raniwala, 65 C.W.N. 881. Where several items of property are sold at one price and some of them are subsequently found to have been subject to a charge, the vendee is entitled to have the sale rescinded as regards these items only and to get damages—Paparao v. Polinaidu, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 205, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 323. Where the property sold by the tenant to his landlord is subsequently discovered to be subject to undisclosed mortgages, the landlord can renounce his character of purchaser and resume the old relationship of landlord and tenant—Bisweswar v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 328. But see Madan Mohan v. Jawala Prasad, A.I.R. 1950 E.P. 278, 52 P.L.R. 201, where it has been held that the existence of an incumbrance on the land sold is not a material defect—Sub-sec. (1) (a) of this section. Where the vendor concealed the existence of a decree for partition on the house conveyed, and the purchaser was ejected by a co-parcener of the vendor under the decree, held that the non-disclosure amounted to fraudulent concealment, and the vendor was bound to refund the purchase-money to the vendee—Gajapathi v. Alagia, 9 Mad. 89 (91). On a sale of a lease containing unusual and onerous covenants, it is the duty of the vendor, before the contract is made, to disclose the existence of the covenants to a purchaser ignorant of them. If he does not give the purchaser express notice of the covenants, he must show that he gave him such an opportunity of acquainting himself with the terms of the lease as he ought reasonably to have done—Molyneux v. Hawtrey, [1903] 2 K.B. 487; In re Hardwicke and Lipskin's Contract, [1902] 2 Ch. 666. Restrictive covenants in the nature of easements imposed on the property are material defects which it is the duty of the vendor to disclose to the vendee. His failure to do so will entitle the vendee to refuse to complete the sale—Lallubhai v. Mohanlal, supra. As to a right of preemption, see Mt. Ishra v. Nawbat, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 522 I.C. 120.

Where the vendee is perfectly aware of the defect in title or existence of an incumbrance, there is no duty on the part of the seller to inform the buyer of such defect or incumbrance. Therefore, where the vendee buys with full knowledge that the vendor has not got a good title, he cannot be said to have been defrauded by the vendor within the last clause of this section—Ramasubbu v. Muthiah, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 968 (969), 85 I.C. 999. Similarly, if defect in title is such that the purchaser could have discovered it if he had taken reasonable care to investigate the title, there is no duty cast on the vendor to disclose the defect; and the purchaser is not entitled to say that there has been a fraud on the part of the vendor in not informing him of the defect—Harilal v. Mulchand, 52 Bom. 883, 30 Bom. L.B. 1149, 113 I.C. 27, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 427 (429). Where a right of way once existed in the property agreed to be sold, but before the agreement was entered into, the right had been extinguished by operation of law, namely under the Town Planning Act on the reconstitution of plots, the seller had no duty to disclose anything as to the right of way—Ratanlal v. Nanabhai, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 175.

299. Remedy of purchaser :—The law is now well-settled that where the purchaser discovers defects in the property before conveyance, he can rescind the contract or successfully oppose a suit for specific performance (Reeve v. Berridge, 20 Q.B.D. 523); but if the purchaser discovers material defects after the conveyance, he must make out a case of fraud in order to set aside a sale (Brawnlie v. Campbell, 5 App. Cas. 937)—Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. Ltd. v. Fazlul Karim, 52 Cal. 914, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 385 (389), 90 I.C. 851. If as a result of agreement between the holder of a money-decree and the judgment debtor the property of the latter is put up to sale by public auction and a prior registered assignment is not disclosed in the notification and conditions of sale the auction purchaser is entitled to repudiate the agreement and claim refund of the purchase money deposited from the actioner—Sk. Moula Buksh v. Dharamchand, Ranivala, 65 C.W.N. 881. If a certain property is allotted to a co-sharer on partition together with the debts of the joint family and the co-sharer agrees to sell that property receiving a part of the price in advance the vendee may ask for the refund of the amount paid in advance not on the ground that the title is defective but on the ground that the sale is liable to be avoided on the ground of fraud by the creditors under sec. 53—Meenakshi Ammal v. A. Munuswami, I.L.R. (1966) 1Mad. 114.

In the case of an executed contract where property has been conveyed and the purchase-money paid, the purchaser has only a limited right to claim compensation from his vendor. He may sue when there is a breach of covenant of title or warranty or when the deed contains an express condition for compensation for any defect. But where his claim is based on misrepresentation, pure and simple, such misrepresentation must be fraudulent—Parmanand v. Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 144, 144 I.C. 37. Where there is no allegation that the parties had agreed that compensation would be paid for shortage of area and the plaintiff's case is that he was to pay for the actual area ascertained then, and if he fails to do so, he can only succeed on proof that the failure was due to the fraudulent conduct of the defendant—Ibid. A mere mis-statement of the area is not to be regarded as anything more than a false demonstration. If the space to be conveyed is precisely defined by boundaries, the statement of its measurement may be treated as surplusage and of no consequence—Leon v. Maung, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 24, 142 I.C. 12. See also Durga Prasad v. Rajendra, 41 Cal. 493, 40 I.A. 223.

Under the concluding words of this section, an omission to make the disclosure under clause (1) (a) is fraudulent. Prima facie, therefore, such an omission may also be a "fraud" as defined by sec. 17 (5) of the Indian Contract Act, and so render the contract voidable at the option of the purchaser under sec. 19, or else a purchaser may sue for rescission under sec. 35 of the Specific Relief Act—Bai Dasibai v. Bai Dhanbai, 49 Bom. 325, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 85 (87), 85 I.C. 597—Champalal v. Roopa, A.I.R. 1963 Raj 38. The onus of proving that non-disclosure is fraudulent lies on the purchaser—Sachidanand Patnaick v. G. P. & Co., A.I.R. 1964 Orissa 269.

300. Misdescription :—If the misdescription is not of sufficient importance, and does not go to the essence of the contract, the sale will not be annulled but compensation will be given to the purchaser. "In each case the question depends upon the view of the Court as to the importance of the misdescription"—Fawcett v. Holes, (1889) L.R. 42 Ch.

D. 150. Thus, a parcel of property was sold 'with a cook-room attached to it', but no such cook-room was in fact attached to the property; the purchaser applied for rescission of the sale. Held that the absence of the cook-room was not very material because there was enough space on which a cook-room could be built, it did not go to the very essence of the contract so as to warrant the Court in saying that the sale ought to be annulled; an adequate compensation was a sufficient remedy—Administrator-General v. Aghore Nath, 29 Cal. 420 (426). Where the sale-deed recited that some of the lands sold had been given for cultivation to tenants for one year, but on completion of the sale it was found that the tenants were permanent tenants of the land, held that there was an error or misdescription as to the quality of the interest transferred, for which the purchaser was entitled to claim damages without rescinding the sale—Viswanath v. Bala, 18 Bom. L.R. 292, 34 I.C. 147 (148). But where the misdescription goes to the essence of the contract and materially alters the substance of it, i.e. where the misdescription, although not proceeding from fraud, is so material that it may reasonably be supposed that but for such misdescription the purchaser would have never entered into the contract at all, in such a case the contract will be avoided altogether, and the purchaser is not bound to resort to the remedy of compensation—Flight v. Booth, 1 Bing N.C. 440, 41 RR. 599; In re Puckett and Smith's Contract, [1902] 2 Ch. 258, Ramayya v. Komarappa, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 814, 70 M.L.J. 719, 163 I.C. 704. Where the vendor did not guarantee the area of the property as stated in the sale-deed, nor did he make any representation in respect thereof as would amount to an assurance, but designedly or undesignedly left the vendee under an impression that the deficiency in area, if any, would not be great, and the vendee remained content with it and did not take steps to have a measurement made, held that the vendee was not entitled to any damages or to a conveyance of more land in case the actual area of the plots sold was found to be less than that given in the sale-deed—Hassonally v. Tribhovan Das, 25 C.W.N. 385 (397) (P.C.), 61 I.C. 361, A.I.R. 1921 P.C. 40.

A misdescription should be distinguished from mere laudatory expressions and puffing advertisements, such as where a house of mean character is described as a "desirable residence for a family of distinction" or a land imperfectly watered is described as "uncommonly rich water-meadow land"; such expressions, though objectionable from the point of view of honesty, will not render the contract voidable by the purchaser, because their exaggerative character is obvious from the very nature of the language used. See Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, p. 110. If the purchaser is aware that the vendor's laudatory statements are false, and yet enters into a contract, the rule of caveat emptor will apply, as for instance in a case where a coal-mine was stated to be "standing on a fine vein of coal" but the purchaser knew that it had been worked and was almost exhausted—Colby v. Godsden, 34 Bing. 416.

301. Cl. (1) (b)—Vendor is bound to produce documents of title:—Clause (1) (b) imposes upon the vendor the duty of producing his title deeds for inspection by the purchaser at his request. "As to incumbrances and defects in title, a vendor must produce to the purchaser all such documents of title, in his possession or power, as are necessary, an must inform him of all material defects not apparent thereon."—Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, p. 195 (cited in 20 Bom. 522, 530). "A prudent purchaser will enquire for the title-deeds, demand a satisfactory explanation if any of them are not forthcoming. His omission to make such an enquiry may fix him with notice of an equitable mortgage by deposit"—Dart, p. 520; Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Y & C. 303. Thus, where in reply to inquiries by a purchaser the vendor said that the title was unincumbered and the title-deeds were at his bankers' for safe custody, and the question was allowed to drop, the purchaser was held to have constructive notice of an equitable mortgage secured by deposit of the title-deeds—Maxfield v. Burton, L.R. 17 Eq. 15.

Under this clause, the vendor is bound to produce his documents of title for examination by the buyer only when the latter asks for them. Note the words 'at his request'. Where the purchaser never asked for the title-deeds, the fact that the vendor did not produce them would not justify the purchaser in repudiating the contract—Maung Po Te v. Maung Shwe, 10 Bur. L.T. 35, 35 I.C. 373 (374). Where the agreement for sale was entered into on 24th January 1947 and the sale was to be completed by 23rd May following, but no request was made by the buyer to examine the documents of title till 16th May, 1947, it was held that the buyer must be regarded to have accepted the seller's title before he made the request—Bawa Sunder Singh v. Hans Raj, A.I.R. 1953 Punj 231. The seller is not bound to produce the title deeds at the office of the buyer's lawyer—Ibid. When the title-deeds are in the possession of a co-sharer, the other co-sharers and their vendees have a right to enforce production of the title-deeds for inspection by that co-sharer—Sm. Labanya Ray v. Phanindra Mohon Mukherjee, 68 C.W.N. 611.

The words "possession and power" indicate that the vendor is bound to produce not only the deeds in his possession, but also those which he can produce, and the mere fact that the procuring of those documents will cause the vendor trouble and expense is no answer to the purchaser's demand. But his liability is confined to the production only of those documents which affirmatively evidence the vendor's title, and does not extend to those which are merely required to negative some possibilities. See Dart, p. 627. Sub-sec. (1) (b) of this section does not however enable the vendee to require production of the documents not in the possession or power of the vendor or to claim expenses for making a search for them in the collector's or the Registrar's office and for obtaining copies thereof—Rathna Bai v. Mrs. Barrass, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 593, (1943) 1 M.L.J. 461.

If the vendor fails to produce documents to show at least a marketable title, the purchaser is entitled to refuse to complete the sale, and the vendor is bound to return to the purchaser his deposit with interest at the usual rate—Shrinibasa v. Meherbai, 41 Bom. 300 (311) (P.C.); Bishan Das v. Fazal Ilahi, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 8, 167 I.C. 858. Where an agreement for sale provides that the vendor shall forthwith deliver the title deeds for inspection the word 'forthwith' means with all reasonable celerity' and the vendor is not required to deliver without any request from the purchaser—Jitendra Nath Roy v. Maheshwari Bose, A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 45.

While the vendor is liable to produce his title-deeds for inspection by the purchaser or any one on his behalf, he is not bound to deliver them to him before the completion of the sale—Sugden's Vendor's and Purchasers, p. 29. These must be delivered after payment of purchase-money; see clause (3) of this section.

In India, the seller is not bound to deliver an abstract of title; his only obligation is to produce his documents of title for examination by the buyer, if the latter so requests—Jyoti Prosad v. H. V. Low & Co., 34 C.W.N. 347 (351), A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 561. It has been held by the Bombay High Court that the purchaser must in the first instance bear the cost of obtaining certified copies of all orders and consent decrees, asked for in his requisition—Shamsuddin v. Dayabhai, 48 Bom. 368.

Clause (1) (b) however, is not exhaustive, because it does not state where the deeds are to be produced, at whose expense, and how far is their non-production vital to the contract—Gour's Law of Transfer, 6th Edn. Vol. I. p. 723.

302. Cl. (1) (c) Vendor is bound to answer material questions :— Under clause (1) (c) the vendor is bound to answer to the best of his information all relevant questions put to him by the purchaser in respect of the property; and the purchaser's omission to ask questions will not relieve the vendor of his liability to disclose material defects in the property—Heywood v. Mallalien, 25 Ch. D. 357; Dart p. 167.

The questions asked by the purchaser must be relevant i.e., specific and direct, and not too general or vague. Thus, where the purchaser made the following requisition:—"Is there to the knowledge of the vendors or their solicitors any settlement, deed, fact, omission or any incumbrance affecting the property not disclosed by the abstract?" It was held that neither the vendors nor their solicitors were bound to answer such a general question—In re Ford and Hill, 10 Ch. D. 365. Any information regarding the income or the rental of the property is a relevant question, which it is the duty of the seller to answer. If he gives an answer which is false, he is guilty of a breach of duty and misrepresentation. Further, if he volunteers any information about the income, he is certainly bound to give true information—Prem Chand v. Ram Sahai, 28 N.L.R. 184, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 148, 140 I.C. 209. The duty of the seller is not only to answer requisitions but also to point out a material defect of which he is aware and of which the buyer is not aware—Ratanlal Acharatlalshet v. Nanabhai Miyabhai, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 175.

Abstract of title :—Where the sale was, under the condition which required the party to deliver to the purchaser an abstract of the title, subject to the further stipulation that the purchaser would, within a specified period after the delivery of the abstract, deliver at a particular place specified therein a statement in writing of his objections and requisitions, if any, to or on the title as deduced by such abstract, and upon the expiration of such last mentioned time (essence of the contract) title was to be considered as approved, subject only to such objections and requisitions if any; held that the time within which the purchaser was to deliver his statement if there were objections and requisitions, was to date from the delivery of a perfect abstract which meant an abstract that contained with sufficient fulness the effect of every instrument which constituted the vendor's title and contained all facts, e.g. as the death of the father, where the title has to be shown to have devolved upon the son—Nilmoney v. Dhirendra, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 428, 57 Cal. 1115, 126 I.C. 705. The stipulation was not to be used to thrust upon the purchaser a property to which there was no title at all and even if the abstract be perfect, the stipulation could not debar the purchaser from enquiring into the title or from making an objection to it, if such an objection goes to the very root of the title—Ibid., at p. 430.

It is the duty of the vendor to make out his title. Even where a vendor has under the contract an express power of rescission if requisitions are made, which he is unwilling to comply with, yet that power does not enable him to override reasonable requisitions—R. G. Lakshmidas & Co. v. Sir Dorab Tata, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 195, 51 Bom. 247, 101 I.C. 229.

303. Cl. (1) (d) Preparation of conveyance :—Under clause (1) (d), it is the duty of the purchaser and not of the vendor, to prepare the conveyance—Kapadbhanj Municipality v. Ochavla, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 328 (330), 30 Bom L.R. 920, 113 I.C. 161; Dinkar Rai v. Ayub, A.I.R. 1023 Nag. 37 (39). Upon a sale in consideration of a gross sum, the purchaser having accepted the title is bound, subject to any special stipulation in the contract, to prepare the conveyance and tender it for execution to the vendor—Dart, p. 570. The execution of the conveyance by the vendor and the payment of the price by the purchaser being presumed in law to take place simultaneously, if the vendor beforehand signifies his refusal to execute the conveyance, the purchaser need not tender the purchase-money or a draft of the conveyance—Essaji v. Bhimji, 4 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 125.

It is the duty of the purchaser to tender a conveyance to the vendor for execution, and until such tender is made by the purchaser or waived by the vendor, the purchaser has no right to obtain the title-deeds—Ma Huit v. Moung Po Pu, 31 C.L.J. 87 (P.C.), 55 I.C. 791 (792), A.I.R. 1919 P.C. 124. But where the vendor agrees to make the conveyance, the vendee is under no duty to tender to the vendor a draft conveyance—Probodh Kumar v. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co., A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 699, 152 I.C. 571. Under this clause, it is the duty of the vendor to execute and deliver a valid conveyance to the purchaser, and if for any reason he executes an invalid or ineffective conveyance, he has no answer to a suit for specific performance of the agreement to sell and for the execution of a legal and binding sale-deed—Santhayi v. Mahomed, 11 L.B.R. 94, 65 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 16.

304. Cl. (1) (e)—“Take care of the property” :—“The vendor is pro tanto a trustee in possession although he holds the purchaser at arm's length, and, as a trustee, is bound to do those things which he would be bound to do if he were a trustee for any other person”—per Lord Selborne in Phillips v. Silvester, L.R. 8 Ch. 173 (177). Cf. section 15 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882). He is bound to protect the property from injury or wrongful occupation by trespassers. If he fails in his duty in this respect, he will be liable to pay compensation to the purchaser—Sashi Bhusan v. Rai Chand, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 333. For an application of the principle of this clause in auction sale see Royal B. P. B. Society v. Bomash, 31 Ch. D. 390. The obligations begin to arise as soon as the purchaser has paid the purchase-money, though he has got no conveyance; and even when instead of paying the whole of his purchase-money, he pays a part of it, it would seem to follow as a necessary corollary that to the extent to which he has paid the money, the vendor is a trustee for him—per Lord Cranworth in Rose v. Watson, 10 H.L.C. 672 (683). And since he is a trustee, he would be liable for damages as if on a breach of trust, if he is guilty of waste or other misfeasance—Clarke v. Ramuz, (1891) 2 Q.B. 456. The position of the vendor in this respect has also been held to be analogous to that of a mortgagee in possession—Phillips v. Silvester, L.R. 8 Ch. 173. In the case of an agreement to sell a tenanted premises the vendor commits a breach of duty under sec. 55 (1) (e) if he relets a part of the premises falling vacant without consulting the vendee—Mohd. Hazi Abdulla v. Ghela Manek Shah, (1959) 2 W.L.R. 12.

305. Cl. (1) (f)—Delivery of possession :—In every contract of sale, unless the contrary appears, the vendor must be deemed to impliedly agree to give possession of the property to the purchaser, in addition to executing a conveyance in his favour—Surendra Ramanujan v. Sicalingam, 47 Mad. 150, 45 M.L.J. 431, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 360, 77 I.C. 542. Under clause (1) (f), the obligation is upon the vendor to give the vendee possession, and not upon the latter to get possession for himself, especially when any difficulty arises in identifying the particular land sold. It is the duty of the vendor to ascertain the subject-matter of sale—Darpan Koer v. Kedar Nath, 1 P.L.J. 140, 35 I.C. 539. Where the condition in the sale-deed was inter alia that the vendor would not be liable if any defect in title was found subsequently and that if the vendee did not get possession, he should himself take steps to do so and the vendor would help him; but it was found that at the time of the sale the vendor did not have possession and he had lost all right to obtain possession, it was held that the above clauses did not exonerate the vendor from the statutory liability under this clause—Barisal Loan Office v. Satish, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 12, 40 C.W.N. 19, 160 I.C. 407.

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the vendor is liable to give up possession immediately after the execution of the sale-deed—Sri Ram v. Kidari, 6 Lah. 308, 88 I.C. 743, 26 P.L.R. 488, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 481. But the vendor is not bound to put the purchaser in possession before the conveyance is executed—Kapadvanj Municipality v. Ochhavlal, 30 Bom. L.R. 920, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 328 (330), 113 I.C. 161; nor can the purchaser insist on getting possession before the terms of the conveyance have been agreed upon and before actual execution of the conveyance—Ibid.

The vendor is bound to give such possession of the property as its nature admits, i.e., such possession as is capable of being taken. The word "possession" is a flexible one, and when the property is stated to be in the occupation of tenants subject to whose tenancy the purchaser buys, the nature of the contract shows that possession means possession as landlord—Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, p. 8; Venkata Suraya-subba Rao v. Vasudeva, A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 113; Visvanatha Iyer v. Muhammad Kunju, 1964 Ker. L.J. 12. If the property is already mortgaged with possession to a usufructuary mortgagee, the purchaser will get such possession as the vendor had, viz., proprietary possession—Mumtazunnessa v. Bhagirath, 6 I.C. 114. The presence of tenants or trespassers in the property does not affect the nature of the property as the expression "its nature" in this clause mean an incident which is inherent in the property—Sashi Bhusan v. Rai Chand, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 333.

Where the property sold is the coparcenary interest of a Hindu member of a joint family, specific possession cannot be given unless the other members of the family are parties to the suit—Abdul Aziz v. Ajudhia, 15 C.P.L.R. 156; Rewa Singh v. Hardayal, 3 N.L.R. 160. See also sec. 44.

See also Note 292 in sec. 54 under heading "Delivery of possession."

Where the parties agree that possession in a particular way should be given, the agreement will be enforced; and possession given in any other way will not satisfy the requirements of law. Thus, if the purchaser of a house wants actual possession thereof, a constructive possession will not avail, and the purchaser is entitled to repudiate the contract—Phillips v. Caldecleugh, L.R. 4 Q.B. 159; Hyam v. Gubbay, 20 C.W.N. 66.

The non-payment of purchase-money does not prevent the ownership from passing from the vendor to the purchaser, and the latter, notwithstanding such non-payment, can maintain a suit for possession. For cases see Note 281 in sec. 54, under heading "Non-payment of price." In such a case the purchaser is entitled to an unconditional decree for possession and the seller is to bring a suit for recovery of the unpaid purchase-money—Ramayya v. Soma Ayyar, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 92, I.L.R. 1947 Mad. 397. But see Peary Lal v. Hub Lal, A.I.R. 1945 All. 135, I.L.R. 1945 All. 183, where it has been held that in such a case the purchaser can be put to terms by the decree, as the provisions of this section do not exclude the application of the principles of equity. If the vendor fails to give possession, the purchaser is entitled to rescind the contract and to recover the purchase-money if already paid—Vuddondam v. Venkatakeswara, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 470, (1950) 2 M.L.J. 807. But if in the conveyance the vendor expressly stipulates that he would not be liable to the purchaser if the latter fails to get possession by reason of the act of anybody other than the vendor, held that the purchaser, on his failure to get possession of the land, owing to the act of a third party, would not be entitled to a refund of the purchase-money—Indra Narain v. Badan Chandra, 47 I.C. 340 (Cal.).

The provisions of this clause do not give the vendee a right to obtain from the vendor any expenses which he may have incurred subsequent to the sale in obtaining possession of the property. If he decides, on being resisted in obtaining possession, to establish his right himself, then that is a matter with which the vendor has no concern.

If he wishes to rely upon the covenant granted to him by the statute, then he can enforce his rights only by a suit against the vendor for specific performance or for damages—U Mya v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 81, 167 I.C. 84.

Under this clause the vendor is bound to give possession to "the buyer or such person as he directs." Therefore a suit for specific performance of the contract and for possession to such person can be brought by the buyer along with such person—Sashi Bhusan v. Rai Chand, supra.

Growing crops :—The right to growing crops passes on the sale of land in the absence of anything to the contrary and in case of Court-sale the right accrues from the date of the delivery of possession of the land—Supdt. & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. Bhagirath, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 810, 61 Cal. 991, 38 C.W.N. 854, 59 C.L.J. 482.

305A. Cl. (1) (g) :—The seller imposes upon himself the obligation mentioned in this clause. The fact that the trustees of the property and not the seller were to be the conveying parties does not affect this obligation. The meaning of the word "seller" cannot be limited in that way—Govindram v. State of Gondal, A.I.R. 1950 P.C. 99, 54 C.W.N. 419, 77 I.A. 156, 52 Bom. L.R. 450. The terms of the contract of sale may operate to substitute the date of possession for the date of sale. Mere use of the word 'net' in the price in the contract may be sufficient to exclude the application of this clause—ibid.

306. Payment of public charges, rents :—An agricultural loan by the Government is not a public charge any more than it is a public debt. But it may be an incumbrance by statute or contract and then it is the duty of the vendor to discharge it—Duntuluri v. Kunjuluri, 9 M.L.T. 108, 8 I.C. 435. A tax levied by the Municipality under the Local Acts must be paid according to the terms of those Acts. Thus, a house-tax levied under the Madras District Municipalities Act is a yearly tax, though payable in two half-yearly instalments, and the whole year's tax will be levied from the purchaser, though the second half-yearly instalment only became due after he purchased the house—Chairman, Municipal Council v. Kottamma, 30 Mad. 423.

Where leasehold property is sold, the vendor is bound to pay the rent which had accrued due, up to the date of sale, not only during the tenancy of the vendor but also during the tenancy of person through whom he claimed otherwise than by purchase—Phul Kuer v. Rambhanjan, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 822, 75 I.C. 975.

307. Discharge of incumbrances :—One of the duties of the vendor is to discharge amongst other things all incumbrances on the property existing at the date of the sale, except where the property is sold subject to incumbrances—Munirunnissa v. Akbar Khan, 30 All. 172; Har Charan v. Nurul Hassan, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 492, 152 I.C. 221. The word "incumbrances" is of sufficient amplitude to include also a recurring liability like maintenance allowance—Ibid, at p. 493. Where the vendor fails to discharge the incumbrance the vendee is entitled to a refund of the purchase price as damages—Ganpat v. Mangilal, A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra.

144. The owners of certain immoveable property, which was under a mortgage, entered into a contract for the sale of the property but subsequently declined to complete the sale on the ground that the property had already been mortgaged and that the mortgagees refused to release the property. On a suit by the vendee for breach of the contract of sale, the vendors were bound to convey the property free from the incumbrances, and the existence of the mortgage was no defence to the purchaser's action—Nabin Chandra v. Krishnabarana, 38 Cal. 458.

There is no presumption under the clause that encumbered property is sold free from encumbrances. Where the buyer is to discharge the encumbrances, the case will be governed by an express "contract to the contrary"—Parshotam v. Taimur Ali, A.I.R. 1945 All. 39, 1944 A.L.J. 454. Where the vendor has contracted to sell the property free from incumbrances, but due to non-payment of interest by the vendor the mortgage dues have greatly increased, he cannot take advantage of the hardship created by himself—Arun v. Tulsi, A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 510. Where the property is agreed to be sold free from incumbrances, the seller is bound to give vacant possession of the property, even if it be in the occupation of trespassers, as such an occupation is an "incumbrance"—Sashi Bhusan v. Rai Chand, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 333.

If expenses for construction of development works under agreement with the Improvement Trust are to be incumbrances on the property, the owner thereof is bound to discharge them before he sells the land, unless there is an agreement to the contrary with the purchaser—S. K. Buty v. Shriram, A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 65. The purchaser is not bound to pay the municipal taxes paid by the seller for a period prior to the date of sale—ibid.

Where the vendor leaves the purchase-money with the purchaser for payment to his creditors, the amount so left cannot be said to be transferred in trust to the vendee in the legal sense of the expression, but it is a mere direction to pay the amount to the creditor on behalf of the vendor within a reasonable time; and when the amount is not so paid, the vendor is entitled to recover it as a debt as he has a lien on the property for the unpaid balance—Gujar Mal v. Paras Ram, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 608, 172 I.C. 438; Sheopati v. Jagdeo, A.I.R. 1931 All. 95; Gajadhar v. Rishab Kumar, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 319, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 122. A vendor sold his property to the vendee for a certain amount out of which a certain sum was to be left with the vendee for paying off Zarpeshgidar of the vendor. The pre-emptor obtained a pre-emption decree in his suit against the vendee on condition of his depositing the purchase-money. The vendee withdrew the whole amount as he was entitled under the pre-emption decree, but had not paid the Zarpeshgi money. The pre-emptor thereupon brought a suit for possession from the Zarpeshgidar and in the alternative prayed for a decree against the vendee for the Zarpeshgi money in order to pay it off to Zarpeshgidar and obtain possession from him: Held (i) that the vendee could not be regarded as a trustee of the pre-emptor; (ii) that as the vendee had never entered into any contract with the pre-emptor to pay the money to the Zarpeshgidar, the vendee was under no obligation to pay to the pre-emptor the amount which he had not paid to the Zarpeshgidar and (iii) that the pre-emptor after becoming aware of the fact that the Zarpeshgidar had not been paid off could and should have obtained a suitable relief in respect of it in the pre-emption suit—Sital v. Ramsaran, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 594, 16 Pat. 360, 171 I.C. 720. Where a purchaser agrees to pay off a prior mortgage out of the sale consideration left with him, whether the payment by the purchaser is in the capacity of the mortgagor's agent depends upon circumstances—Taibai v. Wasudeorao, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 372 (375) (F.B.), 172 I.C. 142.

Where the vendor leaves a part of the purchase money with the purchaser, if there is any unexpended balance in the hands of the latter as a result of statutory reduction of the debt by scaling down thereof, the vendor is entitled to the same—Subba Row v. Varadaiah, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 482, I.L.R. 1943 Mad. 885; Pachigolla v. Karatam, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 525, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 506; Kailash v. Joti A.I.R. 1948 All. 307, 1948 A.L.J. 103. But the vendor will not be entitled to demand a refund of the balance amount when the vendee had actually paid more than the amount deposited—Radhakrishna v. Subramania, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 370, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 198. See also Veerabhadrayya v. Subbarayadu, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 650, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 154. It has been held in Punjab that the vendor is not entitled to participate in the benefits which the vendee might obtain by non-payment—Narain v. Bachan, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 110, I.L.R. 1952 Punj. 219.

When a portion of the purchase money is retained by the vendee to pay off incumbrances, the latter acts as an agent of the vendor, only that the agency is not revocable as it is coupled with an interest—Subba Row v. Varadaiah, supra.

Clause (1) (g) clearly means what it says, viz., that there must be a provision in the sale-deed that the property is sold subject to incumbrances, and if that provision is not specifically set out in the sale-deed, then the vendor will be liable for all prior incumbrances. This clause cannot be interpreted to mean that the vendor is only liable if he stated in the sale-deed that he sold the property free from incumbrances—Jugal Kishore v. Banwari, 51 All. 1053 119 I.C. 1, A.I.R. 1929 All. 791; Alagappa v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 287, 14 Rang. 766, 170 I.C. 484.

The mere fact that the vendee was aware of the existence of an incumbrance does not relieve the vendor of the statutory liability to get the incumbrance discharged in the absence of a contract to the contrary—Podapati v. Manduva, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 193, 98 I.C. 450. In such a case if the mortgagee institutes a suit on his mortgage impleading both the vendor and the vendee gets a decree and the properties are sold, the vendee would be entitled to damages, a suit for which would not be barred by res judicata—Gobardhan v. Afzal, A.I.R. 1932 All. 553, 138 I.C. 495. But where in such a mortgage suit it was found that the vendees were negligent in their defence and did not raise proper pleas available to them and that there was really no cloud on the title of the vendors and the vendees unnecessarily paid an exorbitant sum to the mortgagees without even consulting the vendors, the vendees were not entitled to recover the amount so paid—Sethi Lookmanji v. Mangal Sain, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 743.

Even in those provinces (e.g., Berar) to which the T. P. Act did not apply, a covenant for quiet enjoyment and freedom from incumbrances should independently of this Act, be held to be implied in a sale, in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. Consequently, the vendor was bound to reimburse the purchaser for the payment made by the latter to discharge the incumbrances created by the vendor and not disclosed in the conveyance—Keshrimal v. Kadhai, 55 I.C. 152 (153) (Nag).

If the vendor does not discharge the incumbrances, the vendee is entitled under clause (5) (b) to retain out of the purchase-money the amount of the incumbrances, and to pay the amount to the persons entitled thereto—Naina v. Basant, A.I.R. 1934 All 406, (1934) A.L.J. 318 (F. B.).

If the vendor professes to sell unencumbered property, but the property is found to be mortgaged, the vendee may, before completing the contract of sale, compel the vendor to redeem the mortgage and to obtain a re-conveyance from the mortgagee. See sec. 18 (c) Specific Relief Act. If the incumbrance is discovered after payment of the purchase-money, the vendee can redeem the mortgage by paying the mortgage-money himself and can file a suit against the vendor for recovery of the money (sec. 69 Contract Act)—Manishankar v. Ram Krishna, 6 Bom. L.R. 832; Bhagwati v. Banarsi, 50 All. 371 (P.C.). 32 C.W.N. 705 (708), A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 98, 108 I.C. 687; Nathu Khan v. Burtonath Singh, 20 A.L.J. 301 (P.C.), 26 C.W.N. 514, 42 M.L.J. 444, 66 I.C. 107, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 176 (178). He can also recover damages for the period for which he is kept out of possession for no fault of his—Gauri Shankar v. Mumnu, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 142, 153 I.C. 811. The benefit of such a contract passes to the transferee of the vendee—Rinsa Ansa v. Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 257

The provision under clause (g) is one which cannot be enforced against the vendor, after the completion of the sale, without an express covenant to that effect. Thus, if at the time of purchase the amount due under the mortgage was Rs. 16,000, as disclosed in the preliminary decree on the mortgage, but after the sale was complete the decree was amended and the mortgagee was held to be entitled to a sum of Rs. 23,000, which the purchaser had to pay in order to release the mortgage, and he thereupon sued the vendor for the difference between the sum which he paid to the mortgagee and the sum of Rs. 16,000, held that the purchaser's claim could not be allowed. The amount that was stated in the sale-deed was the actual amount then found due under the mortgage-decree, but on a proper construction of the sale-deed, the purchaser was bound to discharge the incumbrance entirely and not merely to pay the sum mentioned in the sale-deed. The decree was amended by an order subsequent to the purchase. If by the amendment the amount had been reduced, the purchaser would have been profited by it. On the same principle, he was bound to pay the entire amount as increased by the amended decree—Bidhu Bhusan v. Umesh, 57 Cal. 683, 51 C.L.J. 538 A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 568 (571), 128 I.C. 183; —Mahalakshmanma v. Chalamayya, 1957 Andh. L.T. 475.

If the property had been mortgaged to a partnership firm, the vendee would be entitled to require further proof of the release of the property than merely a document purporting to be signed by one of the partners for the firm as a whole. He would be entitled to proof as to who all the individual partners were and as to whether they had authorised that partner to reconvey the property—Hirachand v. Jayagopal, 49 Bom. 245, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 69, 89 I.C. 553.

If the parties substitute a written contract for the statutory contract contained in this section they cannot throw away the latter and rely on the former. Thus where the plaintiffs purchased certain property from the defendant under a deed which recited that if any portion of the property was lost as a result of a claim by an incumbrancer, the vendor would indemnify the vendees to the extent of the loss suffered; and subsequently on a decree for sale being obtained by a mortgagee of the property the plaintiffs had to pay a large sum of money to avoid the sale: held that as no portion of the property had passed out of the hands of the plaintiffs-vendees they were not entitled to claim the said amount—Ram Chander v. Bhagwati, 22 A.L.J. 576, 79 I.C. 590.

Where the condition in the sale-deed was merely that the mortgage was to be paid off by the vendee and provided that he was responsible for future interest and was to pay it off before the property was endangered, the presumption is that he was to pay it off immediately, at any rate, as soon as it was reasonably possible—Kallu v. Ramdas, A.I.R. 1929 All. 121, 26 A.I.J. 53, 107 I.C. 679.

308. Clause (2)—Covenant for title :—A covenant to indemnify is not the same thing as a covenant for title, and does not run with the land; consequently, if A sells a property to B, and C executes an indemnity bond to indemnify B if he is dispossessed of the property, the benefit of the covenant of indemnity cannot be taken advantage of by a person who purchases the property from B (or who purchases the property at Court sale)—Natesa v. Gopalasami, 51 Mad. 688, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 894 (896). It is doubtful even whether a covenant for title mentioned in this clause can pass to a purchaser at Court sale—Ibid. The usual covenant for title on sale are: (i) for right to convey; (ii) for quiet enjoyment; (iii) for freedom from encumbrances; and (iv) for further assurance—Hukum Singh v. Makumat Rai, A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 110 (F.B.). Statutory warranty is not affected by an agreement in the sale deed that in case the vendee's possession is lost vendor would return consideration—Ram Swarup v. Fatteh, A.I.R. 1960 All. 367.

The benefit of the covenant for title can be enforced by a pre-emptor who steps into the shoes of the vendee. He assumes all the liabilities and becomes entitled to all the benefits to which the vendee is entitled Md. Siddiq v. Md. Nuh, 52 All. 604, A.I.R. 1930 All. 771 (774), 124 I.C. 185; Abdul v. Kisan, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 166, 27 N.L.R. 392.

The covenant implied in this clause runs with the land, and a purchaser from the vendee or a purchaser from a pre-emptor is entitled to the benefit of this covenant—Bapu v. Kashiram, 31 Bom. L.R. 658, 119 I.C. 659, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 361 (363); Hanwant v. Candi, 51 All. 651, 1929 A.L.J. 433, A.I.R. 1929 All. 293 (295), 119 I.C. 243. See the third para of clause (2). This para lays down that the benefit of the covenant of title may be enforced by any person in whom the property is in whole or in part from time to time vested. So, where the purchasers have sold the property purchased by them to another person, they are no longer entitled to get a decree for damages against the vendor for his failing to convey proper title, because the property is no longer vested in them but in their vendee, and it is their vendee and not they themselves who have sustained damages for defect in the vendor's title—Ramayya v. Kotayya, 32 L.W. 138, 1930 M.W.N. 195, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 748 (751), 127 I.C. 617.

This clause applies not only to cases where there has been a complete sale, but also applies to cases where the transaction has not progressed beyond the stage of contract—per Abdur Rahim J. in Adikesavan v. Gurunatha, 40 Mad. 338 (350) (Sadasiva Ayyar J. contra); Imjad Ali v. Mohini, 27 C.W.N. 1025, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 148, 80 I.C. 623; Kathamuthu v. Subramaniam, 50 M.L.J. 228, 94 I.C. 561, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 569; Subayya Chowdhury v. Veerayya, 1955 Andhra W.R. 502. In some other cases the Madras High Court also lays down that a covenant of title is not only attached to a contract of sale but is also attached to the conveyance—Arunachala v. Ramasami, 38 Mad. 1171 (1175); Sigamani v. Munibadra, 49 M.L.J. 668, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 255, 91 I.C. 514. The words "seller" and "buyer" include persons who have agreed to sell and buy—Surendra Maneklal v. Bai Narmata, A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 329.

The presumption as to the title of the vendor is absolute, and, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, is irrefutable—Mad. Siddiq v. Md. Nuh, 52 All. 604, 1930 A.L.J. 653, A.I.R. 1930 All. 771 (773), 124 I.C. 185; Sk. Moula Buksh v. Dharamchand Raniwala, 65 C.W.N. 881. An express covenant of title in a sale-deed is not necessary, since under this clause such a covenant is implied in every sale of immovable property—Ramayya v. Kotayya, 32 L.W. 138, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 748 (750), 127 I.C. 617. The expression "shall be deemed to contract" in this clause implies that the covenant mentioned in this clause must be deemed to be embodied in every contract of sale, and that the rule of caveat emptor is thus rendered obsolete—Basaraddi v. Enajaddi, 25 Cal. 298 (300); Ramchandra v. Dwarkanath, 16 Cal. 330; Chidambaram v. Shivattaswamy, 15 M.L.J. 396; Mehdi Husain v. Jafar Khan, 8 O.C. 345.

It is true that express covenants of title overrides all implied covenants in that regard, but the implied covenants cannot be got rid of except by clear and unambiguous language—Saraswatibai v. Madhukar, infra. See also Mad. Ismail v. Syed Hussam, A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 298. A stipulation by the vendor in the deed of sale that if any legal or other defect in his title is found in future he will be liable for the same is an express covenant for title and quiet enjoyment, but it does not exclude the implied covenant for title, and as such it cannot be considered to be a contract to the contrary—Nathuni Shah v. Satyanarain Prasad, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 11. If in a contract of sale there is no express stipulation as to the warranty of title and the vendor afterwards expresses his inability to give such a warranty, the Court can pass a decree for specific performance, even though the vendor's refusal was not mala fide—Deep Chandra v. Ruknuddaula, A.I.R. 1961 All. 93 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1950 All. 1033. This section, which embodies an absolute warranty of title unless there is an agreement to the contrary, is applicable both to a conveyance and to a contract for sale—Ibid per Agarwala & Wanchoo JJ. The purchaser can claim specific performance with compensation if he can bring the case within sec. 14, Specific Relief Act. But if the sale deed has been executed, the purchaser can claim compensation if he establishes fraud—Delli Gramani v. Ramachandram, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 769. See in this connection Gulabchand v. Suryajirao, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 401, 52 Bom. L.R. 61. In a suit for damages for breach of covenant for title and quiet possession the damages should be ascertained on the date of the suit and not on a prior date—Venkataswami v. Venkayya, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 529, (1953) 1 M.L.J. 242.

The purchaser's insistence on the form of warranty to be inserted in the sale deed subsequent to the contract of sale does not affect the contract already made, nor can it amount to repudiation when it is not persisted in—Durga Prasad v. Deep Chand, A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 75 in appeal from Deep Chand v. Ruknuddin, supra).

Where a suit is based on an express covenant of title, it is not open to the plaintiff to take advantage of sub-sec. (2), even if that were held to be a rule of equity—Dugar Mal v. Gobind Saroop, A.I.R. 1950 E.P. 74, 51 P.L.R. 347.

A covenant for title is implied in a sale of immoveable property, and the onus is on the vendor to prove a contract displacing that presumption—Sri Ram v. Kidari, 6 Lah. 308, 88 I.C. 743, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 481. A transferee from the buyer is entitled to sue for damages on the ground of breach of implied covenant of title—Guruswamy Goundar v. Santhappan, I.L.R. (1965) 1 Mad. 287.

Under this section there is also a covenant for quiet enjoyment which does not include a covenant to deliver possession. So where possession is not delivered to the purchaser, no question of breach of quiet enjoyment arises—Vishwanath v. Deokabai, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 382, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 50. A covenant for quiet enjoyment involves a right to undisturbed possession. It becomes enforceable if there is obstruction or dispossession. The seller cannot escape the obligation to compensate the purchaser when ultimately it is found that the former had not title to the whole or part of the property sold—Gulabchand v. Suryajirao, supra. A covenant of title does not include a covenant to give possession. In the absence of an express covenant there is nothing in clause (2) to imply that the vendor shall put the vendee in possession of the property—Muthusami v. Dharma Raja, 1926 M.W.N. 209, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 495, 94 I.C. 302. So also, a guarantee of title does not include payment of arrears of rent which passed with the land. The remedy of the purchaser, if the tenants fail to pay the arrears of rent, is a suit against the tenants and not against the seller—A. L. Chettiar v. Maung The, 6 Bur. L.J. 24, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 134 (135), 101 I.C. 320. When a vendor gives guarantee of quiet enjoyment, his estate after his death is answerable for the breach of the covenant—Kalyani Ammal v.

Ezhumalai Nattar, 81 Mad. L.W. 272. If the purchaser is evicted the measure of damage is the market value of the land at the time of eviction—Ibid. The covenant for good title can be enforced against the universal legatee of the vendor, but not against a legatee of the universal legatee—Polamreddi v. Yaratapalli, A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 29.

Under this clause, the seller merely gives a warranty that he has in fact and in law the estate which he professes to have—a warranty which would take effect upon proof of breach; but he does not undertake (as in England) to show a good title by production of documents and verification of facts—Jyoti Prosad v. H. V. Low & Co. 34 C.W.N. 347 (351), A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 561.

Every conveyance imports a covenant of title under this clause, and this is so whether the buyer has or has not notice of the infirmity of the seller's title—Mt. Chandrawatibai v. Valabdas, A.I.R. 1931 Sind. 141, 133 I.C. 76. Saraswatibai v. Madhukar, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 229, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 467; Sheokumar v. Central Co-operative Bank, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 477; Avadesh v. Zakaul Hussain, A.I.R. 1944 All. 243, I.L.R. 1944 All. 612; Paparao v. Polinaedu, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 205, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 323; Basappa v. Kodliah, A.I.R. 1959 Mys. 46; Sohan Lal v. Bal Kishan A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 275. Where a seller professing to be the owner of a property transfers it while he is really a lease-holder with limited power of transfer, there is a breach of an implied contract—Thomas v. Hanuman Prasad, A.I.R. 1929 All. 837 (839), (1929) A.L.J. 1122. Clause (2) of sec. 55 applies not only to a completed sale but also to an agreement to sell—Shankerlal v. Jethmal, A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 196.

Where the covenant against encumbrances is not an independent covenant, but is part of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, the covenant does not mean to guarantee that the estate was free from encumbrances. The mere existence of an encumbrance does not give a right to sue under this covenant. In an action on a covenant of this description the plaintiff must allege the facts constituting the disturbance and that the disturbance was lawful, with sufficient particularity, to show the breach of covenant—per Mukherji, J. in Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Md. Fazlul Karim, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 385 (390), 52 Cal. 914, 90 I.C. 851. Some hindrance or prevention of enjoyment must be proved in such a case. Mere existence of outstanding encumbrances, unless they prevent entry and enjoyment, as in the case of prior unexpired lease, will not constitute an immediate breach—per Walmsley, J. in the same case at p. 387. See in this connection Ramamurthi v. Kuppuswami, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 621, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 499.

A covenant of title will be implied to be imported into a contract if the transaction is one of sale as defined in sec. 54. A mere license granted to a person to cut and remove trees is not a sale, and no covenant for title or quiet enjoyment will be deemed to be attached to such a transaction—Mummikuti v. Puzhakkal, 29 Mad. 353.

Marketable title:—The meaning of a title free from reasonable doubt is a marketable title which can at all times be forced upon an unwilling purchaser—Lallubhai v. Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 16, 59 Bom. 83. "Every purchaser is" observed Turner, V.C., "entitled to require a marketable title, by which I understand it to be meant a title, which so far as its antecedents are concerned, may at all times and under all circumstances, be forced upon an unwilling purchaser"—Pyrke v. Waddingham, 10 Hare 1 (9-10). "Where the rectitude of the title depends upon facts which.....are certainly capable of being disputed, a Court of Equity will not enforce the contract"—P. B. & Tile Co. v. Butler, 16 Q.B.D. 778 (787). Unless a marketable title is proved, specific performance of the contract of sale cannot be granted—Duggan v. Talyrkhan, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 77, 39 Bom. L.R. 1166, 173 I.C. 714. In 1892 certain property was mortgaged to two joint mortgagees. In 1913 the owner of the property contracted to sell it and in order to prove that the mortgage had been discharged, produced a certified copy of a registered release, dated September, 1902, which was executed by one only of the mortgagees, but which recited that the other mortgagee was dead and that the executant of the release was his sole heir and representative and that the mortgage had been redeemed. No further proof of the recital was offered : held by the Privy Council that the vendors had failed to deduce a marketable title to the property, recitals being evidence only against the parties to the deed or those claiming through or under them—Shrinivas v. Meher Bai, 41 Bom. 300 (P.C.), 21 C.W.N. 558, 39 I.C. 627. The marketable title was the right, title and interest of the mortgagee himself and the equity of redemption of the mortgagor which the mortgagee was entitled to convey as the mortgagor's agent—Abraham v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1949 Bom. 154. If a proper title by adverse possession can be successfully made out, this would fulfil the vendor's obligation to make out marketable title—Shankerlal v. Jethmal, A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 196.

Unless the vendor's liability as imposed by this clause is excluded by express covenant, his liability will be deemed to subsist notwithstanding the fact that the vendee may have some idea as to the defect in the vendor's title—Kalka v. Namdar, A.I.R. 1933 All. 389; Nawal v. Sarju, A.I.R. 1932 All. 546, 54 All. 774, 139 I.C. 99, or had knowledge of the earlier transactions of the vendor—Seetharamamma v. Ramireddi, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 739 (740), 1940 M.W.N. 14. When a vendor's title depends not upon a question of law, but upon proof of a disputed fact, that fact must be proved, before the vendor can be held to have made out a good title—Seetharamamma v. Ramireddi, supra at p. 743.

Good title is title good against everybody. Marketable title is free from reasonable doubt. Seller's liability is limited to the title which he has professed to transfer—Mahomed Ziaul Haque v. Calcutta Vyapar Pratisthan, A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 605.

Purchaser's remedy :—If the purchaser fails to obtain possession, owing to the vendor's defect of title, another person having a better title being in possession of the property, the purchaser is entitled to a refund of the purchase-money—Ragava v. Samachariar, 1 L.W. 8, 1914 M.W.N. 57, 22 I.C. 42. Where there is an express contract in the deed itself that in case of defect of title the vendee will be compensated by the vendor, the vendee is entitled on the basis of this covenant to maintain a suit for compensation by way of a refund of a part of the consideration of the sale for not having got possession of a part of the land sold due to want of title of the vendor in it—Nathuni Shah v. Satyanarain Prasad, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 11. If, however, the purchaser obtains possession but is subsequently dispossessed owing to the vendor's defect of title, the remedy of the purchaser is not a refund of the original consideration but damages measured according to the market value of the land at the time of dispossession. It would be unjust and inequitable to base the amount of damages on the original consideration paid at the time of purchase, because since that time the situation might have considerably changed—Md. Siddiq v. Md. Nuh, 52 All. 604, 28 A.L.J. 653, A.I.R. 1930 All. 771 (777), 124 I.C. 185. See also Narasingarayudu v. Ankineedu, 1961 Andh. L. T. 421. In a suit for refund of purchase-money where the land is still in possession of the purchaser, the fair rule will be to give him such compensation as will compensate him for the defective quality of his title. This of course, will vary considerably according to the circumstances of the particular case—Har Lal v. Mulchand, A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 427, 52 Bom. 883, 112 I.C. 27; Papu v. Kashiram, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 361, 31 Bom. L.R. 658, 119 I.C. 659. A suit for refund of purchase-money may be regarded as a suit for damages—Enjad v. Mohini, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 148, 27 C.W.N. 1025, 80 I.C. 623. Where the vendor who was impleaded as a defendant to the suit impeaching his title and claiming the vendee's eviction remained ex parte and therefore the vendee compromised the suit and subsequently filed a suit for damages against the vendor for breach of the covenant. Held, that the vendor was liable and he could not without imputing bad faith to the vendee blame him for compromising the suit—Narayan Kishan v. Bhaurao, A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 124.

When defect in the vendor's title is discovered after the execution of the conveyance and there has been no fraud, the vendee cannot avoid the sale, but his remedy lies merely in a suit for damages—Udho Das v. Mehr Baksh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 262; Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Md. Fazul Karim, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 385, 52 Cal. 914, 90 I.C. 51.

Under this clause there is an implied term in the contract of sale as to the liability of the vendor for title and power to transfer, and where he has neither of the two in respect of a portion of the land sold, the vendor is liable to pay damages—Lachmi Narain v. Har Swarup. A.I.R. 1939 All. 170, 1938 A.L.J. 1136, 180 I.C. 342. The transferee from a purchaser can sue for damages the vendor in breach of a deemed covenant of title, notwithstanding the buyer's knowledge of defect in title—Guruswamy Goundar, v. Santhappan, I.L.R. (1965) 1 Mad. 287.

The law in India laid down in sec. 73 of the Contract Act as to the right of damages for breach of contract to sell immoveable property is different from that of England. Knowledge of the purchaser of the defect of title in his vendor does not affect his right to recover damages—Adikesavan v. Gurunatha, 40 Mad. 338 (F.B.).

In so far as the guardian appointed by the Court can be said to have incurred any liability under this clause, he does so in his capacity as a guardian—Maida v. Kishan, A.I.R. 1934 All. 645, 151 I.C. 820.

When vendor is relieved of his liability:—Under this clause, there is an implied liability on the vendor to give to the purchaser a title free from reasonable doubt. But this liability may be relieved if there be a contract to the contrary. See the opening words of this section. Thus, a stipulation that the purchaser shall not investigate the vendor's title but shall accept the title as it is, will relieve the latter of his obligation of giving a covenant for title—Chousiah v. Rustomjah, 13 Mad. 158 (161, 163). But this waiver on the part of the vendee must be intentional and based upon a full knowledge of the circumstances. If the purchaser enters into possession or pays the whole or part of the purchase-money or does other acts which a purchaser is not bound to do till a good title has been made out, he may be deemed to have waived his objection as to title. The question as to whether objection as to title has been waived is one of fact, and it may be that under certain circumstances the payment of purchase-money may indicate a waiver on his part. But where the purchase-money has been paid under an honest error of judgment on the part of the vendee's solicitors as to the title, such payment does not amount to waiver and the vendee is entitled to a refund of the purchase-money if the vendor fails to make out a marketable title—Meghji v. Tayeballi, 26 Bom. L.R. 1019, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 64, 90 I.C. 189. A covenant contained in a sale-deed to the effect that "if any dispute arises through me (vendor) in respect of the land, I shall get it settled" does not amount to a 'contract to the contrary'. This covenant means that the vendor will see that if the purchaser does not get full ownership, title and peaceful possession through the defect in the vendor's title or through the act of the vendor, the latter is bound to remove such defect. It does not exclude the covenant of title required by sec. 55 (2)—Ragava v. Samachariar, 1 L.W. 8, 1914 M.W.N. 57, 22 I.C. 42. Where a contract of sale provided that "if.....any dispute arises from any one, I (seller) shall settle them at my own expense." Held that the clause being vague was not sufficient to constitute a contract to the contrary. Held, further that the taking of possession and payment of the balance of price did not amount to a waiver of the purchaser's rights to require a good title—Subbayya Chowdary v. Veerayya, 1955 Andhra W.R. 502.

The "contract to the contrary" must be a written one, and cannot take the shape of an oral agreement, because it would not be admissible in evidence under sec. 92, Evidence Act in contradiction of the written deed of sale—Md. Siddiq v. Md. Nuh, 52 All. 604, 1930 A.L.J. 653, A.I.R. 1930 All. 771 (774), 125 I.C. 185; Adikesavan v. Gurunatha, 40 Mad. 338 (351) (F.B.). The existence of a mortgage makes the title incomplete and the non-repudiation of liability to discharge the mortgage is not a valid ground for not meeting the demand for enquiry into title—Subbayya Chowdary v. Veerayya, 1955 Andhra W.R. 502.

The effect of a covenant for title implied in this clause can be got rid of by the vendor indicating by clear and unambiguous expression that he does not mean to guarantee that he has got title to the property and is entitled to convey the same—Mahomed Ali v. Budharaju, 39 M.L.J. 449, 60 I.C. 235 (236). But the vendor cannot get rid of his liability under this clause by reason of the fact that the purchaser had knowledge of the defect of his title. Under this clause there is a statutory guarantee for good title unless the same is excluded by the contract of parties, and the question of knowledge of the purchaser does not affect his right to be indemnified under the Indian statute law—Subbaroyya v. Rajagopala, 38 Mad. 887 (889); Arunachala v. Ramasami, 38 Mad. 1171 (1175), 25 I.C. 618, 27 M.L.J. 517; Thekkemannengath Raman v. Pazhiyot Manakkal, 28 M.L.J. 184, 27 I.C. 989; Basaraddi v. Enajaddi, 25 Cal. 298 (301); Bapu v. Kashiram, 31 Bom. L.R. 658, 119 I.C. 659, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 361 (364); Lakhpal v. Durga Prasad, 8 Pat. 432, 117 I.C. 654, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 388 (389); Adikesavan v. Guru Natha, 40 Mad. 338 (351) (F.B.); Mahomed Ali v. Budharaju Venkatapathi, 39 M.L.J. 449, 60 I.C. 235 (237); Nawal Kishore v. Sarju, 54 All. 774, 139 I.C. 99, A.I.R. 1932 All. 546 (547); Ramachandra v. Dwarkanath, 16 Cal. 330; Lachman Das v. Jawahir Singh, 44 P.L.R. 1922, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 476, 70 I.C. 250; Subbayya Chowdhary v. Veerayya, 1955 An. W.R. 502. Where the purchaser knew that there were disputes about the title, but he was assured that he would be given documents to prove that the property was the vendor's by ancestral right, held that the vendee had a claim for damages against the vendor—Parasurama v. Muthuswamy, 50 M.L.J. 100, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1209, 91 I.C. 313. Where the vendor sold under the condition that "the purchaser shall take such title as the vendor possesses, and the vendor shall not be bound to give any better title to the purchaser than he possesses," and the purchaser believed that the vendor had some title, however defective, but it was afterwards found that the vendor had no title, nor even possession, held that the purchaser could not be compelled to take the property—Motivahoo v. Vinayak, 12 Bom. 1 (17). Unless the purchaser took the conveyance with all defects in the vendor's title, the mere fact that he knew or was expected to know all about the property conveyed to him would not disentitle him to repudiate the contract and get a refund of the purchase-money—Basaraddi v. Enajaddi, 25 Cal. 298 (301)). But a breach of covenant for title or quiet possession would not entitle the buyer to avoid the sale but would entitle him to damages, and such breach is no bar to a suit for recovery of unpaid purchase-money—Soorayya v. Kateeza Beegum, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pra. 688.

The vendor is also relieved of his liability, if the property which he proposes to sell is by its very nature inalienable (e.g., a Karamkuri tenure or occupancy holding) and the purchaser is aware of it. In such a case no covenant for title can be given by the vendor, and if the purchaser is ejected by the superior landlord, the vendor will not be liable for damages on any implied covenant for title—Sankaran Nair v. Ramaswami, 2 L.W. 155, 27 I.C. 889 (890); see also Kulla Mal v. Umra, 61 I.C. 604 (Lah.). Where M sells two survey numbers, one to A and the other to B, wrongly inserting the survey number sold to B in the deed of A and vice versa, and N after purchasing the right title and interest of A with knowledge of the mistake just to harass B brings a suit to recover the survey number sold to B but inserted in the deed of A and the suit is dismissed, N cannot invoke the warranty of title under sec. 55 (2)—Ramalinga Padayachi v. Natesa Padayachi, A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 461.

Covenant of indemnity :—Where a vendor agreed to indemnify the vendee for the costs in suits in which the latter would be obliged to defend his title to the property conveyed, and where a suit was filed and the vendee incurred costs therefor in defending his title to the property : held that the vendee was entitled to recover the costs—Venkata Rangayya v. Satyanarayana, 39 M.L.J. 316, 60 I.C. 164 (165); Ramaswami Chettiar v. Muthukrishna Aiyar, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 359.

A general indemnifying clause in a sale-deed making the vendor liable for any loss which might accrue in connection with the sale can properly be held to include the risk of the vendee's title being defeated by a pre-emptor—Kalian Singh v. Fazal Din, 94 I.C. 1055, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 455; Khonmon Bibi v. Shah Mali, 111 P.R. 1908, 4 I.C. 690. But a covenant of indemnity under which the vendor undertakes to indemnify the vendee against any person who interferes with his possession is a covenant to indemnify against lawful title only, and cannot be relied upon where the interference is by a person having no title—U Mya v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 31 (32), 167 I.C. 84. Warranty cannot be implied under sec. 55 (2)—Tara Singh v. Smt. Charan Kaur, 70 Punj. L.R. 34.

The clause in a sale-deed that "if upon the objection of any one any damage or loss accrues to the vendee, the vendor will be liable" amounts to a contract of indemnity and is not a mere covenant for title and quiet possession—Mangladha v. Ganda Mal, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 388, 102 I.C. 424. When the buyer knows that the seller has no title and still agrees to buy with knowledge of want of title implied warranty cannot be invoked—Ramalinga Padavachi v. Natesa Padayachi, A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 461. But see Krishna Chandra v. Atreyaparupu Apparao, 33 Cut. L.T. 155.

Covenant of title in sale by trustees :—See proviso to clause (2). In the case of a sale by a trustee it is also provided in sec. 38 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882), that the trustee selling the trust property may insert such stipulations either as to title or evidence of title or otherwise in any contract for sale, as he thinks fit.

309. Clause (3)—Delivery of documents of title :—The title-deeds of an estate, counterpart leases and other documents of the like kind such as kahuliyats ought to be regarded as accessory to the estate and pass with it. Although village account-books cannot properly be called title-deeds, these may be claimed by the purchaser as necessary for the enjoyment of the property and accessory to it—Shri Bhavani v. Devrao, 11 Bom. 485. The vendor is bound to deliver the documents of title relating to the property; he is not bound to hand over a mortgage-deed or will which had been executed by a previous owner of the property and which are not at all relevant to the present title of the vendor. See Haji Mahamed v. Musaji, 15 Bom. 657 (666).

As soon as the purchaser has paid the purchase-money, the vendor is bound to deliver up the title-deeds. If the purchaser after payment of the purchase-money, negligently but without fraud, leaves the title-deeds in the hands of the vendor any subsequent purchaser from the first purchaser may recover them from the original vendor, and even against a person to whom the vendor has fraudulently conveyed the property—Harrington v. Price, 3 B. & Ad. 170.

Where a mortgagee sells the property mortgaged to him in exercise of the power of sale conferred upon him by the mortgage-deed, it is clearly a document of title within the meaning of this clause and the vendor is bound to surrender it to the vendee—Mylapore Hindu Permanent Fund Ltd. v. Pushpammal, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 434, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 774, 1939 M.W.N. 482.

Where there are several purchasers, the purchaser of the lot of the greatest value (and not the largest area) is entitled to the custody of the deeds [see clause (3) (b); see also Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, p. 434] even if he is the purchaser of the last lot and the vendor has given a covenant to different purchasers to produce to them the title-deeds—Khaderao v. Romer, 42 Bom. L.R. 1024, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 48. But if there be a condition that the purchaser of the largest lot shall have the title-deeds, such condition will be given effect to and the purchaser of the lot largest in superficial area shall get them—Griffiths v. Hatchard, 1 K. & J. 17.

310. Clause (4) (a)—Sellers right to rent before completion of sale :— The seller is entitled to all rents and profits of the land between the date of the contract of sale and the date of its completion. The vendee will, however, be entitled to compensation for breach of the contract to convey in addition to the execution of the conveyance, and such compensation will naturally be the value of the mense profits which could have been obtained between the date when the breach of contract took place and the date when the conveyance was actually executed—Subbaroyar v. Kottaya, 1916 M.W.N. 284, 34 I.C. 737. But although the vendor is entitled to rents and profits till the completion of the sale, he cannot commit waste by taking crops in an immature state or otherwise than by due course of husbandry—Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, p. 733. After a suit for the specific performance of an agreement for sale or in the alternative for damages was decreed, the purchaser filed a subsequent suit for mesne profits: Held that the suit was not maintainable as the plaintiff was not entitled to rent and profits until the conveyance had been executed in his favour, and also on the ground that the suit was barred under Or. 2 r. 2, C.P.C.—Gogineni Ramakrishnayya v. Vennan Viraraghaviah, (1954) 2 M.L.J. (Andhra). 11.

After the completion of the sale, the purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits; and if the vendor remains in possession after the sale, the purchaser is entitled to take an occupation rent from the vendor—Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Defries, 2 Q.B.D. 387. But no occupation rent will be allowed where the vendor has continued to be in possession only by reason of the purchaser's failure to take possession—Dakin v. Cope, 2 Russ. 170.

311. Clause (4) (b)—Vendor's charge for unpaid purchase-money :— It has already been stated under sec. 54, that non-payment of price does not prevent the ownership of the property from passing to the purchaser, and he can maintain a suit for possession of the property notwithstanding such non-payment. See Note 281 under sec. 54. But the vendor has got a charge for the unpaid purchase-money under this clause.—Velayutha v. Govindaswami, 30 Mad. 524; on appeal, 34 Mad. 543 (544). If the vendor has already delivered possession of the property to the purchaser before the payment of the price, he is not entitled to rescind the contract and to recover possession from the purchaser, or to resell the property to a third party. His remedy is to sue for the money and he has a charge on the property for that amount, under this clause—Trimalrao v. Municipal Commissioner, 3 Bom. 172; Moidin v. Acaran, 11 Mad. 263 (264). He will be entitled to recover interest on the unpaid purchase money if the sale is not completed—Malikappa v. Bhimappa, A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 86; Rajlingam v. Somanna, A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 7.

The charge which the vendor obtains under this Act is different in its origin and nature from the vendor's lien given by the Courts of Equity in England; and the English cases as to a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, though useful for the purposes of illustration, are not authoritative in the interpretation of the law on the subject as laid down in sec. 55.—Webb v. Macpherson, 31 Cal. 57 (72) (P.C.). "The Transfer of Property Act", observe their Lordships in this case, "gives a statutory charge upon the estate to an unpaid vendor unless it be excluded by contract. Such a charge, therefore, stands in quite a different position from the vendor's lien. You have to find something, either express contract or at least something from which it is a necessary implication that such a contract exists, in order to exclude the charge given by the statute. In their Lordships' opinion there is no ground whatever for saying that that charge is excluded by a mere personal contract to defer payment of a portion of the purchase-money, or to take the purchase-money by instalments, nor is it, in their Lordships' opinion, excluded by any contract, covenant or agreement with respect to the purchase-money which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge." See also Krishnaswami v. Vijiaraghava, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 344, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 590 (591), 49 M.L.W. 597; Sobhalal v. Sidhelal, I.L.R. 1939 Nag. 636, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 210, 1939 N.L.J. 252. The mere execution of a promissory note by the purchaser for the amount due to the vendor does not extinguish the vendor's lien—C. Sunduraja Pillai v. Sakthi Talkies, A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 127; Dhanikachala Pillai v. A. Raghava Reddier, A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 423.

When there was an agreement to transfer certain clay works to another company the consideration for which was partly in cash, partly in promise to employ the transferor at a certain rate and partly for the allotment of shares to the transferor, and the company went into liquidation before the conditions were carried out, such transferor could not claim a charge against the assets of the company under this section. His remedy lay otherwise by action against the company for breach of contract—Johnston v. Official Liquidator, A.I.R. 1939 Rang 46.

As soon as a sale transaction is completed, the vendor automatically acquires a charge for the unpaid purchase-price and this charge can be enforced against the vendee personally. It is analogous to the unpaid vendor's lien in English law which has been recognised in this section, the principle whereof applies to the Punjab—Mela Ram v. Ram Das, A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 275 (F.B.), 44 P.L.R. 415. This charge is not excluded by a mere personal covenant to defer payment of a part of the purchase money or to take it by instalments, even though the vendor has directed to pay the amount to his creditors or other nominees. In the latter case the vendee is not a trustee for the creditors—ibid. For instances of this charge for the unpaid purchase-money see Somu v. Singara, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 407, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 17; Pyare Lal v. Mt. Kalawati, A.I.R. 1949 All. 340, 1949 A.L.J. 294; Poomalai v. Annamalai, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 124, (1943) 2 M.L.J. 515; Raja Ram v. Chheda, A.I.R. 1949 All. 555, 1949 A.L.J. 343; Jeychand v. Keshavji, A.I.R. 1942 Sau. 72.

When the ownership passes at once, the money value of the charge at the date of the sale-deed must be the amount of the purchase-money remaining unpaid at that date, neither more nor less—Shankar v. Gotiram, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 67 (70), 43 Bom. L.R. 1014. But the charge is not excluded by the fact that the buyer is to pay the money to a creditor of the seller—Ibid. As to the relinquishment of the statutory charge by a subsequent agreement, see this case.

If the vendee gives a mortgage of the property for the unpaid purchase-money which is found to be invalid for want of attestation, the vendor is entitled to a charge under this clause for the unpaid money and interest thereon. The charge can be enforced by sale of the property under sec. 100, T. P. Act and O. 34, r. 15, C.P.C.—Kocherlokata v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 204, 59 Mad. 910, 63 I.A. 304, 40 C.W.N. 1130, 163 I.C. 4. See also Sahib. Khan v. Kushaldas, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 198, 170 I.C. 791.

An unpaid vendor has only an equitable right under this clause to recover the purchase-money from the property he has sold. He does not obtain the status of a secured creditor until his right is declared by a decree of Court—Mokshagunam v. Ramakrishna, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 335, 42 M.L.J. 426, 70 I.C. 357. Where a vendee brings a suit for possession the vendor's lien may be enforced in the same action. No separate action is necessary—Syed Noor v. Qutbuddin, A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 114.

Where the land is sold to three persons in certain shares, the vendor has a lien on the land for the unpaid purchase-money against all—Bhag Mal v. Sheromoni etc. Committee, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 348, 150 I.C. 725.

Where a vendor, in compliance with the contract for the sale of an estate, executes a conveyance thereof, but the purchase-money is wholly or partially unpaid, then notwithstanding that on the face of the conveyance it is expressed to be paid, or that a receipt for it is endorsed thereon, the vendor has a lien on the estate for the money due to him—Alliance Bank of Simla v. Walsh, 66 P.R. 1883; Meghraj v. Abdulla, 12 A.L.J. 1034, 25 I.C. 208; Umedmal v. Davu, 2 Bom. 547; Mukta Pershad v. Abdul Razak, 33 I.C. 527 (Oudh); Trimalrao v. Municipal Commissioner, 3 Bom. 172.

In the case of a sale to several vendees in certain shares, the vendors have a lien on the property for the unpaid money against all and are not concerned with the proportion paid by the various co-purchasers—Bhag Mal v. Shiromoni, etc., Committee, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 348, 150 I.C. 725.

The vendor's charge is non-possessory and does not confer on him the right to retain possession by virtue of his charge. He is only entitled to retain the title-deeds and to charge interest on the unpaid purchase-money—Velayutha v. Govindasami, 30 Mad. 524. If the vendor retains possession of the property, he is liable for mesne profits—Hari Prasad v. Harihar, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 205 (206), 70 I.C. 804. If the vendor continues in possession of the property sold, and the vendee takes no steps for a long period (e.g., 7 years) to take possession of the property, the vendor has a right to retain possession until the purchase-money is paid—Subrahmaniam v. Poovan, 27 Mad. 28 (30). Where title in the property has passed to the vendee notwithstanding the non-payment of part of the purchase-money and the vendee brings a suit for possession, although it is not competent to the Court to pass a decree for possession conditional on the vendee paying the balance of the purchase-money, it is open to the Court, while decreeing possession to the vendee, to incorporate in the decree the statutory charge under the clause in favour of the vendor, and it would be open to the vendor to enforce the charge by seeking execution of that decree—Shobhalal v. Sidhelal I.L.R. 1939 Nag. 636, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 1939 210, 1939 N.L.J. 252, following—Basalingua v. Chinnava, 56 Bom. 556, 34 Bom. L.R. 427, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 247; Raj Lingam v. Somanna, (1965) 2 An. W.R. 401.

The provisions of this Act relating to charge for unpaid purchase-money do not apply to leases, consequently no charge can be created for the unpaid amount of premium. The only lien which is recognised in this Act is a lien in favour of the vendor—Venkatacharyulu v. Venkatasubba Rao, 48 Mad. 821, 90 I.C. 725, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 55. The fact that the purchase was made at a sale by auction and not by a private treaty does not kill the equitable lien—Shoe Dulare v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 88, 136 I.C. 222.

Where lost and where not :—The vendor's charge is not lost by a mere personal contract to defer the payment of a portion of the purchase-money or to take the purchase-money by instalments; nor is it lost by any contract covenant or agreement with respect to the purchase-money which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge—Webb v. Macpherson, 31 Cal. 57 (72) (P.C.). The mere taking of a promissory note from the purchaser for the purchase-money does not extinguish the lien—Karupiah v. Hari Row, 21 M.L.J. 849, 11 I.C. 890; Puthi Narayanamurthi v. Marimuthu, 26 Mad. 322; Daraisami v. Lakshmanan, 14 M.L.J. 285; Vallyappa v. Narayanan, 18 I.C. 81, 1913 M.W.N. 826; Swaminatha v. Subbarama, 50 Mad. 548, 51 M.L.J. 856, 100 I.C. 10, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 219 (225); Khishaswami v. Vijiaraghava, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 344, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 590, 49 M.L.W. 597.

The general rule is that the mere taking of a bond, bill, promissory note or covenant for the purchase-money will not destroy the lien. The question depend not upon the circumstance of taking a security but upon the intention which must be gathered from all the surrounding facts, the nature of the security and the expressions and the conduct of the vendor. If, for instance, the bond, note or covenant was substituted for the consideration money, the lien ceases to exist; if, on the other hand, the lien was intended to be reserved, the taking of an additional security would not destroy it—Alliance Bank of Simla v. John Walsh, 66 P.R. 1883; Dayal Das v. Harkrishan, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 568, 11 Lah. 587, 125 I.C. 330. The acceptance by the vendor of a bond given by the vendee for payment of the balance of the purchase-money by instalments does not imply an intention on the part of the vendor to relinquish the lien—Bashir Ahmed v. Nazir Ahmed, 43 All. 544 (546). He cannot be deemed to have abandoned the lien by a mere personal contract to defer payment of a portion of the purchase-money or to take it by instalments, or by taking a mere personal security, e.g., a promissory note, bill of exchange or bond. Whether the vendor has relinquished his lien is in every case a question of intention to be gathered from all the circumstances of the case and the onus rests on the person denying the right to prove a clear and manifest intention to relinquish that right—Morton v. Woodfall, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 103 (104), 8 Lah. 257, 99 I.C. 770. Where the consideration consisted partly of money and partly of shares and for that portion of the consideration which was represented by the shares the vendor did not rely on the security of the estate, but on the shares of the company, it was held that the arrangement was inconsistent with the vendor's lien in so far as the value of the shares was concerned—Ibid. When there is a separate agreement for payment of part of the purchase-money in lieu of actual cash, it is a question of intention of the parties whether the agreement is accepted as an additional security or whether it is a substitution of the statutory charge created by sec. 55 (4) for the unpaid purchase-money—Munayya v. Krishnayya, 47 M.L.J. 737, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 215 (217), 84 I.C. 949; Krishnaswami v. Subramania, 35 M.L.J. 305, 44 I.C. 523. Where it was intended that the vendee should execute a mortgage-deed and extinguish the lien, but the mortgage-deed was not completed by registration and remained a simple bond, the lien was not extinguished—Ranganayaki v. Parthasarathi, 10 L.W. 550, 54 I.C. 503. Where the vendor obtained a promissory note not from the vendee but from a third person at the instance of the vendee, and the third person did not pay, even then if the third person's note or bond was only an additional security to the vendor's liability and not in substitution of it, the lien was not lost—Balagurumoorthi v. Nagulu, 41 M.L.J. 267, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 277, 69 I.C. 473. Plaintiff and another sold a land jointly to defendants 1 to 4 for Rs. 10,000; of this amount Rs. 8,650 was paid in cash, and for the balance of Rs. 1,350, the 1st. defendant alone executed two promissory notes, one in favour of each of the vendors for Rs. 675 each with interest. Plaintiff sued on his promissory note for Rs. 675 and also claimed a lien for the unpaid purchase-money. Held that the fact that the promissory notes were executed in favour of each of the vendors by only one of the vendees, that there was a stipulation for a fixed rate of interest, and that only one of the vendors brought a suit without joining the co-vendor, showed that the promissory note formed part of the consideration, that there was therefore no unpaid purchase-money and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a charge on the land—Krishnaswami v. Subramania, 35 M.L.J. 304, 44 I.C. 523. An agreement by the purchaser to execute a hypothecation bond for the unpaid consideration-money does not extinguish the vendor's charge—Lakshmana v. Sankaramoorthy, 25 M.L.J. 245, 18 I.C. 199 (201).

Where the agreement between a vendor and a purchaser of property is that the latter should pay the purchase-money or part thereof to a third person to whom the vendor is indebted, there is no statutory lien on the property which the vendor can enforce in default of payment by the vendee, but only a personal covenant the breach of which must be compensated in damages—Abdulla v. Mammali, 33 Mad. 446; Sivasubramania v. Gnanasmmanda, 21 M.L.J. 359, 10 I.C. 98 (102); Gur Dayal v. Karam Singh, 38 All. 254 (260). Thus, where a property which is subject to a mortgage is sold and part of the consideration money is left with the vendee to pay off the mortgage, the money so left is not purchase-money in the strict sense of the term, and the vendor has no lien in respect of it, if it is not paid—Mukta Pershad v. Abdul Razaq, 33 I.C. 527 (Oudh). But, this view has not been accepted in some later cases, where it is said that a mere direction by the vendor to the vendee to pay the purchase-money or a portion thereof to the vendor's creditor does not extinguish the lien; so that on failure by the vendee to pay off the vendor's creditor, the vendor is entitled to recover the unpaid money by sale of the property—Daulatram v. Indrajit, 8 Luck. 185, 141 I.C. 468, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 33; Sivasubramania v. Subramania, 39 Mad. 997, 31 M.L.J. 530, 37 I.C. 459; Kunchithapatham v. Palamalai, 32 M.L.J. 347, 39 I.C. 405; Meghraj v. Abdulla, 12 A.L.J. 1034 (1038), 25 I.C. 208; Mahadeo v. Mahipal, 12 A.L.J. 921, 25 I.C. 939; Harchand v. Kishori, 7 I.C. 639; Swaminatha v. Subbarama, 50 Mad. 548, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 219, 51 M.L.J. 856; Alwar Chetty v. Jagannatha, 54 M.L.J. 109, A.I.R. 1928 Notes 56; Ramanand v. Sheo Das, 43 All. 314 (317), 60 I.C. 933; Daulatram v. Indrajit, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 33, 141 I.C. 468; Ram Chander v. Ram Chander, A.I.R. 1936 All. 870; Kesho Das v. Jivan, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 10—especially where there is nothing to show that the vendor's creditor has accepted the liability of the purchaser in lieu of that of the vendor—Thyagaraja v. Seshappier, 27 M.L.T. 94, 54 I.C. 458. On vendee's failure to pay the money held by the vendee the vendor is entitled, in addition to charge, to claim damages from the vendee and his properties and actual damages need not be established—Swaminatha Pillai v. Parameswararam Pillai, A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 195. But where the unpaid purchase-money is insufficient to pay the mortgage-debt payable by the vendor, he is not entitled to recover the unpaid purchase-money—Tripura v. Nikunja, 44 C.W.N. 383, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 380, 190 I.C. 494. The mere fact that the vendor who had asked the vendee to pay the creditors of the vendor asked the vendee some time after the sale-deed was executed not to pay the amount due to one of the creditors, does not mean that the vendor intended to give up or waive the right given by the statute in the shape of a charge on the property for the unpaid purchase-money—Lakshmayya v. Purushathamma, infra. But where the vendee at the instance of the vendor executes a promissory note for the purchase-money or part of it in favour of a third party, there is in respect of the whole or part of the purchase-money covered by such note, a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of this section, and the vendor's statutory charge on the property is so far defeated. The position is the same, so far as the vendee is concerned, whether the third party is a benamidar for the vendor or not, unless it is shown that the vendee was aware that the third party was a benamidar for the vendor, in which case there would be no contract to the contrary—Swaminatha v. Subbarama, 50 Mad. 548, 51 M.L.J. 856, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 219 (225).

The vendee from a mortgagor retained a part of the purchase-money for payment to the mortgagee and paid the balance to the mortgagor. In the meantime the U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act was passed whereby the vendee was able to clear off the mortgage debt for less amount than what was due: held the mortgagor was entitled to recover the balance as unpaid purchase-money—Rameshwar v. Hari Kissen, I.L.R. 1940 All. 340, A.I.R. 1940 All. 351, 1940 A.L.J. 366; see also Naina Khatun v. Basant Singh, 56 All. 766 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1934 All. 406, 1934 A.L.J. 318. The major portion of the consideration had been left with the vendees who undertook to the various creditors to redeem the lands purchased by them. The vendees made default in paying the creditors; held that an implied obligation was cast upon the vendees to indemnify the vendor for the loss sustained by the vendees' default—Kartar Singh v. Sant Singh, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 321; see also Waring v. Ward 7 Ves. 332; Tilak Ram v. Surat Singh, I.L.R. 1938 All. 500 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1938 All. 297, 1938 A.L.J. 455. In such a case, if the vendor does nothing to mitigate the damages when he discovered that the vendee had been in default and does not even warn the vendee of the consequences of delay, nor makes a demand from him for payment of the amount either to the creditors or to himself, he is not entitled to recover from the vendee the full amount of the loss sustained by him—Kartar Singh v. Sant Singh, supra (at p. 325). Where the vendor on default of the vendee alleges himself to have paid the mortgagee and sues the vendee for recovery of the amount, it is essential for him to prove the alleged payment—Kesho Das v. Jiwan, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 10. In this case the vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase-money was not extinguished by the deposit made by a successful pre-emptor of the pre-emption money. The vendor had his lien both against the pre-emptor and his transferee with notices of the non-payment—Ibid.

Where the vendor leaves a part of the price with the vendee to be paid to his illegitimate son after the latter attained majority, the vendor cannot be said to have a lien for the amount on the property sold—Chandra Kesavalu v. Perumal Chettier, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 820, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 722, 1939 M.W.N. 437; see also Swaminatha v. Subharama, 50 Mad. 548, 51 M.L.J. 856, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 219.

Interest in immoveable property;—The unpaid vendor's lien under this clause is an interest in immoveable property—Raghunatha v. Rajagopala, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 181, 142 I.C. 730; Lakshmayya v. Purshottama, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 457 (458), 47 M.L.W. 527. The debt with the security can be transferred—Sheonandan v. Zainal, 42 Cal. 349. Despite the provisions of sec. 8, ante, an instrument assigning such right where the property is worth more than Rs. 100 is compulsorily registrable under sec. 17 of the Registration Act—Raghunatha v. Rajagopala, supra; see also Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh, A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 94, 53 I.A. 214, 98 I.C. 508.

Extinguishment :—In order to extinguish a statutory charge under this clause there must be an express contract or something from which it is a necessary implication that such contract exists and is not excluded by a contract, covenant or agreement with respect to the purchase-money which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge. Thus, where by an agreement a part of the purchase-money was left with the purchaser to be paid to the vendor after the happening of a certain event and there was no indication in the agreement that the charge was intended to be extinguished: held that the charge was not extinguished and the auction-purchaser of the vendor's right could enforce it—Achanta v. Gunesetti, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 92, 170 I.C. 649.

Amendment :—The words “any transferee without consideration or any transferee with notice of the non-payment” have been inserted by Act XX of 1929. They have made it clear that the lien will be ineffectual as against a transferee for value and without notice—see Sheo Dulare v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 88, 136 I.C. 222.

311A. Enforcement of the charge :—The vendor's lien is a personal right so that no other person except the vendor himself (e.g., a creditor of the vendor) can enforce it—Hari Ram v. Denaput Singh, 9 Cal. 167. Thus, a judgment-creditor of the vendor cannot, in execution of his decree, bring the property to sale as the property of his judgment-debtor. He may attach the unpaid purchase-money which is due to his judgment-debtor, but he cannot cause the property purchased by a third party to be sold for the recovery of his judgment-debt—Moti Lal v. Bhagwan Das, 31 All. 433. But the vendor can transfer the charge to an assignee. The debt itself can certainly be transferred, and there is no reason why the security for the debt should not also be transferred with it. In such a case, the transferee can enforce the charge against the purchaser—Sheonandan v. Zainal Abdin, 42 Cal. 849 (855), 19 C.W.N. 899.

The vendor can enforce the charge against the property in the hands of the vendee within twelve years from the date of the sale-deed, under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act—Almad v. Raihan, A.I.R. 1934 All. 525, (1934) A.L.J. 682, 148 I.C. 639. If the vendee sues for possession and the vendor alleges non-payment of the full purchase-money, court can pass a decree in favour of the vendee conditional on payment of the balance of the consideration money—Dhuri Sah v. Krishun Prasad Sah, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 29.

Against whom enforceable :—This section, if read with sec. 40, shows that the vendor's lien is enforceable against the property not only in the hands of the purchaser but also in the hands of the transferees with notice of the non-payment of purchase-money—Ramanand v. Sheo Das, 43 All. 314; Meghraj v. Abdullah, 25 I.C. 208, 12 A.L.J. 1034; Ram Raghubir v. United Refiners, 9 Rang. 56; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 139, 134 I.C. 737. This is now expressly provided by the addition of the words “any transferee without consideration or any transferee with notice of the non-payment.” The Special Committee remarks :—“Sub-clause (b) of clause

4 of the same section provides that the vendor's lien for the purchase-money can be enforced against the property in the hands of the buyer. The provision as it stands is insufficient, as such lien can easily be defeated by the buyer by parting with the property. It is, therefore, proposed to provide that it can be enforced against the property in the hands not only of the buyer, but also of all other persons claiming under him if they had notice of the sale." The lien will be enforceable against a purchaser at a Court-sale who had full notice of all the facts—Sheo Dulare v. Jagannath, 7 Luck. 405, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 88 (90), 136 I.C. 222.

But the lien cannot be enforced against the purchaser's transferees for value and without notice of the vendor's lien—Gurdayal v. Karam Singh, 38 All. 254 (257), 14 A.L.J. 304, 35 I.C. 289; Syed Hassan v. Sheo Narain, 1 Luck. 7, 3 O.W.N. 25, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 81, 91 I.C. 917, Tehilram v. Kashibai, 33 Bom. 53 (68); Meerasahib Muhammad, Kunju v. Padmanabha Iyer, A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 28.

311B. Personal remedy :—Apart from the vendor's lien on the property for the unpaid purchase-money, the vendor has got a personal remedy against the vendee. Under sub-sec. (5) (b), the buyer is bound to pay or tender the purchase-money to the seller, at the time and place of completing the sale. This shows that the vendee is held personally liable for the purchase-money apart from the liability imposed on the property purchased—Raghukul v. Pitam, 52 All. 901, 1930 A.L.J. 1524, A.I.R. 1931 All. 99 (100), 130 I.C. 198. But, where the vendors had bound themselves to accept as purchaser either the firm or a person nominated by the firm and there was no provision that in the case of a nominee the firm would be liable for the balance of the purchase-money, the members of the firm were not personally liable—Ram Raghubir v. United Refineries, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 143, 37 C.W.N. 633, 142 I.C. 788.

312. Interest on unpaid purchase-money :—The vendor has a lien not only for the amount of the unpaid purchase-money, but also for the interest thereon; for it is a principle of equity that where one party to a contract of sale enters into possession of the property before the whole price has been paid, he is ordinarily liable to pay interest on the unpaid purchase-money from the date when he enters into possession—Pandurang v. Mahadeo, 46 Bom. 195, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 186, 64 I.C. 492, 23 Bom. L.R. 1000; Ratanlal v. Municipal Commissioner, 43 Bom. 181 (200) (P.C.); Dinkar Rao v. Ayub, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 37 (39); Tomlinson v. Harding, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 131, 120 I.C. 538; International Ry. Co. v. Niagara Parks Commission, A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 114 (119); Mrs. I. K. Sohan Singh v. State Bank of India, A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 123. But this clause does not give the vendor an absolute right to get interest irrespective of equities. Such interest cannot be claimed so long as the vendor is in possession of the property purchased by him—Duraiswamy v. Md. Abbas, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 678. Where mesne profits are awarded, the interest can be set off against the mesne profits—Sahib Khan v. Kushaldas, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 198, 170 I.C. 791. But if the delay in payment of the purchase-money is due to the vendor's own fault (e.g., default in showing a good title) he will not be entitled to take advantage of his own wrong, and the Court will deny him interest—Ellarayan v. Nagendra Iyer, 6 L.W. 233, 42 I.C. 509; Narasingerji v. Raja Panaganthi, 1921 M.W.N. 519, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 498; Subhadrabai v. Mahomedbhai, 25 Bom. L.R. 931, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 187 (189), 77 I.C. 247. But lapse of time occasioned merely by the defect of the vendor's title not known to him at the date of the contract, especially where immediate steps are taken by the vendor to remedy the defect, does not exempt the purchaser from paying interest—Subhadrabhai v. Mahomedbhai, (supra).

This clause contemplates interest being payable only if the ownership of the property has entirely passed to the buyer and the property is in the hands and therefore in the enjoyment of the buyer. Where not only is the profit claimable by the vendee proportionate to the amount of the purchase-money he has paid, but the property is also stipulated and provided to be only proportionate to the amount of the purchase-money paid by him, the case cannot be regarded as one in which the ownership of the property has absolutely passed to the purchaser in respect of the whole extent, and the purchaser is not liable for interest—Lodd Govindoss v. Muthia Chetty, 48 M.L.J. 721, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 660. When the purchase-money is left with the vendee for paying a prior mortgage-debt, and he has not paid it, the money is not to be treated as a security for the payment of the mortgage-debt, but as a deposit, for which the purchaser should pay interest to the vendor—Chokkalinga v. Ramanadhan, 24 L.W. 257, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1031, 97 I.C. 536. But if the purchase-money is left with the vendee for paying a mortgage-debt on the property and it is found that the money left with the vendee is insufficient to pay off the mortgage, the vendee is entitled to retain the money until the vendor provides the rest of the money necessary for paying off the mortgage-debt; this retention of the money by the vendee will not be treated as a deposit of the money of the vendor in the vendee's hands, and the vendee will not be liable to pay interest—Muhammad Siddiq v. Muhammad Nasrulla, 21 All. 223 (227) (P.C.).

Where the parties intended that the payment of the purchase-money and the delivery of possession of the property should be carried out contemporaneously, interest on the money would not be payable so long as the vendor was in possession of the land—Muthu Chetty v. Sima, 35 Mad. 625.

The interest is payable "from the date on which possession has been delivered". These words have been added by the Amendment Act of 1929. "This clause is silent as to the date from which interest on the unpaid purchase-money should run. It seems fair that it should run from the date when the buyer is put in possession."—Report of the Select Committee.

313. Clause (5) (a)—Purchaser's duty to disclose facts :—Clause (5) (a) casts upon the purchaser the duty of disclosing to the seller any fact of which the buyer is aware but of which he has reason to believe that the seller is not aware, and which materially increases the value of the property. The duty of a buyer is not a duty arising from an implied contract, but is a statutory obligation imposed on the buyer—Gangai v.

Govinda, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 544, 84 I.C. 626. Under the last para of this section, the omission to make a disclosure under this clause amounts to fraud, irrespective of intention. And so it has been held in an English case : "If a person comes to me and offers to sell to me a property which I know to be of five times the value he offers it for, he being ignorant of his rights and in the belief that he cannot make out a title which I know that he can, and I conceal that knowledge from him, is that not a suppressio veri, which is one of the elements which constitute a fraud?"—Summers v. Griffiths, 35 Beav. p. 32. Thus, a purchase for an inadequate price from an old and infirm woman ignorant of the value of the property sold was set aside on the ground of fraud—Sadashiv v. Dhakubai, 5 Bom. 450.

314. Clause (5) (b)—Payment of purchase-money :—The buyer is bound to tender the purchase-money on completion of the sale—Mahatab v. Collector, A.I.R. 1932 All. 454, 142 I.C. 83. A sale is said to be completed when the vendor executes the conveyance. The execution of the conveyance by the seller and the payment of the purchase-money by the buyer are presumed to take place simultaneously. So the purchaser need not tender the purchase-money if the vendor beforehand signifies his refusal to execute the deed—Essaji v. Bhimji, 4 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 125.

The purchaser is bound to pay money in accordance with the direction of the vendor. If he directs payment to a particular person, the purchaser must make payment to such person, and in doing so, he will be entitled to retain the benefit of any remission made by such person in favour of the purchaser—Siva Subramania v. Gnanasamanda, 21 M.L.J. 359, 10 I.C. 98 (102). See also Indra Singh v. Comr. of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 169, 22 Pat. 55. Such a direction can be revoked except under some special circumstances—Mela Ram v. Ram Das, A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 275 (F.B.), 44 P.L.R. 415. Where a direction is given by the vendor to the vendee to pay the balance of the sale consideration to the creditor of the former, the creditor can bring a suit against the vendee for recovery of the amount—Devraje v. Ram Krishnaiyar, A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 109. The suit is governed by Art. 116, Limitation Act, as the claim arose under a registered instrument—ibid. See in this connection Janaki v. Kanaru, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 583, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 603. But it has been held that where A mortgages his property to B, part of the consideration for the mortgage being B's promise to A to pay C, the amount which A owed to C, C, not being a party to the contract cannot sue for the payment—Iswaran Pillai v. Sonnivevaru, 38 Mad. 753; Ganesh Das v. Mt. Banto, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 354. See also Jamna Das v. Ram Autar, (1911) 39 I.A. 7.

Where the purchaser is directed by the vendor to pay off, out of the purchase-money, certain debts due by the vendor to his creditors, and the vendee undertakes to do so, such creditors can institute a suit against the vendee and recover the amount due to them although they had no notice of, and were not parties to, the agreement between the vendor and the vendee in respect of payment of their debts. The purchaser in such a case is treated as the trustee of the vendor's creditors for the money reserved in his hands for their benefit—Dwarka Nath v. Priya Nath, 22 C.W.N. 279 (281), 36 I.C. 792, following Gregory v. Williams, (1817) 3 Mer. 582. It is doubtful whether the purchaser in such a case can be treated as the trustee of the vendor's creditor. In Jamnadas v. Ram Autar, 39 I.A. 7, 16 C.W.N. 97, an action was brought by a mortgagee to enforce against purchaser of the mortgaged property an undertaking that he entered into with his vendor to redeem the mortgage. The suit was dismissed by the Privy Council on the ground that the purchaser entered into no contract with the mortgagee. If, however, the vendee did not undertake to pay the vendor's creditor out of the purchase-money left in his hands, the vendor's creditor was not entitled to recover the amount from the vendee—Bhagwat Narain v. Ganga Prasad, 62 I.C. 617 (619) (Pat.). In another case, however, the Patna High Court went still further and held that if after executing a mortgage the mortgagor sold the property leaving with the vendee money to redeem the mortgage, and the vendee agreed to do so, still the mortgagee could not sue the vendee on the mortgage, as there was no privity between them—Kamta Prasad v. Nanku Prasad, 78 I.C. 545 (Pat.). But there can be no question that where the purchaser undertook to pay the debt due to the vendor's creditor, and this undertaking was not only contained in the registered conveyance, but was also communicated to the creditor and accepted by him, the creditor was entitled to sue the purchaser on the registered instrument—Debnarayan v. Chunilal, 41 Cal. 137 (147), 17 C.W.N. 1143. In Adhar v. Dolgovinda, 40 C.W.N. 1037 it has been laid down by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a stranger to contract reserving a benefit to him cannot sue thereon, unless from the terms of the contract it is clear that a trust for him was created.

If the property is sold free from incumbrances, and it is found that the vendor had already mortgaged it, the vendee, if he pays off the incumbrance, is entitled to set off the amount so paid against the balance of the purchase-money remaining unpaid—Munirunnissa v. Akbar Khan, 30 All. 172 (175) (F.B.). If the purchase-money is insufficient to pay off the incumbrance, the purchaser is not liable to pay at all till the vendor provides the rest of the money necessary for the purpose—Muhammad Siddiq v. Muhammad Nasirullah, 21 All. 223 (226) (P.C.). The principle of this clause is also applicable to the sale of a decree. Thus, where a decree sold was at the time under attachment at the instance of a creditor of the decree-holder, the purchaser of the decree can retain out of the purchase-money a sum sufficient to pay off the claim of the creditor and to remove the attachment, and if the purchaser pays off the creditor, the amount so paid will be set off against the balance of the purchase-money—Khetsidas v. Shib Narayan, 9 C.W.N. 178 (189, 190).

A deposit is not merely a part-payment but is an earnest also. If the vendee makes default in completing the contract of sale, the deposit may be retained by the vendor and no express stipulation is necessary for the purpose—Narendra v. Nripendra, A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 208. But the Court can in the exercise of its equity jurisdiction, relieve the vendee from forfeiture of the earnest money—Cheranji Lal v. Jisuk Ram, A.I.R. 1953 Or. 105, 17 Cut. L.T. 184. Purchase price paid in advance cannot be forfeited because it is not given by way of earnest—Sardarilal v. Sm. Sakuntala Devi, 63 Punj. L.R. 362.

This section does not affect the passing of title to the vendee. It merely fixes a starting point of limitation for the recovery of the consideration money—Ghanashyam v. Udayanath, A.I.R. 1949 Or. 14, 14 Cut. L.T. 40. If money is left with the buyer to pay off an incumbrance and the buyer fails to do so, he is liable to return the amount to the seller—Soorayya v. Katuza Beegum, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pra. 688. A suit to recover the amount is to be brought within 12 years, not from the date of the sale but from the date when the incumbrance is satisfied by the vendor or is otherwise extinguished—D. Subbaiah v. G. Suryanarayana, A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 636 (S.B.).

315. Clause (5) (c)—From completion of sale purchaser must bear loss :—After the sale is complete and the ownership of the property passes to the buyer, the purchaser must suffer any loss of the property caused by destruction. If, however, the property had been insured by the vendor against loss by fire, the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of the insurance. See this subject discussed under sec. 49 ante.

It is implied by this clause that if any deterioration of the property takes place before the ownership passes to the purchaser, i.e., between the contract of sale and its completion, the vendor is liable for it till the completion of the sale.

316. Clause (5) (d)—Payment of public charges and rents :—The liability of the purchaser to pay rents and discharge burdens incidental to his ownership commences from the very date the ownership has passed to him, irrespective of the fact whether he obtained possession on that date ; and this principle is applicable also to Court-sales, though the section as such does not apply to them. Thus, where the purchaser at a Court-sale had his sale confirmed on the 31st March but did not obtain possession till the 11th May following, he was held to be liable to pay the two instalments of rent which fell due subsequently to the confirmation of the sale, namely on 1st April and 1st May, and it was immaterial when he recovered actual possession of the land—Ramasami v. Annandurai, 25 Mad. 454.

317. Payment of incumbrances :—If the property is sold subject to incumbrances, the purchaser is bound to pay the money due on the incumbrances to the incumbrancer. If the incumbrances turn out to be invalid, the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of the bargain, and the vendor cannot claim it. Thus, in execution of a decree for sale, certain villages were sold and the proclamation for sale notified that there were two prior mortgages (say, for Rs. 2,000) on the property. The auction-purchaser purchased the property subject of course to the incumbrances. Subsequently it was found that the two mortgages were invalid. Then the mortgagor (judgment-debtor) brought a suit to recover from the purchaser the amount of Rs. 2,000 being the amount due on the two mortgages (the existence or supposed existence of which had led to a diminution of the price) as the vendor's unpaid purchase-money or as money which the purchaser ought in equity to return to the judgment-debtor. Held that after the sale was completed, the vendor had no claim to participate in any benefit which the purchaser might derive from his purchase. "If the purchaser covenants with the vendor to pay the incumbrances, it is still nothing more than a contract of indemnity. The purchaser takes the property subject to the burden attached to it. If the incumbrances turn out to be invalid, the vendor has nothing to complain of. He has got what he bargained for. His idemnity is complete. The vendor cannot pick up the burden of which the land is relieved and seize it as his own property"—Izzatunnessa Begam v. Kuniwar Pertab Singh, 31 All. 583 (589) (P.C.) overruling Inayat Singh v. Izzatunnessa, 27 All. 97 (F.B.). But see Ram Lal Singh v. Harihar Prasad, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 254, where A sold in 1937, certain properties to B who undertook to pay to the creditors of A certain specified amounts in discharge of mortgages on the other properties of A, out of the consideration for sale. As the Bihar Money Lenders Act, 1938 provided that interest in excess of the principal could not be realised there was an excess of purchase-money in the hands of B. A sued to recover the excess. Held that B being in the position of a trustee was liable to refund the excess. The Kerala High Court has, however, held in Kunjikavu Amma v. Janaki Amma, A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 98 that where any property is sold subject to an incumbrance which is subsequently found to be invalid, the benefit goes exclusively to the purchaser. On a conveyance for value of lands subject to a mortgage and expressed to be so conveyed there is in the absence of express agreement, an undertaking implied by law on the part of the purchaser to indemnify the vendor against personal liability on foot of the mortgage—Janki v. Md. Ismail, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 273, 139 I.C. 525.

Interest :—Under this clause, the purchaser is bound to pay future interest on incumbrances accruing due after the completion of the sale, and not the accumulated interest due before the sale.

318. Clause (6) (a)—Purchaser's right to improvements :—After the completion of the sale, the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of any improvement in the property, in the same way as he is liable under clause (5) (c) to suffer the loss caused by destruction—Achuthan v. Parameswara, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 195. As regards improvements between the date of the contract and that of the conveyance, this section does not contain any express provision; and it seems from a strict construction of the section, that the purchaser is not entitled to them; the benefit of such improvements goes to the seller. Since it is implied by clause (5) (c) that the seller is liable for deterioration of the property between the date of contract and that of completion of the sale, it is just and equitable that he should be entitled to the benefit of improvements occurring within the same period, and to claim an enhanced price. Such a claim implies of course the formation of a new contract, since there is no provision in this section for re-adjustment of price owing to increase in value of the property between the date of contract and the date of completion of the sale.

319. Clause (6) (b)—Charge for purchase-money paid in advance :—This clause is divided into two parts. Under the first part, the purchaser is entitled to certain rights which he can enforce 'unless he has improperly declined to take delivery', which means that he is to lose those rights if the other party can show that he (the purchaser) has improperly declined to accept delivery, and the onus lies on such party. Under the latter part of the clause, the purchaser gets certain additional rights which he can claim only if he can show that "he has properly declined to take delivery," and the burden of showing it will be upon himself. The latter part of this clause corresponds to sec. 18 (c) of the Specific Relief Act.

This clause does not apply to Court sales—Kunverji v. Umarshi, A.I.R. 1932 Kutch 10.

The word "improperly" means owing to a default in the purchaser himself in completing the sale. And the circumstances under which he can "properly" refuse to take delivery are those under which he is justified in, repudiating the contract, e.g., defect of title. The question whether a purchaser by part-payment can obtain a charge on the property depends on whether the default in completing the contracts rests with him or with the vendor. It is a question of fact in each particular case as to who is in default—Adari Sanyasi v. Nookalamma, 54 Mad. 708, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 592 (593), 131 I.C. 487.

A purchaser cannot be said to be acting improperly if he refuses to take only a fraction of the property by paying full price, in accordance with sec. 15, Specific Relief Act. That section has been enacted for the benefit of the purchaser and cannot operate to his detriment. That section gives him an option and if he declines to accept an offer which brings him loss, his conduct cannot be called improper—Sultan Kani v. Meera Rowthen, 46 M.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 189 (190), 115 I.C. 251.

Where the vendor is not able to give the vendee a title free from reasonable doubt, the latter properly declines to complete the sale. The fact that ultimately the Court finds the title clear does not disentitle the vendee to claim return of the earnest money—Tulsidas v. Pritbai, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 92, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 543. The Court will not force a doubtful title on the vendee. Where the purchaser properly declines to accept delivery of the property, he is entitled to get back the earnest money and a charge on the property for the same—Munnalal v. Zamakal, A.I.R. 1952 M.B. 145.

This clause undoubtedly gives the buyer a charge over the property which he has contracted to buy for the price, pre-paid. There is no question of ownership involved in the assertion of that charge, for the ownership in the property would still be in the seller until the execution of the conveyance under sec. 54, which in effect provides that a contract for the sale of immoveable property does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property. But at the same time it does not destroy effectively the equities of parties to the contract—Hari Bapuji v. Bhagu, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 142, I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 140, 162 I.C. 804. When an owner purports by an oral sale to transfer his property and delivers possession to another person, the possession of the transferee must be deemed to be adverse to the owner and a suit for recovery of possession must be filed within 12 years of the delivery of possession—Dagadu Dhondu Patil v. Trakadu Motiram Patil, A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 79.

From the moment the purchaser pays a part of the purchase-money, he has a lien on the property to that extent, and he can recover the purchase-money if the sale goes off otherwise than through a default on his part—Whitebread & Co. v. Watt, (1902) 1 Ch. 835 (C.A.); Balbhadra v. Sheomangal, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 592, 54 Mad. 708, 131 I.C. 487; Abdul Hamid v. Mahomed Ali, A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 67, 53 Bom. L.R. 817; Saraswatibai v. Kishenchand, supra. "There can be no doubt, that when a purchaser has paid his purchase-money though he has got no conveyance, the vendor becomes a trustee for him of the legal estate. When instead of paying the whole money he pays a part of it, it would seem to follow as a necessary corollary that to the extent to which he has paid the purchase-money, to that extent the vendor is a trustee for him; in other words, that he acquires a lien exactly in the same way as if upon the payment of a part of the purchase-money the vendor has executed a mortgage to him of the estate to that extent"—per Lord Cranworth in Rose v. Watson, 10 H.L.C. 672 (683); Kesar v. Munna, 13 N.L.R. 19, 39 I.C. 50 (51). Thus, if the vendor refuses to grant a proper conveyance, the purchaser is not bound to tender a draft conveyance to the vendor for execution nor to tender any purchase-money, and is entitled to recover the money already paid—Essaji v. Bhimji, 4 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 125. If the vendor received the purchase-money but executed a conveyance which he failed to register within the period of registration, whereupon it became invalid, held that the vendee was entitled to a charge under this clause, though he could not claim possession of the property—Lalchand v. Lakshman, 28 Bom. 466.

In cases of oral sales, which are invalid, the vendee has a charge on the property for the advance and this charge is not affected by the fact that he is in possession of the property—Jibhao Hari Singh v. Ajab Singh, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 145, 54 Bom. L.R. 971.

The charge mentioned in this clause is created on the property agreed to be sold from the very moment the purchase-money or a part thereof has been paid, and not after a suit for specific performance instituted in pursuance of the agreement to sell has failed—Kesar v. Munna, (supra). See in this connection Mahalakshmi v. Venkatarreddi, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 556, (1944) 2 M.L.J. 103. But see Motiram v. Ramchandra, 1958 Nag. L.J. (Notes) 99 where it has been held that if in a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell the Court decrees only refund of the purchase-money there is no statutory charge on the property agreed to be sold. The lien is not created by any agreement between the parties, but arises by operation of law, on payment of the purchase-money, independently of the sale-deed; see Williams on Vendor and Purchaser, 4th Ed., p. 1006 and Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah., 407 (F.B.) at p. 412. See also Ahmed Baksh v. Karam Singh, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 236, I.L.R. 1943 Kar. 392. This lien can only be lost by reason of the purchaser's failure to carry out his part of the contract—Balvanta v. Bira, 23 Bom. 56 (63). It can only be excluded by a contract to the contrary—Matta Sura v. Mana Rama, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 714 (716), (1937) 2 M.L.J. 922. It is not, however, right to place a person holding a statutory charge under this clause on the same footing as a "transferee" contemplated by sec. 134—Vijjaraghavalu v. Arunachalam, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 165, 48 M.L.W. 766.

The mere circumstance that a purchaser may not be entitled to specific performance is by no means conclusive against his right to a return of his deposit. The question for determination is whether having regard to the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case the purchaser is justified in refusing to accept such title as the vendor actually gives. If he is justified in refusing to accept such title, he is entitled to a refund of the deposit, which the vendor has no right to retain—Ibrahimbai v. Fletchers, 21 Bom. 827 (853) (F.B.); Balbanta v. Bira, 23 Bom. 56 (61); Karsandas v. Gopaldas, 25 Bom. L.R. 1144, 85 I.C. 491, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 282 (288); Howe v. Smith, (1884) 27 Ch. D. 89. If the contract for sale becomes void by frustration, the vendor is entitled to get back the earnest money and not compensation—Habib Ali v. Rafik-uddin; A.I.R. 1968 Assam 26.

Where the guardian of a minor in order to remove pressure on the minor's estate agrees to sell a portion of his property and receives earnest money, this is binding on the minor and if the guardian declines to fulfil the agreement, the purchaser is entitled to a charge on the property affected by the contract of sale to the extent of the minor's interest therein—Tukaram v. Shree Krishna, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 209, 1939 N.L.J. 260, 183 I.C. 456.

The Act does not provide expressly for the return of a portion of the purchase-money when the buyer fails to complete payment and the sale therefore falls through; but the provisions of the Contract Act apply generally to contract of sale of immoveable property. Thus where the buyer refuses to complete the contract of sale and the seller puts an end to the contract under sec. 39, Contract Act, the buyer loses his charge under this clause, but the seller has no right to retain any instalments of price that have been paid, unless they have been paid as deposit or earnest. In such a case the buyer can sue for return of his part payment, but he has no right to interest on his part payment. Where the contract does not provide a penalty, the seller has a right to make a counter-claim for damages which right is something quite independent of the amount of any part payment made—Madhavdas v. Jan Mahomed, I.L.R. 1941 Kar. 495, A.I.R. 1942 Sind 37. An improper refusal by the buyer to accept delivery disentitles him to a charge on the property—Rambadan v. Prasanth Choubey, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 404.

Deposit and earnest money :—The deposit or earnest money has two characteristics : (1) it is an earnest or security and (2) it is also a part-payment of the price. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, express or implied, the earnest money is liable to be forfeited when the contract is not carried out owing to the vendee's default—Naresht v. Ram Chandra, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 93. Where the contract could be specifically performed under sec. 13, Specific Relief Act, the vendee is not entitled to get a refund of the earnest money—Ruldu Ram v. Bhuri Lal, A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 380.

The deposit paid upon a contract between the vendor and purchaser is in the nature of an earnest or guarantee for the fulfilment of the contract as well as a part payment of the purchase-money—Hall v. Burnell, (1911) 2 Ch. 511. Earnest money is part of the purchase-price when the transaction goes forward; it is forfeited when the transaction falls through by reason of the fault or failure of the vendee—Chiranjit v. Har

Swarup, A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 1, 24 A.L.J. 248, 94 I.C. 782; Krishna Chandra v. Khan Mamud, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 804, 161 I.C. 166. A vendor obtaining rescission owing to default in completion by the purchaser is entitled to the deposit in the absence of any express stipulation to the contrary—Hall v. Burnell, supra. But where the seller has no personal interest in the property there is no statutory charge on the earnest money under this clause—Shailendra v. Hade Haza, 59 Cal. 586; Panchanan v. Nirode, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 12. Though there may be nothing specific about the forfeiture, the mere fact that a deposit was demanded carries with it the implication that it should be forfeited if the contract was broken, unless the purchaser proves an agreement to the contrary—Gopalaratna v. Rajaratna, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 246, 173 I.C. 955. It must however be a deposit proper. There may be cases where the Courts may find that the amount of the deposit or part payment in advance is so great in comparison with the amount payable under the contract, that the parties cannot have intended it as a mere security for performance, but rather as a punishment for non-performance of the contract and in those cases the Court may doubtless refuse to allow the retention of the whole of the deposit—Venkoba v. Sanjivappa, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 681, 173 I.C. 233. Where a contract for sale is not completed, the purchaser paying a certain sum in part payment of the price and not as earnest money is entitled to recover it with interest, whether the breach is on his part or on the part of the seller—Krishna Chandra v. Khan Mamud, supra. Where a vendee was in the process of paying the balance of purchase-money and was ready to pay it all, and was asking for performance by the vendors of the contract, then the vendee is entitled to recover not only that part of the purchase-price which he had already paid but also the earnest money and he is entitled to have a charge on it—U Tha v. Chettier Firm, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 367. The vendee is entitled to a refund of the earnest money where the transaction falls through for the reason that the vendor is unable to convey a valid title free from doubt, although he was aware of the defect in the vendor's position; but he is not entitled to interest on the amount—Lachman v. Jawahir, 70 I.C. 250, 44 P.L.R. 1922.

Where the vendor agrees to sell the land which cannot be transferred without the sanction of the revenue authorities and fails to obtain sanction for lack of diligence he is guilty of breach of his obligation under the contract and is bound to return the sum paid to him including earnest—Krishanlal Onkardas Goyanka v. Suryadatta, A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 239.

The purchaser loses his deposit money if the sale goes off through his default or if he unjustifiably repudiates the contract—Balvanta v. Bira, 23 Bom. 56 (61); Rabina Bibi v. Satyavathi, A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 304. Thus, where owing to the non-payment of the balance of purchase-money within the specified time by the purchaser, the vendor is entitled to rescind the contract of sale and does so, he is not bound to return the deposit money to the purchaser—Natesa v. Appavu, 33 Mad. 373 (374); Bishan Chand Radha Kishen, 19 All. 489 (491); Ex parte Barrell, In re Parnell, L.R. 10 Ch. App. 512. And if the sale falls through on account of the purchaser's own default, he cannot take advantage of a simultaneous default on the part of his vendor. Thus, if the purchaser, having accepted the title, pays the deposit but afterwards fails to pay the residue of the purchase-money and the vendor thereupon gives him notice that the contract is rescinded and the deposit forfeited, the purchaser cannot recover the deposit, if the title afterwards turns out to be bad. In other words, the purchaser, having once accepted the title, would be precluded from raising the question of title—Soper v. Arnold, 14 App. Cas. 429 (at p. 433). Part payment of the purchase price cannot be forfeited, only the earnest may be forfeited—Sardarilal v. Shakuntala Devi, A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 378.

But the fact that the balance of price was not paid on due date by the purchaser, does not entitle the vendor to retain the deposit, if there are no facts found to show that the purchaser has by his delay in payment lost his right of specific performance, or if there is no conduct on the purchaser's part such as to amount to a repudiation of the contract. If in such a case the vendor denies the contract in toto, he cannot be allowed to retain the deposit—Alokeshi v. Hara Chand, 24 Cal. 897 (899). "I do not say that in all cases where this Court would refuse specific performance the vendor ought to be entitled to retain the deposit. It may well be that there may be circumstances which would justify this Court in declining and which would require the Court according to its ordinary rules, to refuse to order specific performance, in which it could not be said that the purchaser had repudiated the contract or that he had entirely put an end to it so as to enable the vendor to retain the deposit. In order to enable the vendor so to act, in my opinion, there must be acts on the part of the purchaser, which not only amount to delay, sufficient to deprive him of the equitable remedy of specific performance, but which would make his conduct amount to a repudiation on his part of the contract"—per Cotton, L.J. in Howe v. Smith, (1884) L.R. 27 Ch. D. 89 (95). Whether a sum of money was paid as earnest or as part payment towards the discharge of the contract for sale depends upon the intention of the parties and the circumstances surrounding the payment—Krishanlal v. Suryadatta, A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 239.

Enforcement of charge :—Prior to the amendment of 1929, it was held that the purchaser's charge under this section could be enforced not only against the vendor but also against all persons claiming under him with notice of the payment, e.g., person who after the creation of the charge obtained a title from the vendor by a consent decree and had notice of the payment by the purchaser—Kesar v. Munna, 13 N.L.R. 19, 39 I.C. 50 (52). But the words "with notice of the payment" have now been omitted so that the transferees and legal representatives of a seller may not escape any liability for the amount received by the seller by pleading that they had no notice of the payment of the purchase money. The reasons for limiting the seller's lien to third persons having notice of the sale do not hold good in the case of buyer's lien against persons claiming under the original seller.

When the Legislature effects a change of language by the omission of words which occurred in a statute and those words were necessary to convey a particular sense, the omission must be construed as intending to convey a different sense. The omission of the words "notice of payment" in this clause makes the charge of the buyer for price pre-paid effective not only against the seller, but against all persons claiming under him, irrespective of notice. Therefore, if a buyer has a statutory charge against the property purchased by third persons, he can enforce it against that property and the plea of want of notice on third person's part would be of no avail—Hari Bapuji v. Bhagu, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 142, I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 140, 167 I.C. 804.

Pleading :—Where the only issue presented to the trial Court was simply cancellation of a contract for sale and a contractual charge on the land under a fresh agreement for the purchase-price advanced, the High Court was not justified, on failure of that case, in entertaining the question of a statutory charge under this clause, as owing to its absence from the pleadings and the issues, important questions of fact, arising under the section had not been considered—M. M. R. M. Chettiar Firm v. S. R. M. S. L. Firm, 46 C.W.N. 57 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 47. Where there is no completed sale and there is no valid contract of sale no charge can be claimed on the property purported to be sold for the purchase money paid—Nadoda Khirna Keshar v. Bombay State, I.L.R. (1967) Guj. 323.

Agreement for sale need not be registered :—It was held by the Privy Council that, having regard to the provisions of this clause, if a vendor entered into an agreement for sale of any immoveable property in writing and received earnest money as part of the consideration, the purchaser's suit for specific performance would not lie unless the agreement itself was registered—Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh, 31 C.W.N. 125 (128) (P.C.), 53 I.A. 214, 24 A.L.J. 807, 51 M.L.J. 788, 98 I.C. 508, A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 94. This ruling came as a surprise to the Bench and Bar in India, as being contrary to law and precedents, for the Indian law never required a mere contract of sale of immoveable property to be registered. The Indian Legislature thereupon intervened to rectify this erroneous decision by enacting the Indian Registration Amendment Act (II of 1927), which added the following Explanation to sec. 17 of the Registration Act : "A document purporting or operating to effect a contract for the sale of immoveable property shall not be deemed to require or ever to have required registration by reason only of the fact that such document contains a recital of the payment of any earnest money or of the whole or any part of the purchase-money".

Interest and costs :—The purchaser is entitled to recover not only the purchase-money paid by him but also the interest thereon—Lord Anson v. Hodges, 5 Sim. 227; Kesar v. Munna, 13 N.L.R. 19, 39 I.C. 50 (53). The rate of interest should be 9 per cent. per annum on the analogy of sec. 72—Kesar v. Munna, supra. If the contract is rescinded for want of title or misrepresentation or the like, the purchaser is also entitled to the costs of the suit—Toorance v. Bolton, L.R. 8 Ch. 118. Interest is not to be paid on the amount of the earnest, Dhibi Shankarji Shamalji v. Patel Ratilal Rambhal, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 443.

This clause, which entitles the vendee to recover interest on the purchase-money he has paid, applies to those cases in which there has been an actual failure of the contract for sale through default of one or other of the two parties; but where the sale has been actually carried out and the purchaser has obtained possession (so that there has been no failure of the contract) this clause does not apply; and he cannot recover interest, owing to delay in his obtaining possession after the payment of purchase-money where the delay was not through any default on the part of the vendor—Kapatvanj Municipality v. Ochhaval, 30 Bom. L.R. 920, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 328 (332), 113 I.C. 161. Interest can be claimed from the date of the institution of the suit for the refund of the purchase money and not from the date of payment—Krishanlal v. Suryadatta, A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 239.

This clause gives the purchaser a lien for the advance purchase-money and for interests and costs, but not for the damages awarded to him—Sultan Kani v. Meera, 56 M.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 189 (191), 115 I.C. 251. Where the seller did not disclose to the buyer that the permission from the Gwalior Government accorded to the seller for using his land, though agricultural, for building a house on it was non-transferable. Held that it was a material defect in the seller's title which the buyer could not with ordinary care discover—Jhamaklal v. Mishrilal, A.I.R. 1957 Madh. B. 23.

The Punjab :—Although this Act is not in force in the Punjab, the principle enunciated in clause (6) (b) being a general rule of English law applies as being in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience—Mt. Shankri v. Milkha Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 407 (F.B.).

56. Where two properties are subject to a common charge, and one of the properties is sold, the buyer, is, as against the seller, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the charge satisfied out of the other property, so far as such property will extend.

Sale of one of two properties subject to a common charge.

56. If the owner of two or more properties mortgages them to one person and then sells one or more of the properties to another person, the buyer is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the mortgage-debt satisfied out of the property or properties not sold to him, so far as the same will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the mortgagee or persons claiming under him or any other person who has for consideration acquired an interest in any of the properties.

Marshalling by subsequent purchaser.

Amendment :—This section has been redrafted by sec. 18 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). It closely follows the language of sec. 81. The actual amendment made in this section is the omission of the words "as against the seller," and the substitution of the words "two or more properties" for "two properties". The reasons are thus stated :—

"Section 56 purports to give effect to the doctrine of marshalling.

In the case of a sale, the right of marshalling is given 'as against a seller.' It has been accordingly held by the High Court of Madras and Allahabad that the buyer has no such right as against a prior mortgagee (31 Mad. 419 : 17 All. 434). In 35 Bom. 395, 13 Bom. L.R. 678, the High Court of Bombay also took the same view and held that section 56 applied only as between a seller and his buyer and not as between a mortgagee of the seller and the buyer. Under section 55 (1) (g), in the absence of a contract to the contrary, it is the duty of the seller to discharge all encumbrances existing at the date of the sale. In practice section 56 does not give any relief to the purchaser.

The section begins with the words 'Where two properties are subject to a common charge', and does not provide for the case when there are more properties which are subject to a common charge and some or one of them is afterwards sold. To provide for such cases we propose to amend this section and bring it into line with sec. 81 which deals with the marshalling of securities."—Report of the Special Committee.

Principal :—This section enunciates the rule of marshalling as applied to sales, just as section 81 deals with the rule of marshalling as applied to mortgages. The difference between the two sections is that under section 56 the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of the rule whether he had or had not notice of the charge, whereas under sec. 81 the rule applies only when the second mortgagee has not notice of the first mortgage.

The meaning of this section may be made clear by an illustration. Suppose A is the owner of two properties X and Y, both of which are mortgaged to a certain person C. B purchases the property X. He will be entitled to insist that his vendor A should satisfy his mortgage-debt out of the property Y (which is still unsold) in the first instance, as far as possible; if after the property Y is exhausted, there still remains any balance of debt unsatisfied, then and then only the property X will be drawn upon. This section does not absolutely relieve the property X, but only postpones it till the debt is satisfied out of the other property (Y) in the hands of the vendor-mortgagor. This section does not curtail the rights of the mortgagee to recover the mortgage amount from all or any of the items mortgaged in any manner he likes—Thimmakkal v. Kamakshi Ammal, I.L.R. (1961) Mad. 794.

The principle of this section does not rest on want of notice. It can be applied before another person acquires interest in the property for valuable consideration—Sain v. Bulaqui, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 230.

320. Scope of section :—The words "as against the seller" in the old section showed that the section applied only as between the buyer and the seller, and not as between the buyer and the mortgagee of the seller. That is, the purchaser could not insist upon the mortgagee that the other property which was unsold and was still in the hands of the seller should be first sold in execution of his decree before proceeding against the property which he (the purchaser) purchased—Subraya v. Ganpa, 35 Bom. 395, 13 Bom. L.R. 678, 11 I.C. 989; Krishna v. Muthu Kumarasawmiya, 29 Mad. 217; Appayya v. Rangayya, 31 Mad. 419 (F.B.); Banwari v. Muhammad, 9 All. 690. See also Narayanaśami v.

Vellaya, 47 Mad. 688 and Amir Chand v. Sheo Pershad, 34 Cal. 13. The right of the mortgagee to bring any portion of the mortgaged property to sale was not curtailed by the fact of the mortgagor selling a portion of the mortgaged property to a third person; and it was not incumbent upon the mortgagee to proceed first against that portion of the property which had not been sold by the mortgagor—Dilawar Singh v. Balakiram, 11 Cal. 258; Bhikhari v. Dalip Singh, 17 All. 434; Subba Rao v. Lakshinarayana, 22 L.W. 389, 92 I.C. 593, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1214; Ram Raju v. Subbarayudu, 5 Mad. 387. This was a great disadvantage to the purchaser, consequently the words "as against the seller" have been omitted from the present section. A subsequent purchaser can claim marshalling even though he is the mortgagee of some other property of his seller—Braham Parkash v. Manbir Singh, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1607.

By amendment the scope of this section has been widened so that it now provides for cases where there are more than two properties, and the word "mortgage" has been used instead of the word "charge". But this does not mean that this section does not now apply to charges—Md. Yunus v. Special Manager Court of Words, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 301, 167 I.C. 962. This section gives the right of marshalling of securities to a subsequent purchaser in such a manner as not to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee. The position of a charge-holder is in no sense superior but decidedly inferior to that of the subsequent purchaser. So a charge-holder cannot successfully assert his right to the marshalling of securities to the prejudice of the prior mortgagee—Lildhar v. Shiwaji, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 125, 165 I.C. 550. The omission of the word "charge" from this section shows that it applies to the cases of "mortgage" only. But the principle underlying the section may be availed of in suitable circumstances—Nilkanthrao v. Satyabhama, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 25, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 340.

The application of the rule as to marshalling has the effect of adjusting the equities between the mortgagor and subsequent transferees from him and can be enforced by a Court against the prior mortgagee provided his interests are not adversely affected by the application of the rule. Marshalling can be enforced only at the instance of the subsequent purchaser or a subsequent mortgagee—Md. Karimul Rahman v. Saraswati Sugar Syndicate, I.L.R. 1939 All. 150, A.I.R. 1939 All. 314 (321), 1939 A.L.J. 53. The rule in this section does not apply to a case between purchaser and purchaser, the section being limited in its application to the case in which the party claiming marshalling is a purchaser and the party against whom it is claimed is the original mortgagor—Din Dayal v. Gursaran, 42 All. 336 (341), 18 A.L.J. 287; Magniram v. Mehdi Hasain, 31 Cal. 95 (102); Sitaram v. Ramrao, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 91 (94), 130 I.C. 817. Thus, where the owner of the properties X and Y, both of which are mortgaged, sells the property X to A, and then Y to B, no question will arise as to which property will be primarily liable for the mortgage, but both properties will be liable to contribute to the mortgage-debt in proportion to their values (sec. 82)—Din Dayal v. Gurusaran, 42 All. 336 (341); Magniram v. Mehdi Hosain, 31 Cal. 95 (102). "For, as between purchasers it is difficult to perceive that either has any superiority of right or equity over the other; on the contrary, there seems strong ground to contend that the original incumbrance or lien ought to be borne rateably between them according to the relative values of the estates.....Robbing Peter to pay Paul is not a principle of equity, and there is no sound reason, in the absence of special circumstances, for preferring one purchaser for value to another"—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., pp. 392, 393. But where a mortgaged property is sold in two portions to two purchasers, one of whom purchases without notice of the mortgage and with a covenant against incumbrances, and the other person purchases with an express undertaking to pay off the entire mortgage, the former purchaser has a right to marshall as against the latter purchaser; and this latter purchaser, if he discharges the entire encumbrance, is not entitled to obtain contribution—Kamta v. Chaturbhuj, 8 Pat. 585, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 664 (669, 671), 120 I.C. 17.

The benefit of the section may be claimed not only by a purchaser, but also by a mortgagee who has foreclosed and who therefore stands in the position of a purchaser; see Tara Prasanna v. Nilmani, 41 Cal. 418 (422). See also Suin Ditta v. Bulaqui Mal. A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 230, 226 I.C. 366. Similarly, if 45 acres out of 283 acres mortgaged by the mortgagor are purchased at a Court sale in execution of a charge decree and thereafter the mortgagee obtains his decree for sale, he must, first of all, exhaust all his remedies against the balance of 238 acres—Sarangapani Pillai v. Kumbakonam Bank Ltd., I.L.R. (1965) 1 Mad. 160. A subsequent transferee also is entitled to exercise his right of marshalling if no substantial prejudice is caused to the prior mortgagee—Madan Mohan v. Nand Ram, A.I.R. 1943 All. 156, 1943 A.L.J. 62; Braham Parkash v. Manbir Singh, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1607. Where a mortgagee releases major items of mortgaged property to the mortgagor and in collusion with him attempts to throw the entire burden of the decree on a particular item of the mortgaged property purchased by a bona fide purchaser from the mortgagor the Court can pass an order for the sale of all the items of property, and the mortgagee cannot recover from the particular item more than its rateable liability—Sambandam Pillai v. Ramaswami Naidu, A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 547.

The rule of this section applies in the absence of a 'contract to the contrary'. Thus, one of the two properties subject to mortgage was sold. It was agreed in the sale-deed and in a deed of agreement which was executed by the vendee that in case it was necessary to pay to the mortgagee more than what the vendor left with the vendee, the vendor would provide the balance and in case of his failure, the same could be recovered from him personally with interest and costs. Held that the stipulation in the sale-deed as to the vendor's personal liability was a 'contract to the contrary' and excluded the statutory charge provided by sec. 56—Pirthiraj v. Rukmin, 24 A.L.J. 527, A.I.R. 1926 All. 415, 95 I.C. 343. The contracts contemplated in this section and sec. 82 are identical. Contracts between mortgagors and purchasers from them may be "contracts to the contrary" within this section—Mangayya v. Achayamma, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 224, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 606. See also in this connection Tulsi Ram v. Maiku Lal, A.I.R. 1952 All. 163; Veerappa v. Chandramoulishwara, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 637, (1943) 2 M.L.J. 45. The contract to the contrary need not be express. It may be implied from the facts and surrounding circumstances—Venkata v. Venkayamma, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 59, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 412.

The statutory charge under this section does not provide for interest and costs—Pirthiraj v. Rukmin, supra.

The principle of this section should not be applied to leases. See Lowe & Co. v. Hazarimull, 30 C.W.N. 183, 94 I.C. 786, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 525.

This section does not apply to N. W. F. Province but its principles are applicable as principles of equity, justice and good conscience—Abdul Qaium v. Mt. Turi, A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 49.

Execution Sales :—The rule laid down in this section has been applied to execution sales—Ram Lochan v. Ram Narain, 1 C.L.R. 296; Tadigabla v. Lakchmana, 5 Mad. 385; Sain Ditta v. Bulaqui Mal, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 230, 226 I.C. 366; Bishonath v. Kishtomohan, 7 W.R. 488; Rodh Mal v. Ram Harakh, 7 All. 711; Was Dev v. Dheru Mal, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 291, 42 P.L.R. 321, 190 I.C. 525. But see contra—Naubat v. Mahadeo, 51 All. 606, 1929 A.L.J. 419, A.I.R. 1929 All. 309 (311), 116 I.C. 297, and Rama Shankar v. Ghulam Hussain, 43 All. 589 (594). In the last mentioned case, four villages L, P, S and D were mortgaged to a certain person. Out of these properties, P, S and D were sold in execution of a money-decree and purchased by A. The mortgagee then obtained a decree on his mortgage and in execution of it caused the village L, which still remained in the hands of the mortgagor, to be sold by auction. The amount realised being insufficient, the mortgagee caused the village D to be then sold. Held that this section would not apply since the sale in this case was a Court-sale (sale in execution of a money-decree), that the property L would not be primarily liable for the mortgage-debt under this section but that all the four villages would rateably contribute to the mortgage-debt in accordance with the provisions of sec. 82.

Though this section does not in terms apply to execution sales, the equitable principle hereof can be invoked by an auction purchaser sold in execution of a money decree—a bonafide purchaser for value without notice of the prior mortgage—Lachminarayan v. Janmajoy, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 193. In the case of executable charge decrees against several properties the Court can sell the charged property or a sufficient part thereof. The Court can decide what properties should be proceeded with without prejudicially affecting the decreeholder's rights—Nilkanthrao v. Satyabhama, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 25; I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 340. If a person purchases one out of the two mortgaged houses from the mortgagor judgment-debtor the purchaser can invoke this section—Karam Singh v. Shukla, A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 477.

Discharge of Incumbrances on Sale.

57. (a) Where immoveable property subject to any incumbrance, whether immediately payable or not, is sold by the Court or in execution of a decree, or out of Court, the Court, may, if it thinks fit, on the application of any party to the sale, direct or allow payment into Court,—

Provision by Court for incumbrance and sale freed therefrom.

- (1) in case of an annual or monthly sum charged on the property, or of a capital sum charged on a determinable interest in the property—of such amount as, when invested in securities of the Central Government, the Court considers will be sufficient by means of the interest thereof, to keep down or otherwise provide for that charge, and
- (2) in any other case of a capital sum charged on the property—of the amount sufficient to meet the incumbrance and any interest due thereon.

But in either case there shall also be paid into Court such additional amount as the Court considers will be sufficient to meet the contingency of further costs, expenses and interest, and any other contingency except depreciation of investments not exceeding one-tenth part of the original amount to be paid in, unless the Court for special reasons (which it shall record) thinks fit to require a larger additional amount.

(b) Thereupon the Court may, if it thinks fit, and after notice to the incumbrancer, unless the Court, for reasons to be recorded in writing, thinks fit to dispense with such notice, declare the property to be freed from the incumbrance, and make any order for conveyance, or vesting order, proper for giving effect to the sale, and give directions for the retention and investment of the money in Court.

(c) After notice served on the person interested in or entitled to the money or fund in Court, the Court may direct payment or transfer thereof to the persons entitled to receive or give a discharge for the same, and generally may give directions respecting the application or distribution of the capital or income thereof.

(d) An appeal shall lie from any declaration, order or direction under this section as if the same were a decree.

(e) In this section “Court” means (1) a High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction, (2) the Court of a District Judge within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property or any part thereof is situate, (3) any other Court which the, “State Government” may, from time to time, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare to be competent to exercise the jurisdiction conferred by this section.

Amendment :—In cl. (e) the words “Provincial Government” and “Official Gazette” were substituted for other words by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. Then the words "State Government" were substituted for "Provincial Government" by A.L.O. 1950.

This section, excepting the last two clauses, has been taken almost word for word from sec. 5 of the English Conveyancing Act, 1881.

"The chapter concludes with a section founded on 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, (English Conveyancing Act) section 5, providing for the discharge of incumbrances on the sale of encumbered property either by the Court, or in execution of a decree, or out of Court. In case of an annual or monthly sum charged on the property, this is done by paying into Court such amount as when invested in Government securities will be sufficient, by means of the interest, to keep down the charge. In case of a capital sum charged, the amount to be paid into Court is such as will be sufficient to meet the incumbrance and any interest due thereon. Thereupon the Court may declare the property free from incumbrance and make proper orders for giving effect to the sale and for applying the capital or income of the fund in Court. The corresponding section in 44 & 45 Vict., c. 41 has been hailed in England as likely to effect one of the greatest reforms ever made in the law of real property, and there is no reason to believe that it will be equally beneficial in India. But to prevent any chance of error in the exercise of a novel jurisdiction, the Indian Legislature has taken two precautions; first it has confined the jurisdiction to the High Courts, the District Courts, and any other Courts especially empowered by the Local Governments: and, secondly, it has declared that an appeal shall lie from all directions and orders given under this section"—Whitley Stokes' Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. I, p. 731.

Object of the section :—The power which under this section the Court may exercise in the case of any sale is intended to facilitate the alienation of incumbered estates by relieving the land from the incumbrance and substituting for the land another form of security. Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., p. 218.

321. Application of section :—This section is inapplicable if a decree is obtained on the incumbrance; because in such a case the incumbrance merges in the decree and is taken as having ceased. The mortgagee of certain property obtained a decree for sale upon the mortgage. Thereafter, the petitioner negotiated with the mortgagor for the purchase of the property. The mortgagee having consented to obtain a certain sum in full satisfaction of the decree-debt, the petitioner got from him a written undertaking to that effect. Thereupon the sale was contemplated. However, when the purchaser tendered the agreed sum, the mortgagee refused to receive it. The petitioner applied under this section for permission to pay into Court the sum agreed to be paid and for a declaration that the mortgaged property was free from the said incumbrance. Held that this section did not apply, because the mortgage had merged into the decree, and the question involved in this case was one of adjustment of the decree out of Court. But the petitioner was entitled to the declaration asked for, on payment of the money into Court, and the case was covered by sec. 244 (c) of the C. P. Code, 1882—Mallikarjuna v. Narashimha, 24 Mad. 412.

322. Procedure :—The words “upon the application of any party to the sale” show that the Court cannot act suo motu. It should exercise its power only on the application of either the vendor or the purchaser.

Again, the power of the Court under this section is discretionary. It will not, upon the application of the purchaser, compel the vendor to pay money into Court for the purpose of discharging an incumbrance upon the land, where the result of so doing would be to inflict great hardship on him, as for instance where the incumbrance is a perpetual rent-charge and the sum necessary to procure its discharge would be considerably in excess of the purchase-money of the land—In re Great Northern Railway Co. and Sanderson, 25 Ch. D. 788 (793).

Under the English law, the giving of a notice to the incumbrancer is discretionary with the Court. In India, the Court is generally bound to give notice, unless in exceptional cases, the Court thinks fit to dispense with it, the reasons of which must be recorded in writing.

The amount to be deposited in Court shall include the interest of the incumbrance, as well as an extra-charge of one-tenth of the original amount. In England the law is the same—Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 Cox. 194.

CHAPTER IV

OF MORTGAGES OF IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY AND CHARGES.

58. (a) A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability.

“Mortgage,” “mortgagor,” “mortgagee,” “mortgage-money,” and “mortgage-deed” defined.

The transferor is called a mortgagor, the transferee a mortgagee ; the principal money and interest of which payment is secured for the time being are called the mortgage-money, and the instrument (if any) by which the transfer is effected is called a mortgage-deed.

(b) Where, without delivering possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage money, and agrees, expressly or impliedly, that, in the event of his failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold and the proceeds of sale to be applied, so far as may be necessary, in payment of the mortgage-money, the transaction is called a simple mortgage and the mortgagee a simple mortgagee.

Mortgage by conditional sale.

(c) Where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property—on condition that on default of payment of the mortgage money on a certain date the sale shall become absolute, or on condition that on such payment being made the sale shall become void, or on condition that on such payment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called a mortgage by conditional sale and the mortgagee a mortgagee by conditional sale :

Provided that no such transaction shall be deemed to be a mortgage, unless the condition is embodied in the document which effects or purports to effect the sale.

(d) Where the mortgagor delivers possession or expressly or by implication binds himself to deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and authorizes him to retain such possession until payment of the mortgage money, and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property or any part of such rents and profits and to appropriate the same in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage-money, or partly in lieu of interest or partly in payment of the mortgage-money, the transaction is called an usufructuary mortgage and the mortgagee an usufructuary mortgagee.

(e) Where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage-money on a certain date, and transfers the mortgaged property absolutely to the mortgagee, but subject to a proviso that he will re-transfer it to the mortgagor upon payment of the mortgage-money as agreed, the transaction is called an English mortgage.

(f) Where a person in any of the following towns, namely, the towns of Calcutta, Madras, "and Bombay" and in any other town which the "State Government concerned" may, by notification in the Official Gazette, specify in this behalf, delivers to a creditor or his agent documents of title to immoveable property, with intent to create a security thereon, the transaction is called a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds.

(g) A mortgage which is not a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, an usufructuary mortgage, an English mortgage or a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds within the meaning of this section is called an anomalous mortgage.

Anomalous mortgage

Amendment :—The following amendments have been made by sec. 19 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929) :—

- (1) A proviso has been added to clause (c). See Note 338.
- (2) The italicised words have been added to clause (d). See Note 342.
- (3) Clauses (f) and (g) defining equitable and anomalous mortgages respectively have been newly added; clause (f) has been taken from the last para of sec. 59, and clause (g) from section 98 with certain modifications.

Not retrospective :—These amendments do not affect transactions entered into and rights and liabilities created before the passing of the aforesaid Amending Act—Ram Khilawan v. Ghulam Hussain, 8 Luck. 190. See also Note 1A, ante.

The reasons for the amendments have been stated below in proper places.

By the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, which came into operation on 1st April, 1937 in paragraph (f) after "Bombay" the word "and" was inserted, after the word "Karachi", the words "Rangoon, Moulmein, Bassein, Akyab" were omitted, "Provincial Government concerned" was substituted for "Governor-General in Council" and "Official Gazette" was substituted for "Gazette of India". Then by A.L.O. 1948 for "Bombay and Karachi" the words "and Bombay" were substituted and by A.L.O. 1950 the words "State Government" have been substituted for "Provincial Government".

Early laws of mortgage :—In the early days of the British rule, mortgages were legislated for in Regulation I of 1798, and later on in Regulations XXIV of 1803 and XVII of 1806, but these Regulations gave a somewhat cumbrous and unsatisfactory procedure, and were confined to bye-bil-waffas, katkobalas, and other mortgages with possession, and did not cover simple mortgages. "This form of mortgage never having been legislated for, there was no protection to the debtor. The practice was for the creditor to get a money-decree and sell up the mortgaged property without allowing any time for redemption. The sale being an ordinary execution sale of the right, title and interest of the debtor, whatever it might be, it was usual, when the same property was pledged to different creditors in different mortgage bonds, for each creditor to hold a separate sale, and leave the purchasers to fight out in Court the question of what they had brought under their respective sales. There being no machinery for bringing together in one suit the various incumbrances on the property, endless confusion had been the result, and the decisions of the Court upon the almost insoluble problems arising from this state of things had been numerous and contradictory. The result was that the mortgaged property could not fetch anything like its value. The debtor was ruined, the honest and respectable money-lender discouraged and a vast amount of gambling and speculative litigation fostered. It has been one of the objects of this chapter to remedy those and other similar evils"—Speech of Hon'ble Mr. Evans on the Transfer of Property Bill (1882).

The application of Regulation XVII of 1806 (Bengal Land Redemption and Foreclosure Regulation) is very strict and a mortgagee who relies upon it is bound to show that the proceedings were quite in accordance with sec. 8; and a mortgagee or his representative is not entitled to bring a suit for possession, (where the mortgage is without possession) on the basis of ownership if there has been an irregularity in the foreclosure proceedings—Ahsan Elahi v. Allaud-Din, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 809 (810-11), 40 P.L.R. 798; see also Madha Prasad v. Gajadhar, 11 Cal. 111 (P.C.), 11 I.A. 186 and Munshi Ram v. Nauranga, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 176, 72 I.C. 575.

323. Definitions of mortgage:—In section 2 (17) of the Indian Stamp Act, a mortgage is defined as follows :—"Mortgage-deed includes every instrument whereby, for the purpose of securing money advanced or to be advanced, by way of loan, on an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement, one person transfers, or creates, to or in favour of another, a right over or in respect of specified property." This definition is much wider and more general than that given in the Transfer of Property Act, because it applies to any specified property both moveable and immoveable, (whereas a mortgage of moveable property is excluded from T. P. Act) and refers to the performance of an engagement and is not restricted to an engagement giving rise to a pecuniary liability only. The two definitions are materially different. For the purpose of ascertaining what stamp-duty is payable on an instrument alleged to be a mortgage, the definition of mortgage as given in the Stamp Act, and not that given in this Act, is to be referred to; but the definition given here, and not the definition given in the Stamp Act, should be the sole guide for ascertaining the nature of a transfer and the incidents to which it may be subject —Empress v. Debendra, 27 Cal. 587.

Another definition is to be found in sec. 1 of the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act :—"Mortgage shall be taken to include every instrument, by virtue whereof immoveable property is in any manner conveyed, pledged, or charged as security for the repayment of money or money's worth lent, and to be reconveyed or released on satisfaction of the debt." This definition is narrower than that given in the T. P. Act, is as much as the purpose of the security is restricted to the repayment of a loan, and does not extend to the performance of an engagement. Moreover, it refers to an existing debt only, and not to a future debt.

The best definition of mortgage is that given in the present section. "Mortgage as understood in this country cannot be defined better than by the definition adopted by the Legislature in sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. That definition has not in any way altered the law, but on the contrary has only formulated in clear language the notions of mortgages as understood by the writers of text books on Indian mortgages, and every word of the definition is borne out by the decisions of the Indian Courts of Justice"—per Mahomood, J., in Gopal v. Parsotam, 5 All. 121 (137).

The general definition of a mortgage is contained in clause (a) in which the general legal effect of a mortgage is predicated. The definitions of the various classes of mortgage contained in the several clauses should not be read as amplifying the quantum of interest which a mortgage by law confers upon the mortgagee. These clauses only prescribe the forms in which the various mortgages are to be expressed—Ansur Subba Naidu v. Secretary of State, 1917 M.W.N. 794, 41 I.C. 770. Further, in order to determine whether a mortgage falls under any of the classes enumerated in clauses (b) to (g), it is necessary first to refer to clause (a). Clauses (b) to (g) do not give any self-sufficient definition, and do not by themselves declare any transaction whatever to be a mortgage. It is clause (a) which declares what transactions are mortgages, and it is necessary to determine whether there is a mortgage at all before the subsequent clauses are referred to—Mumtaz v. Lachhmi, A.I.R. 1929 All. 174 (176), 116 I.C. 807.

The Act in dealing with the definition of mortgage in this section does not lay down that a mortgage is a transfer of the proprietary rights in a case where the mortgagor is the owner of such proprietary rights and makes a mortgage of them. Of course, other rights than proprietary rights may also be mortgaged—Balbhaddar v. Raghubir, I.L.R. 1939 All. 484, A.I.R. 1939 All. 369 (372), 1939 A.L.J. 245.

A mortgagor is estopped from asserting that he is not in possession of the property mortgaged—Judunath v. Isar, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 47, 178 I.C. 198; see also Bholanath v. Balaram, 27 C.W.N. 607 (P.C.). But where the mortgagee knows already that the mortgagor is not in possession of the mortgaged properties and that he has only a doubtful or disputed title to them, and when in spite of such knowledge he takes a mortgage, the transaction does not amount to a mortgage within the definition of this section—Gajanand v. Prayag Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 48.

The essence of a transaction by way of loan on security is that the lender unwilling to rely solely on the personal liability of the borrower, requires in addition to be given a right in rem; and to insist in the same document a provision by which the borrower bestows the required right in rem, and a provision enabling the borrower to destroy it forthwith is a proceeding difficult to contemplate as probable. If it be desired to confer so drastic a power upon a mortgagor in the future, it will be necessary for those who frame the security to make express provision for that purpose in language free from all doubt or ambiguity—Nathu Mal v. Raman Mal, A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 124 (126), 67 I.A. 126, 41 C.W.N. 901, I.L.R. (1937) Lah. 245 167 I.C. 786.

A kootchit deed executed by a stake-holder of a chit fund of his property for the due performance of his obligations in connection with the chit transactions falls within the definition of this section, because it effects security of the property for the due performance of engagement which may result in pecuniary liability like simple mortgage-bonds—

Natesa v. Sahasranama, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 773, 103 I.C. 814. If mouzas A and B are specifically mortgaged and the mortgagee is given the right to sell mouza C if necessary, mouza C too is covered by the mortgage—Monimala Devi v. Indu Bala Debya, A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1295.

324. Characteristics of the several mortgages :—

(1) Simple mortgage :—(a) The mortgagor undertakes personal liability. (b) No possession is delivered. (c) There is no foreclosure (sec. 67). (d) No power of sale out of Court, but a decree for sale of the mortgaged property must be obtained. (e) It must be effected by a registered instrument even if the consideration is below Rs. 100 (sec. 59).

(2) Mortgage by conditional sale :—(a) The mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property. (b) The condition is that the sale shall be absolute in default of payment on a particular date or that the sale shall be void on such payment and the property retransferred. (c) The remedy of the mortgagee is by foreclosure and not by sale (sec. 67). (d) It must be by registered writing if the consideration is Rs. 100 or upward; if less than Rs. 100, it may be effected by delivery of the property or by a registered instrument (sec. 59). (e) It must be created by one document, and not by two documents (one for sale, and another for agreement of repurchase).

(3) Usufructuary mortgage :—(a) There is delivery of possession to the mortgagee. (b) He is to retain possession until repayment of the money and to receive rents and profits or part thereof in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage-money, or partly in lieu of interest and partly in payment of the mortgage-money. (c) There is redemption when the amount due is personally paid or is discharged by rents and profits received. (d) There is no remedy by sale or foreclosure (sec. 67). (e) If for Rs. 100 or upwards, it must be registered; if below Rs. 100, it may be by registered deed or by delivery of the property (sec. 59).

(4) English mortgage :—(a) It is followed by delivery of possession. (b) There is a personal covenant to pay the amount. (c) It is effected by absolute transfer of property with a provision for retransfer in case of repayment of the amount due. (d) The remedy is by sale and not by foreclosure (sec. 67). (e) Power of sale out of Court is conferred on certain persons under certain circumstances (sec. 69).

(5) Equitable mortgage :—(a) It is created in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, etc. (b) It is effected by deposit of material title-deeds; no delivery of possession takes place. (c) It is made to secure a debt or advances already made or to cover future advances. (d) No registration is necessary even if there is a writing recording the deposit (sec. 59). (e) The remedy is by sale and not by foreclosure (sec. 67). All provisions in this chapter relating to a simple mortgage are applicable to equitable mortgages (sec. 96).

(6) Anomalous mortgage :—(a) It now includes a simple mortgage usufructuary and a mortgage usufructuary by conditional sale. (b) Possession may or may not be delivered. (c) The remedy is by sale; or by foreclosure, if the terms of the mortgage permit it (sec. 67). (d) If for Rs. 100 or upward it must be registered ; if below Rs. 100, it may be by registered deed or by delivery of possession (sec. 59).

A stipulation for indemnifying the mortgagee in case dispossession takes place does not affect the nature of the mortgage—Sashi Bhusan v. Madhu Sudan, I.L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 28, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 522.

Enumeration not exhaustive :—This section enumerates six kinds of mortgages. But the Transfer of Property Act was not intended to be exhaustive. There are many mortgages known to English law which it would be difficult or impossible to bring within the terms of this Act, yet there can be no doubt that such mortgages would be enforceable in India—Bhupendra v. Wajihunnissa, 2 P.L.J. 293 (300), 39 I.C. 564.

Application in the Punjab :—Though the Act is not in force in the Punjab, the definitions of the various kinds of mortgages given in this section have always been accepted as correctly describing their essential ingredients and incidents—Lachhman Singh v. Nath Singh, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 401 (F.B.), 42 P.L.R. 560, 191 I.C. 583.

325. Construction :—In construing deeds of mortgage, effect should be given to the intention of the parties ; and this intention can be gathered from the terms of the deed. It is not the name given to a contract by the parties that determines the nature of the transaction. It is the contents of the agreement, the jural relation constituted by it, that determines whether it is, really a conveyance, a lease, a mortgage or a contract of some other nature—Abdul Bhai v. Kashi, 11 Bom. 462 ; Karam Chand v. Faqir, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 489 ; Polivedi Hanumayya v. Addanki Srinivasa Rao, 1955 Andhra W.R. 178. Thus, a deed, which on the face of it was described as a mortgage, stated that the grantee was already in possession under a previous mortgage by the grantor and was under the second deed to receive the profits in liquidation of interest so far as they would go, and that the grantor was not to be liable to repay the principal money or such balance of interest (if any) as might accrue upon it unless he adopted a son, and the grantee, unless that event happened, was to enjoy the property conveyed in right of purchase for the sum (principal and interest) due to him. Held, that the deed was a sale liable to be converted into a mortgage, though it was named by the parties as a mortgage-deed—Jamnadas v. Brijbhukhan, 2 Bom. 113. So also, as long as the nature of the transaction is substantially such as to classify it as belonging to a particular kind of mortgage, the mere calling it by a different name will not relegate it to another class—Macpherson on Mortgages, p. 127. But although generally speaking the name given by the parties to a document is not conclusive as to its nature, still the designation is not always to be lost sight of, especially where the document is ambiguous and is susceptible of more than one construction as to its nature and scope—Kalabhai v. Secretary of State, 29 Bom. 19. And so Butler in his edition of Coke on Littleton, writes :—“It may be laid down as a general rule, and subject to a very few exceptions, that where a conveyance or assignment of an estate is originally intended as a security for money, whether this intention appear from the deed itself or by any other instrument, it is always considered in equity as a mortgage and redeemable, even though there is an express agreement of the parties that it shall not be redeemable, or that the right of redemption shall be confined to a particular time or to a particular description of persons”.

Language free from all possible doubt would be required to establish a power given to a mortgagor to sell off the mortgaged property without the knowledge and consent of the mortgagee. The provision in the mortgage-deed that in case of a sale of any item of the mortgaged property, he would pay over the entire sale-proceeds to the mortgagee, did not authorize the mortgagor to sell any property without the mortgagee's knowledge and consent, but merely gave him power to redeem part without redeeming the whole—Nathu Mal v. Raman Mal, 41 C.W.N. 901 (P.C.).

In the absence of a stipulation that specific properties should be sold in lieu of compensation for loss in respect of the property sold, the document could not be construed to create a fresh mortgage over the property already mortgaged—Ram Khelawan v. Ramnandan, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 505.

326. Agreement of mortgage—Specific performance:—A mortgage is an accomplished transfer, and as such creates a right in rem; but a mere agreement of mortgage between the intending debtor and creditor does not create any such right, and such an agreement is not capable of specific performance, i.e., the Court cannot compel the parties to borrow or lend the money—Rogers v. Challis, (1859) 27 Beav. 175 (178, 179); Sheikh Galim v. Sadarjan Bibi, 43 Cal. 59; Ram Het v. Pokhar, 7 Luck. 237; Sichel v. Mosenthal, (1862) 30 Beav. 371 (377). The rule that specific performance cannot be granted in respect of a contract to lend money applied to a contract to lend to a company money payable by instalments upon the security of debentures to be issued by the company. The defendant agreed to borrow a sum of money from the plaintiff on certain security. The defendant afterwards obtained better terms from a third person and refused to perform his agreement with the plaintiff, who then brought a suit for specific performance. Held that such a suit would not lie—Rogers v. Challis (supra); South African Territories Ltd. v. Wellington, [1898] A.C. 309 (in this case it was held that damages would be the adequate relief). But the law on this point has been altered by statute. Sec. 122 of the Companies Act, 1956, provides that a contract with a company to take up and pay for any debentures of the company may be enforced by a decree for specific performance. The case of Sichel v. Mosenthal, (supra) was a converse case, and there a suit to compel a man to lend money was dismissed, and the Judge suggested that the proper remedy was an action for damages. A suit for specific performance of a contract to advance money being incompetent, any unpaid balance of the mortgage consideration cannot be attached in execution of a decree against the mortgagor on the ground that it is a debt due to the mortgagor who has only a remedy in a suit for damages—Sewa Singh v. Milkha Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 727, 17 Lah. 270, 164 I.C. 582. A mere agreement to mortgage cannot create any interest in the mortgaged property, nor does it create any charge. It only gives rise to a personal obligation. Where an agreement to mortgage a house was made in favour of A, and subsequently the house was mortgaged to B, and A then filed a suit for specific performance long after B's mortgage, then assuming that a decree for specific performance can be properly made in that suit, the decree would not relate back to the date of agreement so as to confer on A a priority over B's mortgage—Waman v. Janardan; A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 357, 40 Bom. L.R. 545.

A contract to lend money cannot be specifically enforced. But the case of a usufructuary mortgage stands on a different footing, particularly when possession has been delivered and the stipulation is that the profits are to be set off against the interest. If, in such a case the mortgagee does not pay the amount contracted to be paid, a suit will lie to recover the money. Here the executant has performed his part of the contract (by delivering possession) but the transferee has not done so. The suit is not really one for specific performance of a mere contract to lend money, but to compel the mortgagee to perform his part of the contract when he has obtained delivery of possession—Sheopati v. Jagdeo, 52 All. 761, 1930 A.L.J. 1141, A.I.R. 1931 All. 95 (97), 124 I.C. 764; Thakar Singh v. Jagat Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1 (2), 140 I.C. 495; Thakar Das v. Amar Chand, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 21. If the usufructuary mortgagee fails to pay a portion of the amount contracted to be paid, the mortgagor is entitled to bring an immediate suit for recovery of the money, instead of going into an account in future when a suit for redemption would be instituted—Sheopati v. Jagdeo, supra.

Where the mortgagee has advanced the money but the mortgagor refuses to execute a mortgage, the former can bring a suit for specific performance for compelling the mortgagor to execute a deed of mortgage, though of course it will be open to the latter to elect to repay the loan. Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., pp. 74-75. Where an agreement between a Company and H provided that "all stock-in-trade of the Company shall be under hypothecation to H, and that the Company will soon execute in favour of H a regular deed of mortgage of the land, etc., for the sum of Rupees five lakhs to meet any deficit that may be due to H for the advances made by him after availing of the stock under hypothecation to H as aforesaid:" held that the agreement created a right in H to obtain a regular deed of mortgage which was to be executed by the Company—Hukumchand v. Radha Kishen, 34 C.W.N. 506 (511) (P.C.), A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 76, 123 I.C. 157, 32 Bom. L.R. 533, 58 M.L.J. 453.

In the case of a mortgage by a member of a Hindu joint family of the entirety of a property, the purchaser however should not be compelled to complete the purchase where there is an admission of the mortgagor in the memorandum as to a previous mortgage that his share was only one-third and there were threats by other members of the family to assert their rights—Benares Bank v. Baloram Dey & Sons, 41 C.W.N. 520.

An agreement to execute a mortgage of immoveable property does not in India by itself constitute a mortgage or a charge upon the property—Hukum Chand v. Radha Kishen, supra; Venkataramaswami v. Imperial Bank, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 889 (892) (F.B.), (1938) 2 M.L.J. 461, 48 M.L.W. 401.

Where a mortgagee-purchaser is deprived of any item of the mortgaged property, by a stranger, the mortgagor must make good the loss sustained by the purchaser on account of the breach of covenant as to title involved in the contract of mortgage—Perumal v. Maruthanayaga, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 433, 165 I.C. 559.

327. "Transfer of interest" :—According to the definition given in this section, the first requisite of a mortgage is that there should be a transfer of an interest in immoveable property. The interest transferred depends upon the character of the mortgage. In a simple mortgage, the interest conveyed is the right to cause the property to be sold. In a mortgage by conditional sale and in an English mortgage, the actual ownership is transferred, subject, however, to a condition. In a usufructuary mortgage, the transfer made is of the right of possession and enjoyment of the usufruct.

Under the English system of law in cases where the ordinary form of mortgage in use in England before the passing of the Law of Property Act of 1925 is adopted, the whole of the mortgagor's interest passes to his mortgagee, notwithstanding that an equity of redemption remains in the mortgagor. This equitable right is, however, an estate in the land and is not merely a personal contract on the part of transferor. But in India, since the passing of the T. P. Act, there is no distinction in Indian law between law and equity in regard to the rights of mortgagors and mortgagees. This Act is a self-contained code by which alone the rights of mortgagor and mortgagee have to be ascertained—Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14, 43 C.W.N. 281. The Indian authorities recognize the principle that the distinction between law and equity has no place in Indian law—Ibid., at p. 287. By the Indian law the interest which remains in the mortgagor is a legal interest and its retention may, therefore, prevent the whole of the mortgagor's interest from passing to the mortgagee—Ibid., at p. 288. See also Bhupati v. Bon Behari, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 436. There is no doctrine of law in India which prevents a beneficiary under a trust from dealing with his interest by way of mortgage, though it is true enough that in India such an interest is not technically regarded as an equitable estate—Hem Chandra v. Suradhani, I.L.R. (1940) 2 Cal. 436 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 134, 45 C.W.N. 253.

A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. On the execution of a mortgage two distinct interests are carved out—(1) the mortgagee's right and (2) the mortgagor's right to redeem—Bharat v. Mt. Chadi, A.I.R. 1947 All. 27 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1946 All. 883. The transfer is as security for the repayment of a debt which subsists in a mortgage whereas it is extinguished in a sale—Manik v. Baldeo, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 327.

Mortgage and charge distinguished :—The words "transfer of an interest" distinguishes a mortgage from a charge. In a charge no right in rem is created, but the right is something more than a personal obligation, for it is a jus ad rem, that is, a right to payment out of property specified, while a simple mortgage is a right in rem. There is thus very little difference between a charge and a simple mortgage except that a charge is only good as against a subsequent transferee with notice. When a charge is created by act of party the specification of the particular fund or property negatives a personal liability and the remedy of the holder of the charge is against only the property charged. When there is in addition a personal covenant the security would become collateral to that personal covenant and the security would in that case appear to become a transfer of a right of sale to support the personal covenant and as the right of sale is a right in rem the transaction would be a mortgage. For this reason the absence of a personal liability is the principal test that distinguishes a charge from a simple mortgage—Benares Bank v. Har Prasad, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 482, 163 I.C. 69. See also Sher Singh v. Daya Ram, 13 Lah. 660 (667) (F.B.); Liladhar v. Shiwaji, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 125 (127), 165 I.C. 550.

A mortgage is a transfer of an interest and in this respect it differs from a charge. A charge-holder is only entitled to have his claim satisfied out of a particular property, but neither that property nor any interest therein is transferred to him. It is only by virtue of a decree for sale that an interest in the property can pass to him—Gobinda v. Dwarka Nath, 35 Cal. 837 (841); Rajah Siva Prasad v. Beni Madhab, 1 Pat. 387 (392); Altaf Begam v. Brij Narain, 51 All. 612, 116 I.C. 855, A.I.R. 1929 All. 281; Khemchand v. Mallo, 10 N.L.R. 81, 26 I.C. 601. "The broad distinction between a mortgage and a charge is this, that whereas a charge only gives right to payment out of particular fund or particular property without transferring that fund or property, a mortgage is in essence a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property. The line of division between a charge and a mortgage in England is a very clear one but in this country the division is not so well marked; and in fact there is very little difference between a charge and a simple mortgage as defined in this section"—per Das, J., in Raja Siva Prasad v. Beni Madhab, supra. The creation of a charge in specific property gives the charge-holder a right to recover a certain sum of money from the value of the property charged and to that extent reduces the interest of the creator of the charge in the property. A charge therefore is a transfer of an interest in property in the sense that an interest which has existed in the creator of the charge passes to the holder of the charge and creates an interest almost the same as an interest created by a simple mortgage—U. P. Government v. Manmohan, A.I.R. 1941 All. 345 (F.B.) overruling Manmohan v. Lower Ganges & Co., I.L.R. 1940 All. 558, A.I.R. 1940 All. 458, 1940 A.L.J. 449. Where a mortgagor having already mortgaged his lands with possession to the mortgagee, takes a further advance from him, on the security of the land already mortgaged, the second transaction does not amount to a fresh transfer of the land, consequently it is merely a charge and not a mortgage (under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act). But the case is different if the second transaction purports to cancel the earlier one or contains conditions substantially different from those contained in the original mortgage or an additional area of land—Sher Singh v. Daya Ram; 12 Lah. 660, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 465, 139 I.C. 49 (F. B.). In the absence of any express words indicating a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property, a document which entitles the creditor to recover his dues by attachment and sale of the property, and which contains a covenant against alienation does not create a mortgage but merely effects a charge—Royzuddi v. Kali Nath, 33 Cal. 985. Where a document simply creates a lien on a property and does not contain any words showing that there is a transfer of interest in the property and no question of redemption is involved, the deed does not constitute a mortgage but merely creates a charge—Sikandar Ara v. Hasan Ara, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 196, 165 I.C. 70. The difference between the two is material in this respect that while the transfer of an interest creates a right in rem which is available against all subsequent transferees irrespective of notice, a plea of purchase without notice is a good defence against a prior claimant who has merely a charge falling short of an interest in the property—Kishun Lal v. Ganga Ram, 13 All. 28. In other words, a mortgagee can follow the mortgaged property in the hands of any transferee from the mortgagor, whereas a charge can be enforced against a transferee only if it is shown that he has taken with notice of the charge—Royzuddi v. Kali Nath, 33 Cal. 985. This is now expressly provided in sec. 100. A mortgage is created only by act of parties, while a charge may be created either by act of parties or by operation of law. (See sec. 100).

It is not essential for the creation of a mortgage that there should be an express transfer of interest. It is sufficient if the instrument taken as a whole operates such transfer—Kola Venkatanarayana v. Vuppala Ratnom, 29 Mad. 531 (533); Balasubramania v. Sivaguru, 21 M.L.J. 562, 11 I.C. 629 (632); Ramabrahman v. Venkatanarasu, 23 M.L.J. 131, 16 I.C. 209 (210); Venkatarama v. Suppa Nandan, 27 M.L.J. 58, 24 I.C. 24. In a simple mortgage, the interest transferred is the right to have the property sold, and this need not necessarily be provided for in the deed in so many words; it may be inferred from the language used, and where such an agreement can be inferred, then there is a transfer of an interest—Dalip Singh v. Bahadur, 34 All. 446; Har Prasad v. Ram Chunder, 44 All. 37 (44) (F.B.), 19 A.L.J. 807, 63 I.C. 750; see also Sampuran Singh v. Ahmad Din; A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 274, 43 P.L.R. 277. Such a transfer may be implied from the nature of the transaction and the circumstances of the case. Thus, where a document, hypothecating a house as security for the payment of a debt, contained a full description of the boundaries of the house, and consolidated the several amounts due on prior mortgages of the same house, and further contained a covenant to pay, with an undertaking not to redeem a certain usufructuary mortgage before the present mortgage was redeemed, held that the parties intended to create a mortgage, that if it lacked apt words in expressing the transfer of interest, the defect was due to the imperfect power of expression of their minds, and that it was improbable that the creditors would have accepted a mere personal bond in substitution for two prior mortgages—Ponnuranga v. Thandavarada, 1915 M.W.N. 21, 26 I.C. 274; see also Har Prasad v. Ram Chunder, (supra). Though a deed does not expressly contain any words involving a transfer of any specific interest in immoveable property, still if it contains a provision "that as a guarantee for the repayment of the principal money we hereby mortgage and hypothecate the properties mentioned below, and we further declare that until repayment of this debt we shall not transfer the properties in any way," held that the deed is a valid mortgage and not a charge—Ananda Ram v. Dhanpat, 1 P.L.J. 563 (567, 568), 38 I.C. 37; Sheoratan v. Mahipal, 7 All. 258 (264) (F.B.). A bond contained the following words: "I am borrowing Rs. 300 from you, and executing this mortgage bond.....I promise to pay the money in the month of Magh, 1299.....As security for the payment of the money I do mortgage the following properties.....Until the said money is paid up I shall not alienate these properties in any way. If I raise any dispute in paying the money, you should institute a suit and recover the money by attachment and auction-sale of the said properties". Held that the deed created a mortgage and not a mere charge, although there was no transfer of any interest—Nabin Chand v. Raj Coomar, 9 C.W.N. 1001 (1002). In fact, this is the usual form in which mortgage bonds are drawn up in this country, and it is the universal judicial practice to treat documents in this form as simple mortgages—Ibid. The word 'panayam' when used in documents executed in Malabar means a mortgage, if the property covered by the 'panayam' deed is immoveable property; and when such a document contains a personal covenant by the mortgagor to pay the amount, the document is a document of simple mortgage, even if the transfer of interest is not formally expressed in it—Samandan v. Mamkoth, 33 M.L.J. 679, 42 I.C. 349. Where a document calling itself diggu lhogyam (a telegu word for usufructuary mortgage) provided that the creditor should receive rents and profits from a tenant in possession of the land for a certain number of years for the total of the principal and interest due, and it recited that the consideration was taken on the security of the land, held that the document was a mortgage-deed, as there was a transfer of an interest in immoveable property, and not merely an assignment of the income for the period—Anantha Iyer v. Ramaswami, 1914 M.W.N. 891, 26 I.C. 71. A bond contained the following stipulation: "In respect of this we have given to you in writing as a nazar gahan (i.e., sight mortgage) the fields which belong to ourselves and which we ourselves are enjoying.....If we do not pay according to contract you may sell the said fields through the Court and recover amount. If any balance remains, we will pay it off personally or by means of our other property"; held that the above stipulations created a mortgage and not a mere charge—Onkar v. Goverdhan, 14 Bom. 577. A borrowed a sum of money from B and mortgaged certain properties. A charge was created afterwards in favour of C by a consent decree. Subsequently B made a further advance to A and this sum was secured by an instrument described as a "further charge". The provisions in the first mortgage-deed transferring the property to the mortgagee by way of security was also incorporated in the deed of further charge: held that the deed of further charge was a transfer and therefore a mortgage and the rights of B under the deed of further charge ranked in priority to the rights of C under the consent decree—Bhupati v. Bon Behari, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 436.

But a security bond for refund of sale-proceeds in case of reversal of the decision in the appellate Court does not amount to a mortgage-deed when it does not expressly say that it is a hypothecation or mortgage and does not mention any person to whom the security is given. The liability in such a case is undertaken to the Court and the Court is not a juridical person and it can neither sue nor take property nor assign it (Raj Raghubir v. Jai Indar, 42 All. 158, 46 I.A. 228). A security bond which does not name the person to whom the money is to be paid does not create a charge also—Mehdi Ali v. Chuni Lal, A.I.R. 1929 All. 834, (1929)

A.L.J. 902, 119 I.C. 81. Where a security bond, after reciting an order of the Court made upon an application that the possession of certain immoveable property should not be delivered over to the plaintiff, stated that "we have for a sum not exceeding Rs. 300 made the properties mentioned below security", held that the document did not transfer an interest in the property but that it merely created a charge and not a mortgage—Rama Chariar v. Daraswami, 29 I.C. 605 (Mad.). A deed set out that the executant had borrowed a sum of money. Certain immoveable properties were specified without anything more. There was a covenant to repay and also a covenant not to alienate until repayment of the loan. Held, that there was merely an undertaking by the borrower not to alienate the property until the loan was repaid; but there was no transfer of an interest in the property to the creditor, nor did it give the creditor a right to put the property to sale; therefore the transaction was not a mortgage within this section and it is doubtful also whether it even created a charge on the property—Mohan Lal v. Indomati, 39 All. 244 (251, 252) (F.B.); Jawahir v. Indomati, 36 All. 201 (per Richards, C.J.).

328. 'Specific' immoveable property :—The next requisite of a mortgage is that the immoveable property must be distinctly specified. The property intended to be mortgaged must be described so that it may be readily recognised and identified—Najibulla v. Nasir, 7 Cal. 196 (198); Bhoneswar v. Ram Khelawan, 5 I.C. 654. The object of having the property defined specifically is to render the identification as easy as possible, and to shut the door against fraud and controversy—Carpenter v. Deen, 23 Q.B.D. 566 (at p. 574). Thus, where under a bond the obligor agreed that if the principal and interest be not paid up within the stipulated period, the obligee would have liberty to realise the amount due from "my moveable and immoveable property," held that the language of the bond was too vague to create a charge on any, definite estate—Collector v. Betti Moharani, 14 All. 162; Baldeo Rai v. Murli Rai, 10 A.L.J. 120, 16 I.C. 638. A mortgage of "my house and landed property" is void for uncertainty—Darshan Singh v. Hanwanta, 1 All. 272. In Ramsiddh v. Balgovind, 9 All. 158, the obligors of a bond described themselves as residents of a certain place and said that they pledged their property for a debt; the hypothecation was held to be too indefinite to be acted upon. But if they had described themselves as the owners of certain property and then gone on to pledge their rights and interests therein, the case would have been different—Deoji v. Pitambur, 1 All. 275. For instance, where the mortgagor described certain property as belonging to him and then recited that "my rights and property in the aforesaid talook shall remain pledged and hypothecated for this debt," held that the recital created a good mortgage as the property was clearly defined—Bishan Dayal v. Udit Narain, 8 All. 486. Where the property was described, as "villages granted to the executant by Government in perpetuity," held that the property was sufficiently identified, although the names of the villages were not mentioned—Kanhia Lal v. Muhammad, 5 All. 11. See also Land Mortgage Bank v. Abdul Kasim, 26 Cal. 395 (P.C.). A deed describing the mortgaged property as "my zemindary property" without any further specification was held not void for uncertainty, as the words were capable of being made certain by proof of the mortgagor having at the date of the deed owned a specific zemindary interest—Shadi Lai v. Thakur Das, 12 All. 175. A document of mortgage did not give the boundaries of the lands, but specified them as "my jirayati and inam lands which I own at the village of my residence". Held that the description was sufficient to satisfy the requirements of this section and that it created a mortgage—Dakkata v. Sasanapuri, 1 L.W. 96, 22 I.C. 524.

Where a mortgagor mortgages his right to recover rent from the tenant in respect of a certain holding and makes reference to the area of such holding and the amount of rent due thereof in the mortgage-deed, the mortgage is really a mortgage of an interest in immoveable property, as rent is the first charge on the holding—Ramzan v. Babu Lal, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 16, 18 P.L.T. 801, 173 I.C. 64. Mortgage with possession of fruit-bearing trees is a mortgage, either of immoveable property or at least of an interest in immoveable property—Shiv Dayal v. Puttoo Lal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 50, 54 All. 437, 140 I.C. 491.

Under sec. 3 growing crops are not immoveable property. Therefore, a mortgage of such crops does not require registration. A mortgage of crops not in existence amounts to a mere agreement to hypothecate the future crops when they come into existence. Such an agreement is valid. As soon as the crops grow, the hypothecation becomes complete and attaches to the crops and creates equitable interest in the mortgagee. Such a charge can be enforced against all subsequent transferees with notice but will be of no avail against a transferee without notice—Babu Ram v. Ram Sarup, A.I.R. 1926 All. 164, 89 I.C. 410.

It may be held, as a general rule, that if there is a mutual mistake in a mortgage in the description of property and the same mistake is reproduced in the decree, equity may go back to the original transaction and re-form both the mortgage and the decree so as to make them conform to the intention of the parties, but in a case where the decree has been executed and title has passed to a purchaser, fresh considerations may arise—Bipin v. Priya Brata, 26 C.W.N. 36.

329. Consideration of mortgage :—A mortgage must be supported by consideration ; without consideration a mortgage becomes unenforceable and no charge can be created on the property—Ramasami v. Sundara, 23 I.C. 805 (Mad.) ; Kumarappan v. Narayana, 35 I.C. 455 (Mad.) ; Ralla Ram v. Malawa Ram, 123 P.W.R. 1911, 12 I.C. 308. A mortgage is not rendered invalid by the mere fact of non-payment of a part of the consideration by the mortgagee. This fact does not entitle the mortgagor to rescind the contract at his option—Manicka v. Arumugha, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 340, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 7. But where a person granted along with another a mortgage which was for the benefit of the latter and undertook joint liability for the mortgage-debt, it has been held that he is bound by the mortgage, although he may receive no part of the consideration money and the entire amount is received by the other mortgagor—Annamoyi v. Umesh, 40 C.W.N. 339. Where the mortgagor completes his part of the contract, but the mortgagee fails to discharge the consideration, the mortgagor has a transferable claim and his assignee is entitled to sue the mortgagee for the amount—Sardar Khan v. Ram Mal,

A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 196, 162.I.C. 698; Sheopati v. Jagdeo, A.I.R. 1931 All. 95.

The consideration of a mortgage may be either (1) money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan; (2) an existing or future debt; or (3) the performance of an engagement giving rise to a pecuniary liability.

'Money advanced' includes "existing debt" and something more, for it will comprehend a debt which has become barred by limitation or otherwise irrecoverable, whereas an 'existing debt' means a debt which is not so barred.

Where there is a sale for a price and a mortgage on the same property for the price, the mortgage being the consideration for the sale, if it is found that the vendor had no title to the property conveyed, the mortgage is devoid of consideration—Ramanujulu v. Gajraja Arumal, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 146, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 560.

Proof :—Where a mortgage-deed is proved to have been executed and the document contains an acknowledgement of the receipt of consideration, this is strong prima facie evidence that the consideration was actually received—Naranjan v. Ghulam Mahammad, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 463, 40 P.L.R. 313. Where there is an endorsement by the Sub-Registrar upon the mortgage-deed about the payment of money in his presence, the onus lies upon the mortgagor or his legal representatives to rebut the endorsement—Mt. Mangala v. Mahadeo, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 443, 170 I.C. 523.

"For the purpose of securing, etc." :—A mortgage is created for the purpose of securing a debt or other obligation. A transfer which is made by way of discharging a debt is not a mortgage—Nidha Sha v. Murli, 25 All. 115 (P.C.); Abdulbhai v. Kashi, 11 Bom. 462.

Money advanced :—But the terms of an agreement entered into by the plaintiff and defendants, a pending suit was compromised, and payment of an ascertained balance found due from the plaintiff was secured by the defendants (creditors) being placed in possession of the plaintiff's lands for a certain number of years, with the right of enjoying all rents and profits thereof subject to the payment of a fixed rent, part of which was to be paid to the plaintiff and the remainder to be retained by the creditors towards payment of the debt. Held that the agreement was a mortgage, and redeemable on the usual terms—Mashook Ameen v. Marem Reddy, 8 M.H.C.R. 31. Similarly, a document whereby the executant gave possession of his land to his creditor to secure his debt and to have the debt discharged out of the rents and profits, was held to be a mortgage—Venkateswara v. Keshava, 2 Mad. 187.

"To be advanced" :—A mortgage may be given not only for an existing debt but also as a security against advances to be made in future. Such a case may arise where for instance a mortgage is given as a running security for the balance of an account—Henniker v. Wigg, 4 Q.B. 792; Ahmedabad People's Co-operative Bank Ltd. v. Pradip Amratlal, A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 482. Where the mortgagor allows a portion of the mortgage-money to remain with the mortgagee in a deposit account in such a way that he could draw upon it and obtain the money at any time, the consideration of the mortgage is not only the money actually taken, but also the money left in the hands of the mortgagee and 'to be advanced' when occasion requires—Hari Ram v. Sheo Dayal, 11 All. 136.

If the consideration for a mortgage is a mere promise to pay a particular debt, the mortgagee may claim repayment of the full amount of the debt. But where the liability is in respect of amounts advanced by the mortgagee for the discharge of a particular debt, he is entitled only to what he has actually paid to discharge the debt—Sundaram v. Mannadiar, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 197, I.L.R. 1947 Mad. 411.

Future debt :—A mortgage-deed provided : "The mortgagee shall enjoy the profits of the mortgaged land in lieu of interest. I, the executant, shall continue to pay to the mortgagee every year the deficiency in the amount of interest ; and in case of default of payment of the same in any year the mortgagee shall in that year have power to recover it from a nine-anna Zemindary share, and other moveable and immoveable property." Held that the document created a valid mortgage of the nine-anna Zemindary share for securing the payment of deficiency of interest that might arise in future—Bhola Das v. Bish Nath, 10 A.L.J. 162, 16 I.C. 982.

A bond addressed to the Registrar of the High Court was as follows. "We the appellants to England put a portion of our Zemindary as per schedule in security for the Rs. 4,000, being the amount of costs of the respondents to England, stipulating that till passing of an order by the Privy Council we shall not sell, mortgage or create encumbrance of any other kind." Held that the bond amounted to a mortgage, because its effect was to transfer to the Registrar an interest in specific immoveable property to secure a future debt which might become due from the appellants to the respondents—Tokhan v. Girwar, 32 Cal. 494 (496); Girindra v. Bejoy Gopal, 26 Cal. 246 (249); Nagaruru v. Tangatur, 31 Mad. 330 (332). But see Janki Kuar v. Sarup, 17 All. 99 (102).

Contingent liability :—The hypothecation of property for the purpose of securing a future liability to pay the mortgage-money in case the mortgagee should be deprived of possession of the mortgaged property, amounts to a mortgage, because a mortgage can be created for the discharge of contingent liability—Nand Lal v. Dharamdeo, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 288, 78 I.C. 457. Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 198.

Engagement giving rise to a pecuniary liability :—The word "engagement" is not defined either in this or the Contract Act, but it clearly means a contract as defined in sec. 2 of the latter Act. Thus, where the object of the mortgage was to secure the delivery by the mortgagors of a certain quantity of indigo on a certain day, and the parties had assessed the amount of the pecuniary liability which might arise in anticipation of a breach, the mortgage was held to be valid, being for the purpose of securing the "performance of an engagement" as provided by the definition. See Macnaghten's Mortgage, 7th Ed., p. 654. See also Bhola Das v. Bish Nath, 10 A.L.J. 162, 16 I.C. 982, cited above, which was a case of mortgage for securing the performance of an engagement, viz., the payment of deficiency of interest.

The term "pecuniary liability" means a legal obligation to pay damages whether liquidated or not—Naib Ram v. Shib Dut, 5 All. 238. A vendor executed a document of indemnity agreeing that if any prior lien or charge should be disclosed on the property, he would repay the whole money with interest, and he hypothecated certain property to secure repayment of the money; held that there was clearly an engagement which gave rise to a pecuniary liability and that the terms amounted to a mortgage—Niaz Ahmad v. Mangu Lal, 5 A.L.J. 723; Narayana-samy v. Ramasamy, 12 L.W. 674, 60 I.C. 611. The defendant borrowed paddy from the plaintiff and executed a bond agreeing to repay the paddy with interest thereon (payable in paddy), and as security for the realisation of the paddy, hypothecated certain immoveable property. The bond provided that in default of payment of the paddy the plaintiff would be entitled to realise the claim with interest thereon by sale of the property hypothecated. Held that the transaction was a mortgage. The essence of the matter was that the land was made security for the value of the paddy, because upon failure to deliver the paddy the mortgagee became entitled to recover the price thereof by sale of the land. So, the parties entered into an engagement which, if not performed by the delivery of the paddy, would give rise to a pecuniary liability—Ramchand v. Iswar Chandra, 48 Cal. 625 (632) (F.B.), 25 C.W.N. 57, 61 I.C. 539.

330. Part-payment of consideration :—A mortgage does not cease to be enforceable merely because only a part of the consideration has been paid and the balance remains unpaid. The mortgagee is entitled to a lien on the mortgaged property to the extent of the amount actually advanced—Venkatapathi v. Venkata, 47 I.C. 563 (Mad.); Navunni v. Ramaswami, 52 I.C. 738, 10 L.W. 169; -Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Subbaraya, 1918 M.W.N. 146, 43 I.C. 871; Makhan Lal v. Hanuman-baksh, 2 P.L.J. 168, 38 I.C. 877; Bajrangi Sahai v. Udit Narain, 10 C.W.N. 932; Rajani Kumar v. Gour, 35 Cal. 1051 (1057); Rashik Lal v. Ram Narain, 34 All. 273; Rajai Tirumal v. Pandla Muthial Naidu, 35 Mad. 114, 9 I.C. 289; Motichand v. Sagun, 29 Bom. 46; Bhagabati v. Narayan, 31 Bom. 552. See also Hukmichand v. Pioneer Mills Ltd., 2 Luck. 299, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 55 (58), 99 I.C. 483; Fazal v. Milkha, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 193, 145 I.C. 182; State of Kerala v. Cochin Chemical Refiners Ltd. A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1361. Thus, where a part only of the money mentioned in the mortgage-deed has been advanced, and there is no suggestion that the mortgagor has cancelled the contract or that he had power to do so, the mortgage is perfectly valid to the extent of the money actually advanced, and the mortgagee is entitled to a decree—Bajrangi Sahai v. Udit Narain, supra. Where part of the consideration is void or fails or the mortgagee makes default in paying it, the right principle seems to be that the mortgage is good to the extent of the consideration that has validity passed—Rajai Tirumal v. Pandla Muthial, 35 Mad. 114 (118), dissenting from Subba Rau v. Deva Shetti, 18 Mad. 126. "If the mortgagee advances only a part of the sum contemplated in the mortgage, it is a valid security for so much as he does advance and for so much only. For the advance actually made, the mortgage is good against the mortgagor's assignee in bankruptcy"—Jones on Mortgages, Vol. I, Sec. 387. Where the execution and registration of a bond have created in favour of the mortgagee a transfer of an interest in the mortgaged property, the mere non-payment of a portion of the consideration does not render the bond inoperative and invalid, unless there was an intention on the part of the parties that the terms of the bond would not be given effect to until the entire consideration money was paid. This intention is to be proved in each case—Makhan Lal v. Hanumanbakhsh, 2 P.L.J. 168 (174, 175), 38 I.C. 877. The validity of a mortgage does not depend upon passing of consideration at its creation. Where the debtors executed a mortgage to secure the interest of the Bank with regard to the demand loan account of the debtors, the mortgage does not become invalid because the consideration shown therein was not credited by the Bank on the date of execution towards the amount due from the debtors—Thomcos Bank v. Mathew, A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 234.

Remedy of mortgagor :—Where the mortgagee paid only a portion of the consideration of the mortgage, a suit by the mortgagor to compel the mortgagee to pay the balance of the consideration is not maintainable; but it is open to the mortgagor to sue the mortgagee for damages for breach of the agreement to lend money or he may redeem the mortgagee on payment of the amount actually received—Anakaran v. Saidamadath, 2 Mad. 79; Yadavendra v. Srinivasa, 47 Mad. 698 (699), A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 62, 80 I.C. 5; Sheikh Galim v. Sadarjan, 43 Cal. 59 (61, 63). But in the case of a possessory mortgage where the mortgage has been completed and possession given but the full amount of the consideration has not been paid, a suit by the mortgagor for the balance of the amount due has been held to be maintainable as a suit for compensation and the measure of the compensation is the difference between the amount stipulated to be paid and the amount actually paid. Such a suit is not for the specific performance of the contract—Thakur Das v. Amar Chand, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 21.

331. Mortgage-money—Interest :—A mortgagee, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, is entitled to treat the interest due under a mortgage as a charge upon the mortgaged property; and the mortgagor, at the time of redemption, is bound to pay the interest also, and not the principal debt alone—Ganga Ram v. Natha Singh, 5 Lah. 425 (427, 428), (P.C.), A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 183, 80 I.C. 820, 29 C.W.N. 558; Badhawa v. Akbar Ali, 9 Lah. L.J. 428, 103 I.C. 752, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 817 (819); Ram Kishore v. Ram Nandan, 25 A.L.J. 1086, A.I.R. 1928 All. 99 (101), 108 I.C. 149; Abbas v. Ramdas, 9 Lah. 140, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 342 (343), 112 I.C. 153; Ram Ratan v. Aditya, 3 Luck. 459, 112 I.C. 481, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 273 (275); Sir Md. Ejaz Rasul v. Sayid Ali, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 498 (501), 1941 O.W.N. 768, 194 I.C. 615; Suraj Mal v. Chander Bhan, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 129, 41 P.L.R. 80. Even though the mortgagors make themselves personally liable for the payment of the interest, such personal liability is not incompatible with the fact that the interest forms also a charge on the property—Manghi v. Dial Chand, 27 P.L.R. 643, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 624, 96 I.C. 477. In spite of personal liability undertaken by the mortgagor to pay deficiency in profits, the mortgagee in possession is entitled to recover the interest from the mortgaged property—Sir Md. Ejaz Rasul v. Saiyid Ali, supra. So also, the mere fact that there is an express reference to interest in the personal covenant, and no express reference to interest in the hypothecation clause, does not show that interest is not charged on the property—Rang Raj v. Sheonarain, 9 P.L.T. 785, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 398 (399), 110 I.C. 594.

The mortgaged property is liable to be sold not only for the principal sum secured but also for the interest—Jainandan v. Baij Nath, 2 P.L.T. 229, 63 I.C. 297 (301). But this section does not enable a mortgagee to make a claim to interest which is not given to him by the mortgage-bond. Thus, a property was mortgaged with possession to the plaintiff; under the terms of the mortgage the profits were to be enjoyed in lieu of interest and if after the stipulated period the principal amount was not paid, it was to be recovered without interest by sale of the mortgaged property. Held that under the terms of the bond the property was a security only for the amount borrowed and not for interest, that the interest was payable only out of the profits, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover only the principal amount by sale of the mortgaged property—Manik Chand v. Rangappa, 45 Bom 523 (526, 527), 22 Bom. L.R. 1435, 59 I.C. 765. See also Nammalwar v. Krishnaswami, 16 L.W. 743, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 71, 72 I.C. 987.

A mortgagee is under no duty to recover his mortgage-money as soon as possible and if he does not do so he does not lose his right to get interest—Bhag Chand v. Sujan Singh, A.I.R. 1938 Pesh 73 (75).

Post diem interest :—Unless the terms of a mortgage document show that it was the intention of the parties that no interest should be paid subsequent to the date when the mortgage falls due, post diem interest is payable till the date when the money is actually realised by the mortgagee. Even though the mortgage is an English mortgage and confers a power of private sale on the mortgagee in default of payment of principal on the due date still the mortgagee will be entitled to post diem interest, and he is not bound to exercise the power of sale under penalty of losing his right to subsequent interest—Agnes Campbell v. Audikesavalu, 20 L.W. 153, 82 I.C. 399, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 736 (740). When the deed is silent as to the payment of post diem interest, the presumption is that the mortgagor will continue to pay interest at the stipulated rate calculated up to the time of tender or payment or the institution of a suit by the mortgagee—Mahadeo v. Dhiraj, 44 All. 772 (774), following Mathura Das v. Raja Narindra, 19 All. 39 (P.C.); Bundesri v. Ganga Saran, 20 All. 171 (P.C.); Sarala v. Jogendra, 25 Cal. 246; Amar Singh v. Baij Nath, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 378, 93 I.C. 958. The Lahore High Court also holds that if the mortgagor fails to make payment of the mortgage-debt within the stipulated time, and the deed contains no express provision for the payment of interest after the due date, the mortgagee is entitled to damages for non-payment of the debt in due time, and the measure of damages would usually be the same as the rate of interest stipulated for by the parties—Budhu v. Niamat, 4 Lah. 406, 75 I.C. 375, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 632 (633); Motan Lal v. Muhammad Bakhsh, 3 Lah. 200 (F.B.), 66 I.C. 771, A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 254; Abbas v. Ramdas, 9 Lah. 140, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 342 (344), 112 I.C. 153.

Other Cases :—Where the mortgagees are to enjoy the profits of the property in lieu of interest, presumably the interest contemplated by the parties is the prevailing rate of interest—Thakur Singh v. Jagat Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1, 140 I.C. 495.

Where a mortgage-bond contains independent personal covenant to pay interest at some regular intervals, besides providing for principal with interest on demand, the mortgagee can sue for interest every time there is a breach of the covenant—Ma Shive v. Maung Ba, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 113.

A mortgagee is entitled to the rate of interest stipulated for in the mortgage-deed, and unless there are good grounds for depriving him of that right, the rate agreed upon cannot be disallowed—Waman v. Janardan, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 357, 40 Bom. L.R. 545; Jagmohan v. Jugal Kishore, 36 C.W.N. 4 (P.C.). As regards a stipulation for higher rate of interest in default the rule in England has been stated thus: "It is well-settled, if not an intelligible rule, that if the mortgagee wishes to stipulate for a higher rate of interest in default of punctual payment, he must reserve the higher rate as the interest payable under the mortgage and provide for its reduction in case of punctual payment, and he cannot effect this object by reserving the lower rate and making the higher the penalty for non-payment at the appointed time, because it is said an agreement of the latter kind being nomini pænae is relievable in equity"—Fisher & Lightwood's Law of Mortgage, 7th Edn. (1931), p. 745.

By an arrangement between the parties the consideration for a mortgage was left with the mortgagee for payment of certain debts of the mortgagor. The mortgagee paid the debts some time after: held that in settling the account between the mortgagor and mortgagee interest should be calculated on the debts paid only from their dates of payment by the mortgagee—Sm. Nathuni v. Dharanidhar, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 156 (158), 15 Pat. 742, 165 I.C. 310.

331A. Restriction on rate of interest:—Hindu Law—Under the Hindu law a debtor is not liable to pay at one time interest which exceeds the principal and the excess ceases to be recoverable—Govind v. Malkarjunappa, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 133, 107 I.C. 205. This rule of damdupat is in force in the Presidency of Bombay (including Sind) [Dhondhu v. Narayan, 1 Bom. H.C.R. 47; Gopal v. Gangaram, 20 Bom. 721; Ali v. Shabji, 21 Bom. 85; Dauood v. Vullubhdas, 18 Bom. 227; Har Lal v. Nagar, 21 Bom. 38; Dagdusa v. Ram Chandra, 20 Bom. 611; Nusserwanji v. Laxman, 30 Bom. 452], in Berar [Jairam v. Debidayal, 46 I.C. 789; Ram Chandra v. Radha, 10 N.L.R. 96] and the area subject to the ordinary original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court [Nabin v. Ramesh, 14 Cal. 781], but it is not applicable outside such jurisdiction [Het Narain v. Ram Deni, 12 C.L.R. 590] or in the Madras Presidency [Annaji v. Raghubai, 6 Mad. H.C.R. 400; Subramania v. Subramania, 18 M.L.J. 245]. The rule is applicable in the above-mentioned areas only in cases where the debtor is a Hindu—see Dauood v. Vullubhdas, supra; Hari Lal v. Nagar, supra; Jeewanbai v. Manordas, 35 Bom. 199; Ali v. Shabji, supra; Abdul v. Sheikh Nizam, 102 I.C. 41; Narayan v. Syed Hafiz, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 21 (25), 87 I.C. 264.

The rule of damdupat is applicable to mortgages—Kunja Lal v. Narsamba, 42 Cal. 826; Jeewanbai v. Manordas, supra; Asanand v. Tulsan, 15 I.C. 824. The Madras High Court has, however, held that the rule does not apply to mortgages executed after the Transfer of Property Act came into force—Madhwa v. Venkata, 26 Mad. 662. But it is submitted that there is nothing in this Act which can be construed as abrogating the rule of damdupat.

Statute Law :—Under the Usurious Loans Act, X of 1918 (as amended by Act XXVIII of 1926), secs. 2 and 3, where in a suit for enforcement or redemption of any security, whether heard ex parte or otherwise, the Court has reason to believe that the interest is excessive, the Court may re-open the transaction, take an account and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest and if anything has been paid or allowed in account in respect of such liability, order the creditor to repay any sum which it considers to be repayable in respect thereof. The Act does not definitely say what rate of interest is "excessive", but in a general way indicates what may be regarded as excessive—sec. 3 (2) of the above Act. Where in a mortgage-bond the rate of interest stipulated was 24 per cent per annum and the mortgagee allowed the interest to accumulate obviously with the intention of absorbing the entire property, it was held that the interest was very high and it was reduced to 6 per cent.—Ram Ajodhya v. Feringi Tewari, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 3, 160 I.C. 681; see also Jessore Loan Co. v. Shailaja Nath, 59 Cal. 722. But where interest on a mortgage was payable at 12 per cent. per annum, merely because compound interest was payable on default to pay interest regularly, the rate of interest was not held to be excessive—Abdul v. Sheo Dayal, A.I.R. 1934 All. 152, 55 All. 496, 151 I.C. 900.

A mortgage-deed provided that the sum of Rs. 2,000, which was borrowed thereunder, should be repaid in eight annual instalments of Rs. 250 each, such instalments to count both towards principal as well as interest on the entire sum. It was further provided that "in default of payment of sums due in any instalment the sum remaining unpaid on that date shall be added to the principal and the entire amount become payable at once irrespective of future instalments, the entire sum carrying interest at 1 per cent. per mensem compound with yearly rests. Held, that the stipulation for payment of compound interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum was in the nature of penalty and was not binding on the mortgagor—Ramamurti v. Subbarao, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 481, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 491, 1939 M.W.N. 323. Where the security was good and there was no reason why the suit should have been delayed for 13 years, the High Court reduced the rate of interest from 1 per cent. compound to 1 per cent, simple per mensem—Sitaram v. Krishnarao, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 156, 1940 N.L.J. 179, 190 I.C. 641.

The Provincial Legislatures have, however, in many Provinces definitely provided what rates of interest are to be regarded as excessive. Thus, the Bengal Money Lenders Act, VII of 1933, has enacted that where in any suit in respect of any money lent after the commencement of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918, it is found that the interest charged exceeds the rate of 15 per cent. per annum in the case of a secured loan or 25 per cent. per annum in the case of an unsecured loan or that there is a stipulation or rests at intervals of less than 6 months, the Court shall presume for the purposes of section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918, that the interest charged is excessive. In secs. 4 and 6 of the said Bengal Act the rule of damdupat has been adopted, "notwithstanding anything in any other act". Section 5 of the same Act enacts that interest exceeding 10 per cent. per annum shall not be recoverable in respect of any loan made, after the commencement of the Act, under a contract which provides for the payment of compound interest. The rate of interest has further been scaled down by sec. 30 of the Bengal Money-lenders Act, 1940.

For more or less similar provisions and other similar Acts recently passed by other Provincial Legislatures see the Central Provinces Act, XI of 1934, Assam Money Lenders Act, IV of 1934.

332. When mortgage takes effect :—In the absence of a contract or stipulation to the contrary, a mortgage is complete and a 'transfer of interest' is effected, not when the consideration for it is paid or made good, but when the mortgage-contract is entered into regardless of whether and when consideration is paid or made good. The covenant or stipulation to the contrary may be express or implied, the question in such cases being—When did the parties intend that the transfer should take effect? The presumption would be in favour of immediate transfer, but this presumption could be rebutted by proof of an express stipulation to the contrary or by proof of facts and circumstances from which a contrary intention might reasonably be inferred—Allah Ditta v. Nazar Din, 53 P.R. 1916 (F.B.). Delivery of possession is also not essential unless it is specifically agreed that the mortgage bond will not be effective if the deed is not delivered—Ram Rup v. Jang Bahadur, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 566, 30 Pat. 391. A mortgage is perfected by registration, and unless the bond provides to the contrary it takes effect from the date of registration and not from the date when the consideration money is subsequently paid. The words "future debt" show that a mortgage will become effective even though the consideration has not yet been paid. Therefore, where after the registration of a mortgage the mortgagor sold the property to a third person by a registered deed, and subsequently the mortgagee paid the consideration money for the mortgage to the mortgagor, held that mortgagee's right prevailed over that of the vendee—Raghunath v. Amir Baksh, 1 Pat. 281, 3 P.L.T. 307, 65 I.C. 329, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 299. The language of sec. 58 is clear, and unless the parties contemplated the bringing into existence of the mortgage on a future date, the rule is that the mortgage takes effect on the date of execution of the mortgage, even though it is made to secure a future debt. And a second mortgagee cannot obtain priority on the ground that at the time when the first mortgage was created there was no debt owing from the mortgagor to the first mortgagee—Narayanasamy v. Ramasamy, 12 L.W. 674, 60 I.C. 611 (613).

A mortgage by the administrator on the grant of probate does not become invalid merely on account of subsequent revocation of the probate by the Court—Neogi v. Neogi, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 43, 174 I.C. 186. Twelve years possession on the basis of an unregistered mortgage deed does not give rise to a mortgage by prescription and hence a suit for redemption must be dismissed—Hansia v. Bakhtawarmal, A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 102.

Transfer :—Where a mortgage is transferred without the privity of the mortgagor, the transferee takes subject to the state of account between the mortgagor and mortgagee at the date of the transfer, but not subject to any independent debt in no way connected with the mortgage—Subramania v. Subramania, 40 Mad. 683.

Renewal :—The existence of a mortgage for a certain fixed period does not prevent the parties from renewing the mortgage and cancelling the old one before the expiry of its term—Kizhakkepati v. Chekunni, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 520, 170 I.C. 242.

SIMPLE MORTGAGE::—Vernacular names :—In Bengal a simple mortgage is called Bandhaki Khat or Rehan; in U.P. it is known as Rehan, Arh or Mushtaghraq with grammatical variations. In Bombay, it is called drista Bandhaka, nazar gahana or taran gahan. In Madras, it is designated as drista bandhaka or Idu adamanam. In the Ganjam district, it is known by the name of Tanaka.

333. Incidents of simple mortgage :—The characteristics of a simple mortgage are : (1) that there must be a loan ; (2) that the mortgagor must have bound himself personally to repay the loan ; (3) that to secure the loan he has transferred to the mortgagee the right to have specific immoveable property sold in the event of his having failed to repay ; and (4) that possession of the property has not been and is not to be transferred to the mortgagee during the pendency of the mortgage—Om Prakash v. Mukhtar Ahmad, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 486, 42 P.L.R. 660 ; Dalip Singh v. Bahadur, 34 All. 446 ; see also Haji Khan v. Choithu Ram, A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 41, 184 I.C. 585. These stipulations may be express or appear by necessary implication from the terms of the particular transaction. Thus a promise to pay necessarily arises out of the acceptance of the loan. It is implicit in the transaction itself that the obligor is under a personal liability to repay, unless this liability is excluded by the terms of the contract, expressly or impliedly, as for example, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage or a mortgage by conditional sale, where the agreement is to repay out of a particular property or fund alone and in a particular manner—Om Prakash v. Mukhtar Ahmad, supra ; see also Ram Narain v. Adhindra, 44 I.A. 87, 44 Cal. 388 (P.C.). The mortgagee, in the case of a simple mortgage, has, in the event of default being made in the payment of the debt, two causes of action, the one arising out of the breach of the personal obligation, and the other arising out of the contract of hypothecation. He may put both these causes of action in suit at once or he may pursue the one remedy at one time and the other at another. If he sues on the personal undertaking only, he obtains what is known as a money-decree ; if he sues on the contract of hypothecation, he obtains an order for the sale of the property—Wahid-un-nissa v. Gobardhan, 22 All. 453. Both remedies may be pursued at the same time, although of course the claimant cannot recover more than the amount due on the obligation—Muni Reddi v. Venkata, 3 M.H.C.R. 241. His failure to seek one or other of the two remedies in the same suit does not in any case bar his right to enforce the remaining remedy by a separate suit, since the causes of action in the two cases are different—Piari v. Khiali Ram, 3 All. 857.

Notwithstanding the pledge, the mortgagor remains the owner of the property, and may deal with it in any manner he pleases, not inconsistent with the condition of the mortgage. Subject to the charge created by the mortgage, he may alienate his property in part or wholly—Wahid- un-nissa v. Gobardhan, 22 All. 453. In the absence of express provision to the contrary, the rents and profits from the property forming the subject-matter of a simple mortgage belong to the mortgagor, and do not form part of the security for repayment of the mortgage-money or the interest of the loan—Ma Hnim v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 321 (F.B.), (1939) R.L.R. 403, 183 I.C. 728 (F.B.).

A simple mortgage is a contract creating a personal obligation to repay the loan. It also operates as a conveyance of an interest in the property mortgaged. It is "a right in rem realizable by sale given to a creditor by way of accessory security to a right in personam." Interest which passes to the mortgagee is not the ownership of the property which notwithstanding the mortgage remains in the mortgagor together with the right of redemption. Until the property is actually sold and the sale becomes absolute, ownership in the property continues in the mortgagor—Dhapubai v. Chandra Nath, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 524, 42 C.W.N. 721. It is not necessary for a simple mortgage that there should be an express provision giving the mortgagee a power of sale. A personal covenant carries with it by necessary implication a power of sale. The fact that the mortgage-deed authorized the mortgagee in case of default to enter into possession of the mortgaged property cannot take away the power of sale implied in the personal covenant, more particularly when it is found that the mortgagor failed to put the mortgagee in possession—Ram Lochan v. Bachhu, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 255 (256), 148 I.C. 1197. The recitals in a mortgage-deed are important in considering the nature and scope of the implied authority which arises as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, when the mortgagor is allowed to remain in apparent possession and ownership of the mortgaged property—Anand v. Dhanpat, 38 I.C. 37 (38), 1 Pat. L.J. 563.

A condition in a mortgage-deed that if the mortgagor sold a part of the mortgaged property, twelve annas per rupee shall be paid to the mortgagee to be credited towards the mortgage-money, does not destroy the mortgagee's lien on the mortgaged property and in case of sale, the mortgagee can follow the mortgaged property, if he is not paid the three-fourths of the said money—Alliance Bank of Simla v. Khan Singh, 25 I.C. 856.

But where a deed speaks of repayment of the loan and promises not to transfer the property till such repayment, but does not give the right to have the property sold to the mortgagee, it is not a simple mortgage—Mohan Lal v. Indomati, 39 All. 244 (F.B.).

Where the mortgage deed provided (1) payment of mortgage money by instalment, and (2) that in default it would be realised by sale of the mortgaged property: held that the first clause was an express covenant to pay personally and the second clause gave the mortgagee impliedly, if not expressly, the power to bring the mortgaged property to sale. Consequently it was a simple mortgage—Ramgopal v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 354, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 284.

Where in a simple mortgage for Rs. 8,000, Rs. 360 was deducted towards first year's interest in advance, it was held that there was no reduction in principal—Haji Abdulla v. Dand Mahomed, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 84.

334. Covenant to pay :—A covenant to pay is an essential element of a simple mortgage, and in this respect it differs from a charge. If there is a covenant to pay, it is not necessary that there should be an express transfer of an interest or an express power to bring the property to sale—Ramabrahman v. Venkatanarasu, 23 M.L.J. 131, 16 I.C. 209 (210); Balasubrahmaniam v. Sivaguru, 21 M.L.J. 562 (568), 11 I.C. 629 (632).

335. No delivery of possession :—The outstanding characteristic of a simple mortgage is that possession is not delivered to the mortgagee, but remains with the mortgagor. If possession subsequently passes to the mortgagee, that possession cannot be explained or accounted for by the instrument of simple mortgage—Maung Ok v. Ma Pu, 4 Rang. 368 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 33 (34), 99 I.C. 519. Where possession is not delivered to the mortgagee, but there is merely a stipulation in the deed that if the mortgagor fails to pay interest in any year, he will deliver the property to the possession of the mortgagee, it does not convert the simple mortgage into a usufructuary mortgage—Yashvant v. Vithal, 21 Bom. 267 (272); Lingam Krishna v. Sri Mirza, 15 C.W.N. 441 (443) (P.C.), 21 M.L.J. 1147, 10 I.C. 72; Rajah Sethrucheria v. Maharaja of Jaypore, 1916 M.W.N. 334, 35 I.C. 411 (412); Ramayya v. Venkatarama, 13 M.L.J. 2; Sochet Singh v. Hadayatullah, 13 Lah. 508, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 630 (632); Chhinga Ram v. Nihal Singh, A.I.R. 1963 Raj 100. In Lalta Prasad v. Hari Lal, 16 O.C. 90, 19 I.C. 748, this kind of mortgage was treated as a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage, in this sense that it was convertible from a simple mortgage-bond into a usufructuary mortgage on the happening of a certain event, and until that contingency happened all conditions of a simple mortgage appertained to it. It seems that this sort of mortgage would now fall under the new definition of anomalous mortgage given in clause (g) of this section.

336. Right to have the mortgaged property sold :—The most essential of the elements which constitute a simple mortgage is the right to cause the property to be sold—a right without which the transaction, whatever else it may be, certainly cannot be called hypothecation, pledge, or simple mortgage. This right does not come into existence when the actual sale takes place by virtue thereof, but it comes into existence at the time when the mortgage is made; it subsists in the property ever afterwards so long as the mortgage-money remains unpaid: it limits the interests of the mortgagor as they were at the time of the mortgage—Gopal v. Parshotam, 5 All. 121 (138). If an instrument is expressly stated to be a mortgage, and gives the power of realisation of the mortgage-money by sale of the mortgaged premises, it should be held to be a mortgage. If, on the other hand, the instrument is not on the face of it a mortgage, but simply creates a lien or directs the realisation of money from a particular property without reference to sale, it creates a charge—Govinda v. Dwarka, 35 Cal. 837 (844), 12 C.W.N. 849.

The right of sale is an essential incident in a simple mortgage and inheres as well in puisne and mesne as in prior mortgagees. The puisne or mesne mortgagee is not bound by the terms of the prior mortgage or mortgages, but is entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale subject to such prior mortgage or mortgages—Matadin v. Kazim, 13 All. 432 (F.B.).

The words "cause the mortgaged property to be sold" imply that the mortgagee has no power to sell the property without the intervention of the Court—Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram, 13 All. 28. A simple mortgage does not directly confer on the mortgagee the power of private sale; in order to make his security available, he must obtain an order of a Civil Court for sale—Wahid-un-nissa v. Gobardhan, 22 All. 453. See also Ma Hnim v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 321 (F.B.) (1939) R.L.R. 403, 183 I.C. 728.

The right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold may be conferred by implication, not necessarily by express words—Ponnuranga v. Thandavarada, 1915 M.W.N. 21, 26 I.C. 274; Venkatarama v. Suppa Nandan, 27 M.L.J. 58, 24 I.C. 24. Words of hypothecation and simple mortgage have always been understood to import the right of the mortgagee to bring the property to sale for satisfaction of his claim, and no express words conferring such right are insisted upon as necessary to create such right—Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram, 13 All. 28; Balasubramania v. Sivaguru, 21 M.L.J. 562, 11 I.C. 629 (632); Yeshvant v. Vithal, 21 Bom. 267 (271). Such words, for instance, as rehan (mortgage) arh and mushtaghaq have been held to be themselves sufficient to convey the right—Gouhar v. Ajudhia, 20 I.C. 870 (Oudh); Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram, 13 All. 28; Dalip Singh v. Bahadur Ram, 34 All. 446. Security mortgages such as nazar gahan or taran gahan mortgages are mortgages proper, even though the right to bring the property to sale is not expressly given to the mortgagee, the power of compulsory sale to realise the debt in such a transaction is itself a right or interest in immoveable property transferred to the creditor—Datto Dudheswar v. Vithu, 20 Bom. 408 (F.B.).

Where the mortgagor stipulated that if he failed to pay the interest in any year or any instalment of principal the mortgagee would be entitled to take possession of the property, held that the mortgagee had the right either to bring the property to sale or to sue for possession; his remedy was not limited to a suit for possession—Lingam Krishna v. Sri Mirza, 15 C.W.N. 441 (442, 443) (P.C.), 13 Bom. L.R. 447, 8 A.L.J. 594, 10 I.C. 72, 21 M.L.J. 1147; Rajah Sethrucharla v. Maharaj of Jaypore, 1916 M.W.N. 354, 34 I.C. 411 (412); Lalta Prosad v. Hari Lal, 16 O.C. 90, 19 I.C. 748. Whether his primary remedy is a suit for possession or a suit for sale depends upon the construction of the deed; see Deputy Commissioner v. Rampal, 11 Cal. 237 (243, 244) (P.C.). Where a lessee creates a simple mortgage in respect of his leasehold interest undertaking personal liability to pay but under a separate deed the mortgagee is given possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgage is not converted into a usufructuary mortgage, and the remedy of the mortgagee is to enforce his mortgage and not to resist the decree for ejectment obtained by the lessor against the lessee—Kshiroda Sundari v. Bhupendra Mohan, A.I.R. 1961 Assam 70.

MORTGAGE BY CONDITIONAL SALE :—*Vernacular names :—*In Bengal, Katkobala; in Orissa, Katbandhaka; in U.P. and C.P. bye-bil-wafa; in Madras, Muddata Kriyam or Drishtabandhaka; in Bombay, Gahan Lahan; in Malabar, Pornathan.

Regulations :—This form of mortgage was introduced by the Mahomedans whose religion did not allow the taking of interest on a loan. By resorting to this form of mortgage the lender got his principal and interest in the shape of an enhanced price of repayment, and at the same time his money as well as his conscience was safe. This form of mortgage, commonly known as bye-bil-wafa, was given a legal recognition in the Bengal Regulation I of 1798, which provided that in case of the lender refusing to receive the money on the day named the borrower was empowered to deposit the amount due on or before the stipulated date in the Court. But the borrower had to labour under this hardship, that if he failed to pay the money on the stipulated date, either to the lender or in Court, the property automatically passed to the mortgagee without any further action on his part or the intervention of the Court. The mortgagor had then no right of redemption and the transaction once closed could not be reopened. This hardship was removed by the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 under which the mortgagee had to make an application for foreclosure and to give notice to the mortgagor, and had to obtain an order of the District Judge foreclosing the mortgage, before he could obtain an absolute title to the property; if the property was not in his possession he had to bring a suit for possession. On the other hand, the Regulation gave the mortgagor a right of redemption within one year from the time of the service of the above notice in the foreclosure proceedings instituted by the mortgagee.

These rules of procedure are no longer of any importance, since the present Act will now govern the procedure, even though the mortgage might have been created before the passing of this Act. See Note 11 under section 2.

337. Previous Law—Transaction contained in two documents :—

According to the definition given in this section, a mortgage by conditional sale is an ostensible sale on condition that upon repayment of the money being made on a certain date the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller. The question then arises whether the condition in the sale-deed is expressed with sufficient clearness so as to convert the sale into a mortgage or whether it merely gives the vendor a right to repurchase. In England, where the drafting of documents is in the hands of trained and skilled men, it is easy to find out the true nature of the transaction; but in this country where documents are drawn up by patwaris and petition-writers in stereo-typed phraseology, the solution of the question becomes a matter of extreme difficulty. The line of division between a mortgage by conditional sale and a sale with provision for repurchase is a very fine one, and, as Dr. Ghose observes in his Law of Mortgage (5th Edn., p. 88), to a layman it seems to be a distinction without a difference.

Prior to the addition of the proviso to clause (c) of this section, a mortgage by conditional sale was usually made by two documents, one being a sale-deed, and the other containing the condition of reconveyance; and the question frequently arose whether the second document operated to convert the sale into a mortgage so as to give the vendor the right of redemption such as a mortgagor enjoys, or it simply stipulated that the vendor would have a right of repurchase.

The following tests were applied for the determination of the question:—

(1) One important test was to consider whether the sale was subject to the agreement for reconveyance or was independent of it; that is, whether the two documents were part and parcel of the same transaction or were mutually independent. If the two were separate transactions altogether, the sale could not possibly be said to have been subject to any condition of repurchase—Mathura v. Jagdeo, 49 All. 405, A.I.R. 1927 All. 321 (326), 104 I.C. 504. Where two documents, one for sale and another for agreement of reconveyance, were executed on the same date, and the sale was expressed to be "subject to the terms of the deed of agreement executed by the vendee", it was held that the sale-deed incorporated the deed of agreement and that the two deeds read together constituted a mortgage by conditional sale and were not separate transactions—Wajid Ali v. Shafakat Husain, 33 All. 122 (123); Ram Charan v. Dharam Singh, 46 All. 173 (174); Md. Hamiduddin v. Fakir Chand, 18 A.L.J. 478, 58 I.C. 717 (720).

(2) Another test was whether possession was delivered to the purchaser or whether the vendor retained some hold on the property. Where a document purported to be a sale out and out, and under it the purchaser took possession of the property, and on the same day an ekrarnama was executed to the effect that if the purchase-money was repaid within four years, the purchaser would give up the property, held that the transaction was a sale and not a mortgage—Mohammad Yusuff v. Jashodha, 2 I.C. 930 (931). See also Madhusudan v. Hridoymoni, 6 C.W.N. 192 (194); D. Koteswara Rao v. M. Sambiah, (1964) 2 Andh. W.R. 190. See also Kinuram v. Nitye Chand, 11 C.W.N. 400, where one of the contemporaneous documents purported to be a deed of sale and the other provided that on the vendor repaying the purchase-money with costs within a fixed period, the vendee would return the land and in case he did not do so, the vendor would deposit the money in Court and take possession, it was held that the two documents together did not constitute a mortgage.

(3) If the document containing the agreement of reconveyance gave the vendor a power to get the property reconveyed to him as of right, on repayment of the purchase-money, the presumption arose that the covenant converted the sale into a mortgage—Abdul v. Rahamat, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 155. But if that document stipulated that the vendee, as a matter of grace, would cancel the sale on payment of the purchase-money within ten years, the transaction could not be construed as a mortgage—Jhanda Sing v. Sheikh Wahiduddin, 38 All. 570 (579) (P.C.); Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, 12 All. 387 (391) (P.C.).

(4) A stipulation regarding the payment of interest on repayment of the purchase-money was material as tending to show that the transaction was not a sale but a mortgage (though such a stipulation was not always a conclusive evidence)—Ali Ahmed v. Rahamtulla, 14 All. 195; Bai Mativahu v. Mamu Bai, 21 Bom. 709; Maruti v. Balaji, 2 Bom.L.R. 1058 (1068); Madhu Sudan v. Hridoymoni, 6 C.W.N. 192 (195); Baldea Prasad v. Chet Ram, 1 O.L.J. 703, 26 I.C. 706; Muhammad Hamiduddin

v. Lala Fakirchand, 58 I.C. 717 (718), 18 A.L.J. 478; Gulzar Singh v. Sheo Nath, 11 O.L.J. 275, 78 I.C. 547, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 11.

(5) Another test to apply was whether the two documents were executed on the same date. If the two deeds were not executed on the same date but on different dates, and were also registered in different dates, held that it might be reasonably inferred that the parties intended that the transactions should be kept separate and distinct and that the two deeds were not intended to be parts of the same transaction so as together to constitute a mortgage by conditional sale—Jhanda Singh v. Wahiduddin, 33 All. 585 (588); see also Uthandi v. Ragavachari, 29 Mad. 307. If they were executed on the same date, the Court would infer that the transaction was a mortgage—Ram Charan v. Dharam Singh, 46 All. 173; see also Kastur Chand v. Jakhia, 40 Bom. 74 (80); Madhavrao v. Shebrao, 39 Bom. 119; Mohini v. Sarat Sundari, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 862, 86 I.C. 353; Durga v. Paresh, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 105, 76 I.C. 335, and a fortiori, where the two documents were executed on the same date, written by the same scribe, attested by the same witnesses, registered on the same date, and the parties were identified before the Registrar by the same witnesses—Kirpal v. Sheoambar, 28 A.L.J. 610, A.I.R. 1930 All. 283 (285), 126 I.C. 366. If the deeds were executed on different dates but registered on the same day the effect was the same, and they must be construed together as forming a single transaction in the nature of a mortgage by conditional sale; see Palaniyappan v. Subbaraya, 1914 M.W.N. 222, 22 I.C. 4 (6).

(6) Another test to apply was whether the relation of debtor and creditor subsisted between the parties. "The rule of law on this subject is one dictated by common sense, that prima facie an absolute conveyance containing nothing to show that the relation of debtor and creditor, is to exist between the parties does not cease to be an absolute conveyance and become a mortgage merely because the vendor stipulates that he shall have a right to repurchase"—per Lord Cranworth in Alderson v. White, (1858) 2 DeG. & J. 97 (105). If there was nothing to indicate an intention that there should be a relationship of debtor and creditor or that the lands should be a security for the debt, or that there was any question of repayment of the debt, then the transaction could not be interpreted as a mortgage—Maruthai v. Dasappa, 31 M.L.J. 375; Ganesa Mudaliar v. Gnanasikamani Mudaliar, 47 M.L.J. 385; Ma Hnin v. Osman, 5 Bur.L.T. 99, 15 I.C. 423; Maung Tha v. Maung Mya, 3 Bur.L.T. 136, 8 I.C. 981 (982); Md. Yusuff v. Jasadha, 2 I.C. 930 (931); Jhanda Singh v. Sheikh Wahiduddin, 38 All. 570 (580) (P.C.). But if the apparent price was treated and regarded as a continuing debt between the parties, the transaction was a mortgage, and not a sale—Kastur Chand v. Jakhia, 40 Bom. 74 (82, 83), 31 I.C. 388. Thus, where the agreement for repurchase stipulated that whenever within 5 years the vendor's paid the vendees the amount of the consideration money together with interest thereon (at a certain rate) but deducting therefrom the actual profits realised by the vendees from the property, the vendors would get the property reconveyed, held that the provision as to the accounting at the time of the demand for reconveyance showed clearly that the relation of debtor and creditor existed between the parties, and that the two documents taken together showed that the transaction was a mortgage by conditional sale—Mad. Hamiduddin v. Fakir Chand, 18 A.L.J. 478, 57 I.C. 717 (719).

(7) The amount paid as consideration was an important test. Thus two deeds were executed on the same date. The vendor sold the villages for a price which was an amount immediately required to prevent a sale under a decree; and the purchaser paid that amount without any inquiry as to the property, and the whole transaction (namely the sale and the agreement to resell) was not the result of any bargaining as to the value of the property sold or as to the price to be paid. The consideration for the sale was grossly inadequate, and a clause in one of the deeds indicated that time was not of the essence of the contract for repurchase. Held that the transaction was not a sale but a loan, i.e., a mortgage by conditional sale—Narasingerji v. Parthasarathi, 47 Mad. 729 (743, 744) (P.C.), 47 M.L.J. 809, 29 C.W.N. 246, 23 A.L.J. 161, 27 Bom.L.R. 4, 82 I.C. 993, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 226; Asvath v. Chimanbai, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 107 (108), 27 Bom.L.R. 1246, 91 I.C. 330; Butagana Kamaraju v. Anem Siva, I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 487; Darshan Dass v. Gangaluse, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 53. If the price paid was a fair and proper price for the land, that would be a good reason for presuming the transaction to be a sale. See Madhusudan v. Hridaymoni, 6 C.W.N. 192 (194).

(8) Where the parties in one document were not the same as the parties in the other document, the transaction could not be deemed a mortgage. Thus, where three vendors together sold some property to the purchaser, and some months afterwards the latter executed an agreement to resell in favour of one of the vendors, Held that since the two transactions were not between the same parties, the latter agreement could not be used to modify the earlier transaction and to convert the sale into a mortgage—Uthandi v. Raghavachari, 29 Mad. 307 (308); Ramakanta v. Kalijoy, 11 I.C. 124 (125) (Cal.).

(9) If the sale-deed expressly and unequivocally declared that the "sale is absolute and final, that the contracting parties have no right to cancel the sale and to demand restitution of the consideration-money and that the vendor has no right to any part of the property sold" the words must be construed in their literal meaning to constitute an out and out sale, and the contemporaneous covenant of repurchase would not convert it into a mortgage—Ghulam Nabi v. Niazunnişsa, 33 All. 337; Ram Din v. Rang Lal, 17 All. 451 (453). An instrument designated and executed as a sale-deed should be so treated unless the contrary is manifest—Ayyavayar v. Rahimansa, 14 Mad. 170 (at p. 172).

(10) The best general test as to the nature of the transaction was "the existence or non-existence of a power in the original purchaser to recover the sum named as the price for such re-purchase; if there is no such power, there is no mortgage." Dart on Vendors and Purchasers, 3rd Ed., p. 536; Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, 13th Ed., p. 166; Coote on Mortgages, 3rd Ed., pp. 14, 21; Perry v. Meddowcroft, 4 Beav. 197, 203; Verner v. Winstanley, 2 Sch. & Lef. 393; Bell v. Carter, 17 Beav. 11; Cogden v. Battams, 1 Jur. N.S. 791; Williams v. Owen, (1840) 5 My. & Cr. 303, 48 R.R. 322; Alderson v. White, 2 DeG. & J. 95 (97). Thus, if the amount agreed upon as the price of repurchase was the same as the consideration for the original sale, the deed was clearly a mortgage by conditional sale, and not a sale with agreement of repurchase—Maung Po Gyi v. Hakim Ally, 2 Rang. 113 (116), A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 235, 3 Bur.L.J. 44, 80 I.C. 759; Mt. Gomti v. Meghraj, A.I.R. 1933 All. 443, 145 I.C. 147.

The whole thing has been thus summed up by Butler in his edition of Coke on Littleton. "If the money paid by the grantee was not a fair price for the absolute purchase of an estate conveyed to him; if he was not let into immediate possession of the estate; if instead of receiving the rents for his own benefit he accounted for them to the grantor and only retained the amount of interest; or if the expense of preparing the deed of conveyance was borne by the grantor; each of these circumstances has been considered by the Courts as tending to prove that the conveyance was intended to be merely pignorititious."—Cited in Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 91.

In construing the documents, the main question for enquiry was the intention of the parties, and this intention had to be gathered from the language of the documents themselves, the circumstances attending their execution and from the conduct of the parties—Jhanda Singh v. Sheikh Wahiduddin, 33 All. 585 (602); on appeal, 38 All. 570 (574) (P.C.); Ramdas v. Brindaban, 1931 A.L.J. 571, A.I.R. 1931 All. 113 (120, 121, 123); Madhwa v. Venkata, 26 Mad. 662. The case had to be decided upon a consideration of the documents themselves with such extrinsic evidence of the circumstances as might show in what manner the language of the documents was related to existing facts—Balkishen v. Legge, 22 All. 149 (P.C.). If the documents purported to connote an absolute sale, it lay on the party who contended that it was a mortgage to prove his contention—Ramdas v. Brindaban, supra. In Situl v. Lachmi, 10 Cal. 30 (35) (P.C.), their Lordships looking at the surrounding circumstances, among other things, at the value of the property and at the relation of the parties came to the conclusion that the transaction was, in fact, what it purported to be, a perpetual lease with a condition as to cancellation. See also Narayan v. Vighneshwar, 40 Bom. 378; Ma Tok v. Maung Chek, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 132, 101 I.C. 204; Ganesh v. Gnanasikhamani, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 37, 47 M.L.J. 385, 84 I.C. 505 and Gobardhan v. Raghubir, A.I.R. 1930 All. 101, (1930) A.L.J. 799, 124 I.C. 405, where the transactions were held to be out and out sale.

Where it is alleged that the deeds, though in form absolute transfers were intended to be only mortgages, sec. 92 of the Evidence Act is no bar to the admission of evidence to show what was the true nature of the transaction—Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe, 45 Cal. 320 (P.C.). In considering the question it should be remembered that where documents are executed by Muhammedans they conceal or at least try to conceal the real nature of the transaction and attempt to make out that the transaction is an out and out sale, although as a matter of fact the intention of the parties is to create a mortgage. Mere absence of a certain date in the document within which the money was to be repaid would not indicate that the deed was not one of mortgage—Md. Usman v. Abdul Rahaman, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1151 (1152), 42 C.L.J. 74, 90 I.C. 100.

In a transaction entered into in 1915 it has been held that the two documents were evidence of one transaction and it was a mortgage by conditional sale and not a sale—Prag Dutt v. Hari Bahadur, A.I.R. 1947 All. 334, 1947 A.L.J. 271.

338. Present Law—Effect of proviso :—The proviso, newly added by the Amendment Act of 1929, lays down that “no such transaction shall be deemed to be a mortgage, unless the condition is embodied in the document which effects or purports to effect the sale.” If a deed purporting to effect a sale after the amendment in cl. (c) came into force contains any one of the three conditions mentioned in that clause, the deed is a mortgage by conditional sale—Debi Singh v. Jagdish Saran, A.I.R. 1952 All. 716 (F.B.). The amendment is not retrospective—ibid per Chandersamani, J.

Two things are laid down in the proviso:—(1) first, the mortgage by conditional sale is to be effected by one document; and thus the various criteria for determining whether the two documents operate to create a mortgage will no longer be necessary. But the mere fact that the condition of repurchase is contained in the same document which effects the sale does not render the transaction a mortgage by conditional sale, unless there is a relationship of debtor and creditor between the parties—Kuppa Krishna v. Mhasti, 33 Bom. L.R. 633, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 371 (373), 134 I.C. 337. (2) Secondly, the condition which converts the sale into a mortgage must be embodied in the document, so that no extrinsic evidence will be admissible to prove that a document which purports to be an absolute sale is in reality a mortgage.

The effect of the Proviso is that an ostensible sale with a condition for re-purchase cannot be regarded as a mortgage unless the condition is contained in the same document. The object of the amendment is to shut out the inquiry whether such a sale is a mortgage when the stipulation is contained in a separate document—Venkata v. Veeraswami, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 456, (1946) 1 M.L.J. 342; Suryaprakasa v. Venkatraju, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 830; Meri Mal v. Mt. Sharifan, A.I.R. 1949 All. 194, (1948) O.W.N. 382; Lakhmichand v. Yasoda, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 337; Govindsa v. Ismail, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 22, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 933; Samsherkhan v. Vithaldas, A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 264, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 278; Rangubai v. Govind, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 243; I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 78; Jaggarnath v. Butto Krishto, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 345, 25 Pat. 666; Soshil v. Madan, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 292; Muniswamappa v. Nanjundachari, A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 56. A transaction intended to be a mortgage, but evidenced by a sale deed and a separate agreement to reconvey, though hit by the proviso, may still amount to a loan in substance under the Bengal Money Lenders Act—Banku Behari v. Kalyani, A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 351. The question whether a deed is a sale or mortgage is purely a question of fact and very little assistance can be derived from the construction put by the Courts on different documents before them—Sundar Lal v. Mohan Lal, A.I.R. 1953 M.B. 143.

In two Calcutta cases, evidence was admitted of the acts and conduct of the parties to show that the document which purported to be a sale was in reality a mortgage by conditional sale—Khankar v. Ali Hafez, 28 Cal. 256 (258); Mahamed Ali v. Nazar Ali, 28 Cal. 289 (291). These cases are no longer good law.

It has been laid down by the Privy Council that oral evidence of intention is not admissible for the purpose of construing the deed or ascertaining the intention of the parties, nor can evidence of oral agreement be admitted for the purpose of contradicting, varying or adding to the terms of the instrument—Balkishen Das v. Legge, 22 All. 149 (P.C.). The rule is invariable that in considering whether a transaction is a mortgage or an out and out sale the Court must look into the substance behind the form. Where oral evidence is not available or contradictory the Court should not depart from the written evidence of the document—Ramdhandas v. Ram Kisondas, A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 178, 51 C.W.N. 202, 40 Bom. L.R. 244; Ahmad Husain v. Azhar Ali, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 305, (1944) O.W.N. 399; Bhaiyalal v. Kishorilal, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 198, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 719. Where the transaction is a sale on the face of it, the onus of showing that it is really a mortgage is on the person who contends against the tenor of the document—ibid. See also Srinivasa v. Kahainma, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 60, I.L.R. 1947 Mad. 265; Nilmmoni v. Mrityunjaya, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 365 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1951 Cut. 281; Hans Raj v. Mat Ram, A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 181; Bhaskar Waman Joshi v. Shrinarayan Rambilas Agarwal, A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 304.

The proviso is of the nature of the law of evidence—Farsram v. Tarachand, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 14, 161 I.C. 518. The amendment does not provide that if a transaction is embodied in one document, it must of necessity be regarded as a mortgage by conditional sale and not an out and out sale—Bishan Lal v. Banwari Lal, A.I.R. 1939 All. 713 (714), 1939 A.L.J. 946, 185 I.C. 487; Shambhu v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 582, 1941 O.W.N. 994, 196 I.C. 432; Rajat Chandra Deka v. Dhani Ram, A.I.R. 1965 Assam 90. In the case of a sale deed executed in favour of a Mahomedan there is no presumption in Oudh that it is really a concealed mortgage on the ground that a Mahomedan would not charge interest which is inevitable in a mortgage deed—Ahmad Husain v. Azhar Ali, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 305, (1944) O.W.N. 399. Whether a deed is a mortgage by conditional sale or an out and out sale is a question which falls to be determined on a consideration of the terms of the deed itself and of the surrounding circumstances—Bishan Lal v. Banwari Lal, supra, relying on Jhanda Singh v. Wahibuddin, 43 I.A. 284, 38 All 570 (P.C.). The period during which the property may be repurchased and the adequacy of the consideration are some of the tests. If the period of time given to the vendor to repurchase is a short one, it suggests that it is an out and out sale—Shambhu v. Jagadish, supra. The best general test is the existence or non-existence of a power to recover the sum named as the price for such re-purchase; if there is no such power, there is no mortgage; also if the amount agreed upon as the price of re-purchase was the same as the consideration for the original sale, the deed is a mortgage by conditional sale and not a sale with condition of repurchase—Ibid. For an illustration of this principle, see Bishan Lal v. Banwari Lal, supra. The word "mortgagor" occurring in cl. (c) must be understood in the light of the definition given in cl. (a). Clause (c) presupposes the existence of a mortgage as defined in cl. (a), i.e., the parties must stand to each other in relation of creditor and debtor. The test to determine this relation is to see whether the purchase-money recited in the sale-deed represents the market value of the property and whether the possession was intended to be transferred and was transferred in accordance with the sale—Ramnarayan v. Ramratan, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 18, 149 I.C. 354. Where the recitals in a sale-deed showed that the intention was to transfer possession to the vendee and the vendor stipulated to pay back exactly the amount of the purchase-money which he received and the purchase-money closely approximated to the market value of the property, the transaction was one of sale and not of mortgage—Ibid.

The Proviso being in a negative form, it cannot be said that wherever there is a condition of reconveyance in a deed of sale the transaction is to be regarded as a mortgage—Bhaiyalal v. Kishorilal, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 198, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 719; Hayath v. Bharamanna, A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 105, I.L.R. 1952 Mys. 247. It will still depend upon the intention of the parties as gathered from the contents of the document itself and the surrounding circumstances—Quyumunnissa v. Rashidul Malik, A.I.R. 1952 All. 200. The real test in such cases is to see the intention of the parties which can be judged only from the surrounding circumstances. If the Courts go by the language of the deed, there would hardly be any case of sale which can be treated as a mortgage—Bidha Ram v. Chhidda, A.I.R. 1950 All. 430. As a matter of construction, the fact that a transaction is embodied in one document and not two and its terms are covered by sec. 58 (c) may give rise to the inference that the transaction is a mortgage by conditional sale—Veeravunni Haji v. Koyammu, A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 169; Debnath Bhagat v. Bhoju Mandal, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 371. Where a property is sold and on the same day a reconveyance of the property sold is agreed upon by a separate registered deed, the transaction is a sale with option to repurchase and not a mortgage by conditional sale—Parbati Kueri v. Sujan Chand Hain, A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 415; Arjan Ali v. Kala Mia, I.L.R. (1957) 9 Assam 109.

To determine whether a transaction is a sale or a mortgage by conditional sale, the tests to be applied are as follows:—(1) The existence of a debt; (2) the period of repayment—a short period being indicative of a sale and a long period of a mortgage; (3) the continuance of the grantor in possession indicates a mortgage; (4) a stipulation for interest on repayment indicates a mortgage; (5) a price below the true value indicates a mortgage. However, any of these circumstances will not necessarily prove that a sale-deed with a condition of repurchase is in fact a mortgage by conditional sale—Abdul Rahman v. Mt. Bismillah Begam, A.I.R. 1939 All. 539 (541), 1939 A.L.J. 377. See also Md. Amin v. Bajrangi, A.I.R. 1949 All. 335, I.L.R. 1949 All. 348; Mahabirsingh v. Venkateswaran, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 11; Hans Raj v. Mt. Ram, A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 181; Jadam Bai v. Janki, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 237, (1944) 2 M.L.J. 30; Nilamoni v. Mrityunjaya, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 362 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1951 Cut. 281; Srinivasa v. Kaliamma, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 60, I.L.R. 1947 Mad. 265; Chhuttu v. Kayam, A.I.R. 1963 Bhop. 18; Narayanan v. Kochupennu, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 142; Bhoju Mondal v. Debnath Bhagat, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1906. In order to bring a transaction within the category of a mortgage the relationship of debtors and creditors must subsist between the parties. When a document on the face of it appears to be a sale-deed, the burden of proving it to be a deed of mortgage will rest on the party alleging it to be so. To discharge the burden the contemporaneous contract of the parties may be proved, if it is permissible under Proviso (b) to sec. 92 of the Evidence Act—Ibid; see also Deschand v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 84, 187 I.C. 594. A document after declaring that certain land had been sold and title transferred contained a further stipulation that if within a certain time the purchase amount was returned with interest after deduction of the income which the vendee might derive from the land, there should be a re-conveyance: held that the document was a mortgage and not an out and out sale with a condition of repurchase—Ibid, at p. 87. A document incorporated an absolute conveyance and said that possession was delivered on the same day. It however provided, "If I pay the sum of Rs. 1300 on 26.6.45, you shall have to take the same and return the house. And within five years (I) will neither mortgage the aforesaid house nor will I sell the same and I will not effect any change in the building." Held that the transaction amounted to a mortgage—Md. Ibrahim v. Sugrabi, A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 272. The inclusion of the condition of repurchase in the document must now be taken as a token of mortgage in the first instance—Ibid.

Without a debt there can be no mortgage: Where after a deed of sale there was an agreement by the vendee to convey the property back to the vendor on his fulfilling certain conditions but it was not in any way a condition in the deed of sale and there was nothing to show in either of the documents that the vendor was in any sense of the word debtor of the vendee, it was held that the two transactions together did not constitute a mortgage by conditional sale—Ko Po v. Maung Lu, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 402. A compromise during the pendency of an application under Or. 21 r. 90, C.P.C. to the effect that if the decretal amount be paid within 12 months the sale is to be set aside, otherwise to be confirmed, cannot be construed as a mortgage by conditional sale—Ram Chandra Seth v. Srinath Singh, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 239.

A mortgage by conditional sale is essentially different from a sale with a condition of repurchase. In the latter case the ownership vests in the transferee from the date of the document and there is no question of any debt being in existence after the transaction. In a case of mortgage by conditional sale the debt subsists and a right to redeem remains with the debtor—Abdul Latif v. Abdul Gani, 43 C.W.N. 1221, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 730, 185 I.C. 393; Unrichirakutty v. Kuttimalu, I.L.R. (1967) 2 Ker. 69; Jakeria Mondal v. Md. Isman Ali Mondal, 63 C.W.N. 430. The right to repurchase is lost if the original vendor fails to act punctually according to the terms of the contract to reconvey and there is no question of granting relief against forfeiture—K. Simrathmull v. Manjalingiah Gowder, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1182.

339. Incidents of mortgage by conditional sale:—The incidents of a mortgage by conditional sale under the present Act are the same as those under the Bengal Reg. XVII of 1806. On the one hand, the mortgagee has the right of foreclosure; on the other, the mortgagor is entitled to redeem. Under Reg. XVII of 1806, in a mortgage by way of conditional sale, the mortgagee could not enter into possession, even after the lapse of the time fixed by the agreement, without taking legal steps for foreclosure. If he entered without doing so, he was a mere trespasser and could be ejected by the mortgagor—Hub Ali v. Wazirunnissa, 28 All. 496

(P.C.). But in Madras, C. P. and other provinces where the Bengal Regulation was not in force, the mortgagee had not to bring a suit for foreclosure, but on the expiry of the stipulated period of repayment the mortgage executed itself and the transaction was closed and became one of absolute sale, without the intervention of the Court. See Thambusamy v. Hossein, 1 Mad. 1 (P.C.). But after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, the law is uniform in all provinces, and now under a mortgage by conditional sale, the ownership will not be vested in the mortgagee in default of payment on due date until there is a decree absolute for foreclosure—Raghunath v. Sheolal, 13 N.L.R. 69, 39 I.C. 849; Afsar Sheik v. Sauraba Sundari, 25 C.L.J. 560, 40 I.C. 371. The essential characteristic of a mortgage by conditional sale is that on the breach of the condition of repayment within the stipulated period the contract executes itself and the transaction is closed and becomes one of absolute sale, to be enforced by foreclosure—Sheoram v. Babu Singh, 48 All. 302, 24 A.L.J. 295, A.I.R. 1926 All. 493, 94 I.C. 849.

The words "a certain date" occurring in the first sub-clause of this clause should be read as confined only to that sub-clause, and should not be imported into the other two sub-clauses. That is, the words "on such payment being made" in the other two sub-clauses should not be interpreted as "on payment being made on a certain date". The "certain date" refers only to the 'default of payment' mentioned in the first sub-clause, and not to the 'payment' referred to in the two clauses following. A certain date of payment is not necessary where the transaction is a mortgage by conditional sale, but only where the transaction is an out and out sale with an agreement to resell; because, it is conceivable that between the date of the sale and the time when the seller may elect to exercise his option and demand reconveyance of the property on payment of the money, considerable time might have elapsed, and the price of the property might have doubled or trebled, and in such a case it would be strange to suppose that without fixing any certain date of payment and without any regard whatever to the possible and probable changes in the price of the property the parties would agree to grant a resale whenever the other party might wish to demand the same. But in a mortgage by conditional sale, no regard is had to the change in the price of the property, and consequently no date is fixed for payment—Padmanabha v. Sitarama, 54 M.L.J. 96, 106 I.C. 158, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 28 (31). But in Kinuram v. Nitye, 11 C.W.N. 400; and Haji Mahomed v. Asraf Ali, 25 I.C. 93 (Cal.); and Chuttu v. Abdul Jabbar, A.I.R. 1956 Bhopal 59 it has been held that a certain date of payment is essential in a mortgage by conditional sale. In the last-mentioned case it has been further held that the words "on a certain date" mean "on or before a certain date," so that the mortgagor may make payment on an earlier date. The Oudh Chief Court also holds that 'certain date' of payment distinguished a mortgage by conditional sale from an out and out sale. That date is generally a date more appropriate to the redemption of a mortgage than to reconveyance by way of sale—Mahabir v. Bharat, 11 O.L.J. 312, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 417 (418). If the sale by an occupant and an agreement to resell by the purchaser are registered on the same date and the vendor obtains reconveyance within the stipulated time the transaction does not attract the right of pre-emption—65 Bom. L.R. 224.

A mortgage by conditional sale is essentially a mortgage, and therefore it is necessary that the relation of debtor and creditor should exist between the parties. Thus, a deed of sale ran thus: "I have sold this land to you for Rs. 600, and have given the land into your possession. If at any time I require back the land I will pay you the aforesaid Rs. 600 and any money you may have spent for bringing the land into good condition, and purchase back the land." Held that the document was not a mortgage, because no debt existed between the parties. It was a sale with an option of repurchase—Gurunath v. Yamanava, 35 Bom. 258 (260).

In this class of mortgage, the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property. The word "ostensible" means that the object bears the appearance of a sale, but is not really a sale. If the parties have intended it to be a sale, then of course it cannot be a mortgage. The test is the intention of the parties—Mumtaz v. Lachmi, A.I.R. 1929 All. 174 (178), 116 I.C. 807. A mortgage by conditional sale is an ostensible sale; that is, it is executed in the form of a sale (with a condition attached to it). But where the mortgagor puts the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property and the deed provides that the mortgagee shall enjoy the property, paying the revenue to Government, that the principal and interest shall be repaid on a certain date, and that in default the mortgagor shall give up the lands as sold to the mortgagee and shall execute a proper sale-deed, the transaction is not a mortgage by conditional sale, but is a combination of a simple mortgage and an usufructury mortgage—Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pallaya, 43 Mad. 589 (599) (F.B.). In this form of mortgage, there must be an ostensible sale to begin with, and if the document neither ostensibly nor otherwise purports to be a sale-deed, it does not satisfy the requirements of a mortgage by conditional sale—Ibid (at p. 603). Where a deed of sale of land contained a clause by which the purchaser undertook to resell the land to the vendor at his request within three years for the same amount as the consideration of the sale, held that the deed was clearly a mortgage by conditional sale—Maung Pe Gyi v. Hakim Ally, 2 Rang. 113 (116), A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 235, 80 I.C. 759, 2 Bur. L.J. 44.

This section provides that where a mortgagor has ostensibly sold his property on condition that on payment of the mortgage-money the buyer shall retransfer the property to the seller, the transaction is a mortgage by conditional sale. And this would be so even though the language of the document itself does not use the word 'mortgagor', 'mortgaged property' or 'mortgage-money.' The conveyance may ostensibly be a deed of sale, with all the phraseology employed in drafting sale-deeds, but if that sale is in reality subject to a condition of a retransfer on payment of the amount, the law regards it as a mortgage by conditional sale. The presence in the deed of such words as imply a mortgage is not absolutely necessary. The cardinal point is whether the sale is subject to a condition of repurchase on payment—Mathura v. Jagdeo, 49 All. 405, 104 I.C. 504, A.I.R. 1927 All. 321 (326); Lalta Prasad v. Jagdish, 48 All. 787, 24 A.L.J. 1057, A.I.R. 1927 All. 137 (143), 98 I.C. 961.

The "mortgage-money" in this clause means the purchase-price, along with interest or without it, and after deduction or addition of any further sum, according as this Act prescribes such interest, addition or deduction—Lalta Prasad v. Jagdish, supra.

Even though the transaction is contained in one document, it is not by itself sufficiently conclusive that the transaction is a mortgage. The intention of the parties is material for deciding whether the transaction is a sale or a mortgage—Mumtaz Begum v. Lachhmi, A.I.R. 1929. All 174 (178, 179, 180), 116 I.C. 807; Bairagi Charan v. Lakshmidhar, A.I.R. 1964 Orissa 17. A mere agreement to reconvey does not convert the sale into a mortgage, irrespective of the intention of the parties—Muthuvelu v. Vythilinga, 42 Mad. 407 (418) (F.B.); Rajat Chandra Deka v. Dhani Ram, A.I.R. 1965 Assam 90.

Where a term in a document provides that the person placed in possession should pay certain portion of the produce to the executant equivalent to a net annuity, it is not inconsistent with the document being a mortgage—Gurunath v. Suryakant, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 453, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 225, 42 Bom. L.R. 399.

A mortgagor does not lose his title or his right to possess on the date of the mortgage, even if the mortgage is by conditional sale—Gangaprasad v. Iswarsingh, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 287, 1939 N.L.J. 429.

The English rule that once a mortgage always a mortgage applies to a mortgage by conditional sale and consequently the condition that if the mortgaged property were not redeemed within the period stipulated, the mortgagee should become the absolute owner thereof, cannot be enforced—Venkatasubbiah v. Jumma Mosque, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 666, (1941) 1 M.L.J. 754, 1941 M.W.N. 532.

In Kutch where a mortgage by conditional sale has been executed in St. 1867, there is no right of redemption after the expiry of the time limit—Modiji v. Jagatsingji, A.I.R. 1949 Kutch 10.

340. Instances of mortgage by conditional sale:—Where the vendor ostensibly sold his property by executing a sale-deed and the vendee by another document agreed to reconvey the property on payment of the price thereof after the expiry of a fixed period, the transaction amounted to a mortgage by conditional sale—Nathu Lal v. Mt. Gomti Kugr, I.L.R. 1940 All. 625 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 160, 45 C.W.N. 29; see also Narsingerji v. Parthasarathi, 51 I.A. 305, 47 Mad. 729, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 222; Janki v. Jai Dei, 9 O.C. 147. A document described as a "conditional deed of sale" enumerated the amounts borrowed from the mortgagee and then ran thus: "I shall pay the said principal and interest on 26th June, 1879 and take back this bond. If I fail to pay accordingly on the due date, my land mentioned in the patta I shall give up to you treating the principal and interest hereof as sale proceeds." Held that this was a deed of mortgage by conditional sale—Kola Venkatanargyana v. Vuppala Ratnam, 29 Mad. 531. (533). Where a person executed a document by which he purported to sell the property in consideration of a loan due by the executant, but it was agreed that if the executant paid the amount within 3 years, the property would be "released," held that the transaction amounted to a mortgage by conditional sale and not an out and out sale—Mumtaz Begam v. Lachhmi, 1930 A.L.J. 1435, A.I.R. 1931 All. 196 (197), 130 I.C. 15. A document which purported on the face of it to be a deed of sale of a share in a certain village contained the following provision:—"If within six years in the month of Jeth, I, the executant, pay the consideration Rs. 3,000, and the arrears of rent which may then be due against the tenants, the vendee shall reconvey the vended property to me, otherwise the property will not be reconveyed." Further in the body of the document the consideration for the transfer was described as mortgage-money. Held that the transaction was a mortgage by conditional sale and not an out and out sale—Mohindra v. Maharaj Singh, 45 All. 72 (75), 20 A.L.J. 810, A.I.R. 1923 All. 48. A document was framed and worded exactly in the same manner as a mortgage by conditional sale in English precedents of conveyancing; the consideration was stated to be the same amount that was specified as the sale-price, and there was a direction that after paying certain creditors of the executant the transferee should obtain the debt-bonds with an endorsement of discharge on them, and that he should keep them with him as vouchers in support of the sale-deed. Held that the document was not one of outright sale but a mortgage by conditional sale; for if it were an outright sale, it would be difficult to understand why the transferor should have required the transferee to obtain those bonds and keep them in support of the deed—Padmanabha v. Sitarama, 54 M.L.J. 96, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 28 (30). The plaintiff executed a document in favour of the defendant for Rs. 4000/- in the form of a sale deed the market value of the property being Rs. 8000/-. There was a stipulation in the document that the defendant should reconvey the property to the plaintiff on his repaying Rs. 4000/- after 5 years and before the end of the 7th year. Held that the transaction was a mortgage by conditional sale and not a sale with option to repurchase—Bapuswami v. Pattai Gounder, A.I.R. 1966, S.C. 902; V. Venkatarama Iyer v. K. Ranganathan Pillai, (1965) 2 M.L.J. 480. See also Satyadeo Sharma v. Ramsarup Sharma, A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 193. Where a deed of conditional sale provides that the property is to be returned on repayment of consideration the transaction is a mortgage by conditional sale—Bai Kanku v. Victorbhai, A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 239.

Where the document on the face of it is a mortgage-deed, the mere fact that the conditions of the deed are onerous does not alter the real nature of the transaction—Milkhil Ram v. Gujar Mal, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 104, 141 I.C. 494. But where the document is one of outright sale with no agreement for repurchase, and the agreement for repurchase is contained in a subsequent document, the transaction will not be deemed to be one of mortgage; it shall be deemed to be one of sale—Ma Sein v. Maung San, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 212, 157 I.C. 179. A document was expressed to be a kobala and the transferee was in possession of the property. There was a clause that the transferor was to get back the property if he paid the purchase-money and an equal amount within eight years from the date of document. In the margin of the document there happened to be an expression kat kabala: held that the transaction was an out and out sale—Altapali v. Uzirali, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 381 (386), 60 Cal. 167, 144 I.C. 220; Duddu v. Motumarru, A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 252; Banku Behari v. Kalyani, 70 C.W.N. 139.

The essential characteristic of a mortgage by conditional sale is that on breach of the condition of repayment within a stipulated period, the contract exhausts itself and the transaction is closed and becomes one of absolute sale to be enforced by foreclosure—Badri v. Besu, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 174, 145 I.C. 159. Where a deed was ostensibly a sale-deed with a condition for re-transfer on payment of the amount and the condition was embodied in the document itself, it was a mortgage by conditional sale and not an out and out sale—Ram Dhani v. Ram Rekha, A.I.R. 1931 All. 548, 53 All. 607, 131 I.C. 594; Laxmiamma v. Narasinha, 11 Law Report, 767. As under cl. (c) the transaction is ostensibly a sale and as the parties to it are referred to as “the buyer” and “the seller,” the use in a deed of expressions usually found in a deed of absolute sale in itself cannot be a valuable guide in considering whether the transaction is a sale with a condition of repurchase or a mortgage by conditional sale. The distinction between the two is one of intention to be gathered from the deed itself and the extrinsic evidence of circumstances—Fazal Ahmad v. Afaqul Rahaman, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 57, 172 I.C. 536. Thus, where in such a deed there was no bargaining as to the price and the deed was quickly followed by another which was regarded as mortgage by conditional sale, the former deed was held to be a mortgage by conditional sale also—Ibid. In a suit for possession by plaintiff on the strength of a sale deed it is open to the defendant to allege and prove that the real transaction was a mortgage and not a sale—Saraswatibai v. Pt. Ramchandralal, 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 199. In Sayyad Ahmed Ali v. Bhageerathi Ammal, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 301 the transaction was held to be sale and not a mortgage by conditional sale; so also in Pattay Gounder v. P. L. Bapu Swami, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 276.

The effect of a lahan gahan mortgage is the same as that of a mortgage by conditional sale; and mortgages in form similar to that of lahan gahan (e.g., katkobala or bye-bil-wafa) stand on the same footing as mortgages by conditional sale—Mahomed Haji v. Ramappa, 25 N.L.R. 187 (F.B.) A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 254 (255), 119 I.C. 684. The provision that the mortgagor will have no connection with the mortgaged property in future is the usual covenant in a lahan gahan mortgage, and this coupled with the use of the words lahan gahan shows that the mortgage is a lahan gahan mortgage—Sitaram v. Krishnarao, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 156, 1940 N.L.J. 179, 190 I.C. 641.

Where the mortgagee in a mortgage by conditional sale did not take foreclosure proceedings under the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 no suit for possession lay—Badri v. Besu, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 174, 145 I.C. 159. But Rangnekar, J. held otherwise in Ganpat v. Hanamgouda, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 439, 57 Bom. 593.

USUFRUCTUARY MORTGAGE :

Vernacular names :—In Bengal, khai khalasi or bhoga bandhaki khat; in Madras, diggu bhogyam, swadhin adamanam.

342. Amendment :—The words “or expressly or by implication binds himself to deliver possession” have been newly inserted in this clause. In an early Bombay case also it has been held that it is not necessary for usufructuary mortgage that possession should be actually delivered to the mortgagee. If a right of entry is given to the creditor, there is a transfer of an interest in immoveable property just as much as if possession were actually delivered. Therefore, where a deed contains the words "we have this day put the said land and house into your possession", but the mortgagee has not actually taken possession, the mortgage is still a usufructuary mortgage—Motiram v. Vitai, 13 Bom. 90 (100). But in a Madras Full Bench case it was held that a mortgagee did not become a usufructuary mortgagee under sec. 58 (d) until the mortgagor had given him possession of the mortgaged property—Subbamma v. Narayya, 41 Mad. 259 (263) (F.B.). The Full Bench further held that since the mortgagee had not been given possession of the property, he became entitled to sue for the mortgage-money under sec. 68; in other words, the mortgage-money "became payable" to him; and as he was not a usufructuary mortgagee, for the reasons stated above, the proviso (a) of section 67 did not apply to him, and he was entitled to sue for foreclosure or for sale under sec. 67, which entitles a mortgagee to do so at any time after the mortgage-money has become "payable." There was an anomaly in this decision which the Full Bench failed to notice, viz., that the mortgagee was treated as a usufructuary mortgagee for the purpose of sec. 68 (which applies to usufructuary mortgagees) and as not a usufructuary mortgagee for the purpose of applying proviso (a) of sec. 67.

The effect of this amendment is that a usufructuary mortgagee is none the less so even if possession is not delivered to him; it is sufficient if he is entitled to possession under the terms of the deed. This amendment overrules the above Full Bench decision.

A deed of mortgage styled as rehan deed provided that the mortgagor bound himself to deliver possession of the property and authorized the mortgagee to retain possession until a certain time when the executant bound himself to pay the money. It further provided that the mortgagee would be entitled to retain possession until payment of the money advanced: held, the mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage—Harnath v. Ambika Devi, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 301, 193 I.C. 272.

Where the transaction is a usufructuary mortgage, the parties are precluded, as between themselves by sec. 92, Evidence Act, from adducing oral evidence as to their subsequent conduct to show that the transaction was not a mortgage but an out and out sale—Bhagwat v. Ramasis, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 431.

343. Incidents of usufructuary mortgage :—The characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage are : (1) possession of the property is delivered to the mortgagee; (2) the mortgagee is to get rents and profits in lieu of interest or principal or both, (3) no personal liability is incurred by the mortgagor; and (4) the mortgagee cannot foreclose or sue for sale—Md. Saied v. Abdul Alim, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 40 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1946 Lah. 805; Dasabhai Vasan, A.I.R. 1953 Kutch 4 (vatantar transactions). The essential feature of a pure usufructuary mortgage is that the mortgagee cannot sue for the payment of his debt, but is only entitled to remain in possession of the mortgaged property till the principal and interest are defrayed according to the terms of the agreement—Atma Ram v. Surjan, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 355, 110 I.C. 81; Janaki Nath v. Asad Reza, (1934) 14 Pat. 560. In such a mortgage there is no personal liability of the mortgagor. Where the rents and profits of the property mortgaged are to be set off against interest and the mortgagee is entitled to retain possession until such time as the mortgagor chooses to redeem on payment of the principal sum secured, the transaction is a usufructuary mortgage—Lachman Singh v. Natha Singh, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 401 (F.B.), 42 P.L.R. 560, 191 I.C. 583. A mortgagor stated in a mortgage-deed : "I have now mortgaged with possession and pledged the entire property....."; held that the transaction was not a usufructuary mortgage pure and simple—Wahid-ud-Din v. Makhan Lal, A.I.R. 1938 All. 564 (566), (1938) A.L.J. 872. -

The rights of a usufructuary mortgagee form a very large and important part of the bundle of rights which constitute ownership; the remainder still remains with the mortgagor and can be transferred by him—Thakur v. Raghubar, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 469. The usufructuary mortgagee may not be the absolute owner of the property, but for all practical purposes he may be deemed to be the owner while he is in possession—Fateh Singh v. Raghubir, A.I.R. 1938 All. 577 (584, 585) (S.B.), (1938) A.L.J. 881. Where there was an arrangement between the plaintiff and the defendant under which the latter borrowed a sum of money from the plaintiff and passed a simple money-bond in his favour and executed a lease subletting the land (occupancy-holding) to the plaintiff for 5 years, the understanding being that the interest payable on the sum advanced should be set off against the rent payable under the sub-lease, it was held that the transaction did not amount to an usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy holding. The plaintiff is liable to be evicted from the land at the end of five years and cannot insist on retaining the land till the money is paid (because under sec. 25, Agra Tenancy Act, an occupancy tenant can sublet his holding, only for 5 years and no more). A usufructuary mortgagee, on the other hand, is entitled to continue in possession till payment of his dues in full—Chotey Lal v. Mohanian, 1930 A.L.J. 332, A.I.R. 1930 All. 375 (376); 127 I.C. 425, or the mortgage-debt is wiped off from the rents and profits of the property—Narasimhe v. Sheshayya, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 825, 90 I.C. 138. A mortgage is not necessarily for securing payment of money advanced. It may also be for securing, "performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability" [see 2nd para of cl. (a)]. Where the mortgagee is entitled under the mortgage-deed to remain in possession of the mortgaged property until payment of the mortgage money, the transaction is a usufructuary mortgage—Raman v. Gowri, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 7. But where the rental agreement showed that the mortgagee was not bound to enter into possession and liquidate the debt by the usufruct and there was an express covenant to pay, the mortgage was not a purely usufructuary mortgage—Madhwa v. Venkata, 26 Mad. 622. Equity of redemption not being specific immoveable property is not capable of a usufructuary mortgage—Gohel Dhulabhai Kalubhai v. Gohel Mahbai Himatsingh, A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 129.

If the mortgagor expressly or by implication binds himself to deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee the transaction is a usufructuary mortgage although actual possession has not been delivered—Subburaya v. Subramanyam, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 856. See also Chouth Mal v. Hiralal, A.I.R. 1950 Aj. 59. Where under the terms of a mortgage-deed, the possession is to be delivered to the mortgagee subsequent to the date of the mortgage, the transaction is still a usufructuary mortgage—Bisheshar v. Debi Baksh, 16 O.C. 56, 17 I.C. 329 (332). The mortgagor is to deliver such possession to the mortgagee as the mortgaged property is capable of on the date of the mortgage—Ram Khelwan v. Ghulam Hussain, 8 Luck. 190. In the case of a tenanted property, the only way in which possession can be given to a usufructuary mortgagee is to give him the right to realize the rents and appropriate them towards the mortgage-money—Butto Kristo v. Gobindram, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 540, 182 I.C. 132. Where a landlord executes a usufructuary mortgage in favour of his tenant, the rights of the tenant as tenant and as mortgagee do not however merge, and if the tenant subsequently sells his right as possessory mortgagee, the transferee bringing a suit on the basis of the sale, is not entitled to eject the tenant but is merely entitled to possession as a usufructuary mortgagee, i.e., to realize rents from the tenant. He cannot claim actual cultivatory possession of the land—Jag Mohan v. Ram Kishen, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 322, 163 I.C. 922; Venkatashiah v. Venkatakrishniah, A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 20. Where the mortgagor covenanted to put the mortgagee in possession of certain village on a subsequent date, and to pay interest at 24 per cent. until possession was delivered, held that the mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage—Partab Bahadur v. Gajadhar, 24 All. 521, (530, 531) (P.C.). A subsequent oral agreement under which the mortgagee was put in possession of some property and the mortgagee was to pay himself out of the usufruct of the property can undoubtedly be proved in order to prove payment. If the mortgagee has entered into possession of any property prior to the mortgage-deed, the matter cannot be investigated in the mortgage suit in the absence of subsequent agreement by which the mortgagee was asked to remain in possession in order to pay himself for the mortgage—Subh Karan v. Kedar Nath, A.I.R. 1941 All. 314, 1941 A.L.J. 345. There need not be an express stipulation to appropriate the profits in lieu of interest. If, by the terms of the instrument the profits are not to be appropriated in satisfaction of the principal, the only inference must be that they are to be appropriated in lieu of interest—Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pallaya, 43 Mad. 589 (600) (F.B.), 57 I.C. 274. Where possession of part of the property is not delivered to the mortgagee, he cannot claim by way of interest the profits of that part of the property which has not been delivered to him—Nurul Hassan v. Mahbub Bux, A.I.R. 1945 All. 202 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1945 All. 676. If a usufructuary mortgage contains a stipulation for the sale of the property and the suit for sale is dismissed, the mortgagee's right to possess is not thereby destroyed—Bharoselal v. Daryao, 1961 Jab. L.J. 1207. A clause authorising the mortgagee to possess is essential to the creation of a usufructuary mortgage—Bachan Singh v. Waryam Singh, A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 477. Where the mortgage and the lease back to the mortgagor are part of the same transaction the mortgage cannot be said to be a usufructuary mortgage—Sm. Savitri Devi v. Sm. Beni Devi, A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 222. But where the mortgage and the lease back from distinct transactions the mortgagor is entitled to redeem leaving the mortgagee to seek other remedies for the rent in arrears—Thommen Varkey v. Govindan Nair, A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 155. Where a usufructuary mortgage is executed for 2 years and on the very next day the mortgagee gives a lease back to the mortgagor at a rent equal to interest, the mortgagee is not entitled to file a mortgage suit on his failure to recover anything in execution of a money-decree for rent passed on an earlier suit, because the lease formed a component part of the mortgage—Haji Muhammad v. Shah Akhtar, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 106.

Where there was a covenant that the mortgagor would pay interest every year but that if he failed to pay interest, the mortgagee could take possession, and would appropriate the usufruct towards interest and pay the balance (if any) to the mortgagor, held that the transaction was a simple mortgage, and not a usufructuary mortgage, because no present possession was delivered, but possession was merely contingent on the failure to pay interest—Yeshvant v. Vithal, 21 Bom. 267 (272). For similar cases see Note 335, ante. It seems that such a mortgage will now be treated as an anomalous mortgage. See Note 335. Where the creditor is given the right to take the mango crop in lieu of interest the transaction is not a mortgage—Rehman v. Nathulal, I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 978.

Since a usufructuary mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession "until payment of the mortgage-money", no time can be fixed during which the mortgage is to subsist; and if the parties stipulate that the mortgage is for a definite period (e.g., 4 years), it is no longer a usufructuary mortgage but becomes an anomalous mortgage—Hikmatulla v. Imam Ali, 12 All. 203 (205); Chhathi v. Bindeshwari, 8 Pat. 16, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 605 (608), 120 I.C. 32, 11 P.L.T. 68. But see Rameshwar v. Paniram, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 217, where it has been held that in such a mortgage nothing can prevent the parties from estimating in advance the period in which the mortgage-debt would be paid off and thus fixing the minimum period in which the mortgagee should have possession. Bhutnath v. Gopal Prasad, 44 C.W.N. 761, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 436 relying on Luchmeshwar v. Dookh Mochan, 24 Cal. 677. See also Bawa Kishan v. Nathu Ram, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 235, 41 P.L.R. 270; Shaikh Idrus v. Abdul Rehman, 16 Bom. 303; Sadashiv v. Venkatarao, 20 Bom. 296; Krishna v. Hari, 10 Bom. L.R. 615. A usufructuary mortgage comes to an end with the payment of the mortgage money; if the mortgagee refuses to perform the acts he is bound to do under sec. 60 the mortgagor can enforce his rights under sec. 60—Prithi Nath Singh v. Suraj Ahir, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1041.

If a usufructuary mortgagee is dispossessed from some properties and does not take additional security for the debt, he is not entitled to claim interest on the mortgage-money on account of such dispossession—Prasanna v. Girish, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 149, 37 C.W.N. 1162, 58 C.L.J. 80, 149 I.C. 667.

It is open to the mortgagor to pay off the mortgage or not as he pleases, and as there is no personal covenant for payment by the mortgagor, the mortgagee cannot compel payment of the mortgage-amount—Chathu v. Kunjan, 12 Mad. 109 (110). In a pure usufructuary mortgage, any personal liability on the part of the mortgagor is excluded. Such personal liability may, however, arise under the circumstances mentioned in sec. 68—Ram Narayan v. Adhindra, 44 Cal. 388 (400, 401) (P.C.); Chathu v. Kunjan, supra.

If the deed itself contains a personal covenant, the mortgage becomes a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage. But where all the elements of a usufructuary mortgage are present in the mortgage it does not cease to be a usufructuary mortgage and become an anomalous mortgage only because it contains a personal covenant to pay—K. Nataraja Iyer v. Subbiah Ambalam, (1962) 1 Mad. L.J. 397.

Till the mortgagee demands possession the mortgagor is entitled to remain in possession—Ponnu v. Sambasiva, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 293, 56 Mad. 546, 141 I.C. 372. If the mortgaged properties are not delivered the mortgagee is not bound to sue and obtain possession from a trespasser and the mortgagor has a right himself to sue the trespasser for possession in order that he may fulfil his statutory duty. But there is no such statutory duty when the mortgagee is dispossessed by a trespasser after being put in possession—Kizhakkekara v. Soopiatatath, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 646, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 887, 1939 M.W.N. 391. Where a mortgagee files a suit for possession simpliciter, on the mortgage-deed, the Court need not consider as to whether full consideration has passed—Fazal v. Milkha, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 193, 145 I.C. 182. The recital in the usufructuary mortgage that the mortgagor will pay the principal after three years and redeem the property amounts to a covenant to pay and a suit for the sale of the security will lie—S. S. Ahobala Sastriar v. S. P. Kalimuthu Pillai, A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 308.

Limitation.—A breach of covenant to deliver possession under a usufructuary lease arises once for all at the time when the mortgagee is first entitled to recover possession. A claim brought more than 6 years after that date would be barred by limitation—Nurul Hassan v. Mahbub Bux, A.I.R. 1945 All. 202 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1945 All. 676.

Lease.—The usufructuary mortgagee may lease out of the mortgaged property either to third parties or to the mortgagor himself—Md. Karamat v. Ganeshi, A.I.R. 1927 All. 552, 49 All. 658, 101 I.C. 516; Md. Ishaq v. Chheda Lal, A.I.R. 1948 All. 312, 1948 A.L.J. 110; Uthuppan v. Nilkanta, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 154. A tenant who accepts from his landlord a pure usufructuary mortgage of the tenanted house is not entitled to continue in possession, after the mortgage is redeemed—Ramrao v. Pahlumal, A.I.R. 1963 M.P. 296. If a usufructuary mortgagee leases out the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, a suit for rent by the mortgagee on the basis of the lease is maintainable—Ganpat Turi v. Mohammad Asraf Ali, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 133. See also Ramlal v. Mahant Atmaramji, 1960 Jab. L.T. 950. There is no single test as to whether the mortgage and the lease form the same transaction—Kuttyal v. Sanjiva, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 877. See in this connection Beevathuma v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 92. Such a lease granted to the mortgagor, even if contemporaneous, will generally be regarded as a separate transaction—Amar v. Taus, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 38, 162 I.C. 658; Kuer Mahammad v. Behari Lal, A.I.R. 1937 All. 478, I.L.R. (1937) All. 621, 169 I.C. 1004; Sundar Das v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 790; Ram Udhar v. Hari Chand, A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 140. But see Feroz Shah v. Sobhat Khan, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 178, 37 C.W.N. 993, 60 I.A. 273, 143 I.C. 659, where such documents have been held to have constituted as a possessory mortgage. See also Harilal Bhagwanji v. Shastri Hemshanker, A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 8; Lalchand v. Nenuram, A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 69.

Where a usufructuary mortgage-deed becomes invalid for want of registration the mortgagee can retain possession of the land till the debt is repaid though no charge is created by such a deed—Maung Tun v. Maung Aung, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 1, 2 Rang. 313, 84 I.C. 1023.

Lekha mukhi mortgage :—A lekha mukhi mortgage in the Punjab is a usufructuary mortgage by which the land is made over to the mortgagee who has to look to its produce for the payment of the mortgage-debt, the mortgagor undertaking no personal liability and the mortgagee not being entitled to sue for the debt—Gahi Mal v. Shera, 90 P.R. 1881; Khandu Lal v. Fazal, 51 I.C. 956 (957); Karam Chand v. Shera, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 498, 133 I.C. 655. Rattigan's Customary Law, 8th Edn., p. 151. See also Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 109.

344. Zur-i-peshgi leases :—A Zur-i-peshgi lease (i.e., a lease for a consideration) is a lease granted on a sum of money being advanced—Bengal Indigo Co. v. Rogobar, 24 Cal. 272 (279) (P.C.). The difference between a Zur-i-peshgi lease and a usufructuary mortgage lies in this, that under a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagee is authorised to retain possession until the mortgage-money is satisfied, but in Zur-i-peshgi lease the mortgagee is to retain possession for a definite period only—Chhathi v. Bindeshwari, 8 Pat. 16, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 605 (608), 120 I.C. 32, 11 P.L.T. 68; Tulshi v. Muna Kuar, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 146, 12 Luck. 161, 162 I.C. 225. Where a lease does not intend to create relationship of debtor and creditor and reserves no right to redemption to the lessor but simply asks the lessee to quit the land without any payment on the part of the lessor at the expiry of the term of the lease, it is a Zur-i-peshgi lease and not a mortgage—Ibid at p. 148; Mahesh Bhagat v. Ram Baran Mahto, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1466. On the other hand a document which purports to be a lease, but fulfils the definition of a usufructuary mortgage, is a mortgage and the mere fact that it describes itself as a lease does not make it a lease—Jabbarshah v. Kanchhedi, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 166, 1939 N.L.J. 308, 182 I.C. 239. A Zur-i-peshgi lease is a lease granted by the debtor to his creditor on a fixed rent reserved by the lease, which is generally a little over the amount of interest agreed to be paid by the debtor. The surplus, if any, is payable to the debtor or may be applied towards reduction of the principal. These leases were devised to evade the laws against usury which limited the maximum rate of interest to be 12 per cent. per annum. The criterion for distinguishing such a lease from a mortgage is whether a right of redemption is expressly or impliedly reserved to the lessor, in which case the transaction is to be deemed a mortgage—Basant Lal v. Tapeswari, 3 All. 1; Gopal v. Desai, 6 Bom. 674. Another test for distinguishing the two is whether the object of the instrument was to create a relationship of debtor and creditor or of simple landlord and tenant—Abdulbhai v. Kashi, 11 Bom. 462; Sheikh Muhammad Hanif v. Moorav. Mahton, 4 P.L.W. 146, 44 I.C. 153. Another test is to find out whether there is a secured debt and a right of redemption—Dildar v. Saddip, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 35, 172 I.C. 935. Where a person takes settlement of land by a registered kabuliyat on payment of Zarpeshgi amount and agrees to pay annual rent, the transaction is not a mortgage, and the landlord is not entitled to get possession of the land by payment of the Zarpeshgi amount—Ramautar v. Latak Behari, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 312. Where a thicka patta did not give the thickdar the right to remain in possession after expiry of the period of the thicka, until repayment of the peshgi money, the patta could not be regarded as Zarpeshgi amounting to a mortgage—Budhan v. Ramanugrah, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 78, 13 B.R. 332. The transaction is really one in which rent is paid in a lump sum in advance instead of by instalments during the term. Where, however, the interest created in the lessee continues after the expiration of the term until the advance is paid, the transaction has the essential characteristics of a mortgage—Maharaja Kesho Prasad v. Chandrika Prasad, 2 Pat. 217, 3 P.L.T. 797, 69 I.C. 394, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 122. In construing a document as to whether it is a lease or a mortgage the following test may be applied: If it is not a security for the payment of any money or for the performance of any engagement; if no accounts are to be rendered or required; if there is no provision for redemption, express or implied; it is simply a lease even though it may be described as a mortgage—Hussain Ali v. Sardar Ali, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 786, following Tasadug Rasul v. Kashi Ram, 25 All. 109 (P.C.), 30 I.A. 35. See also Mahadeo v. Rameshar, A.I.R. 1935 All. 150, 157 I.C. 364; Ramdhan Puri v. Bankey Bihari Saran, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 941; Neelakanda Pillai v. Sankaran Padmanavan, A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 70; Subramania Iyer v. K. R. Anantanarayana, A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 261; Frenchikkose Thommi v. Chacko Devasia, A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 75. On the other hand, if the transaction is one of mortgage the fact that it is called a lease will be quite irrelevant—Sarajbhashini v. Baijnath, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 388, following Shah Mukhun Lal v. Sree Kishen, 12 M.I.A. 157. Thus, where the essence of a transaction was one of loan and security and the creditors secured the net profits of the land for a term of years without entering into possession, the transaction was a usufructuary mortgage—Sarajbhashini v. Baijnath, supra, at p. 389. Where a person executed an instrument purporting to be a mortgage of certain villages with possession for a period of 14 years, by which it was provided that on the expiration of the term the mortgagor "shall come into possession of the mortgaged villages without settlement of accounts, that on the expiration of the term the mortgagee shall have no power whatever in respect of the said estate, and that after the expiration of the term this mortgage-deed shall be returned to the mortgagor without his accounting for (paying) the mortgage-money secured under the document", held that the instrument was not a mortgage in any proper sense of the word. It was simply a grant of land for a fixed term free of rent in consideration of a sum made out of past and present advances—Nidha Sah v. Murlidhar, 25 All. 115 (P.C.). Such deeds should not be held to be mortgages merely because the parties used such nomenclature, although the fact of the parties having designated the same in such a way shows that they believed themselves to be clothed with all the rights and remedies incidental thereto—Tukaram v. Ramchand, 26 Bom. 252 (258) (F.B.): Ankajah v. Veeraiah, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pra. 504. A document styled a lease, under which, in consideration of money advanced, the claimant under it was only to enjoy certain specified lands for a certain number of years, but which contained nothing as to repayment of the borrowed amount, nor provided for payment of any rent as such, was not a lease, but usufructuary mortgage, under which the rents and profits had been estimated to be sufficient to satisfy both principal and interest, so that no subsequent accounting might become necessary on either side—Reference under Stamp Act, 21 Mad. 358 (F.B.); Reference under Stamp Act, 7 Mad. 203. A executed a document in favour of B, under which possession of land was delivered to B on receipt of Rs. 1000. Although period of 10 years was mentioned in the deed, B was to pay rent to A, who was not entitled to bring the property to sale. B was to hand over possession to A not at the end of the term but on return of the consideration to him by A sometime after the end of the term. Held, the transaction was a usufructuary mortgage and not a lease—Apaya Dundyappa v. Govinda Dattatraya, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 625. Where by a thika zurpeshgi lease the mortgagee obtains a thika lease at a certain reserved rent retaining for himself a fixed amount of the rent as specified interest upon the Zuripeshgi money and agrees to pay the balance to the mortgagor, it is a usufructuary mortgage—Bachu Lal v. Jang Bahadur, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 427, 180 I.C. 795. A deed purporting to be a mortgage-deed with possession regarding land provided that in consideration of a debt of Rs. 240 due by the plaintiff (an agriculturist) to the defendant, the latter was to take possession of certain lands for ten years and appropriate the income thereof in liquidation of the debt, and that after the expiry of the said period the right to the land was to cease. The mortgagor having sued to redeem before the expiration of the ten years, it was held that the transaction amounted to an anomalous mortgage and not a lease, and that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem—Tukaram v. Ramchand, 26 Bom. 252. Where under a Zurpeshgi lease the mortgagor lessee holds over the remedy of the mortgagee is to institute not a suit for rent but a suit for the enforcement of the mortgage—Gaya Prasad v. Chitrakut, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 485.

A mortgage-bond which purported to be Zuripeshgi stipulated that the mortgagee would retain possession of the mortgaged property till the term of the Zuripeshgi which was specifically fixed for three years. There was no provision that after the expiry of the term the mortgagee would be entitled to retain possession until repayment of the money: held that it was not a usufructuary mortgage and as there was an implied contract to repay the mortgage-debt on expiry of the term, the suit for recovery of the mortgage-money was maintainable—Chhati Lal v. Bindeshwari, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 605, 8 Pat. 16, 120 I.C. 32. See Mt. Jaleshwar v. Sheonarayan, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 1, 148 I.C. 23. When two documents are executed on the same day, one a simple mortgage under which the mortgage amount is to be paid within three years and the other a lease for five years in favour of a member of the mortgagee's family, the documents read together do not constitute a usufructuary mortgage—Ram Pal v. Ram Anjar, 1967 All. L. J. 996.

In a Zuripeshgi mortgage-deed it was provided that the mortgagee should appropriate the entire produce which he might have in excess as profit in lieu of interest. The mortgagee had settled certain bakasht land and had realized premium of certain amount; held, the premium obtained by the settlement of the bakasht land was not the produce of the land—Rameshwar v. Naramdeshwar, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 627, 188 I.C. 39. For distinction between a usufructuary mortgage and a lease see V. V. Mahomed v. P. V. Savithri, 1963 Ker. L. T. 125 ; Sankaran Kutty v. Karipal, 1967 Ker. L. J. 835 ; Iravi Krishnan v. Ulahannah Anthony, 1968 Ker. L. R. 309.
